2. Of S. George, called commonly the Garter, instituted by King Edward the third, to increase virtue and valour in the hearts of his Nobility; or as some will, in honour of the Countess of Salisburies Garter, of which Lady the King formerly had been inamoured. But this I take to be a vain and idle Romance, derogatory both to the Founder, and the Order; first published by Polydore Virgil, a stranger to the affairs of England, and by him taken upon no better ground than fama vulgi, the tradition of the common people; too trifling a Foundation for so great a building; Common bruit, being so infamous an Historian, that wise men neither report after it, nor give credit to any thing they receive from it. But for this fame or common bruit, the vanity and improbabilities thereof have been elsewhere canvassed. Suffice it to observe in this time and place, that the Garter was given unto this Order, in testimony of that bond of Love and Affection, wherewith the Knights or Fellows of it were to be bound severally unto one another, and all of them jointly to the King as the Soveraign of it. So saith the Register of the Order, (in which occurreth not one word of the Ladies Garter) affirming that King Edward did so fit the habit unto that design, Ut omnia ad amicitiam & concordiam tendere nemo non intelligat. But to return unto the Order, there are of it 26 Knights, of which the Kings of England are Soveraigns: and is so much desired for its excellency, that 8 Emperours, 21 Foreign Kings, 22 Foreign Dukes and Princes, besides divers Noble men of other Countries, have been Fellows of it. The Ensign is a blew Garter buckled on the left leg, on which these words are embroidered, viz. Hony soit qui mal y pense. About their necks they wear a Blew Ribband, at the end of which hangeth the Image of St. George, upon whose day the

Instal-

Installations of the new Knights are commonly celebrated.

3. Of the Bath, brought first into England, 1399. by Henry the Fourth. They are created at the Coronation of Kings and Queens, and the Installation of the Princes of Wales: their duty to defend true Religion, Widows, Maids, Orphans, and to maintain the Kings Rights. The Knights thereof distinguished by a Red Ribband, which they wear ordinarily about their necks, to difference them from Knights Batchelors, of whom they have in all places the precedency; unless they be also the Sons of Noblemen, to whom their birth gives it before all Orders.

4. Of Baronets, an Order instituted by King James in the 9th year of his Reign, for the furtherance of the Plantation of Ulster. They have Precedency of the Knights of the Bath, but not of those of the Garter, nor of the younger Sons of the Nobility. But this being Hereditary, not personal, and rather Civil than Military; is not so properly to be ranked amongst Orders of Knighthood.

The Arms of the Realm of England, are Mars, 3 Lyons passant Gardant, Sol. The reason why these Arms quartered with the French, took the second place, are, 1. Because that France at the time of the first quartering of them, was the larger and more famous Kingdom. 2. That the French seeing the honour done to their Arms, might more easily be induced to have acknowledged the English Title. 3. Because the English Arms were compounded of the Lion of Aquitain, and the two Lions of Normandy, being both French Dutchies.

There were in England, at and since the time of the Reformation, WALES.

WALES is bounded on all sides with the Sea, except towards England, on the East; from which separated by the River Dee, and a line drawn to the River Wie. Anciently it extended Eastwards to the River Severn, till by the puissance of Offa the great King of the Mercians, the Welch or Britains were driven out of the plain Countries byond that River, and forced to betake themselves to the Mountains; where he caused them to be shut up and divided from England by an huge Ditch, called in Welch, Clawdh Offa, i.e. Offa's Dike: Which Dike beginning at the influx of the Wie into the Severn, not far from Chepstow, extendeth 84 miles in length, even as far as Chester, where the Dee is mingled with the Sea. Concerning which Ditch, there was a Law made by Harold, That if any Welch-man was found with a Weapon on this side of it, he should have his right hand cut off by the Kings Officers.

The name of Wales some derive from Idwallo, the Son of Cadwallader, who with the small remainder of his British Subjects, made good the fastnesses of this Country, and was the first who had the title of King of Wales. Others conceive, that the name of Welch and Wales, was given them by the Saxons: who having possessed themselves of all the rest of the Country, called the Britains, who lived here, by the name of Walsh, which in their Language signifieth as much as Aliens; because they differed from them both in their Laws and Language: which is the general opinion. Most probable it is, that as the Britains derive their Pedigree from the Gauls (as before was proved) so they might still retain the name; and were called Walliſh by the Saxons, instead of Galliſh: the Saxons using in most words W. for G. as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and the like. And this to be believed the rather, because the Frenchmen to this day call the Country Galles, and the eldest Son of England, Le Prince de Galles: as also that the Dutch or Germans (of whom the Saxons are a part) do call such Nations as inhabit on the skirts of France, by the name of Wallons.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, before it had the name of Wales, were the Silures possessing the Counties of Hereford, Brecknock, Radnor, Monmouth, and Glamorgan, all Gloucestershire beyond the Severn, and the South parts of Worcestershire on the same side also: their chief Towns, Ariconium, now Hereford; (not reckoned since the time of Offa, as a part of Wales,) Baleum, now Buelth, in Brecknock; Cobannium, now Abergavenny, in Monmouth; Magni, now New Radnor, in the County so named; and Bovium, now Boverton, in Glamorgan. 2. The Dimetæ, possessing Cardigan, Caermarthen, and Pembrokeshires, whose chief Towns were Loventium, now New-Castle, in Caermarthen; Maridunum, or Caermarthen it self: and Octopitæ, where now stands S. Davids, by the Welch called Menew, whence that Bishop hath the name of Menevensis in Latine. 3. The Ordovices, inhabiting the Counties of Merioneth, Carnarvon, Anglesey, Denbigh, Flint, and Montgomery; with the North part of Worcestershire beyond the Rivet Severn, and all Shropshire, on the same side of the River. Their chief Towns were Segontium, now Caer Seont, in Carnarvonshire; Cononium, now Conwey in the same County; Bonium, where after stood the famous Monastery of Banchor, in Flintshire; and Mediolanium, now Llanvillin, in the County of Montgomery. By these three Nations was all that Tract possessed, which lieth on the other side of the Severn. A very stout and hardy people, and so impatient of the yoke, that two of the three Legions which the Romans kept constantly in Britain, as before is said, were planted in and near these people, the better to contain them in due obedience: that is to say, the second Legion at Caer Leon upon Usk, of which more anon; and the twentieth at Deuvana, where now stands West-Chester. So difficult a thing it was to make this Nation subject to the power of Rome; and no less difficult to bring them under the Command of the Saxons: whom they withstood, when all the rest of Britain had been conquered by them; and lived to see their Victors overcome by the Normans, before themselves had yielded to a Foreign yoke.

The Christian Faith planted amongst the Britains, in the time of Lucius, they still retained, when all the residue of the Island had been relapsed to Paganism: and they retained it not in secret, as afraid to own it, but in a well constituted Church. Insomuch that Augustine the Monk, when he first preached the Gospel to the English Saxons, found here no fewer than seven Bishops; that is to say, Herefordensis, Tavensis, Paternensis, Bancharensis, Elwiensis, Wiccensis, and Morganensis, (or rather Menevensis:) all which, excepting only Paternensis, do still remain amongst us, though in other names, Hereford, and Worcester, (Wicciensis) reckoned now in England; St. Davids or Menevensis, Tavensis or Landaff, Bangor, and Elwyensis or St. Asaph, in Wales, according to the present boundaries and limits of it: And as they did retain the Faith, so they retained it after the tradition of their Predecessors; neither submitting unto Augustine as Archbishop of Canterbury, nor to the Pope from whom he came, as Oecumenical, or chief Pastor of the Church of Christ; nor receiving any new Doctrines or Traditions from them: but standing to those Principles of Liberty, and Religion, which they were possessed of, till all the world almost had yielded to that powerful See. Not manumitted from the vassallage and thraldom to it, till they embraced the Reformation of the Church of England in Doctrine, Discipline, and Worship: the Liturgie whereof was by the command of Queen Elizabeth, translated into the Welch or British; as the Bible also was by virtue of an Act of Parliament in the fifth of that Queen, the care thereof committed to the Bishop of Hereford, and the four Bishops of Wales. But because the Bible then set forth was only in the large Church Volume; it was in the beginning of the Reign of King Charles reduced to a more portable Bulk, at the cost and charge of my Cousin Mr. Rowland Heylin, one of the Aldermen of London; who also caused the Book called The Practice of Piety to be printed in that Language for the instruction of the People: and a Welch or British Dictionary to be made and published, for the understanding of the Language.

But to return unto the Church, and Affairs thereof, for the better ordering of the same, it hath been long ago divided into four Dioceses (besides that of Hereford) for the exercise of Ecclesiastical Discipline; those Dioceses subdivided into 9 Arch-Deacouries, as before in England: all subject heretofore to their own Primate or Archbishop, residing in the City of Isca Silurum, the Metropolis of the Province of Britannia Secunda, called by the Welch or Britains, Caer-Leon, or the City of the Legion, from the second Legion, fixt there for defence of the Province; and Caer-Leon upon Usk, because situate on the River so named. But this City being too much exposed to the fury of the Saxons, the Archiepiscopal See was translated to Menew, standing on a Promontory in the extream Angle of Pembrokeshire, by David then Archbishop thereof, and near of kin to Arthur that renowned King of the Britains: from whom, in tract of time, the name of Menew being left off, the See and City came to be called St. Davids. From David unto Sampson the 26. Archbishop of the Welch, (being above 400 years) did they hold this Dignity, but then the Pestilence extreamly raging in these parts, Archbishop Samson carried with him the Episcopal Pall, and therewith the dignity it self to Dole in Bretagne. After which time we hear of no Archbishop in Wales, in name and title, though the power proper thereunto still remained amongst them: the Welch Bishops acknowledging no other Primate, nor receiving Consecration from any other hands than their own Bishop of St. Davids; till Bishop Bernard was compelled to submit himself to the Power and Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the time of King Henry the first.

But it's time to look upon the face of the Country as it stands at the present, which we find Mountainous and Barren; not able to maintain its people but by helps elsewhere. To make amends for which defect, there were some Silver Mines discovered in it not long since, by Sir Hugh Middleton, Knight and Baronet; not only to the great honour of his own Country, but to the profit and renown of the whole Iland of Great Britain. Their chief Commodities are course Clothes, entituled commonly by the name of Welch Freeze, and Cottons; which Merchandise was heretofore brought to Oswestre (the furthest Town of Shropshire) as the common Empory; and there brought by the Merchants of Shrewsbury. But the Welch coveting to draw the Staple more into their own Country, occasioned the Merchant to hold off from buying their Commodities: till in the end the Merchant got the better of them, and enforced them to settle the whole Trade at Shrewsbury, where it still continueth.

To speak of Mountains in a Country which is wholly mountainous, were a thing unnecessary: yet of most note are those of 1. Snowdon, 2. Brechin, 3. Rarduvaure, and 4. Plinlimmon. Not much observable but for their vast height, and those many notable Rivers which issue from them. The principal whereof are, 1. Dee, in Latine called Deva, arising out of Rarduvaure Hills in Merioneth-shire, and running into the Sea not far from Chester. Over this River Edgar King of England was rowed triumphantly in his Barge, by eight inferiour Kings, Vassals and Tributaries to him, that is to say, Kenneth King of the Scots, Malcolm King of Cumberland, Mac-cuis, King of the Isles, Dufwall, Gryffith, Howel, Jago, and Indethel, Princes or Kings of Wales: using these words to such as attended on him, that then his Successors might call themselves Kings of England, when they did the like. This was in the year 973. and the last of his Reign. 2. Wie, in Latine called Vaga, arising from Plinlimmon Hills, and emptying it self into the Severn at Chepstow. More in the heart of the Country (for these are but borderers for the greatest part of their course). 3. Conwey, which rising in Merionethshire, and dividing the Counties of Denbigh and Carnarvon, mingleth with the Sea at Abur Conwey. 4. Tyvie, which rising in Montgomeryshire, and passing between the Counties of Cardigan, Penbroke, and Carmarthen, runneth into the Sea a little below Cardigan. 5. Chedlady, which runneth quite through Pembrokeshire, emptieth it self into Milford Haven, one of the most capacious and safest Havens, not of England only, but of all the World.

The Men are of a faithful carriage towards all men, especially towards one another in a strange Country, and towards Strangers in their own. Of a temper questionless much inclining to Choler, as being subject to the Passion by Aristotle called ἀκρασία, by which men are quickly moved to Anger, and as soon appeased: of all Angers the best and noblest. Their Language (the old British) hath the least commixture of foreign words of any in Europe; and by reason of its many Consonants and guttural Letters, is not so pleasing as some others in the Pronunciation. A Language not much studied by those of other Nations; in regard that such of the Inhabitants who have addicted themselves to learning, have rather chose to express themselves in the Latine or English tongues, than that of their own Native Country. The principal of which (not to say any thing of Merlin, the Sages of the Welch or British) were 1. Gildas, for his great knowledge surnamed Sapiens. 2. Geofry of Monmouth, and 3. Giraldus Cambrensis, the Historians; and of later times, 4. William Morgan, the Translator of the Bible into Welch, for which performance most deservedly made Bishop of Landaff. 5. Sir John Price the Antiquary. 6. Owen the Epigrammatist, &c.

The whole Country (not taking the Countries of Shropshire and Monmouth into the reckoning) contain in it 12 Shires only: of which, seven were set out by King Edward the first, that is to say, Glamorgan, Pembroke, Carmarden, Cardigan, Merioneth, Anglesey, and Carnarvon. The other five, viz. the Counties of Denbigh, Flint, Montgomery, Radnor, and Brecknock, were after added out of the the Marchlands by King Henry the 8. These 12 Shires are again contracted or subdivided into 4 Circuits, for the administration of Justice. Of which the first containeth the Counties of Montgomery, Flint, and Denbigh; the second those of Carnarvon, Anglesey, and Merioneth; the third those of Carmarden, Cardigan, and Pembroke; and the fourth those of Glamorgan, Brecknock, and Radnor.

In these 12 Shires are reckoned one Chase, 13 Forests, 36 Parks, 230 Rivers, and an hundred Bridges. They contain also 1016 Parishes, amongst which, four Cities, 55 Market Towns, and 41 Castles of the old erection. The Cities small, poor, and inconsiderable. The Market Towns, those especially on the Marches and out-parts of the Country, very fair and strong; as being not only built for Commerce and Trade, but fortified with Walls and Castles to keep in the Welch: and so employed, till the incorporating Wales with England took away all occasion of the old hostilities. And for the Castles in the Inlands, partly by the iniquity of time, which is edax rerum, but chiefly by the policy of the Kings of England, who would not suffer any places of strength to remain in a Country almost inaccessible, and amongst men apt to take the advantage offered; the very ruines of them are now brought to ruine.

But to proceed more particularly; the four Cities (or Episcopal Sees) are 1. S. Davids, formerly the Metropolitan of Wales, situate on the Promontory in Pembrokeshire, by the Ancients called Octopitæ; in a safe place, and far enough from the Saxons, whom the Welch most feared, but incommodious enough for all the rest of the Clergie to repair unto it: and not so safe neither unto the Inhabitants of it, in respect of sundry other Nations, who have often spoiled and defaced it. For standing near the Sea, it hath been frequently visited and spoiled by the Danes, Norwegians, and other Pyrats; insomuch that the Bishops were enforced to remove their dwelling to Caermarthen: which brought the City (small enough before, when it was at the biggest) to the condition of a Village. 2. Llandaffe, upon the River Taffe, whence it took the name; Llan, in the Welch or British, signifying a Church; Llandaffe, the Church upon the Taffe: the Bishops whereof derive their Lineal succession from those of Caer-Leon upon Usk; though the Primacy or Archbishops See were removed to Menew. A small Town now it is, God wot, nothing to rank it for a City but the Cathedral Church, and the Prebends houses. 3. S. Asaph, a small Town in Flintshire, so called from S. Asaph, the second Bishop hereof; left here by Kentigern a Scot, by whom the Cathedral Church was founded, about the year 560. Situate on the Banks of the River Elwy, thence called Llan-Elwy by the Welch, the Bishop Elwyuensis in some Latine Writers. 4. Bangor, upon the Menai, a branch of the Irish Sea, of no more beauty and renown than the other three; but only for the Cathedral founded here by the first Bishops, defaced by Owen Glendower, and afterwards re-edified by Henry Dean, Bishop hereof, An. 1496.

Towns of chief note, (for these Cities have not so much in them which is worth the noting) are 1. Shrewbury counted now in England but heretofore the Seat of the Princes of Powys-land, who had here their Palace: which being burnt in some of their broils with England, is now converted into Gardens for the use of the Townsmen. The Town well traded and frequented by the Welch and English, the common Empory of both; well built, and strongly situate on a rising ground, almost encompassed with the Severn; that part thereof which is not fenced with the River, being fortified with a very strong Castle, the work of Roger de Montgomery, the first Earl hereof, Anno 1067. Over the River for convenience of passage it hath two Bridges, and but two, the one towards England, and the other called the Welsh Bridge, which is towards Wales; built by Leoline or Llewellen the first, one of the Princes of North Wales; whose they conceive to be that Statua, which is there standing on the Gate. Remarkable since the times of King Henry the sixth, for giving the Title of Earl to the Noble Family of the Talbots: a Family of great Honour, and as great an Estate, till the parcelling out the Lands betwixt the Daughters and Coheirs of Gilbert Talbot late Earl hereof; according to the ill Custom of England, where many times the Estate goes to the Females, and the Honour (with nothing to maintain it) to the next Heir Male. 2. Banchor, by Beda called Baucornaburg, a famous Monastery of the Britains: containing above 2000 Monks, attending their devotions at the times appointed, at other times labouring for their livelihood; most cruelly and unmercifully slaughtered by the Saxons, at the instigation of Austin the first Archbishops of Canterbury, offended that they would not yield unto his authority. 3. Carnarvon, on the Menai before mentioned; not far from Bangor, (the Monastry of Banchor being in Flintshire) well walled, and fortified with a strong Castle by King Edward the first, after his conquest of the Country; formerly much resorted to, for the Chancery and Exchequer of the Princes of North-Wales. 4. Denbigh, well seated, on the Banks of the River Istrad, which from thence runs into the Clwyd, the fairest River of all those parts. A Town well traded and frequented, especially since it was made by King Henry the 8. the head Town of a County: before which time of great resort, as being the head Town of the Barony of Denbigh, conceived to be one of the goodliest Territories in England, having more Gentlemen holding of it than any other. 5. Matravall, not far from Montgomery, heretofore a fair, and capacious Town, honoured with the Palace, and made the chief Seat of the Princes of Powys-land, thence called Kings of Matravall; now a poor Village. 6. Caermarthen, Maridunum anciently, whence the modern name, the Britains adding Caer unto it: not called so from Caer-Merlin, or the City of Merlin, inchanted by the Lady of the Lake, in a deep Cave hereabouts, as old Fablers and Romances tell us. A fair large Town, beautified with a Collegiate Church; to which there was a purpose in the time of King Edward the sixth, of removing the Episcopal See from S. Davids. Not far off, on the top of an Hill, stands Dinevour Castle, the chief Seat of the Princes of South-Wales, thence called Kings of Dinevaur; who had their Chancery and Exchequer in the Town of Caermarthen. 7. Haverford West, situated in the Chersonese, or Demy-Iland of Pembrokeshire, by the Welch called Ross, by the English, Little England beyond Wales, by reason of the English tongue there spoken: a Town the best traded and frequented of all South-Wales. 8. Milford, in the same County of Pembroke, famous for giving name to the most safe and capacious Haven in all the Iland, consisting of sundry Creeks, Bays, and Roads for Ships, which make it capable of entertaining the greatest Navy: the landing place of Henry the 7th when he came for England. 9. Monmouth, situate at the mouth or influx of the River Munow (where it falleth into the Wie) whence it had the name. A Town belonging anciently to the House of Lancaster, the Birth-place of King Henry the Fifth, called Henry of Monmouth. That one particular enough to renown the place, and therefore we shall add no more. 10. Ludlow, a Town of great resort, by reason of the Court and Council of the Marches, kept here for the most part ever since the incorporating of Wales with England, for the ease of the Welch, and bordering Subjects, in their Suits at Law.

Situate

Situate on the confluence of the Temd, and Corve, and beautified with a very ſtrong Caſtle: the Palace heretofore of ſome of the Princes of Wales of the Blood-Royal of England, at ſuch times as they reſided in this Country (of which more anon); and of late times, the ordinary Seat of the Lord Preſident of Wales: now reckoned, as all Shropſhire on that ſide of the Severn, as a part of England. Of Angleſey and the Towns thereof, we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, now taking notice only of Aberfraw, the Royal Seat ſometimes of the Princes of North-Wales, called thence Kings of Aberfraw.

The Story of the Britains till the time of Cadwallader their laſt King, we have had before. After whoſe retirement unto Rome, the whole name and Nation became divided into three bodies; that is to ſay, the Corniſh-Britains, the Britains of Cumberland, and the Britains of Wales. The Corniſh Britains governed by their own Dukes, till the time of Egbert the firſt Monarch of England, by whom ſubdued An. 809. and made a Province of that Kingdom. The Britains of Cumberland had their own Kings alſo (ſome of whoſe names occur in Story) till the year 946. when conquered by Edmund King of England, the Son of Athelſtan, their laſt King being named Dummilus, as Matthew of Weſtminſter informs us. But the main body of them getting into the mountainous parts beyond the Severn, did there preſerve the name and reputation of their Country: although their Princes were no longer called Kings of Britain, but of the Walliſh-men or Welch; and much ado they had to make good that title: all the plain Country beyond Severn being taken from them by Offa King of the Mercians: and themſelves made Tributaries for the reſt by Egbert before mentioned, by Athelſtan afterwards. Which laſt impoſed a Tribute on them of 20 pounds of Gold, 300 pounds of Silver, and 200 head of Cattel yearly; exchanged in following times for a Tribute of Wolves. But howſoever, they continued for a time the Title of Kings, whoſe names are thus ſet down by Glover, in his Catalogue of Honour, publiſhed by Milles.

According unto which appointment, it was ordained in the Conſtitutions of Howel Dha, the Legiſlator of Wales, that as the Kings of Aberfraw were bound to pay 63 pounds in a way of tribute to the Kings of London; ſo the Kings of Dynevour and Matravall, ſhould pay in way of Tribute the like ſum to the Kings of Aberfraw. But notwithſtanding the reſervation of the Soveraignty to the Kings of North-Wales, Roderick committed a great Solœciſm in point of State, by this diſmembring of his Kingdom; eſpecially at a time when all the Kingdoms of the Saxons were brought into one, and that one apt enough upon all occaſions to work upon the weakneſs of the neighbouring VVelch: which had they continued under one ſole Prince, might have preſerved their liberty, and themſelves a Kingdom as well as thoſe of Scotland, for ſo long a time, againſt the power and puiſſance of the Kings of England. Yet was not this the worſt of the miſchief neither; his Succeſſors ſubdividing (by his example) their ſmall Eſtates into many parcels, inſomuch that of the Eight tributary Kings which rowed King Edgar on the Dee, five of them were the Kings or Princes of VVales. But Roderick did not think of that which was to come, whom we muſt follow in our ſtory, according to the diviſion of the Country made by him into three Eſtates of North wales, South-wales, and Powys-land.

1. NORTH-WALES, or Guinedth, contained the Counties of Merioneth and Carnarvon, the Iſle of Angleſey, and the greateſt parts of Denbigh and Flintſhires. The chief Towns whereof are Bangor, Denbigh, Carnarvon, Aberfraw, ſpoken of before; and ſome in Angleſey, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter. The Country (Angleſey excepted) the moſt barren and unfruitful part of Wales; but withall the ſafeſt and furtheſt from the danger of the incroaching Engliſh; which poſſibly might be the reaſon why it was ſet out for the portion of the Eldeſt Son, in whom the Soveraignty of the Welch was to be preſerved by the Kings of Princes of North Wales.

1246	11	Llewellen II. Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David ap Llewellen, the laſt Prince of Wales of the Britiſh Race. Of whom it is ſaid, that once conſulting with a Witch, he was told by her, that it was his deſtiny, to be carried in triumph through London, with a Crown on his head. Hereupon making ſome Excurſions on the Engliſh Borders, he drew upon himſelf the whole power of King Edward the firſt, which not being able to withſtand, and the King as willing on the other ſide not to fight with Mountains; Commiſſioners were appointed to conclude the differences: Robert Lord Tiptoff, and ſome others, for the King of England; for the Welch Prince, Grono ap Heylyn, a great man of that Country, deſcended from Breckwel Skythrac, one of the Princes of Powys-land, (from whom, if Cambden Clarencieux be of any credit, the Author of theſe Papers doth derive his Pedigree) under whom that Family had the Office of Hereditary Cup-Bearer, and from thence their name; (Heylyn, Promus, five a poculis, quæ vox in proprium nomen abiit, ſaith the Welch Dictionary) By thoſe Commiſſioners it was concluded and agreed on, that Llewellen ſhould enjoy a part of the Country with the title of Prince, during his life: the reſt in preſent, and the whole after his deceaſe, to be ſurrendred over to the King of England. But David the Brother of Llewellen finding himſelf excluded by this agreement, from the hope of ſucceſſion, incenſed his Brother and the Welch to a new Revolt: the iſſue whereof was the taking of David, executed by the hand of Juſtice; and the death of Llewellen, ſlain in Battel near the Buelth in Brecknockſhire. Whoſe head being pitched upon a ſtake, and adorned with a Paper-Crown, was by a Horſeman carried triumphantly through London, An. 1282. And ſo the Propheſie was fulfilled. In him ended the Line of the Princes of North-wales, after they had for the ſpace of 405 years reſiſted not only the private Undertakers and Adventurers venturers of England, but the Forces of many Puiſſant Monarchs; whoſe attempts they always made truſtrate, by retiring into the heart of their Country, and leaving nothing for the Engliſh to encounter with, but their Woods and Mountains. But now the fatal period of the Britiſh Liberty being come, they were conſtrained to yield to the ſtronger. What followed after this, we ſhall ſee anon.

The Arms of theſe Princes was quarterly Gules and Or, four Lions Paſſant gardant counterchanged.

2. POWISLAND contained the whole Counties of Montgomery, and Radnor, all Shropſhire beyond the Severn, with the Town of Shrewsbury, and the reſt of Denbigh and Flintſhires; comprehending by the eſtimation of thoſe times, 15 Cantreds or hundreds of Villages: the word Cant ſignifying an Hundred, and Tret a Village. The principal Cities or Towns of it, were, S. Aſaph, Shrewsbury, Matraval, ſpoken of before. A Country more partaking of the nature and fertility of England, than the parts belonging unto Guinedth, or North-Wales; but always lying in harms way, by reaſon of the Neighbourhood of the more potent Engliſh: and therefore given by Roderick to Mervin, his youngeſt Son, partly becauſe he was the youngeſt; but chiefly becauſe he was a man of an approved valour, and ſo more fit to have his portion upon the Borders. In his Line it continued a long time together, but much afflicted and diſmembred by the Earls of Cheſter and Shrewsbury, who took from them a good part of Flint, Denbigh, and Shropſhire; and by the Princes of North-wales, who caſt many a greedy eye upon it. Of the Succeſſors of Prince Mervin, I find no good Conſtat, more than of Brockwell Skythrac, before remembred. The laſt that held it at all entire was Meredyth ap Blethyn, who following the ill example of Roderick Mawr, divided it betwixt Madoc, and Gryffith, his two Sons. Of which Madoc dyed at Wincheſter, An. 1160. in the time of King Henry the ſecond, his part hereof depending after his deceaſe, on the Fortunes of Guynedth: and Griffyth was by Henry the firſt made Lord of Powys (the ſtile of Prince left off as too high and lofty.) In his race it continued till the time of King Edward the firſt: to whom at a Parliament holden in Shrewsbury, Owen ap Gryffith, the 5. from Gryffith ap Meridith before mentioned, ſurrendred his place and title; and received them of the King again to be holden in Capite and free Baronage, according to the cuſtom of England. Avis, or Hawis, Daughter and Heir of this Owen ap Gryffith, was married unto John Charleton, Valect (or Gentleman of the Privy Chamber) to King Edward the ſecond, by whom, in right of his Wife, he was made Lord Powis. Edward the fifth alſo of this Line of the Charletons, was the laſt of that Houſe; his Daughter Jane conveying the Eſtates and Title to the Houſe of the Greys; and of them alſo five enjoyed it, the laſt Lord Powis of the Line or Race of Mervin, being Edward Grey, who dyed in the days of our Grand-Fathers. And ſo the title lay extinct, until revived again in the perſon of Sir William Herbert of Red-Caſtle, deſcended from the Herberts, Earls of Pembroke; created Lord Powys by King Charles the firſt, An. 1629.

The Arms of the Princes of Powyſland, were Or, a Lyon Rampant, Gules.

3. SOUTH-WALES, or Debeubarth, contained the Counties of Monmouth, Glamorgan, Caermarden, Cardigan, and Brecknock; the greateſt and moſt fruitful part of all Wales, but more expoſed to the invaſion of Foreign Nations, Engliſh, Danes, Flemings, and Norwegians, by whom the Sea-Coaſts were from time to time moſt grievouſly plagued: Inſomuch that the Kings and Princes hereof were inforced to remove their Seat from Caermarthen, where it was fixt at firſt, unto Dynevour Caſtle, as a place of greater ſtrength and ſafety: where it continued till the Princes of it were quite extinct, called from hence Kings of Dynevour, as before is ſaid. The chief Towns of it, Caermarthen, Monmouth, Landaffe, S. Davids, ſpoken of already. The Kings and Princes, as far as I can find upon any certainty, are theſe that follow.

The Princes of South-Wales.

907	3	Howel Dha, Soveraign King of Wales.
948	4	Owen, the Son of Dha.
	5	Meredith, Son of Owen.
998	6	Aeneas, or Evenus, Brother of Meredith.
	7	Theodoret the Great.
1077	8	Rheſe ap Theodoret.
1093	9	Gryffith ap Rheſe.
	10	Rheſe II. ap Gryffith.
	11	Gryffith ap Rheſe, the laſt Prince of South-Wales of the Line of Cadel, after they had with great ſtrugling maintained their Liberty for the ſpace of 300 years and upwards: but ſo, that though they ſtill preſerved the title of Princes, they loſt a great part of their Country to the Norman-Engliſh. For in the Reign of William Rufus, Bernard de Newmark a Noble Norman, ſeized upon thoſe parts which now make the County of Brecknock, being then a fair and goodly Lordſhip: and Robert Fitz-Haymon, with ſome other noble Adventurers, made themſelves Maſters of Glamorgan, in which the Poſterity of ſome of them are ſtill remaining. Incouraged by their good ſucceſs, Arnulph of Montgomery, in the time of King Henry the firſt, won from the Welch a great part of Dyvet, which we now call Pembrokeſhire; as the Earls of Warren, and Lord Mortimer, about the ſame times did prevail exceedingly in the Conqueſt of Cardigan and Monmouth. So that the poor Princes had no one Country left entire, but Caermarthen only, too little to maintain them in ſo high a title. And though this laſt Gryffith, in the time of the Wars in England, betwixt Maud the Empreſs, and King Stephen, had recovered a great part of his loſt Eſtate; yet neither he nor his did enjoy it long; himſelf deceaſing ſhortly after, and his two Sons, Cymmerick and Meredith, being taken by King Henry the ſecond, who moſt cruelly put out their eyes: Yet did the Welch, as well as poſſibly they could, endeavour to preſerve the liberty which their Fathers left them; till the Felicity and Wiſdom of King Edward the firſt, put an end unto the Wars of Wales, and ſetled them in ſome degree of peace and quiet.

But before we come to ſpeak of this, we are to ſhew another Catalogue of the Kings and Princes of Wales, different from the ſucceſſion of them before laid down; and made according to the Hiſtory of Wales, writ by Humfry Lloyd: this Catalogue containing the ſucceſſion of the greater and predominant Princes, whether of Guynedh, Debeubarth, or Powys-land; ſuch as gave law unto the reſt, and had the honour to be called Kings of Wales, though Princes only of their own proper and particular Countries; as formerly we had a Catalogue of the Monarchs of the Engliſh Saxons, made out of the Predominant Princes of the Saxon Heptarchie. Only we ſhall find ſome in the following Catalogue, who were not naturally and lineally Princes of any of the three, and therefore not expreſſed in the former Tables: but ſuch as by ſtrong hand had intruded into thoſe Eſtates, to the prejudice of the right heirs, overpowered by them.

1137	22	Owen Guinedh Prince of Guinedh, and Soveraign Prince of Wales, Eldeſt Son of Gryffith.
1169	23	David ap Owen Prince of Guinedh, the younger Son of Owen Guinedh.
1194	24	Llewellen, Son of Jorwerth, eldeſt ſon of Owen Guinedh, excluded by David his younger Brother.
1242	25	David ap Llewellen Prince of Guinedh, Son of Llewellen ap Jorwerth.
1246	26	Llewellen Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David, the laſt Soveraign Prince of Wales, of the race of Cadwallader; overcome and ſlain in Battel by King Edward the firſt, An. 1282. as before is ſaid: by means whereof the Principality of Wales was added to the Crown of England.

When King Edward had thus fortunately effected this great buſineſs, he gave unto his Engliſh Barons and other Gentlemen of note, many fair Signiories and Eſtates; as well to reward them for their ſervice in the Conqueſt, as to engage ſo many able men, both in purſe and power, for the perpetual defence and ſubjection of it. As for the Lordſhip of Flint, and the Towns and Eſtates lying on the Sea-Coaſts: he held them in his own hands, both to keep himſelf ſtrong, and to curb the Welch: and (wherein he dealt like the politick Emperour Auguſtus) pretending the eaſe of ſuch as he had there placed; but indeed to have all the Arms, and men of employment under himſelf only.

This done, he divided Wales into ſeven Shires, viz. 1. Glamorgan, 2. Carmarden, 3. Pembroke, 4. Cardegan, 5. Merioneth, 6. Carnarvon, and 7. Angleſey, after the manner of England. Over each of theſe, as he placed a particular Engliſh Lieutenant, ſo he was very deſirous to have one general Engliſh Vicegerent, over the whole Body of the Welch. But this when they mainly withſtood he ſent for his Wife, then great with Child, to Carnarvon, where ſhe was delivered of a Son. Upon the news whereof the King aſſembled the Britiſh Lords, and offered to name them a Governour born in Wales, which could not ſpeak one word of Engliſh, and whoſe life no man could tax. Such a one when they had all ſworn to obey, he named his young Son Edward; ſince which time our Kings Eldeſt Sons are called Princes of Wales. Their Inveſtiture is performed by the impoſition of a Cap of Eſtate, and a Coronet on his head that is inveſted, as a token of his Principality; by delivering into his hand a Verge, being the emblem of Government; by putting a Ring of Gold on his finger, to ſhew him that now he is a Husband to the Country, and a Father to her Children; and by giving him a Patent, to hold the ſaid Principality to him and his Heirs Kings of England. By which words the ſeparation of it from the Crown is prohibited; and the Kings keep in themſelves ſo excellent an occaſion, of obliging unto them their eldeſt Son, when they pleaſe. In imitation of this Cuſtom, more ex Anglia tranſlato (ſaith Mariana) John the firſt of Caſtile and Leon, made his Son Henry Prince of the Aſturias; which is a Country ſo craggy and mountainous, that it may not improperly be called the Wales of Spain. And all the Spaniſh Princes even to theſe times, are honoured with this Title of Prince of the Aſturias.

Notwithſtanding this provident care of Edward the firſt, in eſtabliſhing his Empire here; and the extream rigour of Law here uſed by Henry the 4th, in reducing them to obedience, after the rebellion of Owen Glendower: yet till the time of Henry the 8th, and his Father, (both being extract from the Welch blood) they ſeldom or never contained themſelves within the bounds of true Allegiance. For whereas before they were reputed as Aliens, this Henry made them (by act of Parliament) one Nation with the Engliſh, ſubject to the ſame Laws, capable of the ſame preferments, and priviledged with the ſame immunities. He added alſo 6 Shires to the former number, out of thoſe Countries which were before reputed as the Borders and Marches of Wales; and enabled them to ſend Knights and Burgeſſes unto the Engliſh Parliaments: ſo that the name and language only excepted, there is now no difference between the Engliſh and Welch, an happy Union.

The ſame King Henry eſtabliſhed for the eaſe of his Welch ſubjects, a Court at Ludlow, like unto the ordinary Parliaments in France: wherein the Laws are miniſtred according to the Faſhion of the Kings Courts of Weſtminſter. The Court conſiſteth of one Preſident who is, for the moſt part, of the Nobility, and is generally called, the Lord Preſident of Wales; of as many Counſellours as it ſhall pleaſe the King to appoint; one Attorney, one Solicitor, licitor, one Secretary, and the four Justices of the Counties of Wales. The Town it self (for this must not be omitted) adorned with a very fair Castle, which hath been the Palace of such Princes of Wales, of the English blood, as have come into this Country, to solace themseves among their people. Here was young Edward the 5th, at the death of his Father; and here dyed Prince Arthur, Eldest son of Henry the 7th.: both being sent hither by their Fathers to the same end, viz. by their presence to satisfie and keep in order the unquiet Welch-men. And certainly, as the presence of the Prince was then a terror to the rebellious, so would it now be as great a comfort to this peaceable people.

What the Revenues of this Principality are, I cannot say: yet we may boldly affirm that they are not very small, by these reasons following, viz. 1. By the Composition which Llewellen, the last Prince of Wales, made with Edward the first: who being Prince of North Wales only, and dispossessed of most of that, was fain to redeem the rest, of the said King Edward, at the price of 50000 Marks (which comes to 100000 pounds of our present money) to be paid down in ready coin; and for the residue to pay 1000 l. per annum. And 2ly, by those two circumstances, in the marriage of the Lady Katharine of Spain, to the above-named Prince Arthur. For first, her Father Ferdinando being one of the wariest Princes that ever were in Europe, giving with her in Dowry 200000 Ducats; required for Joynture, the third part only of this Principality, and of the Earldom of Chester. And secondly, after the death of Prince Arthur, the Nobles of the Realm perswaded Prince Henry to take her to Wife; that so great a Treasure as the yearly Revenue of her Joynture, might not be carried out of the Kingdom.

The Arms of the Princes of Wales differ from those of England, only by the addition of a Label of three points. But the proper and pecular device, and which we commonly, though corruptly, call the Princes Arms, is a Coronet beautified with three Ostrich Feathers, and inscribed round with ICH DIEN, that is, I serve; alluding to that of the Apostle, The Heir while he is a Child differeth not from a Servant. This Coronet was won by that valiant Prince, Edward the Black Prince, at the Battel of Crescie, from John King of Bohemia; who did there wear it, and whom he there slew. Since which time it hath been the Cognizance of all our Princes.

I will now shut up my discourse of Wales, with that testimony of the people, which Henry the second used in a Letter to Emanuel Emperour of Constantinople, The Welch Nation is so adventurous, that they dare encounter naked with armed men; ready to spend their blood for their Country, and pawn their life for praise: and adding only this, That since their incorporating with the English, they have shewed themselves most loyal, hearty, and affectionate Subjects of the State: cordially devoted to their King, and zealous in defence of their Laws, Liberties and Religion, as well as any of the best of their fellow-Subjects; whereof they have given good proof in these later times.

There are in Wales.

The BORDERS.

BEfore we come into Scotland, we must of necessity pass through that Batable ground, lying betwixt both Kingdoms; called THE BORDERS; the Inhabitants whereof are a kind of military men, subtile, nimble, and by reason of their often skirmishes, well experienced, and adventurous. Once the English Border extended as far as unto the Fryth, or Strait of Edenburgh on the East, and that of Dunbriton on the West (the first Fryth, by the Latines called Bodotria and the later Glotta:) betwixt which, where now standeth the Town of Sterling, was an antient Bridge, built over the River which falleth into the Frith of Edenburgh; on a Cross standing whereupon, was writ this Passport;

I am Free-march as passengers may ken,
To Scots, to Britains, and to English-men.

But when England groaned under the burden of the Danish oppression, the Scots well husbanded that advantage; and not only enlarged their Borders to the Tweed, but also took into their hands Cumberland, Northumberland, and Westmerland. The Norman Kings again recovered these Provinces, making the Borders of both Kingdoms to be Tweed, East; the Solway, West; and the Cheviot hills in the midst. Of any great wars made on these Borders, or any particular Officers appointed for the defence of them, I find no mention till the time of Edward the first; who taking advantage of the Scots disagreements about the successor of Alexander the third, hoped to bring the Country under the obedience of England. This Quarrel betwixt the two Nations he began, but could not end: the Wars surviving the Author; so that what Velleius saith of the Romans and Carthaginians, I may as well say of the Scots and English: for almost 300 years together, aut bellum inter eos populos, aut belli præparatio, aut infidæ pax fuit. In most of these conflicts the Scots had the worst. So that Daniel in his History seemeth to marvail how this Corner of the Isle could breed so many, had it bred nothing but men, as were slain in these wars. Yet in the Reign of Edward the second, the Scots (having twice defeated that unhappy Prince) became so terrible to the English Borderers, that an hundred of them would fly from three Scots. It is a custom among the Turks, not to believe a Christian or a Jew complaining against a Turk, except their accusation be confirmed by the Testimony of some Turk also; which seldom hapning, is not the least cause why so little Justice is there done the Christians. In like manner, it is the Law of these Borderers, never to believe any Scots complaining against any English-man, unless some other English man will witness for him; and so on the other side. Ex jure quodam inter limitaneos rato (saith Cambden in his Elizab.) nullus nisi Scotus in Scotum, nullus nisi Anglus in Anglum, testis admittitur. This Custom making void in this fashion all kinds of accusations, was one of the greatest causes of the Insolencies of both sides committed. Besides, there were divers here living, which acknowledged neither King; but sometime were Scots, sometime English, as their present crimes and necessities required protection, or pardon. To keep in this people, and secure their Borders, there were in each Kingdom three Officers appointed, called the Lords Wardens of the Marches: one being placed over the East, the other over the West, the third over the middle Borders. In England, the Warden of the East Marches had his Seat at Berwick, (a Town of great strength, and which for the conveniency of its situation, was the first thing which the English took care to defend, and the Scots to surprise) of which he was also Governour. The Warden of the West Marches had his Seat in Carlile, which Henry the 8. for that cause well fortified. The Warden of the middle Marches had no set place of residence, but was sometimes in one place, sometimes in another, according as occasion required; the Office being executed for the most part, by the Wardens of the Eastern or Western Marches. But Imperii medium est, terminus ante fuit, by the blessed Marriage of the Kingdoms, that being now the middle of one, which was then the bounds of two Empires; these Officers, and the cause of them, the Wars, are quite extinguished.

SCOTLAND.

SCOTLAND is the Northern part of Britain, separated from England by the River Tweed and Solway, and the Cheviot Hills, extending from the one to the other. It is in length (according to Polydore Virgil) 480 miles, but of no great breadth; there being no place distant from the Sea above 60 miles, and the Country ending like the sharp point of a Wedge. And for the length assigned unto it by Polydore, it must be made up by measuring the Crooks and Windings of the shores, every where thrusting out with very large Promontories, and cutting deep Indentures into the Land. For measuring in a straitLine fromNorth to South, the length thereof from Solway Frith to the Straitby-head, amounteth but unto three hundred and ten Italian miles; and from Berwick unto Straitby-head, is a great deal shorter. So that there is no such over-sight in the Maps of Britain, nor such necessity to correct them, as was sometimes thought.

It was once called Caledonia, from the Caledonii a chief People of it: sometimes Albania, from Albanie or Braid Albin, a principal Province in the North. But the most usual name is Scotia or Scotland; though the reason of the name be not agreed on. Some fabulous Writers of their own fetch it from Scota, the Daughter of an Ægyptian Pharaoh; of whom more when we come to Ireland. Others with better reason (though that none of the best) from the Scotti, Scitti, or Scythi, a German, or Sarmatian people, of noted fame; whom they will have to sieze first on some parts of Spain, from thence to transplant themselves into Ireland; and out of Ireland into the Hebrides or Western Islands, now parts and members of this Kingdom. The more probable opinion is, that they were no other than meer Irish, (whose language, habit, and the most barbarous of their customs, the Highlanders, or natural Scots do still retain) united in the name of Scot, about the declination of the Roman Empire: the word Scot signifying in their Language, a body aggregated into one out of many particulars; as the word Alman in the Dutch. Scot illud dicitur, (saith Camden out of Matthew of Westminster) quod ex diversis rebus in unum acervum aggregatur. First mentioned by this name in some fragments of Porphyrie (who lived about the time of the Emperor Aurelian) as they are cited by S. Hierom: after the death of Constantine much spoken of in approved Authors, as the confederates of the Picts, in harassing the Roman Province.

The whole divided commonly into the Highlands, and the Lowlands. The Highlanders or Irish Scots inhabiting the Hebrides, and the West parts of the Continent adjoyning to them, more barbarous than the Wild Irish at this day: not to be civiliz'd (as King James observed in his most excellent Basilicon Doron) but by planting Colonies of the more Inland, orderly Scots among them. The Lowlanders or English Scots (as I well may call them) inhabiting on this side the two Fryths of Dunbritton and Edenburgh, and the plainer Countries along the German Ocean; are the more civil of the two, as being of the same Saxon race with the English. This is evident, first by their Language, being only a broad Northern English, a Dialect only of that tongue: 2. By the testimony of the Highlanders themselves, who are the true Scots, and speak the old Irish language, by whom the Lowlandes and the English are called by the same name of Saxons: 3. by the general consent of all Historians, affirming that the Kingdom of the Northumbers or English Saxons, beyond Humber, extended as far Northwards as the two Fryths before mentioned; and there continued for the space of 300 years: and 4. By the confession of some ingenious Gentlemen of that Nation, who grant it for a probable Tenet, That the Saxons and the Scots invading Britain much about the same time, the Saxons might extort the Eastern shore lying next their Country, from the old Inhabitants; as well as the Scots did all the Western parts which lay next to Ireland, and the Hebrides or Western Islands, from whence they first passed into Britain.

The Country for the most part, especially beyond the limits of the Roman Province, is very barren and unfruitful, not able to afford sustenance for the Natives of it; were they not a people patient of want and hunger, temperate in diet, and not accustomed unto that riot and excess, used commonly in richer and more plentiful Countries. Fruit they have very little, and not many Trees either for Building or for Fewel: the people holding, as in France, at the Will of the Lord, and therefore not industrious to build, or plant. Their chief Commodities are coorse Cloth, Fish in great abundance, Hides, Lead, and Coal; of which two last their Mountains do afford some rich undecaying Mines.

The People have been noted by their best Writers, for some barbarous Customs entertained amongst them. One of which was, If any two were displeased, they expected no law, but bang'd it out bravely, one and his Kindred, against the other and his: and thought the King much in their common, if they granted him at a certain day to keep the Peace. This fighting they call their Feides, a word so barbarous, that were it to be expressed in Latine or French, it must be by Circumlocution. These deadly Feides, King James in his most excellent Basilicon Doron adviseth his son to redress with all care possible; but it pleased God to give him so long a life as to see it in his own days remedied: wherein he got a greater Victory over that stubborn born people, than ever did any foreign Prince, or any of his Predeceſſors could do before him; an act indeed truly Royal, and worthy himſelf. Another Cuſtom they had of that nature, that the like was hardly ever heard of amongſt the Heathen, and much leſs in Chriſtendom, which took beginning, as the Scotiſh Hiſtorians affirm, in the Reign of Ewen the third, who is the Fifteenth King in their Catalogue, after the firſt Fergus. This Ewen being a Prince much addicted, or wholly rather given over unto laſciviouſneſs, made a Law, That himſelf and his Succeſſors ſhould have the Maidenhead, or firſt Nights lodging with every Woman, whoſe husband held Land immediately from the Crown: and the Lords and Gentlemen of all thoſe whoſe husbands were their Tenants or Homagers. This was, it ſeems, the Knights-ſervice which men held their Eſtates by; and continued till the days of Malcolm Connor: who at the requeſt of his Wife Margaret, (ſhe was the ſiſter of Edgar Atheling) aboliſhed this Law, and ordained, That the Tenants by way of commutation, ſhould pay unto their Lords a mark in money, which Tribute the Hiſtorians ſay is ſtill in force. It was called Marcheta mulieris: but whether from Mark, a horſe in the old Gallique (implying the obſcene ſignification of Equitare) as Mr. Selden thinks; or From Marca the ſum of money by which it was afterward redeemed, I cannot determine. Certain I am that this laſt Cuſtom was of ſuch a barbarous and bruitiſh nature, that the Cuſtom of the Indians in giving to the Bramine the firſt nights lodging with their Brides; and that of many Savage unconverted Nations in proſtituting their Wives & Daughters to the luſts and pleaſure of their Gueſts; have not more unchriſtianity in them, than this of thoſe Scottiſh Chriſtians, if I may ſo call them.

Theſe Cuſtoms ſhew the antient Scots to be rude and barbarous, partaking little of the civility of the neghbouring Nation: nor are they ſo broken of the former, but that they are obſerved by a modern Writer, to be ſtill greedy of revenge where they find means to take it; as alſo to be a ſubtile and politick people, inclined to Factions and Seditions among themſelves, which he that reads their Sories cannot chooſe but ſee. A people, as King James obſerveth in his Baſilicon Doron, ever weary of the preſent ſtate, and deſirous of novelties, accuſtomed to judge and ſpeak raſhly of their Kings and Princes; towards whom they have always carried themſelves with ſuch untractableneſs, that more Kings have been betrayed, murthered, and depoſed by the Scots, than by all the Nations in the World. But take them in themſelves without theſe relations, and they are ſaid to be an induſtrious people, capable of all Sciences which they give their minds to, and generally well verſed in Grammatical Learning, of which moſt of their Gentry have a ſmattering. And of moſt note in point of Learning, have been 1. Marianus (ſirnamed) Scotus, and 2. Hector Boetius, the Hiſtorians. 3. John Major, a well-known Schoolman, for the times before the Reformation. And for the times that followed, 4. George Buchanan, an ingenious Poet, but an unſound States-man; whoſe Hiſtory, and Dialogue De jure Regni, have wrought more miſchief in the World, than all Machiavels works. Not to have been remembred here, but becauſe he was Pædogogue to 5. King James, of moſt famous memory; whoſe printed works declare his large abilities in all kinds of Learning. 6. Napier, the Laird of Marchiſton. 7, 8. Bareklay, the Father and the Son. 9. John Skene, the beſt Antiquary of this Nation. 10. Doctor John Maxwel, the late learned Biſhop of Roſs, and my very good friend; beſides ſome others of leſs note.

The Chriſtian Religion was here planted by divers men according to their ſeveral Nations who did here inhabit amongſt the Low-Landers, or Saxon-Scots, by Aidan the firſt Biſhop of Lindisfarn, or Holy Iſland; amongſt the Picts, inhabiting the South-Eaſtern parts, by Ninias, Biſhop of Candida Caſa, or Whit-herne, in Galloway; amongſt the Northern-Picts, An. 555. and finally amongſt the Scots, by Palladius a Deacon of Rome, ſent to them hither for that purpoſe by Pope Celeſtine. An. 435. or thereabouts. And for the Reformation of Religion, overgrown with the ruſt and rubbiſh of the Romiſh Church, (degenerated from it ſelf in the latter days) it was here made by a ſtrong hand, according to the judgment of Knox and others: nor taking counſel with the Prelates nor ſtaying the leiſure of the Prince, as they did in England; but turning Prince and Prelates, out of all authority; made by that means, more naturally ſubject unto alterations than it had been otherwiſe; or only to be made good by the ſame violence, which firſt introduced it. 'Tis true, that for a while, being in danger of the French, and of neceſſity to ſupport themſelves by the power and favour of the Engliſh: they bound themſelves by a ſolemn Subſcription, to adhere only to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, and to obſerve that form of Worſhip which was there eſtabliſhed. Religionis cultui, & Ritibus cum Anglis communibus ſubſcripſerunt; as is affirmed by Buchanan, their own State-Hiſtorian. But no ſooner was that danger over, but they found opportunity and leaſure to effect their ends; and have endeavoured ever ſince by practices, and correſpondency with that party here, and finally by force of Arms, to thruſt their own Conſtitutions and Form of Worſhip on the Church of England.

As for the Goyernment of the Church, it was originally by Biſhops, (as in all parts elſe;) but ſo as they exerciſe their Functions and Juriſdictions in all places, equally, whereſoever they come: The Kingdom not being divided into Dioceſſes, till the time of Malcolm the third, An. 1070, or thereabouts. Nor had they any Archbiſhops till the year 1478. The Arcbiſhop of York being accounted and obeyed before that time, as the Metropolitan of Scotland. But being once ſettled in an orderly and conſtant Hierarchy, they held the ſame unto the Reformation began by Knox: and when he and his aſſociates approving the Genevian plat-form, took the advantage of the minority of King James the Sixth, to introduce the Presbyterian Diſcipline, and ſuppreſs the Biſhops; forbidding them by their own ſole authority, to intermeddle any more in matters which concerned the Church, and Cantoning the Kingdom into Presbyteries of their own aſſigning. And that the King might not be able to oppoſe their doings, they kept him under by ſtrong hand, impriſoned him at Sterling, made him fly from Edenburgh, removed from him all his faithful Servants, and ſeized upon his principal Fortreſſes: and in a word, ſo baffled and affronted him upon all occaſions, that he was minded many times to have left the Kingdom, and retire to Venice. Which doubtleſs he had done, (as I have heard affirmed by ſome of great place, & power) had not the hopes of coming at the laſt to the Crown of England, made him ſtay it out: So that his Maxim of No Biſhop, no King, was not made at random, but founded on the ſad experience of his own condition. And though upon the ſence of thoſe inconveniences, which that alteration brought upon him, he did afterwards with great both Policy and Prudence, reſtore again the Epiſcopal Order, and ſetled it both by Synodical Acts, and by Acts of Parliament: yet the ſame reſtleſs ſpirit breaking out again in the Reign of his Son, An. 1638. did violently eject the Biſhops, and ſuppreſs the calling; and ſet up their Presbyteries throughout the Kingdom, as in former times.

The famous or miraculous things rather of this Country are, 1. The Lake of Nirton, part of whoſe waters do congeal in Winter, and part of them not. 2. That in the Lake of Lennox, being 24 miles in compaſs, the Fiſh are generally without Fins, and yet there is great abundance of them. 3. That when there is no wind ſtirring, the waters of the ſaid Lake are ſo tempeſtuous, that no Mariner dares venture on it. 4. That there is a Stone called the Deaf ſtone, 12 foot high, and 33 Cubits thick; of this rare quality, that a Musket ſhot off on the one ſide, cannot be heard by a man ſtanding on the other. If it be otherwiſe (as he muſt have a ſtrong Faith who believes theſe wonders) let Hector Boetius bear the blame, out of whom I had it.

Chief Mountains of this Kingdom are the Cheviot Hills upon the Borders; and Mount Grampius ſpoken of by Tacitus; the ſafeſt ſhelter of the Picts, or Northern Britains againſt the Romans, and of the Scots againſt the Engliſh; now called the Hills of Albany, or the mountainous Regions of Braid-Albin. Out of theſe ſpringeth the 1. Tay or Taus, the faireſt River of Scotland, falling into the Sea alout Dundee, in the Eaſt ſide; and 2. the Clnyd, empting it ſelf into Dunbritton Frith, on the Weſt ſide of the Kingdom. Other Rivers of moſt note, are, the 3. Banoc, emptying it ſelf into the Frith of Edenburgh; on the Banks whereof was fought that fatal Battel of Banocks-bourn, of which more anon. 4. Spey, 5. Dee, the Oceſa of Ptolomy: none of them of any long courſe, by reaſon that the Country Northward is but very narrow.

In reference to Eccleſiaſtical affairs, this Kingdom hath been long divided into 13 Dioceſſes, to which the Dioceſs of Edenburgh (taken out of that of S. Andrews) hath been lately added: and in relation to the Civil, into divers Seneſchalſies and Sheriffdoms, which being for the moſt part hereditary, are no ſmall hinderance to the due execution of Juſtice. So that the readieſt way to redreſs the miſchief (as King James adviſed) is to diſpoſe of them as they fall or Eſcheat to the Crown, according to the laudable cuſtom (in that caſe) in England.

The greateſt Friends of the Scots, were the French, to whom the Scots, ſhewed themſelves ſo faithful, that the French King committed the defence of his perſon to a ſelected number of Scottiſh Gentlemen: and ſo valiant, that they have much hindered the Engliſh Victories in France. And certainly the French feeling the ſmart of the Engliſh puiſſance alone, have continually heartned the Scots in their attempts againſt England, and hindred all means of making union betwixt them: as appeared, when they brake the match agreed on, between our Edward the ſixth, and Mary the young Queen of Scots. Their greateſt enemy was the Engliſh, who overcame them in many battels, ſeized once upon the Kingdom, and had longer kept it, if the moutainous and unacceſſible woods had not been more advantagious to the Scots, than their power: for ſo much King James ſeemeth to intimate in his ſpeech at White-Hall, 1607, And though, ſaith he the Scots had the honour and good fortune never to be conquered, yet were they never but on the defenſible ſide; and may in part thank their hills and inacſſible paſſages, that ſaved them from an utter overthrow, at the hands of all them that ever pretended to conquer them. But

Jam cunctigens una ſumus, ſic ſimus in ævum:

One only Nation now are we,
And let us ſo for ever be.

The chief Cities are Edenburgh (of old called Caſtrum Alatum) in Lothien, where is the Kings Palace, and the Courts of Juſtice. It conſiſteth chiefly of one ſtreet extending in length one mile, into which run many prety lanes; ſo that the whole compaſs may be nigh three miles: extending from Eaſt to Weſt on a riſing ground, at the Summit or Weſt end whereof ſtandeth a ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle, mounted upon a ſteep and precipitous Rock, which comandeth the Town; ſuppoſed to be the Caſtrum Alatum, ſpoken of by Ptolomy. Under the command or rather the protection of which Caſtle, and through the neighbourhood of Leith, ſtanding on the Fryth, and ſerving as a Port unto it; & finally by the advantage of the Courts of Juſtice, and the Court Royal, called Holy-Rood-Houſe, it ſoon became rich, populous, well-traded, and the chief of the Kingdom: but withal factious and ſeditious, conteſting with their Kings, or ſiding againſt them upon al occaſions. No way to humble them, and keep them in obedience to their Soveraign Lords, but by incorporating Leith, indulging it with the priviledges of a City, and removing thither the Seat Royal and the Courts of Judicature; which they more fear than all the Plagues that can befal them. It belonged in former times to the Engliſh Saxons, (as all the reſt of the Country from the Fryth to Barwick) from whom, oppreſſed by the tyranny of the Danes, it was taken by the Scots and Picts, Anno 800 or thereabouts. 2. Sterling, ſituate on the South-ſide of the Forth or Fryth, in the Sheriffdom ſo called; a ſtrong Town, and beautified withal with a very fair Caſtle, the birth-place of King James the ſixth, the firſt Monarch of Great Britain. Near to which Town, on the banks of the River Bannock, hapned the moſt memorable diſcomfiture that the Scots ever gave the Engliſh: who beſides many Lords and 700 Knights and men of note, loſt in this Fight (as the Scottiſh Writers do report) 50000 of the common Souldiers (our Engliſh Hiſtorians confeſs 10000, and too many of that) the King himſelf (Edward the 2.) being compelled to flie for his life and ſafety. Some of the Scotiſh Writers tell us, that the purer ſort of Silver, which we call Starling money, did take name from hence; they might as well have told us, that all our ſilver Bulloin comes from Bulloin in Luyckland, or from the Port of Bulloin in France; the truth being that it took that name from the Eaſterlings or Merchants of Eaſt Germany, drawn into England by King John, to refine our Coin. 3. Glaſco, in Cluidſdale, honoured with an Archbiſhops See, and a publick School (to which ſome give the name of an Univerſity) founded here by Archbiſhop Turnbul, Anno 1554. 4. S. Andrews the chief Town of Fife, an Archiepiſcopal See, and an Univerſity; by the Latins called Fanum Reguli: which, and the Engliſh name, it took from the bones of S. Andrew the Apoſtle, tranſlated firſt from Patras in Peleponneſus where he ſuffered death, unto Conſtantinople; and thence brought hither by a Monk called Albatus Regulus, in the year 378 (if they be not miſtaken in the time, who made the ſtory.) Over which Relicks he is ſaid to have built a monaſtry, which after grew to be a City: called from the founder Fanum Reguli; in honour of the Saint, S. Andrew. The Biſhop hereof is the Metropolitan of all Scotland; the City ſeated on the Ocean, near the fall of the Ethan, overlooked with a ſtrong and goodly Caſtle, the Archbiſhops ſeat. 5. Falkland, in the ſame Province or Fife, beautified with a retiring houſe of the Kings, reſorting thither often on receſs from buſineſs, or for the commodity and pleaſure of hunting, which the place affords. 6. Dundee, in Latine, Taodunum, a rich and noted Port at the mouth of the Taye, the chief Town of Anguis. 7. Aber-don, at the mouth of the River Done, whence it had the name, (the word Aber in the Britiſh ſignifying the mouth or influx of a River) an Univerſity, and Biſhops See. 8. Perth, or St. Johns Town, ſeated on the Tay, but in the middle of the Kingdom; walled and repleniſhed with an induſtrious people: the chief Town of the Sheriffdom of Perth. 9. Scone, on the farther

farther side of the Taye, adorned heretofore with a famous Monastry; the usual place for the Inauguration of the Scottish Kings: the fatal stone, on which they did receive the Crown, (the Palladium of the Scottish Kingdom) here kept, till the removal of it unto Westminster, by King Edward the first. Upon which stone there were of old ingraven these Verses,

Non fallat fatum, Scoti quocunque locatum
Invenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.

Translated in old Meeter thus:

The Scots shall brook that Realm as natif ground,
If Weirds fail not, whaire ere this Stone is found.

Most happily accomplished in the Succession of King James the sixth, to the Crown of England. 10. Dumbriton (Britannodunum in the Latine) seated in a grassie Plain, at the fall or influx of the River Levin into the Cluyd, upon two steep and precipicious Rocks, flanked on the West with the said two Rivers, and on the East with a miry Flat, drowned at every full Sea: the strongest hold of all the Kingdom, and thought to be impregnable but by Famine or Treason, and the chief Town of the West side of Scotland; the name hereof communicated to the Fryth adjoyning.

The Antient Inhabitants of this Country dwelling within the limits of the Roman Province, were the Gadeni, possessing Tevidale, Twedale, March and Lothien, whose chief City was Castra Alata, now Edenburgh. 2. The Damnii, dwelling in Cluydsdale, Lennox, Sterling, and Menteith, whose chief City was Vanduara, now Renfraw; Lindum, now Linlithquo. 3. The Selgovæ inhabited in Liddisdale, Tivedale, Eskdale, Annondale, and Niddisdale, whose chief place was Carbantorigum, now Caer-Laverock: and 4. The Noventes, containing Galloway, Carrick, Kyle and Cuningham. Principal places of the which were, Lucopibia, now Whithern, and Berigonium, now Bargenie. Without the Province, amongst the Picts or barbarous Britains, divided generally into Caledonii and Meatæ, the Nations of most Note were, 5. The Caledonii properly so called, taking up all Strathern, Argile, Cantire, Albanie, Lorn, Perth, Angus, and Fife. 6. The Vermines of Mernis and Mar. 7. The Talzali of Buquhan. 8. The Vacomagi of Loquhabre and Murray. 9. The Cantæ of Ross and Sutherland. 10. The Contini of Cathness; and 11. The Cornubii of Strathnavern, the furthest Country Northward of all the Island. Chief Towns of which were, Tamia, Banatia, Orea, Devana, and Tuesis; which we know not where to find upon any certainty.

The fortunes of this people, as they related to the Romans, hath been shewn before. On the withdrawing of whose Forces, so much hereof as formerly had belonged to that Empire, was possessed by the Saxons, the residue thereof, as formerly, by the Scots and Picts; save that the Saxons not content with that which the Romans held made themselves masters also of the Plain Countries, lying on the German Ocean, to which the passage out of Germany was both short and easie. By which accompt, besides those places in the East, they were possessed of the Counties or Sheriffdoms of Teifidale, Tweedale, March, Lothien, Liddisdale, Eusedale, Eskdale, Annandale, Niddisdale, Cluydsdale, Galloway, Carick, Kyle, Cunningham, Lennox, and Sterling, being the richest and most flourishing part of the modern Scotland. The Scots for their part hath the Counties of Cantire, Argile, Braid-Albin, (or Albanie) Lorne, Loquhabre, and Strathnavern, lying on the West and North: the other Northern moity (excepting some parts near the Coast of the German Ocean possessed by the Saxons) containing the now Counties of Cathness, Sontherland, Ross, Murray, Buquham, Marre, Mern, Angus, Athol, Perth, Fife, Strathern and Menteith, being only left unto the Picts. From whence the Saxons and Scots came into these parts, hath been shewn already. And for the Picts, (to omit here the refutation of those who will have them to descend from the Agathyrsi, a people of Scythia) they were no other than such of the natural Britains, as never were brought under the Roman Empire, but still preserved their Country in its former Liberty; called therefore by Tertullian, inaccessa Romanis loca, as indeed they were: and using still their antient Custom of painting their bodies, after the rest of their Country-men had conformed themselves to more civil courses, were by the Romans called Picti: and by that name first mentioned in the Panegyrick of Ennomius, in the time of Constantine the Great. They long possessed these parts without an Inmate, even till the year 424. when the Irish-Scots wanting room at home, and having formerly possessed themselves of the Western Isles, first set foot in Britain: with whom they had continual War, till in the end the Scots prevailing, compelled the Picts to abandon to them the Western parts, and withdraw themselves into the Eastern. Afterwards growing into better terms with the other, and willing to enlarge their Borders toward the more flourishing South, they contracted an Offensive and Defensive League against the Britains; who on all sides, they most miserably tortured, till vanquished and beat back by the conquering Saxons, against whom they contracted a new Confederacy. Taking the advantage of the death of Ethelbred King of the Northumbers, and the invasion of the Danes on the rest of England; they got into their hands all Bernicia, or so much of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians, as lay on the North of Twede, and Solwaye; reckoned from that time forwards a part of their Dominions. But this good neighbourhood held not long betwixt these two Nations. It hapned at the last, that Achaius King of the Scots, married Fergusia, Sister unto Hungust, King of the Picts, and had by her a Son called Alpine, who after the death of Hungust dying without Issue, and having none of a nearer kindred was in the Judgment of the Scots, to succeed in that Kingdom. But the Picts, alledging a Law of not admitting Aliens to the Crown, chose one Ferreth of their own Nation, to be their King: with whom Alpine contended in a long War, victorious for the most part, in conclusion slain. The quarrel notwithstanding did remain betwixt the two unfriendly Nations, till at the last, after many bloody battels and mutual over-throws (the Scots being for the most part on the losing side) Kenneth, the second of that name, vanquished Donsken, the last King of the Picts, with so great a slaughter of his people, that he extinguished not their Kingdom only, but their very name; passing from that time forwards under that of Scots. No mention after this of the Pictish Nation: unless perhaps we will believe that some of them passed into France; and there, forsooth, subdued that Country which we now call Picardy.

As for the Catalogue of the Kings of the Scots in Britain, I shall begin the same with Fergus, the second of that name in the Accompt of their Historians: leaving out that rabble of 39 Kings (half of them at the least before Christs Nativity) mentioned by Hector, Boetius, Buchanan, and others of their Classick Authors. Neither shall I offend herein, as I conjecture, the more Judicious and understanding men of the Scotish Nation, (and for others I take little care) since I deal no more unkindly with their first Fergus and his Successors, than I have done already with our own Brutus, and his. The first Scotish King that setled himself himself in the North of Britain, is, according to the above named Hector Boetius, one Fergus, which in the time that Coyl governed the Britains, came (forsooth) into these parts out of Ireland. From him, unto Eugenius, we have the names of 39 Kings in a continued succession: which Eugenius, together with his whole Nation, is said to have been expelled the Island, by a joynt confederacy of the Romans, Britains, and Picts. Twenty and seven years after the death of this Eugenius, they were reduced again into their possession here, by the valour and conduct of another Fergus, the second of that name. To this Fergus I refer the beginning of this Scotish Kingdom in Britain, holding the stories of the former 39 Kings to be vain and fabulous. Neither want I probable conjecture for this assertion, this expedition of Fergus into Britain, being placed in the 424 year of CHRIST; at what time the best Writers of the Roman story for those times, report the Scots to have first seated themselves in this Island.

The Kings of chief note in the course of the whole Succession are, 1. Achaius, who died in the year 809 and in his life contracted the offensive and defensive league with Charles the Great, between the Kingdoms of France and Scotland. The conditions whereof were, 1. Let this league between the two Kingdoms endure for ever; 2. Let the Enemies unto one, be reputed and handled as the enemies of the other; 3. If the Saxons or English-men invade France, the Scots shall send thither such numbers of Souldiers as shall be desired, the French King defraying the charges; 4. If the English invade Scotland, the King of France shall at his own charges send competent assistance unto the King of Scots. Never was there any league, which was either more faithfully observed, or longer continued, than this between these two Kingdoms: the Scots on all occasions so readily assisting the French, that it grew to a proverb, or by-word, He that will France win, must with Scotland first begin. 2. Kenneth the second, who having utterly subdued and destroyed the Picts, extended his Dominions over all the present Scotland, deserved to be accompted the first Monarch of it: the Picts (being either rooted out, or so few in number, that they passed afterwards in the name & accompt of Scots) from that time forwards never mentioned in any Author. 3. Malcolm the first, who added Westmerland, and Cumberland, unto his Dominions given to him by King Edmund of England, the son of Athelstane, to have his aid against the Danes, or to keep him neutral. After which time, those Counties were sometimes Scotish and sometimes English, till finally recovered by King Henry the second, and united to the Crown of England; never since disjoyned. 4. Kenneth the third who, by consent of the Estates of his Realm, made the Kingdom hereditary, to descend from the Father to his Eldest Son, before which time (keeping within the compass of the Royal Family) the Uncle was sometimes preferred before the Nephew; the eldest in years, though furthest off, before the younger Kinsman, though the nearer in blood. After which time (the opposition and interruption made by Constantine the third, and Donald the fourth excepted only the Eldest sons of these Kings, or the next in birth, have succeeded ordinary in that Kingdom. This Kenneth was one of those Tributaries and Vassall Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, near Chester, in such pomp and Majesty. 5. Macbbeth of whom there goeth a famous story, which shall be told at large anon. 6. Malcolm the third, the son of Duncane, who lived in England during the whole time of Macbbeths Tyranny; and thence brought into Scotland at his return, not only some Civilities of the English garb; but the honourary titles of Earls and Barons, not here before mentioned. At the perswasion of the Lady Margaret his wife, (Sister of Edgar, surnamed Atheling, and after his decease the right Heir of the Crown of England) he abolished the barbarous custom spoken of before. He did Homage to William the Conquerour for the Crown of Scotland, but afterwards siding against him with the English, was slain at Alnwick. 7. David, the youngest son of Malcolm the third, succeeded his two Brothers, Edgar and Alexander (dying without Issue) in the Throne of his Father; and in right of his Mother the Lady Margaret, Sister and Heir of Edgar Atheling, and Daughter of Edward the Eldest son of Edmund the second, surnamed Ironside, King of England, had the best title to that Kingdom also: but dispossessed thereof by the Norman Conquerours, with whom, by reason of the great puissance of those Kings, and the little love which the English bare unto the Scots, not able to dispute their Title by force of Arms. From Maud the Sister of this David, married to Henry the first of England, descended all the Kings of England (King Stephen excepted) to Queen Elizabeths death: from David all the Kings of Scotland, till King James the sixth, who on the death of Queen Elizabeths, succeeded in the Crown of England, in right of his descent from another Margaret, the eldest Daughter of King Henry the seventh. So that in his person there was not an union of the Kingdoms only, under the Title of Great Britain, but a restoring of the old Line of the Saxon Kings (of which he was the direct and indubitate Heir) to the Crown of England; the possession whereof had for so long time continued in the Posterity of the Norman Conqueror. And upon this descent it followeth most undeniably, that though the Norman Conqueror got the Crown of England by the power of the Sword, from the true Heirs of Edmund the second, surnamed Ironside; and that his Successors had enjoyed it by no other Title till Queen Elizabeths death: yet James, the first Monarch of Great Britain, succeeded by a right descent from the Saxon Line; without relation to the Conquest of the Norman Bastard. 8. William, the Brother of Malcolm the fourth, and Nephew of David before mentioned by his Son Prince Henry, (who died in the life of his Father) being taken prisoner at the Battail of Alnwick, did homage to King Henry the second for the Crown of Scotland, and was thereupon restored to his Liberty, and his Realm to peace. What doth occur concerning the succeeding Kings, when their Affairs with England and the World abroad became more considerable, we shall see anon.

In the mean time proceed we to the story of Macbbeth, than which for variety of action, and strangeness of events, I never met with any more pleasing. The story in brief is thus: Duncan King of the Scots had two principal men, whom he employed in all matters of importance Macbbeth, and Banquho. These two travelling together through a Forest, were met by three Fairies Witches (Weirds the Scots call them) whereof the first making obeysance unto Macbbeth, saluted him Thane (a title unto which that of Earl afterwards succeeded) of Glammis; the second, Thane of Cawder; and the third, King of Scotland. This is unequal dealing, saith Banquho, to give my friend all the honours, and none unto me; to which one of the Weirds made answer, That he indeed should not be King, but out of his loyns should come a Race of Kings, that should for ever rule the Scots. And having thus said, they all suddenly vanished. Upon their arival to the Court, Macbbeth, was immediately created Thane of Glammis; and not long after, some new service of his requiring new recompence, he was honoured with the title of Thane of Cawder. Seeing then how happily the prediction of the three Weirds fell out in the former; he resolved not to be wanting to himself in fulfilling the third, and therefore first he killed the King, and after, by reason of

of his command among the Souldiers, and common people, he ſucceeded in his Throne. Being ſcarce warm in his ſeat, he called to mind the prediction given to his Companion Banquho: whom hereupon ſuſpecting as his ſupplanter, he cauſed him to be killed, together with his whole Poſterity; Fleance one of his Sons, eſcaping only with no ſmall difficulty, into Wales. Freed as he thought from all fear of Banquho and his Iſſue, he built Dunſinan Caſtle, and made it his ordinary ſeat: and afterwards on ſome new fears, conſulting with certain of his Wizards about his future Eſtate; was told by one of them, that he ſhould never be overcome, till Bernane Wood (being ſome miles diſtant) came to Dunſinan Caſtle; and by another, that he ſhould never be ſlain by any man which was born of a Woman. Secure then as he thought, from all future dangers, he omitted no kind of libidinous cruelty, for the ſpace of 18 years; for ſo long he tyrannized over Scotland. But having then made up the meaſure of his iniquities, Mac-duffe the Governor of Fife, aſſociating to himſelf ſome few Patriots, equally hated by the Tyrant, and abhorring the Tyranny; privily met one evening at Bernane Wood: and taking every one of them a bough in his hand, (the better to keep them from diſcovery) marched early in the morning towards Dunſinan Caſtle, which they took by Scalado. Macbbeth eſcaping was purſued by Macduffe, who having overtaken him urged him to the combat; to whom the Tyrant, half in ſcorn, returned this Anſwer, That he did in vain attempt to kill him, it being his deſtiny never to be ſlain by any that was born of a Woman. Now then ſaid Macduffe, is thy fatal end drawing faſt upon thee; for I was never born of Woman, but violently cut out of my Mothers belly: which words ſo daunted the cruel Tyrant, though otherwiſe a valiant man and of great performances, that he was very eaſily ſlain; and Malcolm Conmer, the true Heir of the Crown, ſeated in the Throne. In the mean time Fleance ſo proſpered in Wales, that he gained the affection of the Princes Daughter of that Country; and on her begat a Son called Walter; who flying out of Wales, returned into Scotland; and his deſcent once known, he was not only reſtored to the Honours and Eſtates of his Anceſtors, but preferred to be Steward of the houſe of Edgar the ſon of Malcolm the third, ſirnamed Conmer; the name of Stewart, growing hence hereditary unto his Poſterity. From this Walter deſcended that Robert Stewart, who ſucceedeed David Bruce in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Progenitor of nine Kings of the name of Stewart, which have Reigned ſucceſſively in that Kingdom. But now it is time to leave off particulars, and look into the general Succeſſion of

The Kings of Scots before the Conqueſt of the Picts.

1250	23	Alexander III. Son of Alexander the 2d, after whoſe death, dying without any Iſſue, An. 1285. began that tedious and bloody Quarrel about the ſucceſſion of this Kingdom, occaſioned by ſundry Titles and Pretendants to it: principal whereof were Bruce and Baliol, deſcended from the Daughters of David Earl of Huntingdon, younger Son of William, and Great Uncle of Alexander the third, the laſt of the Male Iſſue of Kenneth the 3d, thoſe of nearer Kindred being quite extinct. And when the Scots could not compoſe the difference among themſelves; it was taken into conſideration by King Edward the firſt of England, as the Lord Paramont of that Kingdom: who ſelecting 12 Engliſh, gliſh, and as many of the Scots to adviſe about it, with the conſent of all adjudged it to John Baliol Lord of Galloway, Son of John Baliol and Dervorguilla his Wife, Daughter of Alan Lord of Galloway, and of the Lady Margaret, the eldeſt Daughter of the ſaid David; who having done him homage to the ſaid King Edward, was admitted King.

1300 24 John Baliol, an Engliſh-man, but forgetful both of Engliſh birth, and Engliſh Favours, invaded the Realm of England in Hoſtile manner, and was taken priſoner by King Edward. Who following his blow, made himſelf Maſter of all Scotland, which he held during the reſt of his life, and had here his Chancery, and other Courts. 6.

1306 25 Robert Bruce, Son of Robert Bruce Lord of Annandale (Competitor with Baliol for the Crown of Scotland in Right of Iſabel his Mother, the ſecond Daughter of David Earl of Huntingdon, and conſequently a degree nearer to the King deceaſed than Baliol was, though deſcended from the elder Siſter) was crowned King in the life-time of King Edward the firſt; but not fully poſſeſſed thereof until after his death: confirmed therein by the great defeat given to Edward the ſecond, at the fight of Banocks-bourn, not far from Sterling, ſpoken of before. But he being dead, Anno 1332. Edward the third confirmed the Kingdom on 1332 26 Edward Baliol, Son of John Baliol, rejected by the Scots for adhering ſo firmly to the Engliſh; who there upon harried Scotland with Fire and Sword. 10.

27 David Bruce the Son of Robert, reſtored unto his Fathers Throne by the power of the Scots, and a great enemy to the Engliſh. Invading England when King Edward was at the ſiege of Calice, he was taken priſoner by Q. Philip, the Wife of that King, and brought to Windſor, where he was priſoner for a while with King John of France. Releaſed at laſt on ſuch conditions as beſt pleaſed the Conqueror. 29.

1371 28 Robert II. ſirnamed Stewart, King of the Scots by deſcent from the eldeſt Siſter of David Bruce, was extracted alſo from ancient Princes of Wales (as was ſaid before:) reſtoring thereby the Britiſh blood to the Throne of Scotland.

1390 29 Robert III. Son of Robert the ſecond called John before he came to the Crown; in which much over-awed by his own Brother the Duke of Albany, who had an aim at it for himſelf. 16.

1406 30 James, Son of Robert the third, taken priſoner by King Henry the fourth of England, as he was croſſing the Seas for France, to avoid the practices of his Uncle. Reſtored unto his Country in the beginning of the Reign of King Henry the ſixth, after 18 years abſence, he was at laſt moſt miſerably murdered by the Earl of Athol, claiming a right unto that Crown. 42.

1462 32 James III. ſlain by his own rebellious Subjects. 29.

1491 33 James IV. married Margaret the eldeſt Daughter of King Henry the ſeventh, but at the ſolicting of the French, (againſt the Peace between the Nations) he invaded England (in the abſence of King Henry the eighth) with 10000 men: but was met with by the Earl of Surrey (having 26000 men in his Army) nigh unto Foldden; where he was ſlain, together with two Biſhops, twelve Earls, fourteen Lords, and his whole Army routed. 23.

1514 34 James V. Son of James the fourth, and the Lady Margaret, kept for a time ſuch good correſpondency with the Engliſh, that in the year 1536, he was created Knight of the Order of the Garter. But afterwards inheriting his Fathers hatred againſt them, he invaded their Borders in the year 1542: and was met by the Lord Wharton, then Warden of the Weſt Marches. The Battels being ready to joyn, one Sir Oliver Sincleer the Kings Favourite, though otherwiſe of no great Parentage, was by the Kings directions proclaimed General: which the Scotiſh Nobility took in ſuch indignation, that they threw down their Weapons, and ſuffered themſelves to be taken priſoners; there being not one man ſlain on either ſide. The principal priſoners were the Earls of Glencarn, and Caſſiles; the Barons Maxwell, Oliphant, Somerwell, Flemming, whith divers others: beſides many of the principal Gentry, 28.

1542 35 Mary, the Daughter and only lawfully-begotten Child of James the fifth, ſucceeded in her Cradle unto the Throne; promiſed in Marriage to King Edward the ſixth of England; but by the power of the Hamiltons carried into France, where married to Francis, then Dauphin, afterwards King of the French, of that name the ſecond. After whoſe death, ſhe married Henry Lord Darnly, eldeſt Son of Matthew Earl of Lennox. Outed of her Dominions by a potent Faction, ſhe was compelled to flie into England; where after a tedious impriſonment, ſhe was put to death in Fotheringhay Caſtle in Northamptonſhire, and interred at Peterburgh, Anno 1586.

1567 36 James VI. the Son of Mary Queen of Scots, and of Henry Lord Darnley, was crowned King in his Cradle alſo. He married Anne, the Daughter of Chriſtian the third, King of Denmark; was choſe of the Order of the Garter, Anno 1590. and ſucceeded Queen Elizabeth in the Realm of England, March 24. Anno 1602. And here I cannot omit the prudent fore-ſight of Henry the ſeventh, who having two Daughters, beſtowed the Eldeſt (contary to the mind of his Council) on the King of Scots, and the younger on the King of the French: that ſo, if his own Iſſue male ſhould fail, and that a Prince of another Nation muſt inherit England; then Scotland as the leſſer Kingdom would depend upon England, and not England wait on France, as upon the greater. In which ſucceſſion of the Scots to the Crown of England, the Prophecy of the fatal Stone, ſpoken of before, did receive accompliſhment. And ſo perhaps might that aſcribed in the Polychronicon to an holy Anchoret living in King Egelreds time, which is this, Engliſhmen, for that they wonneth them to drunkenneſs, to treaſon, and to retchleſneſs of Gods houſe, firſt by Danes, and then by Normans, and the third time by Scots, whom they holden leaſt worth of all, they ſhall be overcome. Then the world ſhall be unſtable, and ſo divers and variable, that the unſtableneſs of thoughts ſhall be betokened by many manner diverſity of Clothing. For on this Union of the Kingdoms, this Prediction ſeems to have been accompliſhed; the circumſtances mentioned in the ſame ſo patly agreeing, and the Scots never ſubduing England, but by this bleſſed Victory. Unleſs perhaps the Accompliſhment thereof be ſtill to come; or that it was indeed more literally fulfilled in the great Defeat at Bannocks-bourn, in which was ſlain 50000 Engliſh, as the Scotiſh Writers do report, and the name of Scot growing ſo terrible for a time, that an hundred of the Engliſh would flie from three Scots, as before was noted.

The Revenues of this Crown Boterus eſtimateth at 100000 Crowns, or 30000 ſterling, and it is not like that they were much more, if they came to that: here being not commodity in this Kingdom to allure ſtrangers to Traffick: the Demain or Patrimony of the Crown, but mean; the Country in moſt places, barren; and many of the Subjects, thoſe eſpecially of the Out-Iſles, and the Weſtern parts, ſo extreamly barbarous, that they adde very ſmall improvement to the publick Treaſury.

And anſwerable to the ſhortneſs of their ſtanding Revenue, were their Forces alſo. For though the Country be very populous, and the men generally patient both of cold and hunger, and inured to hardſhip; yet in regard the Kings hereof were not able to maintain an Army under pay, their Forces ſeldom held together above 40 days; and then, if not a great deal ſooner, did disband themſelves. For the Nobility and Gentry being bound by the Tenure of their Lands, to ſerve the King in his Wars, and to bring with them ſuch and ſo many of their Vaſſals, as the preſent ſervice did require; uſed to provide for themſelves and their followers, tents, money, victuals, proviſion of all ſorts, and all other neceſſaries; the King ſupplying them with nothing. Which being ſpent, they uſually disbanded, and went home again, without attending long on the Expedition. Which I conceive to be the reaſon, why the Scots in the time of hoſtility betwixt the Nations, made only ſudden & tumultuary incurſions into England; without any thing of ſpecial moment: and that they have not acted any thing elſewhere in the way of Conqueſt, but only as Mercenaries to the French and other Nations that have hired them. And though it be affirmed that the Army of King James the 4th, when he invaded England in the time of King Henry the Eighth, (being then in France) conſiſted of 100000 fighting men; yet this I look on only as an argument of their populoſity: few of thoſe men being armed or trained up to ſervice; and therefore eaſily diſcomfited by a far leſs Army. It's true that in the year 1643. the Scottiſh Covenanters raiſed an Army conſiſting of 18000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons; with Arms, Artillery, and Ammunition correſpondent to it: which was the gallanteſt Army, and the beſt appointed, that ever that Nation did ſet out in the times foregoing. But then it is as true withal, that this Army was maintained & payed by the two Houſes of the Parliament of England, at the rate of 30000 l. per menſem, and an advance of 100000 l. before-hand, the better to invite them to embrace the action, and prepare neceſſaries for it, without any charge unto themſelves. And though the Army which they ſent into England above five years after, under James Duke Hamilton of Arran, was little inferiour unto this number, but far ſuperiour to it both in Horſe & Arms, and other neceſſary appointments: yet it is well known, that the Scots brought nothing but their own bodies to compound that Army; the Horſe and Arms being ſuch as they had gotten out of England in the former War.

In point of reputation amongſt Foreign Princes, the Kings of the Scots, and their Ambaſſadors and Agents, had place in all General Councils, and Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, before thoſe of Caſtile: and by the Statiſts of late times, have been reckoned (with the Kings of England, France, and Spain) for abſolute Monarchs. But I conceive that this was only ſince the firſt years of King Edward the third, when they had quitted their ſubjection and vaſſalage to the Crown of England. For that anciently the Scots were Homagers to the Kings of England, may be apparently demonſtrated by theſe following Arguments. 1. By the Homages, and other ſervices, and duties, done by the Kings of the Scots unto thoſe of England: Malcolm the third doing Homage unto William the Conquerour; as William one of his Succeſſors did to K. Henry the ſecond: and that not only for the three Northern Counties, or the Earldom of Huntingdon (as by ſome pretended) but for the very Crown it ſelf: Kenneth the third, being alſo one of thoſe eight Tributary or Vaſſal Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, as before was noted. 2ly, By the interpoſing of King Edward the firſt, and the ſubmiſſion of the Scots to that interpoſing, in determining the controverſie of ſucceſſion betwixt Bruce and Baliol: as in like caſe, Philip the Fair adjudged the title of Artoys, which was holden of the Crown of France, and then in queſtion betwixt the Lady Maud, and her Nephew Robert; or as King Edward the third, in the right of the ſaid Crown of France, determined of the controverſie betwixt John Earl of Montford, and Charles of Blais, for the Dukedom of Bretagn. 3ly, By the confeſſion and acknowledgment of the Prelates, Peers, and other the Eſtates of Scotland, ſubſcribed by all their hands and Seals in the Roll of Ragman; wherein they did acknowledge the ſuperiority of the Kings of England, not only in regard of ſuch advantages as the Sword had given him, but as of his original and undoubted right. Which Roll was treacherouſly delivered into the hands of the Scots, by Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, in the beginning of the Reign of King Edward the third. 4ly, By the tacit conceſſion of the Kings themſelves, who in their Coins, Commiſſions, and publick Inſtruments, aſſume not to themſelves the title of Kings of Scotland, but of Reges Scotorum, or the Kings of the Scots: and thereby intimating that though they are the Kings of the Nation, yet there is ſome ſuperiour Lord (King Paramount as we may call him) who hath the Royalty of the Land. 5ly, By the Judgments and Arreſts of the Courts of England, not only in the times of King Edward the firſt, but in ſome times ſince. For when William Wallis a Scotiſhman by birth, and the beſt Souldier of that Country, was taken Priſoner and brought to London, he was adjudged to ſuffer death as a Traytor: which had been an illegal and unrighteous judgment, had he been a Priſoner of War, and not looked on by the Judges as a Subject to the Crown of England. The like done in the caſe of Simon Frezill, another of that Kingdom in the ſame Kings Reign. In like manner, in the time of King Edward the third, it was reſolved by the Court, in the Lord Beaumonts caſe, when it was objected that one of the Witneſſes was a Scot, and therefore as an Alien not to give his evidence; that his teſtimony was to be allowed of, becauſe the Scots in the Law of England did not go for Aliens. And when one indicted for a Rape in the 13th of Queen Elizabeths Reign, deſired a Medietatem Linguæ, becauſe he was a Scotchman, & ſo an Alien, it was denied him by the Court, becauſe the Scots were not reputed here as Aliens, but as Subjects rather. So alſo, when Robert Umframville, Lord of Kyme was ſummoned to the Parliament of England, in the Reign of King Edward the third, by the name of Robert Earl of Angus, (which is a dignity in Scotland,) and after in a Writ against him was called only by his own name of Umframville, without any addition of that honor; the Writ was judged to abate: which I conceive the learned Judges had not done, if Scotland had not been reputed to be under the Vassalage of the Kings of England, 6. and lastly, by a Charter of Lands and Arms, (which I have in my custody) granted by King Edward the first, in the last year of his Reign, to Peter Dodge of Stopworth in the County of Chester one of the Ancestors of my Mother: in which it is expressed, that the said Lands and Arms were conferred upon him by that King, for his eminent services, encontre son grand Enemy & Rebel, Baliol, *Roy d'*Escosse & Vassal de Angleterre; that is to say, against his great Enemy and Rebel Baliol King of Scotland, and Vassal of England. A thing so clear, that if King James had not been extreamly tender of the honour of his native Country, he needed not to have put his Lawyers to the trouble of a New Invention, in hammering the Case of the Post-nati for him; to make the Scots inheritable unto Lands in England. The acknowledgment and Reviver of their old Subjection would have served his turn. But of this argument enough, and perhaps too much. I only add, that upon conference which I once had with an honourable person of that Kingdom of Scotland, employed unto the Court in a business of no mean consequence to the peace and quiet of his Country: I found him so sensible of the inconveniences of their present Government, by reason of the Kings absence, and the frequent divisions and partialities of his Council there; that he confessed that Nation could be never rich or happy, till they were made a Province of the English Empire; and governed by a Vice-Roy, as Ireland was.

The principal Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of S. Andrew, instituted by Hungus, King of the Picts, to encourage his Subjects in the War against King Athelstane of England. The Knights did wear about their necks a Collar, interlaced with Thistles, with the picture of St. Andrew appendant to it: the Motto Nemo me impune lacessit. It took this name because after the Battel, Hungus and his Souldiers went all barefoot to S. Andrews, and there vowed that they and their Posterity would henceforth use his Cross as their Ensign (which is a Saltire Argent in a Field Azure) whensoever they take in hand any war-like enterprize.

2. But this Order being expired many Ages since, there is now no Order of Knight-hood in it, (except Knights Batchelors) but that of Nova Scotia; ordained by King James, An. 1622. for the planting of that Country by Scotish Colonies; in imitation of the Orders of Baronets in England, for the plantation of Ulster. Hereditary, as that also is, but the Knights hereof distinguished by a Rib-band of Orange-Tawney.

The Arms are Sol, a Lion Rampant Mars, within a double Tressure counter-flowred: which Tressure counter-flowred was added to the Lion by Achaius King of the Scots, at what time he contracted the League with France: signifying (saith Hector Boetius one of their Historians) Francorum opibus Leonem exinde muniendum; that the Scotch Lion should be guarded by the riches of France.

IRELAND.

IRELAND is environed on all sides with the Ocean; parted from Britain by a violent and unruly Sea, called S. Georges Chanel. Situate on the West of Britain, next unto which it is the biggest Island of Europe, containing in length 300, and in breadth 120 miles: and is seated under the 8th and 10th Climates; the longest day being 16 hours and an half in the Southern, and 17 hours 3 quarters in the Northern parts.

It was once called Scotia, from the Scots who did there inhabit; and Scotia Minor, to difference it from Scotland, in the Isle of Britain. But the general name hereof is Ireland; by the Latines called Hibernia, by the Greeks, Iernia. And though some frame a wrested Etymologie from Iberus, a Spanish Captain and some from Irnaulph, once a supposed Duke hereof; as others, ab Hyberno aere, the Winter-like and inclement air: yet probably the name proceeded from Erinland, which signifieth in their own language a Western land. And yet I must not pretermit the Etymon given us by Bochartus, (more near the name than most of his other Fancies) who will have it called Hibernia, from Ibernae, a Phœnician word, signifying the furthest Habitation: there being no Country known amongst the Ancients, which lay West of Ireland.

Their own Chronicles, or Fables rather, tell us, how Cæsara, Noahs Neece, inhabited here before the Flood; and how 300 years after the Flood, it was subdued by Bartholanus, a Scythian, who overcame here I know not what Giants. Afterward Nemethus another Scythian Prince, and Delus a Grecian, came hither: and last of all Gaothel, with his Wife Scota, one of Pharaohs Daughters, who must needs name this Island Scotia. But not to honour such fopperies with a confutation, doubtlesly the first Inhabitants of this Island ame out of Britain. For Britain is the nigheſt Country unto it, and so had a more speedy waftage hither. Secondly, the ancient Writers call this Island, a British Island: And thirdly, Tacitus giveth us of this Country this verdict, Solum, cœlumque cultus & ingenia hominum, haud multum a Britannia differunt; the Soil and Air, the habits and disposition of the people, were not much unlike the Britains. For further evidence whereof, it was observed, at the reduction of Wales to the Crown of England, by King Edward the first, that many of their Laws and Customs were those of the Irish: which shews, that they did both descend from the same Original. But then we must observe withal, that they were counted far more barbarous and savage by most ancient Writers, than those of Britain are deciphered at the first discovery: said by Strabo to be Man-eaters; accustomed (as Solinus telleth us) to drink the blood of those whom they slew in fight. Nor were the Women, though the softer and more tender Sex, free from such wild and and ſavage Cuſtoms, it being a conſtant courſe amongſt them, when they were delivered of a man-child, to put ſome meat into the mouth of it, on the point of a Sword, wiſhing therewith it might not dye but in the midſt of Arms, and the heat of Battel. Both Sexes uſed to trim themſelves with the Teeth of Fiſhes, white as the driven Snow, or the poliſhed Ivory; and therein placed the greateſt part of their pride and bravery.

Nor are the modern Iriſh much abhorrent from ſuch barbarous cuſtoms, as plainly ſhew from what Original they deſcend; altered but little by converſe with more civil Nations. Of natural conſtitution generally ſtrong and nimble of body, haughty of heart, careleſs of their lives, patient in cold and hunger, implacable in enmity, conſtant in love, light of belief, greedy of glory; and in a word, if they be bad, you ſhall no where find worſe; if they be good, you ſhall hardly meet with better. The Diet, eſpecially of the meer Iriſh, is for the moſt part, on herbs, roots, butter mingled with Oat-flower, milk, and beef-broth: eating fleſh many times without bread, which they digeſt with Uſquebaugh; and give their bread-corn to their horſes inſtead of Provender. But more particularly, thoſe of the richer ſort in all parts, and of all ſorts thoſe which inhabit within the Pale (as they themſelves call it) and in ſuch places where the Engliſh Diſcipline hath been entertained; conformable to civility, both in behaviour and apparel: The Kernes (for by that name they call the wild Iriſh of the poorer and inferior ſort) moſt extreamly barbarous; not behaving themſelves like Chriſtians, ſcarcely like me. All of them ſo tenacious of their ancient cuſtoms, that neither power, nor reaſon, nor the ſenſe of the inconveniences which they ſuffer by it, can wean them to deſert or change them. A pregnant evidence whereof, is their uſe of Ploughing, not with ſuch gears or harneſs, as in other places; but by tying the hindmoſt horſes head to the tail of the former; which makes the poor Jades draw in a great deal of pain; makes them unſerviceable by the ſoon loſing of their tails, and withal is a courſe of ſo ſlow a diſpatch, that they cannot break up as much ground in a week, as a good Teem well harneſſed would perform in a day; yet no perſwaſion hath been able to prevail upon them for the changing of this hurtful and ridiculous cuſtom. And when the Earl of Strafford, the late Lord Deputy, had damned it by Act of Parliament, and laid a penalty on ſuch as ſhould after uſe it: the people thought it ſuch a grievance, and ſo injurious to the Nation, that among other things demanded towards a Pacification of the preſent troubles, their Agents and Commiſſioners inſiſted eagerly on the abrogation of this Law. An humour like to this in the point of Husbandry, we ſhall hereafter meet with in another place. Near of kin to which, is a lazie cuſtom that they have of burning their ſtraw (rather than put themſelves to the pains to threſh it) by that means to part it from the Corn. From which no reaſon can diſſwade them, nor perſwaſions win them. They have among them other cuſtoms as abſurd, though leſs inconvenient: as placing a green buſh, on May-day before their doors, to make their kine yield the more milk; kneeling down to the New Moon as ſoon as they ſee it, deſiring her to leave them in as good health as ſhe found them; and many others of like nature.

They uſe a language of their own, but ſpoken alſo in the Weſt of Scotland, and the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſlands; which though originally Britiſh, or a Dialect of it, by reaſon of their intermixture with Norwegians, Danes, Eaſterlings, or Ooſt-mans, and Engliſh Saxons; hath no affinity with the Welch, for ought I can learn.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached among them by S. Patrick, aſſirmed to be the Nephew of S. Martin of Tours, Anno 435. Reformed in the more civil parts, and the Engliſh Colonies, according to the platform of the Church of England: but the Kernes, or natural wild Iriſh, (and many of the better ſort of the Nation alſo) either adhere unto the Pope, or to their own ſuperſtitious fancies, as in former times. And to ſay truth, it is no wonder that they ſhould; there being no care taken to inſtruct them in the Proteſtant Religion: either by tranſlating the Bible, or the Engliſh Liturgie, into their own Language, as was done in Wales, but forcing them to come to Church to the Engliſh Service, which the people underſtand no more than they do the Maſs. By means whereof, the Iriſh are not only kept in continual ignorance, as to the doctrine and devotions of the Church of England, and others of the Proteſtant Churches: but thoſe of Rome are furniſhed with an excellent Argument, for having the Service of the Church in a Language which the common Hearers do not underſtand. And therefore I do heartily commend it to the care of the State (when theſe diſtempers are compoſed) to provide, that they may have the Bible, and all other publick means of Chriſtian inſtruction and devotion in their natural tongue.

The Soil of it ſelf is abundantly fruitful, but naturally fitter for Graſs and Paſturage, than it is for Tillage: as may be ſeen in ſuch places where the induſtry of man is aiding to the natural goodneſs of the Soil. But where that wanteth, the Country is either over-grown with Wood, or encumbred with vaſt Bogs, and unwholſom Mariſhes; yielding neither profit nor pleaſure unto the Inhabitants. In ſome places, as in the County of Armagh, ſo rank and fertile, that the laying of any ſoil or compoſt on it, doth abate its fruitfulneſs, and proves the worſt Husbandry that can be.

It hath been anciently very famous for the Piety and Religious lives of the Monks. Amongſt whom I cannot but remember Columbus, and of him this memorable Apothegm: when offered many preferments to leave his Country, he returned this Anſwer, It becomes not them to embrace other mens goods, who for Chriſts ſake had forſaken their own. Of no leſs piety, but more eminent in point of Learning, was Richard Fitz-Raſe, Archbiſhop of Armagh, commonly called Armacanus, who flouriſhed about the year 1350. A declared enemy of the Errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome.

It is affirmed of this Iſland, that (amongſt other Priviledges which it hath above other Iſlands) it foſtereth no venomous Serpent, and that no ſuch will live here, brought from other places. Hence of her ſelf we find her ſpeaking in the Poet.

Illa ego ſum Graiis Glacialis Hibernia dicta;
Cui Deus, & melior rerum naſcentium Origo, Jus commune dedit cum Creta altrice Tonantis,
Angues ne noſtris diffundant ſibila in oris.

I am that Iſland which in times of old
The Greeks did call Hibernia, Icy-cold:
Secur'd by God and Nature from this fear,
Which gift was given to Crete, Joves Mother dear,
That poiſonous Snakes ſhould never here be bred,
Or dare to hiſs, or hurtful venom ſpread.

The other miracles of this Iſland are, 1. That there is a Lake in the County of Armagh, into which if one thruſt a piece of wood, he ſhal find that part of it which remaineth in the Mud to be turned into Iron; and that which is in the Water, to be turned into a Whet-ſtone: richly deſerved by him, if the tale be falſe, who did firſt report it. 2. That the Kine will yield no Milk, if their Calves be not by them; or at leaſt their Calves-skins ſtuffed with ſtraw or hay. It is ſaid alſo, that all the breed of this Country are of leſs ſize than they be in England, except Women and Grey-hounds, and thoſe much bigger than with us.

As for the Clergie of this Country, they have been little beholding to their Lay-Patrons, in former times: ſome of their Biſhops being ſo poor, that they had no other Revenues than the Paſture of two Milch-Beaſts. And ſo far had the Monaſteries and Religious Houſes invaded by Appropriations, the Churches Rights; that of late times in the whole Province of Connaught, the whole ſtipend of the Incumbent was not above 40 ſhillings, in ſome places not above 16. So that the poor Iriſh muſt needs be better fed than taught: for ad tenuitatem Beneficiorum, neceſſario ſequitur ignorantia Sacerdotum, Poor Benefices will be fitted with ignorant Prieſts, ſaid Panormitan rightly. But this is remedied in part by his Sacred Majeſty King CHARLES, the ſecond Monarch of Great Britain, who liberally (at the ſuit of the late Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury) reſtored unto this Church all the Impropriations and Portions of Tithes, which had been veſted in the Crown. An action of moſt ſingular Piety and Princely Bounty.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are, 1. The Shannon (the Senas of Ptolomy) which ariſing in the Mountains of Letrim in the County of Connaught, and making many fair Lakes as it paſſeth forwards; loſeth it ſelf after a courſe of 200 miles (of which 60 Navigable) in the Weſtern Ocean. 2. The Liff, by Ptolomy called Libnius, neighboured by the City of Dublin. 3. Awiduffe, or Black Water, as the Engliſh call it. 4. Slane, ſuppoſed to be the Medona of the ancient Writers. 5. The Showre. 6. The Boyne, &c. Of which, and others of like note, take this following Catalogue, out of the Canto of the Marriage of the Thames and Medway, in the Faiery Queen:

There was the Liffie rowling down the lea,
The ſandy Slane, the ſtony Aubrian,
The ſpacious Shenin, ſpreading like a Sea,
The pleaſant Boyne, the fiſhy-fruitful Banne,
Swift Awiduffe, which of the Engliſhman
Is called Black-Water; and the Liffar deep,
Sad Trowis that once his people over-ran,
Strong Allo tumbling from Slewlogheer ſteep,
And Maullo mine, whoſe waves I whilom taught to weep.

There alſo was the wide-embayed Mayre,
The pleaſant Bandon crown'd with many Wood;
The ſpreading Lee, that like an Iſland fair
Incloſeth Cork with his divided flood;
And baleful Oure, late ſtain'd with Engliſh blood,
With many more,———

So the renowned Spencer in his Canto of the marriage of Thames and Medway.

But beſides theſe Rivers, this Iſland is in moſt places well ſtored with Lakes, yielding great plenty of Fiſh to the parts adjoining. The principal of which, 1. Lough-Erne, containing 15 miles in breadth, and 30 miles in length; ſhaded with Woods, and ſo repleniſhed with Fiſh, that the Fiſhermen complain of too much abundance, and the often breaking of their Nets. It hath alſo in it many Iſlands, one moſt remarkable for the ſtrange and horrid noiſes which are therein heard, called therefore by the Vulgar, St. Patricks Purgatory. Almoſt as big as this is 2. the Lake of Corbes, which loſeth it ſelf in the Sea not far from Galloway. A Lake of 26 miles in length, and four in breadth: ſaid to have in it 30 Iſlets, abounding with Pine-Trees. 3. Lough-Foyle, ſuppoſed to be the Logia of Ptolomy. 4. Lough-Eaugh, out of which the River Banne, abundantly well ſtored with Salmons, hath its firſt Original. And beſides theſe and many others of leſs note, there are ſaid to be three Lakes in the Province of Meth, not far aſunder, and having an entercourſe of Waters: but of ſo different a temper, that the Fiſh which are proper to the one, (for each of them hath its proper and peculiar ſorts) will not live in the other: but either die, or by ſome ſecret conveyances, find a way to their own Lake out of which they were brought.

It was divided anciently into five Provinces, each one a Kingdom of it ſelf, that is to ſay, 1. Leinſter, 2. Meth, 3. Ulſter, 4. Connaught, and 5. Munſter: but of late time the Province of Meth is reckoned for a Member or part of Leinſter.

1. LEINSTER, by the Latines called Lagenia, hath on the Eaſt, the Iriſh Chanel, (commonly called S. Georges Chanel) by which parted from the Iſle of Great Britain; on the Weſt, the River Newrie, (Neorus, as the Latines call it) which divides it from Mounſter; on the North, the Province of Meth; and the main Ocean on the South. The Soil more fruitful generally than the reſt of Ireland, becauſe better cultivated and manured, as having been longeſt in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh: from whom a great part of the Inhabitants do derive themſelves, and for that reaſon more conformable to the civilities and habit of the Engliſh Nation. Well watered, beſides a large Sea-coaſt, with many fair and pleaſant Rivers, the principal whereof, 1. the Barrow, called in Latine Birgus; 2. the Newrie, 3. the Showre, and 4. the Liffie, (the Libnius of Ptolomy) neighbouring Dublin the chief City.

It containeth the Counties of 1. Dublin, 2. Kilkenny, 3. Caterlough, 4. Kildare, 5. Leaſe, or Queens County, 6. Ophalie, or Kings County; and 7. Weiſhford: in which are comprehended 34 Towns of note, and 88 Caſtles well fortified, and able to make good reſiſtance againſt an Enemy; the Engliſh being forced to fortifie themſelves in their Plantations with ſtrong holds and fortreſſes, againſt the incurſions of the Natives.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Dublin, ſuppoſed to be the Eblana of Ptolomy; by the Iriſh called Balacleigh, becauſe being ſeated in a fenny and mooriſh ſoil, it was built on piles, as the word doth ſignifie in that language. Situate at or near the mouth of the River Liffe, which affordeth it a commodious Haven, but that the entrances thereof are many times encumbred with heaps of Sand. The City very rich and populous, as being the Metropolis of all the Iſland, the Seat of the Lord Deputy, an Archbiſhops See, and an Univerſity, beſides the benefit redounding from the Courts of Juſtice. In thoſe reſpects well fortified againſt all emergencies; and adorned with many goodly buildings, both private and publick. The Principal of which, are the Caſtle, wherein the Lord Deputy reſideth, built by Henry Loandres once Archbiſhop here: a Colledge founded by Queen Elizabeth, to the honour, and by the name of the bleſſed Trinity; the Cathedral Church dedicated to S. Patrick, the Apoſtle of the Iriſh Nation; a fair Collegiate Church called Chriſt-Church, beſides thirteen others deſtinated to Parochial meetings. Being deſtroyed almoſt to nothing in the Daniſh Wars, it was re-edified by Harold, ſirnamed Harfager, King of the Norwegians, then Maſters of moſt parts of the Iſland; and after the ſubjection of it to the Crown of England, was peopled with a Colony of Briſtol men. 2. Wieſhford, or Wixford, the Menapia of Ptolomy, ſituate on the mouth of the River Slane, ſuppo-ſed to be the Modona, of the ſame Author; the firſt of all the Towns in Ireland which received a Colony of Engliſh. 3. Kilkenny, on the River Newre, the chief Seat of the Biſhop of Oſſory, and the faireſt Town of all the Inlands: ſo called quaſi Cella Canici, the Cell or Monaſtery of Canicus, a man of great renown for piety, in theſe parts of the Country. 4. Kildare, an In-land Town alſo, and a Biſhops See; but of more note for giving the Title of an Earl to the ancient Family of the Fitz-Geralds, of long time honoured with this Title. One of which being much complained of to King Henry the 8th, as a man of ſo unquiet and turbulent a nature, that his Adverſaries cloſed their charge againſt him with this expreſſion, Finally, all Ireland cannot rule this Earl; The King replyed, that then this Earl ſhould rule all Ireland; and ſo for his Jeſts ſake made him Lord Deputy of the Kingdom. 5. Roſſe, once populous, well traded, and of large circumference, now a ruine only; nothing remaining but the Walls, which were built by Iſabel, the Daughter of Richard Strongbow Earl of Pembroke, the fortunate Conqueror of this Iſland for King Henry the ſecond. 6. Philips Town, the Principal of the County of Ophalie, or Kings County; ſo called in honour of King Philip; as 7. Marieburg, the chief of Leaſe, or the Queens County, was in honour of Queen Mary. 8. Leighlin, a place of great importance, well walled and fortified againſt the incurſion of the Iriſh, by the Lord Deputy Bellingham. 9. Caterlogh, commonly, but corruptly Carlough, a Town of great ſtrength, and the chief of that County. 10. Rheban, not otherwiſe of note, but that it is conceived to be the Rheba of Ptolomy.

2. METH, by the Latines called Media, by Giraldus, Midia; becauſe ſituate in the midſt of the Iſland, hath on the South Leinſter; on the Weſt, Connaught; on the North, Ulſter; on the Eaſt, the Iriſh Sea, or S. Georges Chanel. A ſmall, but rich and pleaſant Province: well ſtocked with people, and ſtored with all things neceſſary for their ſuſtentation; and for a ſweet and wholſom air not inferiour to any. Divided into three Counties only, that is to ſay, 1. Eaſt-Meth, 2. Weſt-Meth, and 3. Long-ford; containing 13 Towns of note, and 14 Caſtles of good eſteem. By reaſon of which ſtrength, it is called by ſome Writers, the Chamber of Ireland.

Towns of moſt conſequence herein, are 1. Trim, the chief Town of the County of Eaſt-Meth, the ancient Barony of the Lacies; poſſeſſed in former times of a fair Revenue in this County, and the Lords of the greateſt part of Ulſter. 2. Tredah, more properly Drogheda, ſituate on the River Boine on the edge of Ulſter, to which Province belongs ſo much of the Town as lieth on the North-ſide of that River: a very fair and populous City, as well by Art as Nature very ſtrongly fortified, and furniſhed with a large and commodious Haven. It took the name of Droghedah, from the Bridge there built upon the River for the conveniency of paſſage (as the word ſignifieth in that Language) and therefore called Pontana by ſome Latine Writers. 3. Molinga, the chief Town of Weſt-Meth. 4. Delvin, in the ſame County alſo, the Barony of the Nugents, an ancient Family in this Tract. 5. Longford, of moſt note in the County ſo named, but not elſe obſervable.

As for the Fortunes of this Province (for Leinſter ſince the firſt Conqueſt of it, hath been inſeparably annexed to the Crown of England) it was firſt granted in Fee-Farm by King Henry the ſecond, to Hugh Lacy, a man of great merit and employment in the Conqueſt of Ireland, who left it unto Walter his younger Son. By Margaret and Matilda, the Neeces of this Walter by his Son Gilbert, one moyety hereof came to the Mortimers Earls of March, and in their right unto the Crown in King Edward the Fourth: and the other moyety to the Verduns, by whom diſperſed and ſcattered into divers Families. Accompted for one County only till the time of King Henry the 8th, in whoſe Reign it was divided into Eaſt-Meth, and Weſt-Meth; to which the County of Longford was after added, as it continueth to this day.

3. ULSTER, by the Latines called Ultonia, is the largeſt Province of all Ireland, bounded on the South with Meth and Connaught; on the Weſt, with the vaſt Iriſh Ocean; on the North, with that part of the Northern Ocean, to which Ptolomy gives the name of Hyperborean; and on the Eaſt, with St. Georges Chanel. A Country fruitful of it ſelf, but in moſt places formerly overgrown with Woods, and drowned in Mariſhes and great Bogs, by the natural ſlothfulneſs of the people: made more reſponſal to the Husbandman both for Corn and Paſturage, ſince the late Plantation of the Britiſh, than in times foregoing.

It is divided into the Counties of, 1. Louth, 2. Cavon, 3. Fermanath, 4. Down, 5. Monaghan, 6. Armagh, 7. Colrane, 8. Tirconnel, 9. Tir-Oen, and 10. Antrim. In which are comprehended 14 Towns of note for Commerce and Traffick, and 30 Caſtles for the defence of the Country, and keeping under the wild Iriſh; wilder and more untractable in theſe Northern parts, than the reſt of Ireland. The whole well watered with a large and ſpacious Sea, on three ſides thereof; many great Lakes in the body of it, beſides the Rivers of 1. Boyne, called in Latine Boanda, which divides it from Meth, 2. the Bann, 3. Moandus, and 4. the Eyn, belonging to this Province wholly.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Armagh, on or near the River of Kalin, the chief Town of the County ſo called, and the See of an Archbiſhop, who is the Primate of all Ireland. An ancient City, but ſo miſerably defaced by fire in Tir Oens Rebellion, that it can ſcarce preſerve the reputation of a Market-Town. 2. Carlingford, and 3. Dundalk, both ſituate on the Sea ſide, and both within the County of Louth. 4. Knock-Fergus, the chief of Antrim, more properly Rock-Fergus, (and in that ſenſe called Carick-Fergus by the Iriſh) ſo called from Fergus one of the Kings of the Iriſh Scots, who there ſuffered Shipwrack. Seated upon a large and capacious Bay (the Vinderius of Ptolomy) which giveth it both a ſafe and commodious Port; as well by natural ſituation, as the works of Art, very ſtrongly fortified; by reaſon of the Neighbourhood of the Scots in Cantire, from which little diſtant. 5. London-Derry, a Colony of the Londoners, beſt built of any Town in the North of Ireland. 6. Dungannon, the principal Seat and reſidence in former times, of the great Oneals. 7. Dungall, the principal of Tir-Connel. 8. Robogh, a ſmall Village at preſent, but anciently a Biſhops See: fit to be mentioned in this place, in regard it ſtill preſerveth ſome foot-ſteps of the old Robogdii, an Iriſh Tribe, and placed by Ptolomy in this tract, where they gave name unto the Promontory by him called Robogdium, now the Fair Foreland; as is probably conceived by the learned Cambden.

This, as it is the largeſt Province of all this Kingdom, ſo was it with moſt difficulty ſubjected to the Crown of England, and reduced to good order and civility. Firſt conquered by John Curcy, a valiant Engliſh-man, in the Reign of King Henry the ſecond, by whom created Earl of Ulſter. But being maligned for his eminent Virtues, and after proſcribed by King John, this Title and Eſtate were both conferred upon Hugh Lacie, the Lord and Conquerour of Meth, whom before we ſpake of. By an Heir General of the Lacies, it came unto the Burghs then Lords of Connaught; and by the marriage of Elizabeth Daughter and Heir of Richard de Burgh, the laſt Earl of that Family, mily, it came to Lionel Duke of Clarence, the ſecond Son (then living) of King Edward the third; as by his Daughter Philip, to the Earls of March, from them by the like marriage to the Houſe of York, and in the perſon of King Edward the 4th, to the Crown again. But being neglected by the Engliſh, in the whole courſe of their Government, eſpecially in the Wars betwixt York and Lancaſter, it was cantoned into many Eſtates & Principalities, by the great Lords of the natural Iriſh, (who had born too great ſway here in the former times): and ſo eſtranged from the civilities of England, and their Allegiance to that Crown, as if it had never been in ſubjection to it. In which eſtate it did continue (the Kings of England having here no more power or profit, than the great ones of the Country were pleaſed to give them): till the Rebellion firſt, and afterwards the vanquiſhment of Hugh Oneal, the then Earl of Tir-Oen, brought it in full ſubjection to the Engliſh Government, of which more hereafter.

4. CONNAUGHT, in Latine called Connacia; by the Iriſh, Connaught, is bounded on the North with Ulſter; on the Weſt with the main Ocean; on the South with Munſter, from which parted by the River Shanon; and on the Eaſt, with Meth and ſome part of Leinſter. So called from the Nagnata, an old Iriſh Nation; or from Nagnata a Port-Town; both placed by Ptolomy in this Tract. The ſoil of the ſame temper with that of Ulſter; as woody and as full of bogs till theſe later times, in which indifferently well cleared of both inconveniences.

It hath been alſo called by our Engliſh Writers, the County of Clare, from Thomas de Clare, one of the younger Sons of Gilbert de Clare Earl of Glouceſter, on whom it was conferred by King Edward the firſt: and is divided at the preſent into theſe five Shires, that is to ſay, 1. Letrim, 2. Roſcommon, 3. Maio, 4. Slego, and 5. Galloway and Twomond. In which are comprehended but 8 Towns of any conſequence, for Commerce and Traffick, (an argument of the imperfect Plantation of it by the Engliſh Conquerors); and about 24 Caſtles for defence of the Country, of old erection, beſides ſuch Fortreſſes as have been raiſed occaſionally in theſe later troubles.

Places of moſt note and obſervation, 1. Toam, an Archbiſhops See. 2. Athenry an ancient Town, but decayed and ruinous; of moſt renown for being the Barony of John de Bermingham, a noble Engliſh man, who had great poſſeſſion in this tract. 3. Letrim, the chief Town of the County ſo named, neighboured by the Curlew-Mountains, unfortunately memorable for the great defeat there given the Engliſh, in Tir-Oens rebellion; and by the Spring or Fountain of the River Shenin or Shanon, whoſe courſe we have before deſcribed. 4. Slego, and 5. Roſcommon, the chief Town of their ſeveral Counties. 6. Athlone, a piece of great ſtrength, and the great Key of Connaught. 7. Twomond, not otherwiſe much obſervable, but for giving the title of an Earl to the Family of O-Brian, (deſcended from the Kings of Connaught) advanced unto that honour by King Henry the 8th. 8. Galloway the principal of this Province, a Biſhops See, and the third City of the Kingdom for beauty and bigneſs. Situate near the fall of the great Lake or River of Corbes, in the Weſtern Ocean, defended on that ſide from the fury of the Sea, and the fear of Invaſions, by the interpoſition of ſome Iſlands (called the Iſles of Arran) very ſtrongly fortified. A noted Empory, and lately of ſo great fame with foreign Merchants, that an out-landiſh Merchant meeting with an Iriſh-man, demanded in what part of Galloway, Ireland ſtood; as if Galloway had been the name of the Iſland, and Ireland only the name of ſome Town.

This once a Kingdom of it ſelf, as the reſt of thoſe Provinces; the laſt King whereof was Roderick, ſurnamed the Great, who having a great hand over the reſt of the Roytelets, entituled himſelf ſole Monarch or King of Ireland. But being forced to ſubmit himſelf to King Henry the ſecond, his Country at the laſt was brought into ſubjection to the Crown of England, by the valour and good fortune of William de Burgh, Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloceſter, William de Bermingham, and other Noble Adventurers of the Engliſh Nation. And though all of them did partake of the fruit of their labours; yet the greateſt part of the ſpoil, together with the title of Lords of Connaught, fell to the Family of the Burghs; from them to Lionel Duke of Clarence, and by degrees unto the Crown, as before was ſhewn. Cantoned again amongſt the Iriſh and degenerate Engliſh, as Ulſter was, by the ſupine neglect of the Kings of England: till the Rebellion of Tir-Oen, involving all the Chiefs of the Iriſh Nation in the ſame cauſe with him, involved them alſo conſequently in the ſame deſtruction.

5. MOUNSTER, by the Latines called Momonia, is bounded on the North with Connaught; on the Eaſt with Leinſter; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick or Weſtern Ocean; and on the South, with the Vergivian. By the natural Iriſh it is called Mown, whence the Engliſh had the name of Mounſter. A Province, which for rich Towns, commodious Havens, fair Rivers, and the fertility of the Soil, yields not to any in the Kingdom.

It is divided into ſix Counties, viz. Limerick, 2. Waterford, 3. Cork, 4. Deſmond, 5. Kerry, and 6. Tipperary; which two laſt anciently enjoyed all the rights of a County Palatine: And in theſe Shires are comprehended (beſides many ſafe Stations and Roads for Shipping) 24 Towns of Note and Trading, and 66 Caſtles of old erection.

Places of moſt obſervation, 1. Caſſiles, in the County of Limerick, an Archbiſhops See, advanced unto that honour by Pope Eugenius the third, about the year 1150. 2. Limerick, the principal of that County, and the fourth in eſtimation of all the Kingdom: Situate in an Iſland compaſſed round about with the River Shanon, by which means well fortified; a well frequented Empory, and a Biſhops See; diſtant from the main Ocean about 60 miles, but ſo accommodated by the River, that Ships of Burden come up cloſe to the very Walls. The Caſtles and the Bridg-pieces of both great ſtrength and beauty, were of the foundation of King John, exceedingly delighted with the ſituation. 3. Clonmel, in the County of Tipperary, of great ſtrength and conſequence. 4. Holy Croſs, in the ſame County alſo, once flouriſhing by reaſon of the great reſort of Pilgrims, to ſee and worſhip there a piece of the holy Croſs, as it was ſuppoſed: which ſuppoſition as it drew much Wealth unto the Town, ſo it obtained the rights of a County Palatine for the County alſo. 5. Thurles in the ſame County, which gives the Title of a Viſcount to the Earls of Ormond, but not elſe obſervable. 6. Waterford, on the River Showre, a well traded Port, a Biſhops See, and the ſecond City of the Kingdom. Of great fidelity to the Engliſh ſince the Conqueſt of Ireland, and for that cauſe endowed with many ample priviledges. Firſt built by ſome Norwegian Pirates, who though they fixed it in one of the moſt barren parts and moſt foggy air of all the Country, yet they made choice of ſuch a ſafe and commodious ſite for the uſe of Shipping, that of a Neſt of Pirats it was eſtſoons made a Receipt for Merchants, and ſuddenly grew up to great Wealth and Power. 6. Cork, (by the Latines called Corcagia) the principal of that County, and a Biſhops See: well walled, and fitted with a very commodious Haven; conſiſting chiefly of one ſtreet reaching out in length; inhabited by a civil, wealthy, and induſtrious people. 7. Dunk-Eran, an old Epiſcopal

See,

See, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Ivernis of Ptolomy, but not elſe obſervable. 8. Kinſale, upon the mouth of the River Bany, a commodious Port, oppoſite to the Coaſts of Spain, and fortified in Tir Oens Rebellion by a Spaniſh Garriſon, under the command of Don John de Aquila: but ſoon recovered (after the defeat of that Grand Rebel near the Walls hereof) by the valour and indefatigable induſtry of Charles Lord Mountjoy, the then Lord Deputy of this Kingdom. 9. Baltimore, 10. Toughall, and 11. Bere-haven, all upon the Sea, and all provided of ſafe Roads or convenient Havens. 12. Leſmore, of old a Biſhops See, now annexed to Waterford, in which Shire it ſtandeth. Nothing in point of ſtory ſingular which concerns this Province; but that it was ſo carefully looked to by the Kings of England, that there was appointed over it a peculiar Officer (in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, in power and place next to the Deputy himſelf) called the Lord Preſident of Munſter: by whoſe vigilancy there have hapned fewer Rebellions here, than in any Province of this Iſland.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Iſland, being originally Britains, (as before is ſaid) were in the time of Ptolomy diſtinguiſhed into the Nations of Rhobognii, Darnii, Volontii, Venicnii, and Erdini, poſſeſſing the Northern parts, now Ulſter; the Auteri, Cangani and Nagnatæ, inhabiting Connaught: the Velibori, Uterni, Vodii, and Coriondi, in the South, now Mounſter; and the Menapii, Cauci, Blanii, Brigantes, taking up the Provinces of Meth and Leinſter. Principal Cities of the which, were Eblana, now Dublin; Menapia, now Waterford; Nagnata, which Ptolomy honoured with the Title of Urbs inſignis; Rhigia, Rheba, Macolicum, Laberus, Ivernis, &c. not eaſily diſcernable by what names we may call them now: this Country never being ſo happy as to come under the power of the Romans, the great Maſters of Civility and good Letters in the Weſt of Europe: and by that means, the actions and affairs thereof buried in ignorance and ſilence. Towards the falling of which Empire we find the Nation of the Scots to be ſeated here, and from hence firſt to take poſſeſſion of the Hebrides, or Weſtern Iſles, next of the Weſtern part of Britain on the North of Dunbritton-Frith. Afterwards ſome of the Saxon Monarchs caſt their eyes upon it, and made themſelves Maſters of Dublin, and ſome other places; but being incumbred with the Danes, could not hold them long: being hardly able to defend their own againſt the people. The next that undertook the conqueſt, were the Northern Nations, Danes, Swedes, and Normans, all paſſing in the Chronicles of that time, under the name of Norwegians: who firſt only ſcowred along the Coaſts in the way of Piracy. But after finding the weakneſs of the Iſland, divided amongſt many petit and inconſiderable Princes, they made an abſolute conqueſt of it under the conduct of Turgeſius, whom they elected for their King: ſoon rooted out by the policy of the King of Meth, the only Iriſh Prince who was in favour with the Tyrant. This petit King by name Omo-Laghliben, had a Daughter, of renowned beauty, whom Turgeſius demanded of her Father to ſerve his luſts: and he ſeeming willing to condeſcend to the motion, as if honoured by it, made anſwer, That beſides his Daughter, he had at his diſpoſing many others of more exquiſite beauties, which ſhould all be ready at command. Turgeſius (wallowing this bait, deſired him with all ſpeed to effect the meeting. But the King of Meth, attiring in the habits of Women, a company of young Gentlemen, who durſt for the common liberty adventure their ſeveral lives: conducted them to the Tyrants Bed-chamber, And they according to the directions given them, (when for that little modeſty ſake he had in him, he had commanded all his attendants to avoid the room) aſſaulted him, now ready for and expecting more kind embraces, and left him dead in the place. The Methian King had by this time acquainted diverſe of the better ſort with his plot; all which upon a ſign given, ruſh into the Palace, and put to death all the Norwegians, and other attendants of the Tyrant. After this, the Roytelets enjoyed their former Dominions, till the year 1172. in which Dermot Mac Morogh King of Leinſter, having forced the Wife of Maurice O Rork King of Meth, and being by him driven out of his Kingdom; came to the Court of England for ſuccour. To this Petition, Henry the ſecond then King, condeſcended: ſending him aid under the leading of Richard de Clare, ſirnamed Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, who reſtored King Dirmot, and brought a great part of the Iſland under the Engliſh ſubjection. John, King of England, was the firſt who was entituled Lord of Ireland; which ſtile was granted him by Pope Urban the third, who for the ornament of his Royalty, ſent him a plume of Peacock Feathers: and when Tir-Oen ſtiled him Defender of the Iriſh Liberty, he was by Clement the 8. honoured with the like plume. But here we are to underſtand, that though the Kings of England uſed no other title than Lords of Ireland; yet were they Kings thereof in effect and power, Lords Paramount, as we uſe to ſay. And though themſelves retained only the name of Lords, yet one of them gave to one of his Engliſh Subjects, the honourable, but invidious title of Duke of Ireland. And they retained this title of Lords, till the year 1542; in which Henry the 8th, in an Iriſh Parliament, was declared King of Ireland, as a name more ſacred, and repleat with Majeſty, than that of Lord: at which time alſo he was declared to be Supream Head under God, of the Church of Ireland; and the pretended juriſdiction of all foreign Powers, eſpecially the uſurped authority of the Pope of Rome renounced by Law, though ſtill acknowledged by too many of his ſuperſtitious and untractable People.

The Government of this Country, ſince the firſt Conqueſt by the Engliſh, hath been moſt commonly by one Supream Officer, who is ſometimes called the Lord Lieutenant, moſt generally the Lord Deputy of Ireland; than whom no Vice-Roy in all Europe hath greater power, or comes nearer the Majeſty of a King in his Train and State. For his aſſiſtance he hath a Privy Council attending on him, though reſident for the moſt part at Dublin: and in emergencies, or caſes of more difficult nature proceedeth many times in an arbitrary way, without formalities of Law. And for their Laws, which are the ſtanding Rule of all civil Government, they owe their being and original to the Engliſh Parliaments. For in the Reign of King Henry the 7th, Sir Edward Poynings, then Lord Deputy, cauſed an Act to paſs in the Iriſh Parliament, whereby all Laws and Statutes, which were made in England before that time, were to be entertained and ſtand in force as the Laws of Ireland. On which foundation they have raiſed many Superſtructures both of Law and Government, enacted in their own Parliaments, ſummoned by the Lord Deputy at the Kings appointment: in which, by another Statute made in the time of the ſaid Poynings, the People are enabled to make Laws for their own good Governance, conditioned they were firſt tranſmitted to the Court of England to be conſidered of by the King, before they were Voted to in either of the Houſes of the Iriſh Parliaments. Which Laws commonly called Poynings Laws, have hitherto continued in force amongſt them; though the laſt much ſtomached and repined at; not only as a badge of their Subjection to the Crown of England, but as a Curb or Martingal to hold them in.

Yet notwithſtanding theſe good Laws, and the ample power of their Commiſſion, the Lord Deputies could never abſolutely ſubdue the Iſland, or bring the people to any any civil course of life; the Fathers inflicting an heavy curse on all their posterity, if ever they should sow corn, build houses, or learn the English tongue. To this indisposition of the Irish themselves, let us add the defects of the Kings of England, and Irish Deputies, in matters of civil policy, as I find them particularized by Sir John Davies, in his worthy and pithy discourse of this Subject: I will only glean a few of them. First then, saith he, a barbarous Country is like a field overgrown with weeds, which must first be well broken with the Plough, and then immediately sown with good and profitable seed: so must a wild and uncivil people, be first broken and ploughed up by war, and then presently sown with the seed of good Laws and discipline; lest the weeds revive in the one, and ill manners in the other. Here then was the first defect in our English Kings, not to tame and take down the Stomachs and pride of this people, though either civil or foreign wars perhaps occasioned this neglect: and also the Irish Deputies, who at such times as the people upon a small discomfiture, were crest-fain, neglected the so keeping of them by severity of discipline. The second oversight concerneth particularly our Kings, who gave such large possessions and Regalities unto the first Conquerors, that the people knew no Authority in a manner, above their own immediate Lords. The Laws of England were not indifferently communicated to all the Irishry, but to some particular Families and Provinces only: insomuch as there were but five great Lords of the natural Irish, who had the benefit and protection of the Laws of England, that is to say, O Neal in Ulster, O Connohor in Connaught, Mac Morrough in Lemster, O Malaghlin in Meth, and O Brian in Twomond; known by the name of Quinque Sanguines in some old Records. By means whereof the rest of the people being in the condition of Out-Laws, or at the best of Aliens, had no incouragement either to build, or plant, or manure their Land, or to behave themselves as Subjects. A fourth defect was more particularly in the Deputies or Lords Lieutenants, who having made good and wholsom Laws against the barbarous customs of the Common people, and the mercilesse oppressions of the Lords, never put any of them in execution; as if they had been made for terrour, not for reformation. Fifthly, add unto these (which Sir John Davies hath omitted) the little care which was too often taken by the Kings of England in the choice of their Deputies: sometimes conferring that high Office as a Court preferment, without relation unto the merits of the person, and sometimes sending men of weak or broken Fortunes, who attended more their own profit than their Masters service, and were more bent to fleece than to feed this flock. Sixthly, And yet besides these Errors of the Kings and Deputies in point of Government, there was another, and as great in the Planters themselves; who building all their Forts and Castles in the open Countries, abandoned the Woods and Bogs, and other Fastnesses to the natural Irish; the strength whereof not only animated them to Rebel upon all occasions: but served too fitly to continue them in their ancient Barbarism.

In these terms of wildness and non-subjection stood Ireland, till the latter end of Queen Elizabeths reign, at what time the rebellion of Hugh O Neal Earl of Tir Oen had engaged almost all the Irishry in that desperate action which ending in the overthrow of that ingrateful Rebel, and all his partizans, not only crushed the over-much powerableness of the Irish Nobility, but made the final and full conquest of the whole Nation. So true it is, that Every Rebellion when it is suppresst, doth make the Prince stronger, and the Subjects weaker. Ireland thus broken and ploughed up, that glorious Queen died a victor over all her enemies, and left the sowing of it unto her successor King James, who omitted no part of a skilful Seedsman. 1. Then there was an ἀμνηστία or Act of Oblivion made, whereby all the offences against the Crown were remitted, if by such a limited day the people would sue out their Pardons, and by the same Act, all the Irishry were manumitted from the servitude of their Lords, and received into the Kings immediate Protection. 2ly, The whole Kingdom was divided into Shires and Judges Itinerant appointed to circuit them: whereby it hath followed, that the exactions of the Lords are laid aside, the behaviour of the people narrowly looked into, the passages before unknown unto our Souldiers, are laid open by our Under-Sheriffs and Bayliffs; and the common people seeing the benefit and security they enjoy by the English Laws, and loth to plead always by an Interpreter, begin to set their children to School, for the learning of the English tongue. 3ly, The Irish were not rooted out, as in the first plantation in Lemster, and the English only estated in their rooms: but were only removed from the Woods, Bogs, and Mountains, into the plain and open Country: that being like wild trees transplanted, they might grow the milder, and bear the better fruit. And 4. whereas there was but one Freeholder in a whole Country, which was the Lord himself, the rest holding in Villenage, and being subject to the Lords immeasurable taxations; whereby they had no encouragement to build or plant; now the Lords Estate was divided into two parts, that which he held in demain to himself, which was still left unto him; and that which was in the hands of his Tenants, who had Estates made in their Possessions, according to the Common course of England, paying instead of uncertain Irish taxations, certain English rents: whereby the people have since set their minds upon repairing their houses, and manuring their lands, to the great increase of the private and publick Revenue.

But that which most advanced the reduction of Ireland to a setled and civil Government, and rooted it in a subjection to the Crown of England, was the voluntary flight of the Earls of Tyrone, and Tirconnell, Sir John Odaughertie, and other great men of the North, possessed of large Territories and great Jurisdictions. Who being both uncapable of Loyalty, and impatient of seeing the Kings Judges, Justices, and other Ministers of State, to hold their Sessions, and execute their Commissions of Oyer and Terminer within the parts where they commanded: without more provocation, or the fear of any danger but a guilty Conscience, forsook the Country, and left their whole Estates to the Kings disposing. By whose directions, their Lands were seized upon and sold to several Purchasors, the City of London inteoffed in a great part of them, a great Plantation made in Ulster of English, Welch, and Scots, by the united name of a British Plantation; and a new Order of Knights Baronets erected in the Kingdom of England for raising money to advance and indear the work. Which had it been as cordially affected by the English, as it was by the Scots; if more of this Nation had gone thither, & not abandoned so great a part of it to the power of the other, it had been better for both Kingdoms, in the conformity of each to one form of Government (which the Scots, being factious for another, did not easily brook) and the uniting of both people in the bonds of amity: the Irish looking on the Scot as a meer Intruder, but on the English as his old Master or his Fellow-Subject. Howsoever, so great a part of the Country (and that which heretofore was the nest of the Rebels,) being thus disposed of, it came to pass, that Ireland, which before served only as a grave to bury our best men, and a gulf to swallow our greatest treasures; being governed neither as a Country Free, nor conquered: was brought in some hope, by the prudence and policy of her last Kings and late Lord Deputies, to prove an orderly Commonwealth, civil in it ſelf, profitable to the Prince, and a good ſtrength to the Britiſh Empire. For to ſuch Order it was reduced, in a little time, that the wayfaring men might travel without danger, the Ploughman walk without fear, the Laws adminiſtred in every place alike, the men drawn unto Villages, the Woods and Faſtneſſes left to beaſts, and all reduced to that civility, as our Fathers never ſaw, nor could we well ſample out of ancient Hiſtories.

The Revenues of this Kingdom are ſaid by Walſingham in the time of Edward the 3d, to have been yearly 40000 pounds; but his ſucceſſors, till of late, have ſcarce got ſo much as the keeping of it coſt them: King Richard the ſecond being by the ſame Walſingham reported to have ſpent 30000 marks out of his own purſe, over and above the money which he received thence. Whether this Country were ſo profitable to Edward the third, or no, I determine not, though I find good reaſons to perſwade me, that Walſingham was not well acquainted with the ſtate of that Exchequer. But ſure I am, that the Revenues of the Crown are more than double what they were in the ſaid Kings Reign, and more duely paid into the Exchequer of that Kingdom than ever formerly; the profits of the Cuſtom houſe amounting to 30000 per Annum, in the laſt year of King James his Reign. Not to ſay any thing of the great improvements which were made by the Earl of Strafford, in the time of his Government, becauſe they fell together with him.

The ſtrength of this Kingdom conſiſteth partly in the ſituation of it, begirt about with difficult and dangerous Seas; partly in the many Caſtles firſt built and fortified by the Engliſh Planters; and partly in a ſtanding Army continually kept up by the Kings of England, for defence of their hold and intereſt againſt the Rebellions of the Natives. What Forces it is able to raiſe both of Horſe and Foot, could never be conjectured at, till now of late. For formerly the Kings of England being actually poſſeſſed only of thoſe four Counties which they called the Pale, that is to ſay, the Counties of Dublin, Louth, Kildare, and Meth (which laſt hath ſince the time of King Henry the 8th been ſubdivided into three) were not able to raiſe any great power out of that Eſtate, but were forced to ſend Souldiers out of England (as occaſion was) to preſerve their Soveraignty in Ireland. The greateſt Levy which I read of, was that of 1500 Iriſh, led by the Prior of Kilmainham to King Henry the fifth, then being at the ſiege of Harflew in Normandy. And on the other ſide, the great Lords of the natural Iriſh, and degenerate Engliſh, being divided into Factions amongſt themſelves, and never joined in any one principle of common intereſt, were more inconſiderable than the weak, but united Forces of the Kings of England. And though moſt of them at the laſt, were drawn into a confederacy with the Earl of Tir-Oen, to make good his rebellion: yet find I not that their Army did exceed at any time, the number of 8000 men; and thoſe not well appointed neither. So that the beſt eſtimate which can be made of the Forces of Ireland, muſt be meaſured by the Armies raiſed in the late Rebellion, when the Iriſh had both time, and leiſure, to get themſelves ſome reputation in the World, and make proviſion for a War. In proſecution of which, he who conſiders the many Armies they have raiſed, ſince their firſt muſtering under the command of Sir Phelim O Neal; the many defeats which have been given them, and thoſe as many new recruits after each defeat; all of them raiſed out of the bodies of their own people, without ſupply from other Countries (beſides ſuch as have ſerved againſt them for the King): muſt needs conclude that they want not men enough for ſervice; nor skill, nor courage to attempt the moſt difficult enterpriſes.

The Arms of Ireland are Azure, an Harp Or, ſtringed Argent. Which Coat, King James, (to ſhew himſelf the firſt abſolute King of Ireland) firſt cauſed to be marſhalled with the Royal Arms of Great Britain.

The LESSER ISLANDS

AND now we come at laſt to the LESSER ISLANDS, diſperſed in ſeveral parts of the Britiſh Ocean. The chief whereof are, 1. The Orcades, 2. Schetland, 3. The Hebrides, 4. Man, 5. Angleſey, 6. The Iſlands of the Severn Sea, 7. The Sorlings, or Iſles of Scilly, 8. Wight, 9. Thanet, 10. Sunderland, 11. Holy Iſland.

I. The ORCADES or Iſles of Orkney are in number 32, ſituate over againſt Cathneſs, the moſt Northern Country of all Scotland; and ſeparate from one another by ſome narrow Straights. The ſoil indifferently Fruitful, exceedingly well ſtored with Barley, and great Herds of Cattel; plentiful in Hares and Conies, as of Cranes and Swans: but deſtitute of Wheat, and unfurnithed both of Woods and Trees. But their chief commodity is their Fiſh, which the Inhabitants catch upon the Coaſts in great abundance. Thoſe of moſt note in all the cluſter, are, 1. Heth, conceived to be the Ocetis of Ptolomy: as 2. Fair Iſle, on good reaſon thought to be the Dumna of Pliny; the chief Town of it being ſtill called by the name of Dumo. 3. Hey, taken or miſtaken for the Dumna of Pliny, but not elſe obſervable. 4. Pomona, the chief of all, in length about 26 miles; in breadth, where it is broadeſt, ſix. The chief Town of it Kirkwall, honoured with a Biſhops See, and ſtrengthened with two Caſtles. This Iſland is well ſtored with Tin and Lead, and is at this day by the Inhabitants called Mainland.

The people of theſe Iſles (according to Maginus) are great drinkers, but no drunkards; Bibaciſſimi ſunt incolæ, nunquam tamen inebriantur. They uſe the Gothiſh Language, which they derive from the Norwegians, in whoſe poſſeſſion they once were; and of whoſe qualities they ſtill retain ſome ſmack. The Iſles themſelves in the time of Solinus were not inhabited, being then overgrown with ruſhes; (now in a meaſure, populous and fertile, as before was ſaid) and were firſt diſcovered by Julius Agricola, the firſt that ever ſailed about Britain. In later times they were poſſeſſed by the Normans or Norwegians, who held them till the year 1266; when Magnus King of Norway ſurrendred them up to Alexander King of Scotland, which Surrender ſome of the ſucceeding Kings did afterwards ratifie: the claim heretofore being finally relinquiſhed by Chriſtiern the firſt, King of Denmark and Norway, on the marriage of his Daughter Margaret with King James the third, An. 1474. ſome money being added to make good the Contract, without which the Danes would not forgo their pretenſions to them.

II. Two days ſayling North of theſe Orcades, lyeth

SCHETLAND, an Iſland belonging to the Crown of Scotland, and is by many Learned men, upon very good reaſons, ſuppoſed to be the Thule of the Antients. For firſt, it ſtandeth in the 63 degree of Latitude, in which Ptolomy placed Thule. Secondly, it lyeth oppoſite to Bergen in Norway; againſt which Pomponius Mela hath ſeated it. And thirdly, Caſper Peucerus hath obſerved, that this Schetland is by Mariners called Thylenſil; a name in which that of Thule is apparently couched. That Iſe land was not Thule (as moſt ſay) we ſhall ſhew you when we come to Norway, and the Northern Iſlands. Here we add only, That the Antients did report many ſtrange things of it, and ſome of them beyond all belief. Pliny affirming that they had no day here for all the Winter (nulla per brumam dies, as his own wordsare) with whom agree Solinus and many others, as to that particular. Iſidore adds, (Origen. lib. 14. c. 6.) nullum ultra eam diem eſſe, that beyond this Iſle there was no day in any place; as if here had been the end of the World and Nature. But Pytheas in Polybius goes beyond them all, reporting that in this Iſle there was no diſtinction of Earth, Air, and Water: ἀλλὰ σύγκριμά τι ἐκ τούτων, but a confuſed mixture of all together, like the primitive Chaos of the Poets. The reaſon of which ſtrange report, was the audaciouſneſs of thoſe who had ſeen the Iſland, and thought that whatſoever they ſaid of it would not be diſproved, becauſe of the remoteneſs of it from more civil Countries. So truly and judiciouſly ſpoken was that of Syneſius, a right Learned Prelate, Ἡ Θούλη διδάσκει τοῖς διαψεύδεσθαι ἀντλοῦσιν ἀνεύθυνα καὶ ἀνέλεγκτα διδάσκει. Thule (ſaith he) gave thoſe who had ſailed unto it, the opportunity of lying without controll. An opportunity which many of our Mariners and vulgar Travellers have made too much uſe of in theſe laſt times alſo.

III. The HEBRIDES, HEBUDAE, or Weſtern Iſlands, ſituate on the Weſt of Scotland, are in number about 44. The chief whereof, 1. Ila, 24 miles long, and 16 in breadth; plentiful in Wheat, Cattle, and herds of Deer. 2. Jona, Famous for the Sepulchres of the old Scotiſh Kings; whoſe chief Town is Sodore, once a Biſhops See, called hence Sodorenſis; his juriſdiction comprehending theſe Iſlands with the Iſle of Man; his See erected by Pope Gregory the 4th, Anno 840. or thereabouts. His dwelling for the moſt part of it in the Iſle of Man, as the wealthier and more pleaſant part of his Dioceſs; till the conqueſt of it by the Engliſh; at what time thoſe of the Weſtern Iſlands, withdrew themſelves from his obedience, and had a Biſhop of their own: both of them for a long time called Sodorenſes; but at laſt this took the name of Inſulanus, Biſhop of the Iſles, which he ſtill retains. 4. Mela, by Ptolomy called Maleos, (that of Ila beforementioned being his Epidia) mountainous and hilly, but affording good Mines of Lead and Copper; 25 miles more in compaſs than that of Ila. 4. Lewis, or Leviſſa, the largeſt of all the Hebrides, ſaid to be 60 miles in length, and 30 in breadth, the more Weſtern of the two Ebudae ſpoken of by Ptolomy: the other being now called Skye, famous for the multitude of Sea-Calves in the Creeks thereof. 6. Racline, the Recina of Ptolomy, the ſmalleſt of the Hebrides, and moſt near to Ireland. The reſt of leſs note, not known, or not inhabited in the time of the Romans, and not very well peopled at the preſent, I forbear to name: ſome of them rather Rocks than Iſlands, others ſcarce having graſs enough to hide their bareneſs. The people of them all, as well in language as behaviour, reſemble the Wild Iriſh, and are called Red ſhanks: a people, as King James affirmeth in his Baſilicon Doron, utterly rude, and without all ſhew of Civility; ſuch as endure not to be governed by Laws, or kept under by Diſcipline. Legum ſeveritate, & judiciorum metu, ſe alligari non patiuntur, ſaith judicious Cambden. Such as they are, they came unto the Crown of Scotland by a Contract betwixt Magnus King of Norway, and King Alexander the third: the Orcades being bargained for at the ſame time alſo.

South of the Hebrides, in the Bay of Dunbritton-Frith, lieth the Iſle of Rothſay, (now called Buthe) which gives the Title of a Duke to the Prince of Scotland: and the Iſle of Arran, which gives the title of an Earl to the chief of the Hamiltons.

IV. MAN is ſituate juſt over againſt the Southern part of Cumberland, from which it is diſtant 25 miles; and was judged to belong to Britain rather than to Ireland; becauſe it foſtered venemous Serpents brought hither out of Britain. By Ptolomy it is called Monœda, or the further Mona, to difference it from that which we call Angleſey; by Pliny, Monabia; Menavia, by Oraſius and Beda; Eubonia, by Gildas an old Britiſh Writer. The Welch at this day call it Menaw, the Inhabitants Maning, and the Engliſh Man. It is in length 30 miles, in breadth 15, and 8 in ſome places. The people hate Theft and Begging; and uſe a Language mixt of the Norwegian and Iriſh tongues. The Soyl is abundant in Flax, Hemp, Oats, Barley, and Wheat; with which they uſe to ſupply the defects of Scotland, if not the Continent it ſelf, yet queſtionleſs the Weſtern Iſles, which are a member of it. For thus writeth the Reverend Father in God John Mericke late Biſhop of this Iſland, in a Letter to Mr. Cambden, at ſuch time as he was compoſing his moſt excellent Britannia. Our Iſland (ſaith he) for Cattel, for Fiſh, and for Corn, hath not only ſufficient for it ſelf, but ſendeth alſo good ſtore into other Countries. Now what Countries ſhould need this ſupply (England and Ireland being afore-hand with ſuch proviſion) except Scotland, or ſome members thereof, I ſee not.

Venerable Bede numbred in it 300 Families, and now it is furniſhed with 17 Pariſh Churches. The chief Towns are, 1. Balacuri. and 2. Ruſſin, or Caſtle-Town, the Seat of a Biſhop, who though he be under the Archbiſhop of York, yet never had any voice in the Engliſh Parliament. In this Iſland is the Hill of Sceaful, where on a clear day one may ſee England, Scotland, and Ireland: here alſo are bred the Soland Geeſe, of rotten Wood falling into the Water. This Iſland was taken from the Britains by the Scots, and from them regained by Edwin King of Northumberland. Afterwards the Norwegians ſeized on it, and made it a Kingdom; the Kings hereof ruling over the Hebrides, and ſome part of Ireland. From them taken by Alexander the 3d of Scotland, by a mixt title of Arms, and purchaſe. After which times it was ſometime Engliſh ſometimes Scottiſh, as their fortunes varied; till in the end, and about the year 1340. William Montacute Earl of Salisbury, deſcended from the Norwegian Kings of Man, won it from the Scots, and ſold it to the Lord Scrope, who being condemned of Treaſon, Henry the Fourth gave it Henry Piercy Earl of Northumberland; but he alſo proving falſe to his Soveraign, it was given to the Stanleys now Earls of Derby.

2243 12 Reginald II. Brother of Harold.

1266 14 Magnus III. King of Norway, the last King of Man of the Danish or Norwegian Race.

The Kings and Lords of Man of the English Blood.

1395 2 William Lord Scrope, King of Man.
1399 3 Henry Earl of Northumberland, King of Man.
1403 4 William Lord Stanley, Lord of the Isle of Man.
5 John Lord Stanley.
6 Thomas Lord Stanley.
7 Thomas Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
1503 8 Thomas Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
1521 9 Edward Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
1572 10 Henry Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
1593 11 Ferdinando Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
12 William Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
13 James Lord Stanley Earl of Derby, Lord of the Isle of Man, now living An. 1648. King in effect, though but Lord in title, as having here all kind of Civil power and jurisdiction over the Inhabitants under the Fife and Soveraignty of the Crown of England, together with the nomination of the Bishop, whom he presents unto the King for his Royal assent, then to the Archbishop of York for his consecration. And this I take to be the reason why the Bishop of Man was no Lord of Parliament, none being admitted to that honour, but such as hold immediately of the King himself; nor was it reason that they should.

V. ANGLESEY, is an Island situate in the Irish Sea, over against Carnarvonshire in North-Wales, from which it is divided by a narrow Straight, which they call the Monai. By the Britains themselves, as by the Welch at this day, it was called Mon, from whence the Romans had their Monai: but being conquered by the English, it obtained the name of Anglesey, as one would say, the Island of the English-Men (eye in the Saxon language signifying an Island.) A place of such a fair revenue to the Princes of it, that Llewellen, the last Prince of Wales being stripped of almost all the rest of his Estates by King Edward the first, paid to that King a tribute of 1000 per Annum for this Island only.

And to say truth, the Island is exceeding Fruitful both in Corn and Cattel: from whence the Welch are liberally stored with both: and therefore it is said proverbially, Mon Mam Cymri, that Anglesey is the Mother of Wales. In length from East to West, about 20 miles, and 17 in breadth. Containing in that compass 74 Parishes, divided into six hundreds, & hath in it only two Market Towns: that is to say, 1 Beaumaris, seated on a flat or marish ground, near the Menai, built by King Edward the first to secure his Conquest: by whom well walled and fortified as the times then were. 2 Newburg, a Town of no great antiquity, as the name doth intimate, by the Welch called Rossur: in former times it had an Haven of some good receipt, but now choaked with sand. The other places of most note are, 3 Aberfraw, a small village now, but heretofore the seat Royal of the Kings of Wales, and 4ly, Holyhead, seated on a head-land or Promontory thrusting into the Seas, made holy (or thought so at least) by the religious retirement of Saint Kuby, or Kibius, one of the Disciples of St. Hilary of Poictiers; from whence by the Welchmen called Caer Cuby: of most note for the ordinary passage betwixt Wales and Ireland. Antiently this Island was the seat of the Druides, and brought with no small difficulty under the power of the Romans, by Suetonius Paulinus: the people fighting in other parts of Britain for their liberty only; but here pro Aris & focis too, for their Religion, Liberty, and their Gods to boot: Being deserted by the Romans with the rest of Britain, it remained in the possession of its own natural Princes, till the fatal period of that State; when added to the Crown of England by the puissance of King Edward the first, by whom made one of the shires of Wales as it still continues.

Not far from Anglesey, somewhat inclining to the South, is the Isle of Bardsey, by Ptolomy called Edri, by Pliny Adros, by the Welch Enlhy; extended towards the East with a rocky Promontory, but rich and fruitful towards the West: the retiring place of many godly and devout Hermits in the former times. Southwards from hence and over against St. Davids, are two other Islands, the one called Selame, plentiful of wild honey; the other named by the Welch Lymen, by the English Ramsey; thought to be the Limni of Ptolomy, the Silimnum of Pliny, but not else remarkable.

VI. THE ISLANDS OF THE SEVERN SEA are four in number; of no great note, but I must take them in my passage to the Isles of Scilly. Of those the first is Flat-Holm; for the flat and level; the 2. Steholm, from the steep and craggy disposition of it: both by the Welch called Echni, and both situate over against the County of Somerset. More towards the opening of the Chanel, lyeth the Isle of 3 Chaldey called by the Welchmen Inis Pir, of as small note as the other: and at the very mouth thereof the Isle of 4 Lundey, over against Devonshire, the principal Island of this Sea: extending two miles every way; of excellent pasturage, well stored with Conies, and great plenty of Pigeons. Situate a good distance from any part of the land, in the midst of the salt and brackish Ocean, and yet yieldeth many Springs of Fresh-water for the use of the people; inhabiting for the most part in a Town of the same name with the Island. A place of very great strength and safety; begirt about with dangerous unapproachable Rocks: and having but one way of access into it, and that so narrow that two men cannot go a breast.

VII. The Isles of SCILLY, in number 145, are situate over against the Western Promontory of Cornwal, from which distant 24 miles; and lye round together in the manner of a ring or Circle. Discovered first by the Silures, a Phœnician Colony in Spain, opposite against which they lie; thence called Silures by Solinus: much traded and resorted to by the said Phœnicians from the Isle of Gades; invited thereunto by the unexhaustible Mines of Tinn, which they found amongst them. A Trade so great and gainful to them that they held it a great point of State: κρύπτειν ἀπὸ τῶν πολλῶν, to keep it as a secret from all the world, as we find in Strabo: who adds the story of a Carthaginian or Phœnician Merchant, incountred in his voyage hither, by some Roman Vessels; and splitting his ship on the next shore (where he knew the Romans would not follow him) rather than let them know to what place he was bound; was rewarded for his honest care, and recompenced for the loss of his ships and goods, out of the publick Treasury. From this abundance of Tin, the Græcians when they came to know them, called them Cassiterides: (Cassiteros in that language signifying Tin) accordingly Herodotus, ὅτε νήσους οἶδα καττιτερίδας ἐούσας ἐκτὸς τῆς Εὐρώπης ἐμὲ φοιτᾷ, affirming that he knew not those Islands called Cassiterides, from whence Tin was brought. The richness of this commodity, the pleasures of the place, and the Western situation of them makes many of the Græcians call them Hesperides: mistaking them for the Fortunate Islands. By Solinus they are called Silures, as before is said, Sigdeles in the corrupt Copies of Antonius; insulæ Silline, by Severus Sulpitius: from whence we have the name of the Isles of Scilly. The Flemings, I know not why, call them the Sorlings. All of them very fruitful in Corn and Herbage, besides the treasures hid within well stored with Conies, Cranes, Swans, and most sorts of wild Fowl. Ten of them more esteemed than the rest, are called by the names of 1 Armuth, 2 Agnes, 3 Sampson, 4 Scilly, 5 Brefar, 6 Rusco, 7 S. Helens, 8 Arthur, 9 S. Maurice, and 10 S. Maries: Of which the most famous in the account of former times, was that of Scilly, as giving name unto the rest; but in the present estimate S. Maries is accompted the chief of all: 8 miles in compass, fruitful of all necessaries, and fortified with a very strong Castle built by Queen Elizabeth; well manned and Garrisoned, for defence of a large and goodly Harbour made amongst these Islands, capable of the greatest Navies.

These Islands first discovered by Hamilco a Carthaginian, sent by that State to search into the West Coasts of Europe, became of great fame afterwards both in Greece, & Italy; by reason of the Mines of Tinne spoken of before: So beneficial to the Romans, that they used to send hither their condemned Prisoners to work in the Mines; as the best service to be done by their forfeited lives. And hither amongst others, Justantius, a fierce Priscillianist, for his factious and seditious carriage, was sent by Maximus; ad Sillinam insulam ultra Britanniam deportatus, as Sulpitius hath it. After the Romans had forsaken their hold in Britain, they returned again into the power and possession of the Natives; from whom subdued, and added unto the English Crown by Athelstane the eighth King of England. Now ordered for Civil matters, as a part of Cornwal; for military, by their own Captain, subordinate to the Lord Lieutenant of that Country; and for the Tin-Trade, by the Lord Warden and Court of Stanneries. An Officer and Court erected for the benefit and regulating of the Tinners of Cornwal, who by reason of their employment in these Mines have many priviledges and exemptions more than other Subjects: but of late limited and restrained by Act of Parliament.

VIII. The Isle of WIGHT lieth over against Hampshire, from which it seemeth to have been divided; the passage betwixt it and Hurst-Castle on the opposite shore, being very narrow; and the name of it intimating some such division. For by the Britains it was antiently called Guith, which signifieth a breach or separation, from whence the English have their Wight; the turning of Gu. to W. being familiar with the Saxons, and all other Dutch people: and from the same root probably the Romans had the name of Vectis, Vecht, Wight, and Guith, being words of neat resemblance, that we need not travel further for an Etymologie. The Island of an Oval form, 20 miles in length, and 12 miles broad about the midst; from thence growing narrower towards each end, to the East & West. Naturally Fenced about on all sides, on the South especially, where it looks toward France, on which side inaccessible by reason of the steep and craggy Rocks, the whole length thereof; and not much less safe on the North-West, where the remainder of the Rocks, (which they call the Shingels, and the Needles) not worn away either at or since the first separation from the other shore, make the passage dangerous; except to single Ships, and those not unacquainted with the course of the Chanel. Towards the North-east more flat and level, and therefore fortified with the two Castles of the Cows and Sandham. There is also the Castle of Yarmouth in the West of the Island, and that of Garesbrook in the midst but more towards the North) in which last there is said to be Armour for 5000 men; and in each Village (of which here are 33, besides many Market Towns) a piece of Ordnance. Yet do not all these Arms and Castles add so much to the strength of it, as the natural courage of the People; warlike and stout, and trained up unto the postures of War from their very childhood.

The soil hereof abundantly answereth the pains of the Husbandman, so plentiful of Corn, and all the fruits of good pasturage; that they have not only enough for themselves, but furnish the markets of Southampton and Portsmouth (but the last especially) with the greatest part of the Wheat, Flesh, Cheese, and Butter, which is spent amongst them. Insomuch that the Souldiers of Portsmouth presuming on the strength of the Town, have been used to say, That if they had the Isle of WIGHT to their friend, and the Seas open, they cared not for all the world besides. Their Sheep here of so fine a fleece, that the Wool hereof hath the second esteem next to that of Lemster (in the County of Hereford) and precedency of that of Cotswold.

Their chief Towns, 1 Yarmouth, on the North-West of the Island, seated on a convenient Haven, which is said to have some resemblance to that of Rochel; and that Haven defended with a strong Castle. 2 Brading, another Market-town. 3 Newton, an antient Burrough, and priviledged sending Burgesses to the English Parliament. 4 Garesbrook, a large Town, and neighboured with an antient Castle. 5 Newport, now the chief of all the Isle, called in the times past, Medena, afterwards Novus Burgus de Medena, at last Newport; seated upon an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of lesser burden to the very key; and by that means populous, well traded, and inhabited by a civil and wealthy people.

The Island first subdued to the Romans by the valour of Vespasian, (afterwards Emperor of Rome) in the time of Claudius. Extorted from the Britains by Cerdick, King of the West-Saxons, and by him given to Stuffa and Whitgar, two of that Nation, who had almost rooted out the old Inhabitants. It was the last Country of the Saxons which received the Gospel, and then upon compulsion too; forced to it by the power as well as the perswasion of Cedwalla the West-Saxon King. Took from the English in the time of the Norman Conquerour, by William Fitz-Osborn Earl of Hereford, who thereupon was made the first Lord thereof. From whose Family, by the gift of Henry the second, it passed to that of Redvars, or Rivers, (de Riparis) then Earl of Devonshire: and on failing of that House returned to the Crown in the Reign of Edward the first. Never so much ennobled as by Henry the sixth, who bearing a great affection to Henry Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, in the 23 of his Reign crowned him King of Wight, An. 1445. Which title ended with his life about two years after.

IX THANET, is a little Island in the North-East of Kent, not far from Sandwich, environed on three parts with the Sea; into which it shooteth with a large Promontory called the North-fore-land; the Cantium of the antient Writers: and towards the West, severed from the main land of Kent by the River Stoure, which is here called Yenlade, but severed so, that by the benefit of a Causey and passage for the waters in convenient places, it is united to the Continent or main Land of Kent. The quality, site, and figure of it, take in these old Rhythms (for I dare hardly call them Verses) extant not long since in a Window of the chief Church there, viz.

Insula rotunda Thanatos, quam circuit unda,
Nobilis & munda, nulli est in orba secunda.

That is to say,

Thanet is round with circling waters bound,
A neat and noble ground, none like it to be found.

Called by Solinus, Athanatos, in some Copies Thanatos, from whence the Saxons had their Thanet. Famous, as in

in other things, ſo in theſe particulars, that it was the place which the Saxons landed at, when they firſt came into Britain; the firſt Livery and Seiſin, which they had of the whole Kingdom, conferred upon them by the improvident bounty of Vortiger, to whoſe aid called in; and the landing place of Auguſtine the Monk, when he brought the Goſpel to the Saxons. The whole about two miles in length, and four in breadth, was reckoned to contain in thoſe times, 600 Families; now very populous for the bigneſs, and plentiful of all commodities neceſſary, but of corn eſpecially. The people generally are a kind of Amphibii, able to get their livings both by Sea and Land; well skilled, as well in ſteering of a ſhip at Sea, as in holding the Plough upon Land; and in both induſtrious. Of moſt note in it, 1 Stonar, a Port-town, the uſual landing place of the Saxons; more memorable for the Sepulchre of Vortimer, King of the Britains, who having vanquiſhed the Saxons in many battels, and finally driven them out of the Iſland, deſired to be here interred on a conceit, that his dead corps would fright them from landing any more upon theſe Coaſts. And this perhaps he did in imitation of Scipio African, who having had a Fortunate hand againſt thoſe of Carthage, gave order to have his Tomb placed towards Africk, to fright the Carthaginians from the Coaſts of Italy.

X. SUNDERLAND is an Iſland only at an high-water, when environed on all ſides with the Sea; at other times joined unto the Land, or of an eaſie paſſage from the one to the other: pulled by ſome tempeſt, or by the working of the Sea from the reſt of the Land: whence the name of Sunderland. Situate in the North-Eaſt part of the Biſhoprick of Durham, over againſt the influx of the River Were. Rich in its inexhauſtible mines of Coal, and for that cauſe ſeldom without the company of foreign Merchants, yet not to have been here remembred, but that it hath been thought worthy by our Soveraign Lord King Charles, the ſecond Monarch of Great Britain, to confer the title of Earl to the two Noble Families of the Scropes and Spencers; the firſt in the third year of his Reign, An. 1627. the ſecond in the 18th, An. 1642.

XI. THE HOLY ISLAND lieth upon the Coaſt of Northumberland, not far from Berwick, ſtretched out in length from Eaſt to Weſt, with a narrow point unto the Land, from thence growing broader like a wedge: fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and of great ſafety, but more Famous for what it hath been, than for what it is. In the dawning of Chriſtianity amongſt the Northumbers, made a Biſhops See, by S. Aidanus, one of the firſt Apoſtles of that potent Nation. Selected for this dignity by that godly man, for the ſolitude and privacy of it; which made it thought more fit and proper for Devotion. The name then Lindisfarn; but the Religious lives of ſo many pious Biſhops, Monks, and others of the Clergy as did there inhabit, gained it the name of Holy Iſland. The See continued there 353 years, that is to ſay, from the year 637, to 990, under 22 Biſhops, hence called Biſhops of Lindisfarn; then removed to Durham: the inſolencies of the Danes, (who then raged terribly on thoſe Coaſts) compelling them to abondon that Religious ſolitude.

Thus have we taken a ſurvey of the Britiſh Iſlands, and ſhewn by what means Ireland and all the leſſer Iſlands became united either to the Crown of England or Scotland; and thoſe two Kingdoms to each other joyned in the perſon of the ſame King, and the participation of his Favours, though different ſtill in Laws, and ſome forms of Government; as moſt of the Eſtates of Spain, at the preſent time. United alſo in one name, the different Appellations of England and Scotland being ſwallowed up, or incorporated rather in that of GREAT BRITAIN, which it pleaſed King James to own for his ſtile Imperial. And for a memory thereof, to cauſe a piece of Gold to be coined of 20 s. (ſince raiſed to 22 s.) which he called the Unity, ſtamped on the one ſide with his picture, and this Inſcription, JACOBUS D. GR. MAGNÆ BRITANIÆ FR. ET HIBERNIÆ REX, and on the other ſide with his Arms, crowned with this Motto, FACIAM EOS IN GENTEM UNAM. All we have now to do, is to lay down the names of thoſe puiſſant Princes, whom God hath raiſed to be

The Monarchs of Britain.

1602 1 James, the ſixth of that name, King of the Scots, Son of Mary Queen of Scots Daughter of James the fifth, the Son of James the Fourth, and of the Lady Margaret, eldeſt Daughter of Henry the ſeventh of England: which Margaret being after married to Archibald Douglas Earl of Angus, had a Daughter named Margaret alſo (the only child of her Parents) married to Matthew Stewart Earl of Lenox; by whom ſhe was made the mother of Henry Lord Darnley, the Father of King James the ſixth, by the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots. So that King James deſcending from the eldeſt Daughter of Henry the 7th, both by Father and Mother, on the expiring of the Line of Henry the 8th, in the perſon of Queen Elizabeth of Famous memory; was the next heir to the Crown of England, and was accordingly with all joyful acclamations proclaimed and acknowledged King in the City of London, March 24. An. 1602. (according to the accompt of the Church of England) A learned and Religious Prince, a true Defender of the Faith, a Nurſing Father of the Church, and a lover of Learning. He dyed at Theobalds, March 27. 1625. having reigned 23 years, and four days over.

1625 2 Charles, ſecond Son of King James, and of Anne of Denmark, (his elder Brother Henry dying long before) the 63d King in deſcent from Cerdick King of the Weſt-Saxons; the 45th King of England, in deſcent from Egbert; the 24th from the Norman Conqueror; the 64th Monarch of the Engliſh, and the ſecond Monarch of Britain. In the beginning of his reign he married the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, Daughter to Henry the 4th, and Siſter to Lewis the 13th, French Kings; by whom bleſt with a Royal Iſſue of Sons and Daughters.

As for the Forces and Revennes of theſe Britiſh Monarchs, we cannot put the eſtimate of them in a better way, than by laying together that which hath been delivered of each ſeveral part; out of which Items the ſumma totalis of the whole both in power and treaſure, will be eaſily gathered. For though theſe Monarchs never had any occaſion, to muſter and unite the Forces of their ſeveral Kingdoms upon any one Action, yet by conſidering what they have been able to do divided; we may conclude of what they may do, if need be, being now united. And ſo we are to do in marſhalling the Arms of the Britiſh Monarchy, where are 1 Quarterly France and England, 2ly Scotland, 3ly Ireland, the Fourth as the firſt. I ſhut up this diſcourſe of the Britiſh Empire, with thoſe words of Scripture (the Motto of another of King James his Coins) QUE DEUS CONJUNXIT NEMO SEPARET.

BELGIUM.

HAving pursued the Fortunes of the Roman Empire through the four Western Dioceses or Divisions of it, wholly subdued to the command of that conquering State: let us next look on those Countries which lay farther North, and either never felt the force of the Roman Armies, or were but conquered in part, or else were reckoned as the members of some greater Province. Of this last sort was all that Tract which is now called Belgium, or the Netherlands, bounded on East with Westphalen, Gulick, Cleve, and the land of Triers, Provinces of the higher Germany; on the West with the main Ocean, which divides it from Britain; on the North with the River Ems, which parts it from East-Friesland; on the South with Picardie and Champagne, two French Provinces; upon the South-east with the Dukedom of Lorrain.

By the Latines (especially of these last times) it is called Belgium, from the Belgæ, the most potent people of all these parts; and sometimes also Germania inferior or the Lower Germany, (in the same sense as by the English it is called the Low Countries and the Netherlands) from their low situation, and the conformity which they have with the Germans in Laws, Languages, Customs and Manners;

ners. By some it hath been called by the aggregate name of the Seventeen Provinces, from the like number of several and distinct Estates united under the Command of the King of Spain. The more peculiar name is Flanders, which, though but one of the Seventeen Provinces, hath yet given denomination to all the Netherlands; the people of which were once generally called by the name of Flemmings: and that either for the power of that Province, in regard of the others; or by reason of the great Trade and Traffick formerly driven at the Fairs or Marts of Bruges (a Town thereof) by the Merchants of all parts of Europe; or in respect that lying nearer than the rest to France, Spain, Italy, and England, that name was better known and took notice of. But this was when the whole Country was under the command of many Princes, of which the Earls of Flanders were esteemed most potent. And though this name continued also after the incorporating of most of these Provinces in the House of Burgundy, at which time they were called the Estates of Flanders: yet since the falling off of Holland and the rest of the United Provinces from the Kings of Spain, it hath lost this honour, the name of Flanders being now restrained within narrower bounds.

But for the name of Belgium, though I find that name most current amongst the Latines of this Age, yet I see little reason for it. For first, old Belgium contained in it many fair and large Estates which are not now within the compass of these Belgick Provinces; that is to say, the Dukedoms of Lorrain, Berg, Juliers, and a great part of Cleve, the Bishopricks of Triers, Mentz and Colen, and so much of the Kingdom of France as takes up all Picardy, with parts of Champagne and of France specially so called. Secondly, Gallia Belgica extended somewhat farther yet, comprehending a great part of the Lower Palatinate, all Elsass, the whole County of Burgundy, and so much of Switzerland as lieth on the French side of the Rhene. And thirdly, the whole Provinces of West-Friesland, Groening, Over-Yssel, Zutphen, together with all North-Holland, and so much of Gelderland and Utrecht as lieth on the farther side of the middle Chanel of the Rhene, were never accounted of as parts of either Belgium or of Gallia Belgica, (though now within the compass of the Belgick Provinces) but as parts of Germany; clearly without the limits of the ancient Gaul, of which Body Belgium was a limb or member in the Roman estimate.

As for the Belgæ, from whence we have the names of Belgium and Gallia Belgica, they were originally Germans, who driving out the Gauls, planted themselves within the Rhene; esteemed by Cæsar to be the valiantest of the Gallick Nations for these three reasons. 1 They were the farthest from Provence, where the Roman Civilities and more affable course of life was embraced. 2 They dwelt on a Sea not then frequented by Merchants; and so wanted those allurements to Effeminacy which are in Countries of traffick. 3 They bordered on the Germans, a warlike Nation, with whom they were continually in Arms. This people seeing the prosperous success of Cæsar's Victories in Gaul, joined together in a League, and mustered an Army of 269000 Fighting men against him. But seeing they could not draw him out of his Fortresses, they retired again, and that in such disorder, that three Legions (for no more was Cæsar's Army) put them to an infinite slaughter. After this, Cæsar, fighting against them severally, overcame them all; and made their Country, and the Country of the bordering Germans, whom he also vanquished, subject unto the Roman Empire. By Constantine the Great it was made part of the Dioceſs of Gallia, and by him cast into five Provinces: that is to say, 1 Belgica Prima, containing the Dukedom of Lorrain and the Land of Triers, the Metropolis whereof was Triers; 2 Belgica Secunda, comprehending Artois, Picardy, and the Country of Cambray, with parts of Champagne and France special, of which the Metropolis was Rhemes; 3 Germania Prima, comprehending Alsatia, part of the Palatinate, and the Bishoprick of Mentz, the Metropolitan City of that Province; 4 Germania Secunda, containing Cleveland, Brabant, Gelderland, Utrecht, Holland, Zeland, Flanders, Hainault, Namur, Luxemburg, Limbourg, and the land of Colen, which last was honoured with the title of Metropolitan; 5 Maxima Sequanorum, so called of the Sequani, the old Inhabitants thereof, containing the whole County of Burgundy, and so much of Switzerland as lieth on the French side of the Rhene, of which Besancon was the Mother-City. But at this time none of the Provinces above specified are comprehended under the accompt and name of Belgium, but such as were possessed in these later Ages by the House of Burgundy; some petty Seigniouries and Estates which properly do belong to Germany being added to it: that is to say, the Lordship of West-Friseland, given to the Earls of Holland by Charles the Bald; the Earldom of Zutphen, united unto that of Gelders by Earl Otho of Nassau; and finally the Estate of Groening, Over-Yssell, and some part of Utrecht, by Charles the fifth. Under which name and notion we do now consider it.

And taking it according to this name and notion, it is in compass 1000 Italian, or 250 German miles; and is situated in the Northern temperate Zone, under the 7. 8. and 9. Climates: the longest day in the midst of the 7th Climate, where it doth begin, being 16 hours; in the beginning of the 9th Climate increased to 16 hours three quarters, or near 17 hours. The Air in these later days is grown more wholesom than formerly; partly by the wonderful increase of the Inhabitants, and partly by the incredible industry of the people, who, by draining the Marishes, and converting the standing waters into running Streams have purged the Air of many gross and unhealthy Vapours, which did thence usually arise in times foregoing.

The Country is very populous, containing well-nigh three millions of souls; the men being for the most part well-proportioned, great lovers of our English Beer, unmindful both of good turns and injuries, of good wit for inventing, and of a most indefatigable industry for perfecting the rarest Manufactures. For unto them we are indebted for the making of Cloth, which we learnt of the Flemmings; as also for Arras-hangings, Dornix Clocks, Watches, and the perfection of the Mariner's Compass. They restored Musick, and found out divers Musical Instruments, being naturally good Musicians, & generally so given unto it, and so perfect in it, that therefore (till the Art of Musick grew more common) there were not many Great-Mens houses which had not Musicians to teach their Children. To them belongeth also the invention of Chariots, the laying on of Colours with Oyl, the working of Pictures in Glass, and the making of Worsteds, Seyes and Tapestries; the making of which and other Stuffs, being driven out of their Country by the Duke of Alva, they first taught the English. The Women generally are of good complection, well-proportioned, especially in the Leg and Foot, honourers of Vertue, active, and familiar. Both within doors, and without they govern all: which, considering the natural desire of Women to bear rule, maketh them too imperious and burthensom.

They use for the most part the German and Dutch Language, with a little difference in the Dialect. But in the Provinces adjoining to France, that is to say, Luxemburg, Namur, Artois, Hainault, and some parts of Flanders and Brabant, they use the French; but the same very corruptly and imperfectly, by reason of that mixture which it hath hath of the Dutch or German, yet so, that one may easily discern those people to be French originally, or some remainder of the old Gauls, mastered by the French, but not rooted out: from their Language or first Original called to this day by the name of Wallons, the Germans usually changing G into W, as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and in the like cases Wales for Galles, I know there is another Etymology of the name of Wallons, some making them to be of the Burgundian race, who, at their first passing over the Rhene, enquired their way of the Countrey-people in these words, Ou allons, i.e. Whither go we? which being oft repeated by them, occasioned them to be called Wallons: A trim invention doubtless, but of no solidity, nor to be farther honoured with a confutation.

The Country in those parts which lie towards Germany, especially on the South-east bordering upon Cleveland and Lorrain, is somewhat swelled with Hills and over-shaded with Woods, the relicks of the great Forest of Ardenne, which once took up a great part thereof: But towards the West and North, where it joins to the Sea, it is plain and level, full of Flats and Marishes, affording very little Corn, but abounding in Pasturage, which yields a great increase of Butter and Cheese, good store of Beeves, and Horses of more than ordinary bigness. By reason of which low and level situation, and the ill neighbourhood of a troublesom and unruly Sea, it hath been formerly much subject to Inundations; insomuch as in the time of King Henry the 2. Flanders was so overflown, that many thousands of people, whose dwellings the Sea had devoured, came into England to beg new seats, and were by that King first placed in Yorkshire, and then removed to Pembrokshire. Since that, it hath in Zeland swallowed eight of the Islands, and in them 300 Towns and Villages: many of whose Churches and strong buildings are at a dead low water to be seen. And as once Ovid said of Helice and Buris, Cities of Achaia, so may we of these;

Inclinata solent cum mœnibus oppida versis:

That is to say,

The waters hide them, and the Sailors show
The ruin'd Walls and Steeples as they row.

The chief Commodities which they vent into their Countries are Linen, Scarlets, Worsted, Seyes, Silks, Velvets, and the like rich Stuffs; together with great quantities of Armour, Ropes, Cables, Butter, Cheese, &c. Of which, excepting Cheese and Butter, there is nothing of the natural growth of the Country: the rest being Manufactures which they make out of such materials as they fetch out of Foreign Regions. But the Commodity which yieldeth them most benefit is that of Fish, not caught upon their own Coast neither, but either in the Northern Seas or the coast of England: the very Herings which they cast on the shoars of England (to the no small dishonour of the English Nation) bringing them a Revenue (besides what is pursed up by the Adventurers) of 440000 pounds per annum; and that of Cod-fish, which they catch on the Coasts of Friesland, amounting to 150000 l. sterling yearly.

Captains of note and eminence it hath bred but few, the people living till of late in perpetual peace. The chief of those whose names have been transmitted to us are, 1. Civilis, a Prince of the Batavians, for subtilty of wit compared to Hannibal and Sertorius; of which in the long War against the Romans, in the time of Vespasian, he gave very good proof. In the middle times, 2. William Earl of Holland, elected Emperour of Germany. 3. Baldwin Earl of Flanders, Emperour of Constantinople. 4. Philip the Good, and 5. Charles the Warlike, Dukes of Burgundy. 6. Charles the Fifth Emperour and King of Spain: And of late times the Princes of the House of Nassau and Orange, transplanted hither in the Regency of Maximilian out of higher Germany. And, to say truth, their Genius doth not lie so much for Land-service as it doth for the Seas; in which they have been very Famous, and not less fortunate. For of this Nation was Oliver Vander Noordt, the Fourth that compassed the world; Jacob le Maire, the first Discoverer of the Streight or Fretum which now beareth his name; besides divers others. And generally the people are so expert in Navigation, (especially those bordering on or near the Coasts) that they seem born for and to the Seas: many of which, being born on Ship-board and bred up at Sea, know no other Country, and brook the Land as ill as a Fish doth the dry ground. Which natural inclination to it, and the necessity they have of employing themselves that way, (the Country not being otherwise able to provide sustenance for those multitudes of men which it doth abound with) hath so exceedingly increased their Shipping, that it is thought that they are masters of more Vessels of all sorts, taking one with another, than almost all the rest of Europe.

Scholars of note it hath bred many. 1. Erasmus, the great restorer of Learning in these parts of the World. 2. Justus Lipsius, as eminent a reviver of the Latin Elegancies. 3. Joseph Scaliger, the Son of Julius, ὁ πᾶν πεπαιδευμένος, a man not to be followed in all parts of Learning; but of equal Arrogance. 4. Rudulphus Agricola. 5. Levinus Lemnius. 6. 7. Janus Dousa, the Father and the Son. 8. Abraham Ortelius, and 9. Gerard Mercator, the Geographers. 10. Geo. Cassander, 11. Dr. James Hermin. 12. Gerard Vossius, eminent Divines. And 13. Hugo Grotius, of as great parts (but seasoned with more modesty and moderation) as the famous Scaliger. 14. Jansenius, and 15. Pamelius, two right Learned Men, but of the Pontifician party.

As much unfortunate it hath been in some wretched Hereticks, in none more than in David George, born at Delf in Holland, who called himself Christ and King immortal. Flying from Delf to Basil with his wife and children, An. 1545. he there taught his Doctrine, viz. 1. That the Law and Gospel were unprofitable for the attaining of Heaven; but his Doctrine able to save such as received it. 2. That he was the true Christ and Messias. 3. That he was not to restore the House of Israel by Death or Tribulation, but by Love and Grace of the Spirit. 4. That he had been till that present kept in a place unknown to all the Saints. And that this last Point might obtain the easier credit amongst the people, he bound his Disciples, first, to conceal his Name; secondly, not to reveal of what Condition he had been; thirdly, not to discover the Articles of the Doctrine to any man in Basil without his permission. But for all this great care of his, within three days after his death (which happened in the year 1556.) his Doctrines, being made known, were condemned by the Senate and Church of Basil, his Goods confiscate, and his Bones most deservedly taken up and burnt. Of somewhat less impiety, but of no less phrensie, was 2. John of Leyden, (another Town of the same Province) who from a Tailor was made King of the Anabaptists, when they had raged in Munster, and there we shall hear farther of him. 3. Cappinus, and 4. Quintinus, both Flemmings, the joint Authors and Co-founders of the Sect of the Libertines.

The

The Christian Religion was planted in several Provinces by several men: in Holland, Zeland, and Friesland, by Willibrode an English man, the first Bishop of Utrecht, whence by degrees it gained on the rest of the Country; these being the first people of the Franks, or Germans, converted totally to the Gospel. In tract of time it fell from the Primitive Purity, participating of the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome; from which when they desired to reclaim themselves, they were therein opposed by the King of Spain and his Ministers. Hence the beginning of the Troubles; enlarged afterwards on pretence of Civil rights invaded and infringed by the Spaniard's affecting a more absolute Dominion over them than their Laws admitted. At this time, as the Country doth stand divided betwixt the States and the Spaniards, so stands it with Religion also: the Spaniard permitting only the Religion of the Church of Rome within the Provinces and Estates under his command; and the States General indulging the free use of all Religions (even the very Jews) but countenancing only that of the Reformed Churches, according to the Platform laid down by Calvin.

Chief Forests of this Country are, 1. That of Ardenne, which in the time of Cæsar extended from the banks of Rhene as far as Tournay one way, and Champagne another way, and was in compass 500 miles in the least accompt. In which circuit there were comprehended the Southern parts of Brabant and Flanders, all Limbourg, Luxemberg, Luyckland, Namur, and Hainault; together with the Land of Gulick in the higher Germany, as some Writers say. At this time, though the greatest of all Gaul Belgick, it reacheth but from Liege, to Theonville, 30 leagues in length: and yet not all that Woodlands neither, though within the Verge of the Forest; there being much Tillage and many Villages in that tract of ground, the principal of which is the Town of S. Hubert, situate almost in the midst of it. 2. Niepe, and 3. Nonuen, in the Earldom of Flanders; the first extending to the banks of the River Lis, the other coming up close to Ypres. 4. Pondsberg, in the Confines of Hainault and Flanders, near unto Mont Gerard. All these were parts of this great Forest of Ardenne, which once overshadowed all this Country. 5. Normault, in Hainault, in which is much Char-coal made; supposed for that reason to be a part of that Forest which the old French called La Charboniere. 6. Echterwald, in Gelderland, near Arnham, &c.

The chief Rivers are, 1. Rhene, which ariseth out of two Springs in the Lepontian Alpes amongst the Grisons, united into one stream near Chur: thence passing by the Cities of Constance, Basil, Spire, Wormes, Mentz, and Colen, it is again divided about the confines of Gelderland into four Branches or Chanels. Of which the first is called the Wael, which runing through Gelderland by Nimmegen and Bommel, loseth it self in the Maes. The second, which keeps the name of the Rhene, passeth by Arnhem, from thence in a contracted chanel to Utrecht, and so through Holland unto Leyden. The third, called the Leck, taketh his course through the Provinces of Utrecht and Holland, and so into the Sea betwixt Dort and Rotterdam. And the fourth, called the Yssel, which passing by the Towns of Zutphen and Deventer betwixt Gelderland and Over-Yssel, emptieth it self into the Ocean near Amsterdam. And of these Branches I have given the exacter reckoning, partly because the course of that famous River is otherwise not easie to be observed; and partly because the knowledge of a great part of these Provinces dependeth on the knowledge of the course of this River, it being the middle branch of the Rhene (that which goeth by Leyden) which anciently divided Germany from Gallia Belgica. A River of such reputation in the ancient times, that into it the old Belgæ used to cast the children which they suspected to be illegitimate: For were they born of lawful bed, they floated on the waters; if of unlawful, they sank immediately. Whereunto Claudian alluding saith, Nascentes explorat gurgite Rhenus. But the great searcher of Antiquities, Verstegan, is of opinion, that thereby they only inured their Children to hardness, and made trial of their strength; Adultery being rarely found among them, and so these kinds of experiments needless. 2. Mosa, the Maes, as the Dutch or the Meuse, as the French men call it, which springing from the Mountains of Vauge in the confines of Lorrain, and not far from the Fountains of the Seine and Marne, runneth through Lorrain, Luxemburg, Luyckland and Namur; from thence by Ruremond and Venlo, two known Towns of Gelderland, where turning towards the West, it taketh in a part of the Rhene, and from thence passing by Maestricht, divides Brabant from Holland, watering the Town of Grave in the one, and of Dort in the other; and falleth into the Sea not far from Brill with so great a violence, that the waters of it for a long space do continue fresh. 3. Ems, in Latine called Amisius, dividing the two Frieselands; of which more in Germany. 4. Scaldis, which arising in Picardy, and running through Artois, and between Hainault and Brabant, meeteth with the Sea a little above Antwerp. And 5. Lis or Ley, which runneth quite through Flanders. Besides which Rivers, and others of inferiour note, (which we shall meet withal in their proper places) here are great store of Lakes, Pools and Marishes, which do both fortifie the Country, and provide it of Fish: besides many navigable Chanels, made by the hand of man from one River to another, for the convenience of passage, and the more easie transport of their Commodities.

The Shoar of this Country hath been much worn out by the Sea, especially that of the Islands of Zeland, and such as lie scattered about Holland; where they are defended with Banks and Ramperts, painfully made, and chargeably maintained. These Banks are about ten ells in height, and twenty five in breadth at the bottom. They are made of the hardest clay that may be gotten; in the inside stuffed with wood and stone, on the outside covered with mats strong and thick made.

The former Inhabitants were divers, and were as differently disposed of in their several Countries. That is to say, the Atrebates in the greatest part of Artois; the Morini in the rest of Artois, and those parts of Flanders which make up the Imperial and Dutch Flanders; the Nervii in Hainault, Namur, and Flanders Gallicant; the Batavi in South-Holland, and so much of Gelderland and Utrecht as lies on the South-side of the Rhene, with the Menapii intermixt in the Dukedom of Gelders; the Mattiaci in the Isles of Zeland; the Aduatici and part of the Tongri in the Dukedom of Brabant, with parts of the Treviri in Luxemburg, and of the Eburones in Luyckland and the Dukedom of Limbourg: all which were Belgick Nations, and therefore anciently accompted of as parts of Gallia. Then on the Northern side of the middle Chanel of the Rhene there dwelt the Frisii minores in North-Holland, and so much of the District of Utrecht as lies on the farther side of that chanel; the Frisii majores in West-Friesland and the State of Groning; some parts of the Sicambri in the Earldom of Zutphen and the rest of Gelderland, with part of the Bructeri in Over-Yssel: all German Nations, and properly not within the reckoning of Gallia Belgica. Those which passed under the accompt and name of Belgæ being subdued, together with other Tribes of that numerous Nation, by the valour and good fortune of Julius Cæsar, continued subject to the Romans, Romans, without any notable disturbance unto their affairs but the Rebellion raised against them by Civilis Prince of the Batavians in the time of Vespasian. In the declining of the Empire they were possessed by the French, under whom they made a part of the Kingdom of Metz or Ostenreich, united by Childerick the third to the rest of France, and made a member of that Kingdom; as they continued till the time of Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. In the division of whose Empire amongst his Children, the Countries of Flanders and Artois being laid to France, the residue of these Countries on this side of the Rhene made up a special part of the Kingdom of Lorrain. Those on the farther side of the middle Chanel of that River, being German Nations, gained to the vast Empire of the French by Charles the Great, in the division of the spoil spoken of before fell to the share of Lewis surnamed the Ancient, the first King of Germany, and after his decease to his Successours in that Estate, whether Kings or Emperours. And so we have the whole divided betwixt the three great Kings, of France, Lorraign, and Germany; by what means subdivided into lesser parcels, (no fewer than nineteen in all) we shall see anon.

In the mean time we are to know, that in the beginning of the French Conquests in the rest of Gallia, there started up in Belgica two great Estates, founded by Auberon, Regnault and Ranchaire, Sons of Clodion, the second King of the French; who being disherited of their Father's Kingdom by Merove Master of his Horse, to whose Tuition and Guardianship they had been committed, betook themselves to the most defensible places of the great Forest of Ardenne, and the Countries on the banks of the River Moselle; where they founded the two great Earldoms from thence denominated. That of Ardenne (for of the Earldom of Moselle we shall speak elsewhere) contained part of the modern Flanders, and some part of Brabant, together with all Hainault, Namur, Limburg, Luxemburg, and the Dukedom of Bouillon. Grown to this greatness by the withdrawing of the French forces into richer Conquests, and the dismembring of that Empire into many Kingdoms, and trusting too much to that greatness, they drew upon themselves the jealousie of those mightier Princes; occationing Clotaire the second to give their Country unto Dagobert his eldest Son, then King of Metz, whom he furnished with convenient Forces for the conquest of it; Brunulph, the then Prince hereof, being by him discomfited and slain in Battel. By Sigebert, who succeeded his Father Dagobert in the Kingdom of Metz, the Earldom of Hainault is taken out of it, and given to Albert, one of the youngest Sons of Brunulph. By Dagobert himself, succeeding in the Realm of France, (and whilest he lived sole King of the French) the parts of Flanders and Brabant, formerly belonging to these Princes, were dismembred from it, and laid unto two new Estates of his own erecting. And probable it is, that either to weaken this great House, or to comply with the ill Customs of those times, the Earldom of Namur might be taken out of it at the same time also, for the portion of some other of the younger Brethren. The rest of the Estate, with the Title of Earl of Ardenne, remained unto the eldest Son: whose posterity, notwithstanding this great diminution, grew to such esteem, that Judith, the Widow of Buin, and Sister of Boson, Earls of Ardenne, was thought a fit Wife for Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperour, by whom (the more to honour his Family) the said Boson was created King of Arles and Burgundy. During the Empire of Otho the first, the Earldom of Luxemburg was divided from it, and given to Sigefride, one of the younger Sons of Ricuine the preceding Prince; and so perhaps was Limburg also for another of them. The rest remained to Godfrey the eldest Son, who by Matilda, a Daughter to Otho the second, was Father of another Godfrey, who succeeded after Charles and Otho, the third Duke of Lorrain: that Dukedom being ever since enjoyed by the House of Ardenne, and there we shall hear farther of it. This said, and so much of the Story opened as concerns the general, we will proceed to a particular Survey of the modern Belgium, divided at the present into seventeen Provinces, besides the two great Bishopricks of Liege and Cambray; which being always under the protection of the Belgick Princes, partakers of their fortunes, either good or ill, and lying intermixt among their Estates, shall have their turn in the description of these Countries, divided generally

- 2 Bishopricks, { 1 Liege or Luyck, 2 Cambray.
- 4 Dukedoms, { 1 Limbourg, 2 Luxemburg, 3 Gelderland, 4 Brabant.
- 1 Marquisate, viz. of the Holy Empire.
- 7 Earldoms, { 1 Flanders, 2 Artois, 3 Hainault, 4 Namur, 5 Zutphen, 6 Holland, 7 Zeland.
- 5 Baronies, { 1 West-Friesland, 2 Utrecht, 3 Over-Issel, 4 Machlin, 5 Groening.

Of these nineteen, two only did acknowledge the Sovereignty of the Kings of France, viz. Flanders and Artois; the Earls whereof were Homagers unto that Crown, but seldom did descend so low as to do their Homage, quitted at last to Philip the second, King of Spain, and his Successors, by King Henry the second of France, in the Treaty at Cambray, Anno 1558. The rest were held originally of the German Empire, and by Maximilian Emperour of Germany, and Regent of those Countries for his Son Philip, (who had a purpose to subject them to the Empire again) were made the tenth Circle of the Empire, called the Circle of Burgundy. But neither since, nor before that time, would the Princes of the House of Burgundy acknowledge any such subjection, but governed these Estates as absolute Princes, without relation to the Empire, or Subordination to the Emperour or Imperial Officers; never appearing at the Diets, nor contributing to any Taxes there imposed, nor holding themselves bound by any Constitutions which were made therein. So that these several Relations being out of use, we must behold it at this time as it stands divided betwixt the Spaniards and the States: beginning first with those Provinces which belong to the Spaniard, the true Proprietary of the whole; and therein first with Flanders, as of most esteem.

1. FLANDERS, and 2. ARTOIS.

THese two I have thought fit to join together, because at first but one Estate; and though divided for a time, yet after five or six Descents again united, and have so continued ever since.

1. FLANDERS is bounded on the East with Hainault and Brabant, on the West with the English or German Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zeland and a branch of the Scheld, and on the South with part of Picardy in France, interposing betwixt Calice and Gravelling. So called, as some say, à Flando, because it lieth open to the winds; as others say, from Flandbert, the Son of Blesinda, Daughter of Cladion, the second King of the French. Some fetch it from a Town of this name, situate in that part of the Country where now Ardenburg stands; so long since ruined, that very few except themselves could ever hear of it: and others (which I think most moſt probable) from Flandrina the Wife of Lideric the ſecond, the firſt who governed in theſe parts by the name of Foreſter.

The Soil is indifferently fruitful in Corn and Paſture; the Air healthful, temperate and pleaſant. The whole Country not in length above 90 miles, and in breadth but 60, and yet containing in that compaſs above thirty Cities, (for they reckon all Cities which be walled) and 1154 Villages, which ſtand ſo thick, (as needs they muſt in ſo narrow a compaſs) that the Spaniards, at their firſt coming in with King Philip the ſecond, took the whole Province for one Town. Divided commonly into 1 Imperialem, 2 Gallicam, and 3 Teutonicam; or 1 Flanders Imperial, 2 Flanders Gallicant, and 3 Flanders Flammengant.

1 FLANDERS FLAMMENGANT, which is the greateſt of the three, is bounded on the Eaſt with Imperial Flanders and the River Scheld, on the Weſt with the Engliſh Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zeland, and on the South with Artois and Flanders Gallicant. The chief Towns of it, 1 Caunt, in Latine called Gandavum, ſeven miles in compaſs; but taking in the Suburbs, which are great and large, the whole circuit is ten miles at leaſt. One of the greateſt Cities of Europe for extent of ground, but not ſo populous as many of a leſs capacity; there being much waſte ground even within the Walls. Commodiouſly ſeated on the banks of the Scheld and the Ley, both which run through it, and make in it 26 Iſlands, joined together with 98 Bridges: and had not her many Seditions ruinated her Beauties, ſhe might have been the Queen of Europe. In this Town were born John Duke of Lancaſter, commonly called John of Gaunt, and Charles the fifth Emperour, and King of Spain: which laſt, to reſtrain the people from their old Seditions, which had been very troubleſom to his Predeceſſors, (the Gauntois taking on them many times to rule and over-rule their Princes) built a ſtrong Citadel in the place where ſtood the Abby of Saint Bavons. For Churches, Monaſteries, and other places of Devotion, there were numbred in it 55, all of them anſwerable to the grandeur and renown of the City; the private Buildings being alſo very ſtately, if not majeſtical. But now it is much fallen from its former glories, the often Seditions of this people drawing upon themſelves the vengeance of their angred Princes; and their Wealth much empaired by the long Wars, and the diverſion of their Trading by the Hollanders, who command the Seas. 2 Bruges, or Brugge, more within the land. A Town that hath neither Port nor River, yet formerly of ſuch Wealth, and the people in thoſe times ſo willing to ſhew it, that Queen Joan, the Wife of Philip the Fair, having been there, and marked the pomp of the Women, complained that She was not Queen alone. The Town of four miles circuit within the Walls, wonderfully well peopled; the Buildings fair & ſumptuous, (amongſt which 60 Churches and Religious houſes) the Streets large and ſtraight, and a ſpacious Market-place, from which the 6 principal Streets of the City do paſs directly on to as many Gates, which is very pleaſant to behold. And though the Town hath neither Port nor River, as before was ſaid, yet was it anciently of ſo great Trading, that it was accounted one of the four Mart-Towns of Chriſtendom; flouriſhing chiefly by the benefit of the Engliſh Cloth, and ſenſibly decaying when the Engliſh Traffick was removed hence to Antwerp. It was called by Earl Baldwin, An. 890, is diſtant three leagues from the Sea, and ſeated on a fair and deep Chanel made by Art, and filled with the waters of all the adjoining Fountains and Rivulets; which artificial Chanels are in theſe Countries very frequent, to the great enriching of the whole State. 3 Ypres, a Town ſeated very ſtrongly, and almoſt impregnable, on a ſmall River ſo named: a reaſonable rich Town, and well built, though moſt of the Houſes be of Timber, very well ſerv'd with Water, convey'd into every houſe almoſt in leaden Pipes, of which there is ſo great a number, that the Foundations of it ſeem to be laid in Lead. 4 Bourbourg, a fine ſtrong Town, but little pertaining to the French King, in the right of the houſe of Bourbon. 5 Comines, on the River Lis or Ley, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and an excellent Library; but more in being the Birth place of Philip de Comines, that notable States-man and Hiſtorian. 6 Courtray, on the ſame River of Ley, one of the ancienteſt Towns in Flanders, yet ſtill continueth, well built, of very great ſtrength both by Art and Nature, famous for a great Overthrow given the French, Anno 1301, for which the Town was called of long time the Sepulchre of the Frenchmen. 7 Ardenburg, (called in times paſt Rodemburg) a pretty Town, enriched every year with a great Horſe-fair every June, and beautified with one of the goodlieſt Churches in all this Province: the principal Town of that part hereof which properly is called Flanders; that name being firſt given to the parts hereunto adjoining, as ſome conceive, and after by degrees communicated to the reſt of the Country. 8 Biervliet, both a Town and Iſland, and furniſhed with a good and commodious Haven; yet not to be mentioned in this place, but that the ſalting of Herrings was here firſt invented by one William Bukeleme, who died An. 1397. 9 Winocksberg, ſo called of a goodly Abby built upon an Hill in the honour of St. Winock, an Engliſh man of an holy life; ſacked by the French, An 1538, but ſince re-edified, and made more beautiful than it was before. 10 Greveling, on the Sea-ſide, which, ſince the taking of Calice by the French, hath been made the ſtrongeſt Town in the Low-Countries. 11 Oudenard, ſeated on the Scheld, a fair ſtrong Town, and of very great Traffick, eſpecially for Tapeſtry and the fineſt Linens, which are here made: the Birth-place of Margaret, Dutcheſs of Parma, and Mother to Alexander Prince of Parma, that renowned Souldier.

The principal Ports of Flanders, being four in number, are all of them ſeated in this part. 1 Dunkerck, a ſmall, but ſafe Port, belonging to the French King (as doth Greveling alſo) in the right of the Houſe of Vendoſme; but ſtrongly garriſoned by the Spaniard, even in times of Peace, becauſe of the importance of their ſituation both by Sea and Land. Moſt memorable in theſe days, for that the people of it in the times of War ſo infeſted the Seas. 2 Sclnys, ſeated at the mouth of the Chanel of Bruges, beautified with a very fair Haven, able to contain 500 good Ships; and is now ſubject to the States, with whoſe ſafety it could not well ſtand to let the Spaniards enjoy any ſafe & large Harbours ſo near unto them. Over againſt it lieth the Iſle of Caſſandt, (famous for the birth of George Caſſander, a moderate and learned Papiſt) formerly as big again as it is at the preſent, having then a fair Town in it, and many rich Villages; of which there is but one remaining, (of the ſame name with the Iſland) the reſt all ſwallowed by the Sea. 3 Newport, a pretty Town, with a very ſtrong Caſtle, built on a well-frequented Haven, but not very ſafe, and therefore not much uſed by the men of War, nor made rich by Piracies, as Dunkerck. Near to this Town, Anno 1603, was fought the Field-battel betwixt the Archduke Albert and the States; the Victory, next under God, being gotten for the States by the valour of the Engliſh, and the excellent Conduct of the Veres. 4 Oſtend, not walled till the Low-country Wars, and then but with a mud-wall only, and that not finiſhed till the Arch-duke ſate down before it: inſomuch as the Arch-dutcheſs Iſabel is ſaid to have ſworn, that ſhe would not ſhift her Smock till the Town were were taken: who, had ſhe kept that raſh Oath, had been very lowſie; the Town (then garriſoned with Engliſh) holding out againſt the ſaid Arch-duke a Siege of three years and as many months.

2. IMPERIAL FLANDERS, ſo called, becauſe it was long under the obedience of Emperours, is ſevered from Brabant by the River Dender, and from the Gallick Flanders by the River Scheld, about Oudenard. It was ſometimes called Bracant, of a Caſtle of that name, deſtroyed by Baldwin le Debonaire, Earl of Flanders: and is now called the County of Aloſt, from the chief Town thereof ſo named; the Juriſdiction whereof, containing 170 Villages, extendeth as far as to the Walls of Gaunt and the Gates of Oudenard. The Town is ſtrong, and indifferently fair, ſituate on the River Dender, moſt Famous in theſe times for a Fair of Hops which is kept there yearly. 2. Hulſt, a walled Town, and the chief of the four Towns in the County of Waes; the other three being, 3. Axele. 4. Mouchant. 5. Aſſeneds; of which little memorable, but that they were all taken from the Empire by the ſaid Baldwin le Debonaire in the time of the Emperour Henry the Fourth. 6. Dendermond, ſituate at the mouth of the Dender where it entreth into the Scheld; a ſtrong Town both by Art and Nature, and much enriched by making Fuſtians, and a weekly Market of Flax. A diſtinct Seigniory of it ſelf, with many rich Villages belonging to it, incorporated into the Earldom of Flanders by the Marriage of Earl Lewis of Malaine with the Lady Margaret of Brabant, to which houſe it formerly appertained. 7. Rupelmond, on the mouth of the River Rupel, where it falleth into the Scheld: Famous in former time for an antient Caſtle, in which were kept the Monuments and Records of the Earls of Flanders; more in late times for being the Birth-place of Mercator, that renowned Coſmographer. 8. Mont-Gerhard, called by the French Grandmount, a fine and pleaſant Town ſeated on the Dender. Which three laſt Towns, together with Bornhem, a Fair large Village, having ſome Juriſdiction on the parts adjoining, made up that Eſtate which was called the Proper or Domaine of Flanders, becauſe not holden of the Empire or the Kings of France, but in the Soveraignty alone of the Earls hereof.

3. FLANDERS GALLICANT, ſo called from the French language there ſpoken, lieth on the South of Flanders Flammengant; having Hainault on the Eaſt, Artois on the Weſt, and the Country of Cambray on the South. The chief Towns of it are, 1. Liſle, in Latine Inſula, ſo called from its Iſland-like ſituation, among Ponds, Pools, Mariſhes, dried up and made firm land by Earl Baldwin de Barbu, who built the Town, Anno 1007, which afterwards was called by Baldwin de Liſle, his Son (born in this Town, and hence ſo named) Anno 1066. The Town made rich by Manufactures and reſort of Merchants, accompted the beſt Town of Traffick, next Amſterdam and Antwerp, in all the Netherlands. Not far from which are to be ſeen the Ruines of an ancient Caſtle called Brug, the Seat or Manor-houſe of the ancient Foreſters, who had the Government of this Country for the Kings of France. 2. Doway, (Duarum in Latine) a fair and ſtrong Town ſeated on the Scharp, having many Fountains, good Buildings, and a great number of Churches; made an Univerſity by King Philip the ſecond of Spain, who built therein a Seminary or Colledge for Engliſh Fugitives. 3. Orchies, a pleaſant Town, and well traded for the making of Serges; which, with the other two, make up the three Eſtates of this part of Flanders. 4. Armentiers, an unwalled Town, but of very great Trading; there being yearly 25000 pieces of Cloth ſent hence to Italy, and thence to Conſtantinople. 5. Tournay, (or Dornick, as the Dutch call it) a great, rich, mighty and ſtrong Town, ſeated on the Scheld, well built, and full of ſtately and magnificent Churches and Religious Houſes and anciently honoured with a See Epiſcopal. A Town of great importance, and much contended for betwixt the Flemmings and the French; but finally fell unto the French, as the more puiſſant Prince; taken from them by Henry the eighth of England, An. 1513. to whom the Citizens paid 100000 Ducats for their preſent Ranſome; reſtored by him unto the French, An. 1518. for the ſum of 600000 Crowns; and finally from them recovered by Charles the fifth, who reſtored it to the body of Flanders, from which it had been long diſmembred; but ſo that it is governed as a State apart, and is called the Seigniory of Tourneſis, having a goodly Juriſdiction over the Country round about it. 6. S. Amand, in the Country of Tourneſis, pleaſantly ſeated on the Scharp; in which is one of the richeſt Abbies in all Flanders; the Abbot thereof having the temporal and ſpiritual Juriſdiction over it and the parts about it. And ſo much for the Corography of the Earldom of Flanders, inhabited by the Nervii and Morini in the time of Cæſar.

2. ARTOIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Flanders Gallicant and the Country of Cambray, on the South and Weſt with Picardy, on the North with Flanders Flammengant and the River Lis. The name is derived from the Atrebates, the old Inhabitants hereof: the Air exceeding temperate, and the Soil ſo Fruitful, that it ſerveth as a Granary to a great part both of Flanders and Brabant.

On the Weſt part hereof towards France lieth the Earldom of S. Paul, ſo called from the chief Town thereof; a goodly Seigniory, and of great Juriſdiction and Revenue, containing, beſides many Villages, the good Town of Pern, a walled Town, and of great importance. The Earls hereof were lineally derived from Walleran, brother of Henry the 7. Emperour of Germany and Earl of Luxemburg; the laſt of which was Lewis of Luxemburg, made Conſtable of France by King Lewis the eleventh, with whom, as alſo with Edward the 4. of England, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, he plaid ſo many croſs tricks, that having long deluded them all, and kept them in a continual jealouſie of one another, he was at laſt by Duke Charles taken and beheaded. After whoſe death this goodly Seigniory fell to the Houſe of Vendoſme in France, by the Marriage of Francis Earl of Vendoſme with Mary the Daughter of this Lewis, to whom it was adjudged by the power and favour of the French King's; the Heirs-males being made uncapable of Succeſſion in it by the Attainder and Confiſcation of the ſaid laſt Earl. By means whereof the Houſe of Vendoſme was intituled to many fair Eſtates in Artois, Flanders, Hainault, and much good Lands in France, which they were poſſeſſed of; Francis the 2. Son of that Francis, and Francis the only Son of this, being intituled, whilſt they lived, Earl of S. Paul, and Dukes of Tutteville.

The Arms of theſe Earls were Argent, a Lion Gules armed and crowned Or, his tail forked of the ſecond.

As for the reſidue of Artois, the Towns of moſt importance in it are, 1. Arras, in Latine Atrebatum civitas, the chief City of the Atrebates the old Inhabitants hereof in the time of Cæſar, and ſtill the chief City of this Province; a large, populous and well-fortified City, anciently honoured with a See Epiſcopal, and ſtocked with an induſtrious people, the firſt makers of the Cloth of Arras, which took name from hence: divided into two diſtinct Towns, both of them walled, and called by two ſeveral names; the leſſer called La Citte, ſubject to the Biſhop, beautified with a Fair and Stately Cathedral Church, and a Library containing many excellent Manuſcripts; the leſſer called La Ville, ſubject to the Prince, having large Streets, and a rich Monaſtery of the yearly Revenue of 20000 crowns. By Ptolemy it is called Regiacum, ſeated within a bow-ſhot of the River Scarp, and heretofore the Metropolitan Town of Flanders, till Artois was dismembred from it; since which time the chief City of this Province, as before is said. 2 S. Omar, a fair Town, and well peopled, seated upon the River Aa, some eight Dutch miles from the Ocean; so called from S. Omar, or Audomarus, Bithop of the Morini, who built a Monastery in this place, from which grew the Town, the second of esteem and rank in all the Country. Near to it is a goodly Lake of fresh water, in which are many little Islands affording good Pasturage for Cattel: of which Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, that by fasning a Cord unto the bushes which grow in them, a man may draw them which way he will; and that under them there are found great numbers of Fishes, who hid themselves there for shelter against the Weather. 3. Bethune, a strong Town; and seated amongst excellent Pastures, of which the people make great plenty of the best Cheese: which, with the Territory hereof, fell to Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders, in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Daniel the Lord of this Town, honoured in that regard with the birth of their eldest Son, who from this place had the name of Robert de Bethune. 4. Ayre, on the Lis, a strong Town, with a Castle of great Antiquity. 5. Bapaulme a little, but well Fortified Town; and yet more strong, because it cannot be besieged for want of fresh water, which is not to be had within three leagues of it. 6. Renty, an unwalled Town, but Fenced with a very strong Castle, besieged by the French, Anno 1554. but being overcome in a set Field by Charles the fifth, they were fain to raise the Siege and go home again. 7. Hesdinfert, on the confluence of two little Riverets, Blangis and Canche; a Frontier-town on the edge of France, one of the strongest and most defensible places of all the Netherlands, built by Charles the fifth out of the ruines of old Hesdin, which having taken from the French, he commanded it to be razed as no longer serviceable, and raised this Town in stead thereof, somewhat nearer France. 8. Terwin, or Teroane, the Tervanna of Ptolemy, and Civitas Morinum of Antoninus, a Frontier-town, held for a long time by the French, by whom thought impregnable, till taken by King Henry the eighth, Anno 1513. they changed their opinion. A Siege not only memorable for the issue of it, but for two other matters of great moment. The one, that the Emperour Maximilian came and served in person under the colours of S. George, with the English Cross upon his breast: the other, that the French intending to victual the Town, had so great an overthrow, that had the English followed their Fortune, they had opened a fair way to have made themselves masters of all France; the French King being so astonished at the news hereof, that he prepared to flie into Bretaign. But the English more minded the Spoils and riches of Terwin, than the sequel of an absolute Victory; Et frui maluerunt victoriâ, quàm uti, as the Historian said of Hannibal. It is now after many changes of Fortunes in the hands of the French, and by some reckoned and accounted of as part of Picardy. There are, besides these, three walled Towns more, that is to say, Liliers, Lens, and La Bassee, of which little memorable; and to the number of 854 Villages.

These Countries of Flanders and Artois were anciently, if not a part, (as the parts hereof about Tourney most undoubtedly were) yet much of the same nature with the great Forest of Ardenne, nothing but a continual waste of Woods and Deserts, till the Conquest of it by the French; the Sea-coasts being then unpeopled for fear of the Danes, who by their frequent Piracies did much vex those Shores and the inland Countries meanly planted, for want of Corn and other necessaries for the life of man: subject in part to the great Princes of Ardenne, till the discomfiture of Earl Brunulph by Dagobert sole King of the French, by whom about the year 621 this wild Country, extending then as far as the River Some, and comprehending, besides Artois and Flanders, a good part of Picardy, was given unto one Lideric de Bucque with the title of Forester, to be holden under the Sovereign of that Crown. In whose posterity it continued with the title of Foresters till the time of Baldwin the first, the son of Odoacer, the seventh of the Foresters whose names occur upon record; there being a long intermission of their names and memories during the Ravagements and Depredations of the Danes and Normans. This Baldwin having first ravished, and afterwards married, Judith, Sister to Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperor, was by him created Earl of Flanders, the Sovereignty thereof reserved as before it was: in whose Issue it remained intire, till Philip the first Earl of that name gave unto Philip Augustus, King of France, the Country of Artois, with the Earldom or Country of Veromandois, part of Picardy, in Marriage with Isabel his Niece, Daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainault. By Lewis the eighth, Son and Successor of Philip Augustus, Artois was given in Portion to his youngest Son Robert, made the first Earl of Artois by King Lewis the 9. An. 1234. And by the Marriage of Lewis the first of Flanders with Margaret the Heir of Artois and of the Earldom of Burgundy, both these Estates were added unto this of Flanders, now made far mightier than before. And yet before this great accession of estate it was accounted the prime Earldom, as Millane was the prime Dukedom of Europe: these Earls being priveledged to write themselves Dei gratiâ, all others Dei clementiâ only; and Flanders being now grown abroad to so great esteem, that it was generally used for all the Netherlands. Finally, by the Marriage of Margaret, Daughter of Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders, to Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, this great Estate became united to that House, and afterwards was conveyed to that of Austria, as shall be shewn hereafter in due time and place. In the mean season let us take a brief survey of

3. HAINAULT.

HAINAULT is bounded on the East with Namur, on the West with Flanders, on the North with Brabant, on the South with Picardy and Champagne in France. It was anciently called Saltus Carbonarius, from the abundance of Charcoal made in the Woods and Forests of it; by some Writers of the middle times, the Lower Picardy; by the Latine Writers of these times called Hannonia. It seemeth to have taken this new name from the River Haine, or Hania, which passeth through it, and the word Holt, signifying a Wood, as being overspread in a manner with the Forests of Normault, St. Amand, de Faignd, and that of Foodsberg. And then Hainault will be quasi Haine holt, i. e. a Country of Woods and Forests on the River Haine. Thus called originally by the French, (as the word importeth:) but by the Dutch best known by the name of Henegow, i. e. the Country bordering on the Haine, as the name signifieth in that language.

The length thereof is 60 miles, 48 the breadth; comprehending in that compass 950 Villages, and 24 Towns, in and amongst which there is reckoned one Principate, 10 Earldoms, 12 Peerdoms or Pairries, 22 Baronies, 26 Abbeys, one Lord Marshal, (besides other Officers of the Prince) descending by inheritance to the Lords of this Province.

The Air hereof is very good, and the Soil fruitful, by reason the Country is watered with so many Rivers, as the Scheld, the Sambre, the Dender, and several lesser Streams, besides divers Lakes, Marishes, Ponds and Pools, which do much enrich it; the Country abounding in most places with fresh Meadows and sweet Pastures, good Fruits, and profitable Trees, but especially with great plenty of Corn. Here are also in some parts of it notable Mines of Iron and Lead, and excellent Quarries of the best Stone, fit for all kind of Buildings.

The principal of these Towns are 1 Monts, situate at the confluence of Haine and a little River called Trulle, which gives a good natural strength unto it; fortified besides with a very strong Wall, three large deep Ditches, and an ancient Castle. The Town is great, beautiful and rich, adorned with sumptuous buildings, both private and publick, and replenished with wealthy Merchants and men of Trade; the principal of all the Province, erected into an Earldom by Charles the Great, and sometimes used for the style of the Earls of Hainault. In this Town is the noble Nunnery of S. Valdrade, once a Dutchess of Lorrain, the Nuns whereof are to be Ladies & Gentlewomen of Noble Families, in the morning apparelled in white, like Nuns, in the afternoons according to their Birth and qualities; who when they please may leave the Cloister, and be married. The Abbess hath Jurisdiction both in the Town and Country about it, and anciently did put the Earls of Hainault into possession of the State. Another Nunnery like this (but not of such large Revenues) there is at 2 Maubeuge on the Sambre, a good Town of Merchandise. 3 Valenchiennes, seated on the Scheld, and a little River called Roulle, which make not only in it many pleasant Isles, but pass almost under every man's house to the great benefit and delight of the place and people. The Site hereof is so strong by Nature, (besides the Fortifications of Art) that on the one side it may be easily made unapproachable by water, and on the other side is so defended by Hills, that it can hardly be belieged but by three Armies at once. A goodly, large, and beautiful Town, especially for publick Buildings: the Chief whereof are the Church of our Lady, built after the ancient manner of Architecture, with ſumptuous Arches & goodly Pillars of Marble and Porphyry; the Earl's Palace, and the Town-hall, Buildings of great magnificence and excellent workmanſhip. The Birth-place of Henry the 7th, Emperour of Germany, of Mary Daughter of Charles the Warlike, and of Froiſſart the great French Hiſtorian. Finally a Town which, for the eminence thereof, is governed as a State apart by it ſelf, having under the Juriſdiction of it 3 Towns, 132 Villages; which on occaſion of Appeal reſort not to the Provincial Council at Mons, but the great Council at Mechlin. 4 Chimay, upon the River Blanche, near a pleaſant Foreſt, which gives the title of a Prince to the eldeſt Son of the Duke of Aerſchot, one of the principal Lords of Brabant, who hath here a very goodly Palace. 5 Halle, ſeated on the Sinne, which runs through it, a place of great credit amongſt the Papiſts, by reaſon of an Image of the bleſſed Virgin famed for many Miracles. Of which ſee Lipſius on that ſubject. 6 Beauvais, or Bavay, an old Town, at a Pillar whereof begin all the ways leading into France, made of paved-ſtones by Bruneault the Wife of Sigebert King of Metz and Auſtraſia, who with Fridegonde the Wife of Chilperick, and Katharine Medices, the Wife of Henry the 2d, are ſaid to be the three Furies of France. 7 Landrecie, on the River Sambre, famous for the notable reſiſtance which it made to Charles the 5th, 1543. 8 Marienburg, built by Mary Queen of Hungary, Governeſs here for the ſaid Charles, An. 1524, to ſerve as a Bulwark againſt France, on which it frontiereth. 9 Philip-Ville, built and well fortified for the ſame reaſon by K. Philip the 2d. 19 Bouchain, upon the Scheld, in the County of Oſtrinand, which County is the Title of the firſt Son of Hainault: and by that name William the eldeſt Son of Albert Earl of Hainault and Holland, was admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2d. 11 Conde, a good little Town ſeated on the Scheld, the moiety whereof belonged heretofore to the Houſe of Montpenſier in France, as 12 Enghien, a Town of great trade for Tapeſtry, to the Houſe of Vendoſme: from whence the Princes of Conde and Dukes of Enghien do derive their Titles. 13 Beaumont, upon the knap of a goodly Hill, whence it hath the name; belonging at the preſent to the Dukes of Aerſchot, but anciently the Partage of the ſecond Son of the Earls of Hainault. 14 Bins, or Binche, on a branch of the River, Hain, one of the Jointure-Towns of the Counteſſes of Hainault, much beautified and made a place of pleaſures by Mary Queen of Hungary, to whom it was given by Charles the fifth, (commonly called the Queens Paradiſe) but burnt and utterly deſtroyed by the French, Anno 1554. 15 Aeth, ſeated on both ſides of the Dender; a little, but a pleaſant and wealthy Town; here being held the Staple of Linen for all this Country, and the Cloth here ſold amounting to 200000 Crowns per annum.

As for the Hiſtory of Hainault, the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Nervii, the moſt valiant and moſt potent people of all the Gauls, poſſeſſed not only of this Province, but of the whole Earldom of Namur, and ſome part of Flanders, able to bring, and de facto did bring into the field, when the Belgæ muſtered up their united forces againſt Julius Cæſar, no fewer than 50000 fighting men. Wone from the Romans by the French, they became a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, continuing ſo till the death of Brunulph, diſcomfitted and ſlain in battel by Dagobert ſole King of the French, whom his Father in his life-time had made Duke of Ardenne, and deſigned unto the conqueſt of it. But the fury of the War being over, the parts of Flanders and Brabant which belonged unto it eſtated upon other Houſes, and the reſt alotted out amongſt his Children, Alberic, ſirnamed the Orphelin, one of his younger Sons, was by Sigebert King of Metz or Auſtraſia enfeoffed of this Country, by the name & Title of Earl of Hainault. Twice this Eſtate was added or united to that of Flanders. 1 In the perſon of Baldwin 5. Earl of Flanders, ſucceeding hereunto in right of Richild his Wife, Daughter of Regnier the 3d. 2 By the Marriage of Baldwin the 6th of Hainault with Margaret Counteſs of Flanders, Siſter and Heir of Philip of Elſaſs, Earl of Flanders. But being divided the firſt time by the uſurpation of Flanders, wreſted from Arnulph the 3d, by his Uncle Robert, and the ſecond time by the intruſion of John de Aveſnes, natural ſon of Margaret the ſecond Daughter of the Emperour Baldwin, into the Eſtate and Earldom of Hainault; it was finally annexed to Holland by the Marriage of John de Aveſnes to Adelize or Aleide, Daughter and (at the laſt) Heir of Florence the 4th, Earl of Holland, Zeland, &c. from which it never was divided, till they were both incorporated into that of Burgundy.

The Arms hereof are quarterly Flanders and Holland.

4. The Bishoprick of CAMBRAY.

SOuthward from Hainault lieth the Bishoprick of CAMBRAY, continuing a goodly Town and Territory, reckoned of anciently as a part of Hainault, now a State distinct; rather confederate with the Princes of the Netherlands, than subject to them.

The principal City hereof is Cambray, (called in Latine Cameracum) seated on both sides of the River Scheld, a fair, goodly, and mighty City, full of people, many of which are rich Merchants, but all of them industrious, especially in making that fine linen Cloth from hence called Cameras, or Cambrick. The private Buildings are very fair, but the publick much fairer, especially the Monasteries and other Churches, of which the most remarkable is that of our Lady, an ancient and sumptuous Fabrick, and the See Episcopal. From hence the Country and Territory hereunto adjoining is called Cambresis, in which are divers Villages and places of importance. The chief of which are, 1. Chasteau Cambresis, six leagues from the City, remarkable for the Treaty held there betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559. in which a Peace was happily setled amongst all the chief Princes of Christendom, after a long and tedious War between those Kings and the Confederates of each; and before that, for the Confederacy there made by the said Kings of France and Spain, the Emperour, the Pope, and many of the Princes of Italy, against the Seigniory of Venice, Anno 1508. called the League of Cambray. 2. Avesnes le sec, (so called to distinguish it from Avesnes in Hainault) near which are digged excellent white Stones for building, little inferior unto Marble.

This Bishoprick was Founded in the person of S. Diogenes, a Grecian born, An. 390, or thereabouts: whose Successors in tract of time became so potent, that at the last the Bishop hereof became both the Lord Spiritual and temporal of the Town and Territory, honoured with the title of a Duke, and Prince of the Empire, and was in the end made an Archbishop by Pope Paul the Fourth, An. 1562. And as for the City of Cambray, it was made Imperial by the German Emperours, afterwards by Henry the fifth, given in protection to Robert of Jerusalem, Earl of Flanders; and finally setled and confirmed on all his Successors by the Emperour Frederick, An. 1164. Which notwithstanding, the French finding it convenient for them, divers times possessed it: but governing with too great insolence, they were driven out by the people in the time of Lewis the 11th, and the Town yielded voluntarily unto Maximilian, Governour of these Countries for his Son Philip. Charles the fifth, in the year 1543, built a strong Citadel in it, pretending that he did it for defence of the Town against the French, but indeed to keep it for himself. After this it was taken by the Duke of Alenzon, (Brother of Henry the 3. of France) then Governour of the Netherlands, An. 1582. but regained not long after by the Spaniards, the Inhabitants giving up the Town for want of victuals. Since that continually possessed by the Spaniards, and by them strongly garrisoned; but so, that the people still enjoy their ancient Priviledges, and are governed by their own Laws and Bishops, as in former times.

5. NAMUR.

THE Earldom of NAMUR hath on the East Hainault, on the West the Bishoprick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South Luxemburg: so called from Namur the chief Town of it; Namurcum and Namurcensis Comitatus in our Latin Writers. The Country is very small, containing only 182 Villages, and four walled Towns, but plentiful of all Commodities, and replenished with a loyal and industrious people. Particularly the Air hereof is very wholesom; the Country watered with many Rivers and pleasant Brooks (amongst which the Sambre and the Maes) which, besides the benefit of Portage, yield great plenty of Fish. The Hills, whereof it hath not many, are cloathed with Woods, abounding with all kind of Fowl and Venison; the Vallies eminently fruitful of all sorts of Grain, rich Mines of Lead, Quarries of Marble of all colours, as also of Porphyrie or Jasper, and great plenty of Coal. In Mines of Iron so abounding, and that continually hammered by a painful people, that Vulcan's Forge may seem to be restored to the world again, and seated here; which as it makes the people wealthy, so it keeps them from idleness. And as for the Nobility, they are generally valiant, given to all military exercises fit for their degrees, and very affectionate to their Princes, the greatest vertue of a Subject.

Walled Towns it hath but four, as before was said; that is to say, 1. Namur, the chief of all the Province, where resideth the Council for the Country, from which lieth no Appeal but to Mechlin only. Seated it is between two Hills on both sides of the Sambre, which doth there fall into the Meuse. The City is rich, inhabited for the most part by the Nobility, defended with a strong Castle, and beautified with a fair Cathedral, Founded here in the Church of S. Albin, Anno 1559. Not far off in the Villages of Ardenne and Montier are two Nunneries of Ladies, like those of Monts and Maubuge spoken of in Hainault. 2. Bovines, upon the Meuse, sacked by the French, Anno 1554. since repaired and fortified. 3. Charlemont, a small Town, but of most exact Fortifications, built by Charles the fifth, An. 1555. to oppose the French, who had then possessed themselves of Marienburg, a Town of Hainault. 4. Valencourt, a little Town, but standing in a goodly and Fruitful Country. Of the Villages the chief is Done, seated on the Meuse or Maes, fortified with a strong Castle, and honoured with the title of a Viscountie, 2. Floren, 3. Vascie. and 4. Sanson, of much beauty and greatness.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were a part of the Nervii. It was first made an Earldom by some of the Descendents of the Sons of Clodion, the second King of the French, who being dispossessed of their Father's Kingdom by Merovens, the Master of his Horse, (to whom he had committed the Guardianship or Tuition of them) were forced to betake themselves to the most defensible places of the great Forest of Ardenne and the parts adjoining, where they Founded the great Earldoms of Ardenne and Moselle, as before is said, divided in succeeding times into many parcels, of which this is one. By what and how many Earls this Earldom was possessed, I am yet to learn, the Estate being small, and consequently the Princes of it not much considerable. They were allied to the Royal House of France by the Marriage of Albert Earl hereof with Irmingrade Daughter of Charles of France, the first Duke of Lorrain: and after unto the House of Flanders, by the Marriage of N. the Daugher and Heir of Peter, the last Earl of that race, to Henry the Second, Son of Baldwin the eighth of Flanders, and Brother of Baldwin Earl of Flanders, and the first Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople, whom he succeeded in that Empire. After whose death it came by Yolande his Daughter to Peter Earl of Auxerre, who succeeded also in the Empire, and after his decease to Philip his younger Son. But he deceasing without Issue, and Robert his elder Brother reigning in Constantinople, it was seized on by Philip the Brother of Henry, who, to assure himself thereof, took to Wife Mary Daughter of Philip Augustus King of France. By a Niece or Cousin of this Philip it was conveyed in Marriage to Henry Earl of Luxemburg, (the Father by a former Wife of Henry the seventh, Emperour and Earl of Luxemburg) and finally brought back again to the House of Flanders, by the Marriage of Guy of Dampierre Earl of Flanders, with Isabel Daughter of that Henry by the Heir of Namur, and in his Issue it continued (for ought I can find) till it was swallowed up, with the rest of the Belgick Provinces, by the House of Burgundy. So that the highest we can go in search of the Earls of Namur, is to the time of Hugh Capet and Charles of Lorrain, which was 540 years after the coming in of the Sons of Clodion. From which time downwards the Succession is confused and broken, and towards the latter end discontinued for 140 years. Such as are left upon Record I have drawn together (not without much trouble) in as good order as I could, and here present them in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Earls of NAMUR.

1. Albert, the Co-temporary of Hugh Capet, spoken of before.

10. Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders, and elder Brother of John the second, in right of Isabel his Wife, Daughter of Henry Earl of Luxemburg by the Heir of Namur; but I neither find her Name nor Parents.

The Arms hereof are Or, a Lion Sable, debruised with a Bend Gules.

6. LUXEMBURG.

LUXEMBURG is bounded on the East with the Mosell and the Land of Triers, on the West with the Meuse or Maes and a branch of the Forest of Ardenne, on the North with Luyckland, Namur, and a part of Hainault, and on the South with the Dutchie of Lorrain; so called from the Castle near the Town of Luxemburg, selected by Sigefride the first Earl hereof for his Seat and Residence.

The whole is divided into parts: the Eastern part being called Faveune, Fruitful of Corn, and yielding withal some Wines, some Mines, and many excellent Quarries of goodly Stone; the Western called the Ardenne, a remainder of that spatious Forest, which sometimes overshadowed all this Country, barren of Corn, but very plentiful of Venison, and of Foul good store.

The people of this Country are not all of one Language: those nearer Germany, as in Luxemburg, Arlun, Rodemark, Theonville, and the rest on that side, speaking the Dutch; as those of Montmedy, Marville, Dampvillers, with the rest bordering on France, do a corrupt or broken French. In which regard the Pleadings held before the Council residing in Luxemburg are made in both Languages, that so they may be understood by all that have business there. But the Nobility and Gentry (of which there is more in this Province than in any other of the Seventeen) speak both Tongues perfectly. A breed of men full of Vertue, Courtesie and Hospitality towards one another, and of great Truth and Faith to their Prince: but reckoned for the worst Landlords in all these Countries; governing their Subjects and Tenants like the Peasants of France, contrary to the use and Liberties of the rest of the Netherlands. Both sorts, as well the Nobility as the Commons, hate both Law and Lawyers, and for the most part end their Controversies amongst themselves, without any Process.

The whole Country containeth in compass about 70 leagues, or 200 Italian miles; in which are comprehended 23 walled Towns, and 1168 Burroughs and Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Luxemburg or Lucemburg, built in the place where anciently stood the Augusta Veromanduorum of Ptolemy; and took this new name quasi Lucis burgum, from the image of the Sun there worshipped; seated on the Alsimuntius, or Alze, which runneth through it; large, and of a strong situation, but not very well built, nor yet recovered of the spoils which the long Wars betwixt the French and the Spaniard brought upon it before the Treaty of Cambray. However, it is the chief Town of the Province, honoured with the Residence of the Council hereof, and the Sepulchre of John King of Bohemiah, slain in the Battel of Cressy against the English, An. 1348. 2. Arlun, on the top of an high Hill, so called quasi Ara Lunæ, from an Altar consecrated to the Moon in the time of Paganism. 3. Theonville, on the Mosell, over which it hath a goodly Bridge; a Frontier-town near Metz and the border of Lorrain, and for that cause made marvellous strong; but taken by the French, An. 1558. and restored the next year by the Peace of Cambray. 4. Bostonack, a fair Town, and very well traded, commonly called the Paris of Ardenne, in which part it standeth. 5. Montmedy, on an high Hill, at the foot of which runneth the River Chiers. 6. Dampvillers, once a very strong place also: both taken and ransacked by the French, An. 1552.

7. Marville,

7. Marvelle, upon the Chiers, the one half whereof belongeth to the Duke of Lorrain, the other to the King of Spain as Duke of Luxemburg for which cause it is called la Ville commune. 8. Rock di March, fortified with a strong Castle. 9. Yvoi, a place once of great importance, sacked by the French An. 1552. and restored by the Treaty of Cambray, on condition it should never more be walled. 10. La Frette on the Chiers, a Town of the same condition.

In the skirts of this Country towards France standeth the Principality of Sedan, extended all along the banks of the River Maes, from the borders of Lorrain on the South, to the great Forest of Ardenne and the Dukedom of Bouillon on the North. A small, but very fair Estate, of fruitful Soil, and beautified with many rich Villages, and some Towns of note: the principal whereof are, 1. Jamais upon the borders of Lorrain, by the Duke whereof it was taken, after a long season, from the Lady Charlotte, the last Heir-general of the House of Mark, An. 1585. and laid unto that Dukedom as a part thereof. A place of great importance, and therefore much contended for by each Pretender. 2. Donchiery, a strong Town of war, bordering on Tiraske in Picardy, to which by some it is ascribed. 3. Sedan. in Latin called Sedunum ad Mosam, because situate on the banks of the Maes or Mosa, the usual Residence of the Prince: a fine neat Town, well fortified, and planted with 80 brass pieces of Ordnance; honoured with a seat of Learning, which being of a middle nature betwixt a Grammar School and an University, is in the Criticism of these times called a Schola illustris, to which men may send their children to learn good Letters, though they can take in them no Degrees, that being a priviledge reserved only to the Universities. So that these Schools may be somewhat like our Collegiate Churches of Westminster, Winchester and Eaton, but that the younger Students in these last named are more restrained to Rhetorick and Grammar, than in the other, though these more liberally indowed for the encouragement and reward of Learning than all the Scholæ illustres of either Germany. 4. Mouson, a Town of great strength and consequence on the River Maes, upon some jealousies of State, garrisoned by the French, as also is Sedan it self, and most of the other good Towns belonging unto this Principality; but so that the Revenues of it, execution of Justice, and all other rights of Sovereignty, are still enjoyed, as formerly, by the Lords thereof.

This Estate anciently was a part of the Dukedom of Bouillon, from which it was dismembred for the Portion of some younger Prince, at such time as Godfrey Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorrain, after Charles and Otho the first Dukes; or else excepted and reserved by Godfrey, surnamed of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain, and King of Hierusalem, when he sold the Dukedom of Bouillon to the Bishop of Liege. By many mean Conveyances and alterations of the Owners it came at last to the House of Aremberg, a Family of great wealth and power in Westphalen, (a Province of Germany not far off) by the Heir-general of which House it was brought in Marriage to Engelbert Earl of Mark about the year 1338, from whom descended Robert Earl of Mark, and Sovereign of Sedan with the Towns annexed, who succeeding his Mother in the Estates of Sausi and Florenge, Fiefs holden of the Dukedom of Bouillon, and eagerly affecting to unite the Estates together, (as they had been anciently) purchased the Town and Title of Duke of Bouillon of Eberhard Earl of Mark his Brother, Bishop and Cardinal of Liege, and consequently Duke of Bouillon also. Proud of his honour, and being somewhat too stiff in maintaining the Rights of his new Dukedom against a Sentence passed in the Imperial Chamber, in a Suit there depending betwixt two of his Vassals, he took up Arms against the Empire, with far more courage than discretion. For being in the course of that War worsted by Charles 5. (for whom he was too weak an enemy) the Town of Bouillon, being taken by the conquering Emperor, was afterwards restored to the Bishops, and nothing but the Title of Dukes of Bouillon left to the Princes of Sedan. And that he might be able to hold Sedan, this Robert was fain to return again to the protection of the French, (as his Ancestors from the time of Charles 8. had done before) and died Anno 1535, leaving his Titles and Estate unto Robert his Son, one of the Marshals of France, whose Grandson, called also Robert, being a dear friend and companion of Henry of Bourbon King of Navarre, and afterwards of France also, dying without Issue at Geneva, Anno 1588, committed to him the disposal of his Estates, and of the Lady Charlotte his only Sister. And he so well discharged his trust, that (having setled his own affairs) he gave the Lady in Marriage to Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turenne, in France, (one who had done him very good service in the course of his long War, against the Leaguers) and with her the possession of Sedan, and the Title of Bouillon; whose posterity do still enjoy it. The whole Succession of these Princes we shall find in Bouillon, of which more anon.

But to return again to the Dutchie of Luxemburg, It was at first a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, dismembred from it in the time of the Emperour Otho the first by Sigefride the Son of Ricuinus Prince thereof, who, in the division of that Estate amongst his Brethren, had this for his Portion, with the Title of Earl. Of his Successors there is little to be found upon good record in a constant order of Succession, until the time of Henry 1. Father of Henry 2. Emperor of Germany. and they of a Royal Progeny of Kings & Princes; two of the which are most considerable, though all of them of eminent quality in their several times, viz. 1 Henry, elected and crowned Emperor by the name of Henry 7. said to be poisoned by a Frier in the holy Chalice, to prevent some designs he had against the Pope, in asserting the Imperial power in Italy. 2 John, the Son of this Henry, chosen K. of Bohemia, in regard of his Marriage with Elizabeth the Daughter of Wenceslaus King thereof; the possession of which Realm he left unto his posterity, advanced unto a Dukedom by Charles 4. the eldest Son of this John, in the person of Wenceslaus his younger Brother. What else concerns it we shall find in this following Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of LUXEMBURG.

1. Sigefride, the Son of Ricuine, Prince of Ardenne, the first Earl of Luxemburg.
2. Gilbert, the Father of Ogine, Wife of Baldwin the fourth of Flanders, but whose Son I find not.
3. Godfrey, Earl of Namur, was also Earl of Luxemburg by the right of Marriage, Father of Agnes the Wife of Simon the second Duke of Lorrain.
4. Conrade, perhaps the Son of Godfrey by the Daughter of Luxemburg, Father of Catharine, Wife of Matthew the second, Duke of Lorrain.
5. Henry Earl of Luxemburg, slain in the quarrel of Rainold Earl of Geldres, contending with John Duke of Brabant for the Dutchie of Limbourg.
6. Henry I. Son of Henry the first, by means of his Brother Baldwin, Elector of Triers, was chosen Emperour of the Germans, the seventh of that name, Anno 1308, first crowned at

Aken;

Aken, and afterwards at Rome; one of the laſt Emperours that meddled in the affairs of Italy.

1319 7. John, Son of Henry II. Earl of Luxemburg, married Elizabeth, Daughter of Wenceſlaus the elder, K. of Bohemia; of which he was upon that Marriage elected and crowned King, Anno 1311, in the life of his Father; ſlain by the Engliſh in the Battel of Creſſy, Anno 1346.

1383 9. Wenceſlaus II. eldeſt Son of the ſaid Charles 4. Emperour and King of Bohemia alſo, ſucceeded his Uncle in the Dukedom.

1419 10. Sigiſmund, Brother of Wenceſlaus, ſucceeded Wenceſlaus in all his Eſtates; to which he added the Crown of Hungary, by the Marriage of Mary, Daughter of King Lewis the firſt.

11. Elizabeth, Daughter of John Duke of Gorlitz, (a Town of Luſatia) the Brother of Sigiſmund, by the gift of Sigiſmund her Uncle, being then alive, the better to fit her for the Bed of Anthony of Bourgogn Duke of Brabant; after whoſe deceaſe ſhe married John the 3. Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c. But having no Iſſue by either of them, ſhe ſold her intereſt in this Dukedom to Duke Philip the Good.

12. Philip the Good ſucceeded on the Sale aforeſaid made by the ſaid Elizabeth, in purſuance of the Contract and Agreement made at her firſt Marriage, for ſettling this Eſtate in the Houſe of Burgundy. Of whom, and his Succeſſors in theſe Belgick Provinces, we ſhall ſpeak hereafter.

The Arms are B. ſix Barrulets A. ſupporting a Lion G. crowned and armed Or.

7. LIMBOURG.

THE greateſt of the Eſtates of Belgium for extent of Territory, at the time of their Incorporating in the Houſe of Burgundy, was that of Brabant, comprehending 5 of the 19 Provinces; that is to ſay, the Dukedom of Limbourg, and Brabant, the Marquiſate of the Holy Empire, and the Seigniory of Mechlin, with the Sovereignty of Liege or Luyck-land.

LIMBOURG hath on the Eaſt the Dukedom of Gulick in High Germany, on the Weſt the Biſhoprick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South the Dukedom of Luxemburg. The Soil is fruitful of all neceſſary Commodities, excepting Wines, the want whereof is recompenſed with moſt excellent Wheat, great ſtore of Fewel, and plenty of the beſt Iron Mines in all theſe Countries: all which Commodities it hath of ſo great excellency in their ſeveral kinds, that it is ſaid of them proverbially, that that their Bread is better than Bread, their Fire hotter than Fire, and their Iron harder than Iron. It is alſo well ſtored with medicinal Simples, and enriched with a Mine of Copperas, (by Pliny called Lapis æroſus, lib. 34. c. 10.) which being incorporated with Braſs makes Lattin, and increaſeth the Braſs by one third part. Lapis æroſus multum æris habet, & ex eo fuſo fit æs, as that Author hath it.

It is one of the leaſt of the Belgick Provinces, containing in it but 125 Villages, and no more than five walled Towns or Cities: viz. 1 Limbourg, which gives name to the whole Eſtate, pleaſantly ſeated on a Hill amongſt thady Woods, under which runneth the River Weſdo; which, having watred the whole Country, emptieth it ſelf into the Maes; well built, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, mounted upon a ſteep Precipice, of no eaſie acceſs. 2. Valkenburg, called by the French Fauquemont, a reaſonable fair Town, with a large Territory, two Dutch miles from Maeſtricht; conquered from Reynold, Lord hereof, by John the third Duke of Brabant. 3. Dalem, a little Town with a Caſtle, the Territory thereof extending beyond the Maes; conquered by Henry Duke of Brabant, of that name the ſecond. 4. Rhode le Duc, a little old Town with as old a Caſtle, half a league from Valkengborg. 5. Carpen, ſituate between Gulick and Colen, beautified with a Collegiate-Church and a ſtrong Caſtle, in which there is a Governour with a good Garriſon for defence of the place. Each of theſe Towns hath Juriſdiction on the parts adjoyning, but with Appeal unto the Chancery at Brabant.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract, and the Biſhoprick of Liege adjoyning, were the Eburones. When it was firſt made an Earldom, I am yet to ſeek. Moſt probable it is, that lying within the Verge of the great Foreſt of Ardenne, it was at firſt a member of that Earldom alſo, diſmembred from it for the Portion of ſome younger Son, as Luxemburg and Namur were, or ſeized on by ſome ſtrong Pretender (as Gulick was) when Godfrey and Baldwin Dukes of Lorrain, and the direct Heirs of the Houſe of Ardenne, were abſent in the Wars of the Holly Land. But whenſoever & by whomſoever it was made an Earldom, certain it is, that of an Earldom it was made a Dukedom by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, An. 1172. Henry, one of the Dukes hereof, married his Daughter Margaret to Godfrey the third, Duke of Brabant, which gave that Houſe ſome colour to pretend unto it; backed with a better Title on the death of another Henry, the laſt Duke of Limbourg, whoſe next Heir, Adolph, ſold it to John Duke of Brabant, pretending to it in the right of the former Marriage, An. 1293. But Reynold Earl of Geldres, thinking himſelf to have a better Title than Adolph in right of Ermingrade his Wife, the Daughter of Herman, a late Duke hereof, put in his plea, and challenged it by force of Arms: but being vanquiſhed and taken priſoner by the ſaid Duke John in the Battel of Worancan, was fain, for his Releaſe, to releaſe all his Claim and Title to the Dukedom of Limbourg, after that quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Brabant, till they ſell both together to the Houſe of Burgundy.

The Arms hereof are Argent, a Lion Barrie of ten pieces, Or and Gules.

8. LUYCK-LAND, or, the Biſhoprick of LIEGE.

WEſtward of Limbourg, but a far mightier Eſtate than it, lieth LUYCK-LAND, as the Dutch, or the Biſhoprick of LIEGE, Leodienſis, as the Latin and French Writers call it; anciently under the protection of the Dukes of Brabant, and afterwards of the Princes of the Houſe of Burgundy, as Lords of that Country. By ſome it is accompted of and deſcribed as a part of Germany; but for the reaſons before mentioned I ſhall place it here. It is environed on all ſides with the Belgick Provinces, that is to ſay, with the Dukedom of Limbourg and the Earldom of Namur on the Eaſt, with Brabant on the North and Weſt, on the South with Luxemburg.

The Air hereof is very wholſom, and the Earth as fruitful, abounding with all kind of Grain and Fruits, with ſome ſtore of Wine; and as for Fleſh, Fiſh, Fowl and Veniſon, it hath very great plenty, and that too of an excellent taſte: leſs fertile it is in ſuch parts hereof as lie towards Luxemburg, in which it is moſt ſwelled with Hills, and over-ſpread with ſhady Woods, remainders of the great great Forest of Ardenne, within which it stood. But the chief Riches of this Country is under ground, consisting in Mines of Lead and Iron, and some few of Gold; Quarries of Alabaster, mingled with all sorts of Marble; rich veins of Brimstone, and unexhaustible pits of Coal: which last it hath in such abundance, that there is digged within the compass of one league of the City of Liege, not only sufficient for that great City, but so much over-plus as, being sold at mean prices about the Country, amounts unto 100000 Ducats of yearly value. The Coal much sweeter than elsewhere, and of nature contrary to all other Coal, in that it is kindled with water, and quenched with oil, and the strong fervour of it taken off by casting Salt on it.

The whole Country containeth 24 walled Towns, and 1800 Villages. The principal of which are 1. Liege or Luyck, (in Latine Leodium) situate in a pleasant Valley environed with Hills, the Meuse entring it in two branches, accompanied with four lesser Riverets, which make in it many delightful Islands. The compass of it is about four miles; the ordinary Buildings very fair, all built of Stone; the Bishop's Palace a magnificent and sumptuous piece; the Churches in number forty, of which eight are Collegiate, 32 Parochial, all of them for their riches and beauty excelling all in any City of France or Germany. Besides these, there are so many Covents, Monasteries and Religious Houses about the Town, that taking all together they amount to an hundred; all of them of such fair Revenues, so well endowed, and the Religious persons there of so great authority, that it is called the Paradise of Priests, and that deservedly. It is also an Universlity of good antiquity, wherein were Students at one time 9 Kings Sons, 24 Dukes Sons, 29 Earls Sons, besides Barons and Gentlemen; the greatest part of which were Canons of the Church of S Lambert, which is the Cathedral of the City. Yet notwithstanding it hath tasted of the malice of Fortune as well as others, being first destroyed by the Danes, then by the Normans, twice taken, and once destroyed by Charles of Burgundy, Anno 1468. Subject it is unto the Bishop as Lord temporal of it, from whom (being long since made an Imperial City) there lieth an Appeal to the Chamber of Spire. 2. Dinant, upon the Meuse, near Namur, of very great Trasfick, till destroyed by Charles of Burgundy in the same year with Liege: hardly recovered of which wounds, it was again sacked by King Henry the second of France, Anno 1554. 3. Muselck, upon the Meuse or Maes also, a league from whence is the fair Nunnery of Thuren, of the same nature with that of Mons and others spoken of before: the like to which there is near 4. Bilsen, another Town of this Bishoprick; the Abbesses of each having the privilege of Coining both Gold and Silver. 5. Looz, by the Dutch called Borchlom, in the County of Diestein; made a County in the time of Charles the Great, the Title and possession of Ogier the Dane, so famous in the History of Gallen of France and others of the old Romances. 6. Franchimont, which gives the Title of a Marquess to the Bishop of Liege. 7. Centron, or S. Truden, a fair Town, so called of the Abbey dedicated to that Saint. 8. Huy or Hoy, so called of a violent River which there runs into the Meuse. 9. Tungres, the chief City of the Tongri, which together with the Eburones were once the inhabitants of this Tract; in which are still the ruines of a Temple consecrated to Hercules. Anciently it was an Episcopal See, translated hence to Maestricht, and at last to Liege; and in those times so great and of such renown that Attila the Hun destroyed in it 100 Churches; now but a very small Town, and not worth the mentioning but for these Antiquities. Eight leagues from hence, amongst the shady Thickets of the Forest of Ardenne, is 10. that so celebrated Village and those famous hot Baths frequented from all the places of Europe, called the Spa; not so pleasant as wholsom, not so wholsom as famous. Yet are they good for sundry diseases, as the Tertian Ague, the Dropsie, the Stone, the Exulceration of the Lungs, the Sciatica, etc. They are of most virtue in July, because they are then hotest; and to such as tast them they relish much of Iron, from some Iron Mines, it seemeth, through which the waters run, which feed them. These Baths were of great fame in the time of Pliny, who doth thus describe them: Tungri Civitas fontem habet insignem, plurimis bullis stillantem, ferruginei saporis, quod ipsum non nisi in fine potus intelligitur. Purgat hic corpora, febres tertianas discutit calculorumque vitia. So he, lib. 31. c. 2. agreeably to the nature of them at this present time.

This Country (not taking the Dukedom of Bouillon, though now reckoned as a part thereof, into this accompt) followed the same Fortunes with the rest of Belgica, till the Conquest of it by the French, by whom it was made a part of the Kingdom of Lorrain, in the division of which Kingdom between the Kings of France and Germany, it fell unto the share of the Kings of France, as lying almost wholly on the West or French side of the River Maes, which parted their possessions in that broken Kingdom. Won from Lotharius the French King (the last but one of the Caroline Race) by Otho the 2. it was by him made part of the Dukedom of Lorrain then by him erected, and continued as a part thereof, till sold by Godfrey of Bouillon Duke of Lorrain to the Bishops of Liege, (of which more anon) since which time it hath been the Patrimony of those wealthy Prelates. As for the Bishoprick of Liege, it was founded at Tungres, as before was said; after the sackage of which City by Attila it was removed Anno 498 by S. Servatius unto Maestricht. But the people of Maestricht having martyred S. Lambert their Bishop, Anno 710, by Hubert, his designed Successor, with the leave of Pope Constantine, it was translated to this place, and a Cathedral Church here founded by the name of S. Lambert. His Successors did so well husband their advantages, that they did not only buy the Dukedom of Bouillon, but the City and Territory of Liege, sold unto Speletus and Obertus successively Bishops of it by Godfrey of Bouillon Duke of Lorrain, at his departure hence to the Holy Land; not much increased since that in Lands, though they be in Titles, the Bishop being stiled a Prince of the Empire, Duke of Bouillon, Marquess of Franchimont, Earl of Loetz and Hasbain. Yet are not his ordinary Revenues above 300000 Ducats yearly; his Subjects living very well under him, at easie Rents, and growing for the most part unto good estates. An argument whereof may be, that when the Liegeois had rebelled against Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, (under whose Clientele they were as Dukes of Brabant) they bought their Peace of him at the price of 600000 florens of the Rhene, to be paid in six years. After which again rebelling against Charles the Warlike, as they have been observed to be the most rebellious City in Europe, excepting Gaunt) they were able to wage 30000 men; but not being able to withstand the Forces of their Lord Protector, they fell into that miserable destruction spoken of before. Since that time they have lived with more moderation under the protection of the Princes of the House of Austria: but were counted Neutrals in the Quarrels betwixt the King of Spain and the States Confederate, as formerly between the Spaniard and the French; though many times they suffer in the contestation.

Southward hereof, betwixt it and Luxemberg, lieth the Dukedom of Bouillon, subject unto the Bishops of Liege; but a State distinct, and holden by a different Title. It taketh up a great part of that Country which more particularly and ſpecially is called the Foreſt of Ardenne, with the Woods thereof in many places over-ſhadowed; but not unfurniſhed of fair Towns and wealthy Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Loni, and 2. Muſon-Court, deſtroyed by Charles the fifth in his War againſt Robert Earl of Mark and Duke of Bouillon, but on the Peace enſuing repaired again. 3. Sauſi, and 4. Floringe, Fiefs, as before is ſaid, of the Dukedom of Bouillon, but poſſeſſed by the Soveraigns of Sedan, ſince the time that Robert Earl of Mark and Soveraign of Sedan had them in Marriage with Joan his Wife, the right Heir thereof, from whom came Robert Earl of Mark, the firſt Duke of Bouillon of that Family. The laſt a pretty Town, till deſtroyed by the French, in the Wars betwixt Henry and Philip the ſeconds, Kings of France and Spain, ſince paſſing in account as a principal Village. 5. Hierk, in the Foreſt of Ardenne, the cauſe of the great War betwixt Charles the fifth and Robert Duke of Bouillon, ſpoken of before; the Emperour having paſſed ſentence in behalf of the Embries, who laid claim unto it, and Robert favouring the pretenſions of the Houſe of Chinay. 6. Bouillon, built on the ſide of a Hill near the River Senoy, a fair large City, and beautified with a goodly Caſtle on the top of the ſaid Hill, and commanding over a large and goodly Territory, ſo ſtrong, as well by Art as Nature, that before the uſe of great Ordnance it was held impregnable; much ſpoiled in the War betwixt Charles the Fifth and Robert of Mark, and toſſed from one Maſter to another in a little time, for being taken from Earl Robert by the power of Charles, it was from him gotten by the French Anno 1552, and finally reſtored to the Biſhop of Liege by the Treaty of Cambray, An. 1559, but without prejudice to the Claim and Title of the Prince of Sedan. So that there are no fewer than three diſtinct Families which at this time enjoy the Title of Dukes of Bouillon, that is to ſay, the Biſhop of Liege, who hath precedency of Title, and the poſſeſſion of the City, the Houſe of de la Tour, who hold Floringe, Sauſi, and ſome other pieces; and the Heirs-males of the collateral Line of the Houſe of Mark, who hold Lumaigne, Rochfort, and ſome other places, but of leſs importance.

This Dukedom, once a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, in the diviſion of that Eſtate betwixt the Children of Ricuine, Prince or Earl thereof, fell to the ſhare of Godfrey his eldeſt Son, (Sedan with its appurtenances then belonging to it) with the Title of Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon. By Godfrey his Son it was united to the Dukedom of Lorrain, who ſucceeded into that Eſtate after Charles and Otho; and by another Godfrey the firſt Duke of Lorrain diſmembred from it, and given in Dower with his Siſter Ida, at her Marriage with Euſtace Earl of Boulogne in Picardy. Of theſe was born the famous Godfrey, commonly called Godfrey of Bouillon, either becauſe he was here educated, or in regard he was Duke hereof before he did attain to the Dukedom of Lorrain; who, to provide himſelf of neceſſaries for the Wars of the Holy Land, (ſo fortunately conveyed and conducted by him) ſold firſt this Dukedom unto Obert, as afterwards the whole Country of Luyck land to Speutus, Biſhops of Liege ſucceſſively, and their Succeſſors for ever; which though accounted by moſt Writers for a part of Luyck land, or of the Biſhoprick of Liege, call it which you will, was notwithſtanding held by thoſe great Prelates as a State diſtinct, and governed under them by the Eſtates of the Country, from whoſe Sentence there lay no Appeal. The maintenance of which Priviledges, on an Appeal made by the Embries unto Charles the fifth, coſt Robert Earl of Mark ſo dear, who had not long before purchaſed this Eſtate of his Brother Eberhard, Biſhop and Cardinal of Liege, as was ſaid before. The reſt of the Story we have had already in our deſcription of Sedan: we will now look upon the Princes which have born theſe Titles.

The Dukes of Bouillon of the Houſe of Ardenne.

1. Godfrey, the eldeſt Son of Ricuine, Prince or Earl of Ardenne, the firſt Earl of Bouillon, and Husband of Matilda, a Daughter of the Emperour Otho the 2.
2. Godfrey II. Son of Godfrey the 1. who in the year 1004, by adoption of Duke Otho his Couſin, and the power of Henry the 2. Emperour, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Lorrain.
1019 3. Gozelo, Brother of Godfrey the 2. Duke of Lorrein and Bouillon.
1044 4. Godfrey III. Son of Gozelo.
5. Euſtace, Earl of Boulogne, and Ida his Wife, Daughter of Godfrey the 3. by him endowed at her Marriage with the Dukedom of Bouillon.
6. Godfrey IV. ſurnamed of Bouillon, Son of Euſtace and Ida, on the death of his Uncle Godfrey, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Lorrain, Anno 1078, and died King of Jeruſalem. Going unto the Wars of the Holy Land, he ſold this Dukedom to Obert Biſhop of Liege and his Succeſſors, Anno 1096, who did accordingly enjoy it till the year 1509 or thereabouts; when it was ſold by Eberhard of Mark to his Brother Robert, of whoſe deſcent and Succeſſors you may take this view in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Soveraigns of Sedan and Dukes of Bouillon of the Houſe of Mark.

1. Engelbert, the ninth Earl of Mark in Germany, by marrying with the Daughter and Heir of Aremberg, added Sedan, Jamais, &c. to the Houſe of Mark.
2. Everhard, ſecond Son of Engelbert by the Heir of Aremberg, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
3. John, Son of Everhard, Earl of Mark, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
4. Everhard II. Brother of John, Earl of Mark, &c.
5. John II. Earl of Mark, Son of Everhard the 2.
6. Robert of Mark, the 2. Son of John the 2. Lord of Sedan, his elder Brother Everhard ſucceeding in the Eſtates of Aremberg. He added Florenge and Sauſi, Towns of the Dukedom of Bouillon, to his other pieces.
7. Robert II. Son of Robert the 1. Soveraign of Sedan, and Duke of Bouillon, which Dukedom he purchaſed of Everhard his Brother, Biſhop and Cardinal of Liege.
1535 8. Robert III. Son of Robert the 2. one of the Marſhals of France, Soveraign of Sedan, and Titulary Duke of Bouillon.
1556 9. Henry-Robert, Son of Robert the 3.
10. Robert-William, Son of Henry-Robert, zealous in the Reformed Religion, and a great follower of Henry of Vendoſme King of Navarre, to whom, dying at Geneva An. 1588, he bequeathed the care of his Eſtates.
11. Charlotte, the Siſter of Robert-William, married by Hen. of Navarre (then King of the French) to Henry de la Tour, Viſcount of Turenne.
12. Henry de la Tour, Viſcount of Turenne in France, deſcended from the Heirs-general of Euſtace Earl of Boulogne and Duke of Bouillon, by Marriage of the Lady Charlotte, and the gift of Henry the 4. of France, ſucceeded in the Soveraignty of Sedan and Title of Bouillon; a Proteſtant, and the Founder of the Schola Illuſtris in Sedan. 13. De

13. De la Tour, Son of Henry by one of the Daughters of William Prince of Orange, succeeded his Father in his Estates, but not in his Religion also, which, to ingratiate himself with the French King, he exchanged for Papistry, made thereupon one of the Marshals of France, and now living, Anno 1648.

9. BRABANT. 10. The MARQUISATE. and 11. MECHLIN.

THese I have joined together, though distinct Estates, because they have a long time followed the same fortune, and that the two last do no otherwise differ from the first than the parts from the whole; the Marquisate and Mechlin being now reckoned as parts of Brabant, and included in it.

1. BRABANT is bounded on the East with Luyckland, or the Bishoprick of Liege, on the West with the River Scheld and a part of Flanders, on the North with the Maes, which severeth it from Holland and Gelderland, and on the South with Hainault, Namur, and a part of Luyckland. So called quasi Brackland, that is to say, a barren Land as at first it was; or from the old Bratuspantium, which Cæsar placeth in this Tract; but from whether of the two is not yet determined.

The Air hereof is generally very wholsom and good, and the Soil naturally fruitful, excepting Kempenland, (being the parts thereof lying towards the North) which being barren of it self, is made indifferently fertile by keeping Cattel. Soiling the ground, and other arts of good Husbandry. The people live in most freedom, and are the best priviledged of any in Belgium. A thing for which they are more beholden to the Prince's goodness, than their own great wits; being noted to be none of the wisest, especially as they grow in age, when most men learn wisdom. Brabanti, quò magis senescunt, eo magis stulteſcunt, as Erasmus.

The length hereof, from S Gertruydenberg to Gemblours, North and South, is 22 Dutch or German miles; from Helmont to Bergen op Zoome, East and West, 20 of the same miles; the whole compass 80. Within which circuit are contained 26 walled Towns, and Villages with Parish-Churches 718; of which the odd 18, called Francks or Market-Towns, enjoy the Priviledges of walled Town or Cities, though unwalled themselves.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Hertogen Bosch, or the Bosch, as the Dutch, Bois le Duc, or Bolduc, as the French; and Sylva Ducis, or Boscum Ducis, as the Latines call it: each name derived according to their several Languages, from a pleasant Wood, belonging to the Dukes of Brabant, where the Town now stands, situate on a little River called Dorse, some two Leagues from the Maes, near the borders of Gelderland. A large and well-built Town, very strongly fortified, and of great trade for Clothing, here being made yearly in the time of Lewis Guicciardine 20000 Clothes, worth 200000 Crowns to the Clothier or Draper: Made an Episcopal See Anno 1559, the Cathedral, which is fixed in the Church of Saint John, being fair and large, and beautified with one of the goodliest Dials in the Christian world. This is the principal Town of Brabant, (properly and distinctly so called) comprehending under it the four Countries of Kempenland, Maesland, Peelland, and Osterwick; and was taken by the Confederate States from the King of Spain, after a long and chargeable Siege, Anno 1628. 2. Tilmont, on the little River Geet, once chief of Brabant, but long since decayed. 3. Aerschot, on the little River Demere, which gives the title of Duke to them of the noble House of Croy, descended from the Kings of Hungary, (of which we spake before at large when we were in Picardy) the Dukes hereof (advanced unto that honour by Charles the fifth) being men of greatest Revenue and Authority of any in Belgium. 4. Bergen op Zoome, so called from the River Zoome upon which it is situate, about half a league from the influx of it into the Scheld, and not far from the Sea, which gives it a reasonable good Haven. A Town of great strength by nature, but more strongly fortified; famous for being made a Marquisate by Charles the fifth An. 1553; more for the notable Resistance which it made to the Marquels Spinola, An. 1622. 5 Breda, upon the River Merck, a Town pleasantly seated, well fortified, and of great Revenue, having under it the Town and Territory of Steenberg, the Franchise of Rosindale, and the Seigniory of Osterhout; the Residence, Barony, and chief Town of the Princes of Orange, from whom being taken by the Spaniard in the beginning of those Wars, it was again recovered by some venturous Gentlemen, who, hiding themselves in a Boat covered over with Turf, were conveyed into the Castle, which they easily mastered, and made the Prince Lord of it again; after re-taken by the Spaniard An. 1625. but now in the possession of its natural Owners, to whom it came by the right of the House of Nassau, by the Marriage of Engelbert the 7. Earl of that House, with Mary, Daughter and Heir of Philip the last Lord hereof, about the year 1400. 6. Diest, on the River Dennere, a good Town and invested with a goodly Territory, belonging to the Prince of Orange, whose Ancestors of the House of Nassau had it in exchange for some other Lands of the Duke of Cleve; and in right hereof he is Burgrave of the City of Antwerp. 7. Grinbergen, an ancient Barony, with a large Jurisdiction, descendible on the youngest Son only, after the manner of Burg English, as our Lawyers call it. 8. Gertruydenberg, standing on the Douge, not far from the influx of it into the Maes, the farthest town in the North of Brabant, where it joins to Holland; which makes it a matter of dispute betwixt those Provinces, to which of them it doth belong. A Town of great trade for Fishing, plenty of Salmons and Sturgeon being taken here, but of Shads especially, whereof 18000 are sometimes caught in a day, salted, and sent abroad into Foreign parts. It acknowledgeth the Prince of Orange for the Lord thereof, as doth also. 9. Grave, a good Town upon the Maes, bought by these Princes of the King of Spain without consent of the States, without whose approbation no part of the Domain is to be dismembred. 10. Maestricht, (in Latine Trajectum ad Mosam) so called of a Ferry over the Maes in former times; supplied now with a goodly Stone-bridge in the place thereof. A fair and goodly Town, beautified with two Collegiate-Churches, in one of which the Dukes of Brabant were always Canons; subject in part to the Bishop of Liege, and partly to the Duke of Brabant. The Children are subject to that Prince to whom the Mother was subject at the time of the Birth, without relation to the Father; according to that Maxime of the Civil Law, Partus sequitur ventrem. And if a Stranger come to live there, he must declare to which of the two he will be subject. Yet is the Duke of Brabant the chief Soveraign of it, he only having the power of Coinage, and of granting Pardon to Offenders: and as a Town of this Dukedom it was besieged and taken by the Confederate States Anno 1632.

Here is also within the limits of this Dukedom the Town and Seigniory of Ravestein, situate on the banks of the Maes, held by the Dukes of Cleve of the Duke of Brabant, but no otherwise subject: and on the same River the Town and Country of Horn, a Fief Imperial, beautified with a strong Castle and a goodly Territory, in which is Wiert, the Residence of the Earls of Horn, descended of the ancient House of Montmorency in France.

2. The MARQVISATE OF THE EMPIRE ſo called becauſe the fartheſt Bounds and Marches of the German Empire frontiering on Flanders, which appertained unto the Soveraignty of the Crown of France, comprehendeth four of the beſt Towns in Brabant, with very large and ſpacious Territories adjoining to them: viz. 1. Lovain, on the River Dile, about four Engliſh miles in compaſs; but in that compaſs much of the ground is taken up with Vineyards, Gardens, Meadows and pleaſant Fields, which make the ſituation far more delightful than if all built and peopled. It was the Mother-Town of Brabant, and ſometimes gave the Title of an Earl to the Dukes hereof: afterwards was made an Univerſity by Duke John the 4. An. 1426. wherein are contained about 20 Colledges, ſuch as they be, much priviledged, and enriched with Penſions for publick Readers, by King Philip the 2. 2ly, Bruxels, (Bruxella) the Seat of the ancient Dukes of Brabant, and of the Dukes of Burgundy alſo, after they came to be Lords of thoſe Countries; ſeated upon the Sinne, and other ſweet Springs and Riverets, which make it one of the ſweeteſt ſituations in all Europe; having withall a goodly Chanel made by Art from Bruſſels to the River Dile, and from thence to the Scheld, the charge whereof amounted unto 500000 Crowns. It is of the ſame compaſs with Lovain, the Building ſumptuous, and the Town very rich, not only in regard that it is the ordinary Seat of the Prince or his Regent, and the Chancery for all Brabant and the Dutchy of Limbourg, but in regard of the rich Manufactures of Armour and Cloth of Arras, of Silk, Gold and Silver, which are there induſtriouſly purſued. 3. Nivelle, on the borders of Hainault, in a very rich and fruitful Soil, remarkable for the abundance of fine Linen which is therein made, but moſt of all for a very rich Nunnery (or rather a Nurſery) of noble Ladies, of the ſame nature with thoſe of Mons and others before deſcribed. 4. Antwerp, ſituate on a goodly Plain on the River Scheld, above 17 leagues from the Sea, but furniſhed with eight Chanels cut out of the River for the tranſport of Commodities, one of the which is capable of 100 great Ships. The private Buildings are very handſom, but the publick ſumptuous; the chief whereof were reckoned the Church of Noſtre-Dame, the Burſe, the Town-houſe, and the Houſe of the Eaſterlings or Eaſtern Merchants. Well peopled it is, and of ſo great Trade in former times, that it was held to be the richeſt Empory of the Chriſtian world; the Commodities here bought and ſold amounting to more in one month than thoſe of Venice in two years. The cauſes of which ſudden growth and increaſe of Trading are ſaid to be theſe. 1. The two Marts holden here every year, either of them during ſix weeks, in which time no man's perſon could be arreſted, or his goods diſtrained. 2. The King of Portugal having in the year 1503 diverted the courſe of Merchandiſe from Alexandria and Venice to the City of Lisbon, kept here his Factories, and ſent hither his Spices and other Indian Commodities: for which cauſe the Merchants in the year 1516 forſook Bruges in Flanders, and ſetled here. And 3. many of the Nobility and Gentry, during the long and bloody Wars betwixt France and Spain, forſook their Country-houſes, and repaired hither: by means whereof Antwerp, in a very little time, grew bigger by 3000 houſes than it had been formerly. But as the growth hereof was ſudden, ſo the fall ſenſible; occaſioned through the yoaking it with a Citadel by the Duke of Alva which made Merchants afraid to reſort any longer thither, as a place of little freedom and leſs ſecurity; but chiefly by blocking up the Haven, and intercepting the Trade at Sea, by the more powerful Hollanders, which hath removed this great Traffick to Amſterdam and other Towns of their Country. So that now the chief ſupport of it is the reputation which it hath of being an Imperial City, the place of receit for the Kings Revenues, and a Biſhops See founded here in the year 1559, which draweth hither ſome reſort of Lawyers and Church-men.

3. The Seigniory of MECHLIN conſiſteth only of that City and a ſmall Territory of 9 Villages adjoining to it. The City is ſeated on both ſides of the River Dile, which ebbeth and floweth to the Town and a league above it, and running through the very midſt, maketh in it a number of ſmall Iſlands, to the great ornament and commodity of it. A goodly Town, containing ſeven Pariſh-Churches, beſides the Cathedral, being the See of an Archbiſhop, founded here in the year 1559. Strong, in regard it may be eaſily drowned on all ſides; and of great wealth, by reaſon of the many Manufactures of Linen, great Artillery of Braſs and Iron, Bells, Painted works, and others of like uſe and ornament. And being ſituate in a manner in the Centre of Brabant, diſtant 4 Leagues from Antwerp, Lovain, and Bruxels, it was made by Charles the Warlike (who loved the place) the ordinary Seat of the great Council of State, to which Appeals are made from the other Provinces. But yet it was more beautiful in former times than it is at the preſent; the City being much defaced by firing 200 Barrels of Powder Anno 1546, and by the Sackage of the Spaniard, by whom it was taken by force Anno 1572. Moſt memorable at this time for a famous Nunnery, like to that of Nivelle, wherein are ſometimes 1600 Nuns, who when they pleaſe may leave their Cloiſter and be married. A Town though in Brabant, yet not of it, but a State diſtinct: for which cauſe many Women at the time of their Child-birth uſe to lay down their Bellies in ſome Village of Brabant, that their Children may be capable of the Priviledges and Immunities of that Country. The principal of the Villages is named Leeſt or Heyſt, pleaſantly ſeated on an Hill, the reſidue of the Burroughs lying at the foot thereof. Both Town and Villages were the Patrimony heretofore of the noble Family of the Bertholds; which failing in the perſon of Gaulter, ſlain in the Battel of Worancan by John Duke of Brabant, it fell the one half to the Biſhop of Liege, who ſold his moyety to John the 2. Duke of Brabant; the other to the Earl of Geldres, who in the year 1333 ſold his part unto Lewis of Malain, Earl of Flanders. But he ſold nothing but the Title, John the third Duke of Brabant having ſeized upon it, and added it to his Eſtate: the occaſion of ſome quarrel between thoſe Princes, compoſed by the Marriage of that Lewis with the Heir of Brabant.

But to return again unto Brabant it ſelf, the ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Aduatici and ſome part of the Tungri: it was accompted by the Romans a part of the Province of Germania Secunda, and by the French a Province of the Kingdom of Eaſt-France or Auſtraſia; the Southern parts thereof towards Hainault under the Governance and Command of the Earls of Ardenne; the Northern parts lying towards the Sea, and terribly infeſted with the Depredations of the Danes and Normans, committed to the care of ſome principal Officers, whom they called Lords Wardens of the Marches. Theodebert Son of Theodorick the firſt King of Auſtraſia, accompanied with Utilo a Boiarian Prince, having repulſed theſe common Robbers, obtained for Utilo, of his Father, the command of thoſe Countries, and poſſeſſion of a great part of them alſo, by the Title of Lord Marqueſs of Antwerp: the fourth from whom, called Arnulph, was the firſt Maior of the Palace (of this Houſe) to the Kings of France, made as it were hereditary unto his Succeſſors. By Dagobert the firſt, ſole King of the French, that part of this Country which was under the Earls of Ardenne being taken from them, the whole Eſtate was conferred on Anſegiſus, the Son of Arnulph, with the Title of Duke of Brabant. The actions and atchievements of ſo many of them as were

Maiors

Maiors of the Palace we have already seen when we were in France. The whole Succession follows here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Marquesses of Antwerp and Dukes of BRABANT of the German or Boiarian Race.

1. Utilo, Son of Theodore, the first Duke, and Nephew of Aldiagerius, the last King of the Boiarians.
2. Hugopert, Son of Utilo.
563 3. Asopert, the Son of Hugopert, and Husband of Plythilda, Daughter of Clotaire the first of France.
579 4. Arnoldus, the Son of Asopert.
601 5. Arnulph, Son of Arnoldus, the first Maior of the Palace of this Family.
641 6. Ansegisus, Son of Arnulphus, Marquess of Antwerp, and Maior of the Palace, by Dagobert the first made Duke of Brabant.
679 7. Pepin, surnamed the Fat, Son of Ansegisus, Successor to his Father in his Honours, Offices and Estates, and was herein succeeded by 714 8. Charles, the base Son of Pepin, for his valiant acts surnamed Martel, there being no lawful Issue of his Father living.
741 9. Pepin II. surnamed the Short, Son of Charles Martel, having managed the Affairs of France from the death of his Father for the space of ten years, usurped the Kingdom, and was solemnly crowned King at Soissons by Boniface Archbishop of Mentz, on May day, An. 751. The Dukedom of Brabant returning by this means to the Crown of France, continued a Province of that Kingdom, till the division of the French Empire among the Sons and Nephews of Lewis the Godly; when it was made a Member of the Kingdom of Lorrain. Not long before the fatal period of that Kingdom, having been many years before divided by the River Meuse betwixt the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, (each taking to themselves the Title of Kings of Lorrain) it was by Lotharius the 3. of France, in whose share it lay, conferred on Charles his younger Brother, together with the Title of the Duke of Brabant. But indeed this Donation proved of little worth, the greatest part hereof, together with the rest of that part of the Kingdom of Lorrain which of right belonged unto the French, being conquered by the Emperor Otho the 2. and by him added to the Empire. And yet this also fell out in fine to the profit of Charles, who being Cousin-german to this Otho the 2. by the Lady Gerburg, (Sister of Otho the 1. and Wife of Lewis surnamed Transmarine, K. of France, the Father of Charles) was by him invested into the great Dukedom of Lorrain, that Dukedom in the full latitude and extent thereof containing the modern Dukedoms of Lorrain, Gulick and Brabant, with the Lands of Luyck, with parts of the Lands of Triers and Colen. Brabant at that time had the name of Bass (or Low) Lorrain, and as in memory thereof, there is a Court for criminal and civil Causes held at Gennap (one of the Franks or Market-Towns of Brabant) called La Court de Lorrain to this day. An Estate first erected, as before is said, by the Emperor Otho the 2. who giving it to the said Charles of France, reserved out of it, as a Dower for his said Aunt Gerburg, the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Bruxels, Nivelle and Antwerp, lying on the Marches of his Dominions towards France, which (with reference perhaps to the old Marquisate of Antwerp) he honoured with the title of Marquisate of the holy Empire. An. 981. Gerburg, the Sister and Heir of Otho, the Son of Charles above mentioned, being put besides her hopes of that fair Inheritance by her Brother Otho, (who gave it to Geoffrey of Ardenne) succeeded her Grandmother, the first Gerburg, in the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Nivelle, and Bruxels, which she conveyed in Marriage to Lambert, one of the Sons of Reyner of Hainault, with the Title of Earl of Lovain. Henry his Son, having made himself Master of Antwerp also, was by that means possessed of the whole Marquisate, but still retained the Title of Earl of Lovain. Godfrey the 6. Earl, having inlarged the bounds of his Dominions by the Conquest of the rest of this Country, Godfrey & Baldwin, Dukes of Lorrain, being then absent in the Wars of the Holy Land, was by the Emperour Henry the fifth (whose Sister he married) created the first Duke of Brabant. John, the first Duke of that name, added hereunto the Dutchie of Limbourg; and John the third, the Seigniory of Malines or Mechlin. How it became united to the House of Burgundy is to be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of

1004 1. Lambert, one of the Sons of Regnier Earl of Hainault, made the first Earl of Lovain, in right of Gerburg.
1015 2. Henry the Son of Lambert, who took Antwerp, making it the head City of the Marquisate of the holy Empire.
1046 3. Lambert II. Son of Henry.
1054 4. Henry II. Son of Lambert the second.
1068 5. Henry III. Son of Henry the second.
6. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third.
1096 7. Godfrey, surnamed Barbatus, Brother of Henry the fourth, in right of his descent from Charles Duke of Lorrain challenged the Country, and recovered it from the House of Ardenne; and finally by the Emperour Henry the fifth was created the first Duke of Brabant, Anno 1108. Father of Adelize, the second Wife of our Henry the first, and of Josceline de Lovain, the Progenitor of the (now) Earl of Northumberland.
1140 8. Godfrey or Geofrey II. Son of Godfrey.
1143 9. Godfrey or Geofry III. Son of Godfrey the 2.
1183 10. Henry V. Son of Godfrey the third.
1230 11. Henry VI. surnamed the Good, Son of Henry the fifth.
1247 12. Henry VII. surnamed the Magnanimous, by whose Marriage with Sophia, Daughter of Lewis the sixth, Lantgrave of Thuringia, the Lantgravedom of Hassia came into this House, invested in it in the person of Henry his Son by the said Sophia.
1260 13. John, Son of Henry the seventh, took in the Dukedom of Limbourg, and destroyed the potent Family of the Bertholds: his younger Brother Henry, by another Venter, succeeding in Hassia.
14. John II. Son of John the first, bought of the Bishop of Liege the moyety or one half of Mechlin.
1312 15. John III. Son of John the second, added the whole Estate of Mechlin to the Dukedom of Brabant.
1355 16. Joan, the eldest Daughter of John the third, married to Wenceslaus the first Duke of Luxemburg, but died without Issue.
1406 17. Anthony of Burgogne, Son of Philip the Hardy and the Lady Margaret his Wife, daughter of Lewis de Malain Earl of Flanders and of Margaret the Sister and Heir of Joan, after the death of the said Wenceslaus and Joan his Wife, succeeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, his elder elder Brother John giving way unto it, at the request of their great Aunt Joan, the Proprietary of it.

1415 18. John IV. Son of Anthony by his first Wife Joan, Daughter of Waleran Earl of Saint Paul.

1426 19. Philip, the second Son of Anthony, and Brother of John the 4.

1430 20. Philip II. called the Good, Duke of Burgundy, Son and Heir of John Duke of Burgundy, elder Brother of Anthony, on the death of his two Cousin-germans, John and Philip, succeeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, as the direct Heir of the Lady Margaret, Wife to Lewis de Malain, and Daughter of John the third, the last Duke of Brabant of the House of Lovain. Of whose Successors more in another place.

The Arms hereof are Sable, a Lion Or.

12. HOLLAND. 13. ZELAND. 14. WEST-FRIESLAND.

HAving thus spoken of those Provinces which still continue in subjection to the K. of Spain, (except some few Towns in Flanders and Brabant before mentioned,) let us next look on those which have withdrawn their Obedience from him; beginning first with Holland and its Appendices, as of more power and consideration than all the rest. Which though distinct Provinces, and acting in their several capacities at the present time: yet having been always under the Command of the same Princes, they must be joined together in the Story of them, but shall be severally handled as to the Chorography.

HOLLAND hath on the East the Zuider-See, Utrecht and some part of Gelderland, on the West and North the German Ocean, on the South the Islands of Zeland and some part of Brabant. So called, as some think, but with little reason, quasi Holt land, that is to say a woody Country; as others, quasi Hollow-land, from the Bogs and Marishes and unsound footing on the same; and some will have it called so quasi Hoy-land, from the great quantity of Hay. But the learned Junius, not relishing any of the three, conceives that both this Country and the Isles of Zeland, being planted by some Colonies of Danes and Normans, (at the time of the Irruption of those Northern Nations) were called thus with reference to Seland and Oeland, two Islands of the Baltick Sea, out of which they came. The Reader hath good choice, and may please himself.

The Country for the most part lieth very low, insomuch that they are fain to fence it with Banks and Ramparts to keep out the Sea, and to restrain the Rivers within their bounds; so that in many places one may see the Sea far above the Land, and yet repulsed with those Banks: and it is withal so fenny and full of Marishes, that they are forced to trench it with innumerable Dikes and Chanels, to make it firm Land, and fit for dwelling; yet not so firm to bear either Trees or much Grain. But such is the Industry of the people and Trade they drive, that having little or no Corn of their own growth, they do provide themselves elsewhere; not only sufficient for their own spending, but wherewith to supply their neighbours: having no Timber of their own, they spend more Timber in building Ships and fencing their Water-courses than any Country in the World: having no Wine, they drink more than the people of the Country where it groweth naturally: and finally, having neither Flax nor Wool, they make more Cloth of both sorts than all the Countries in the world, except France and England.

The present Inhabitants are generally given to Seafaring lives, so that it is thought that in Holland, Zeland, and West-Frieseland, there are 2500 Ships of war and burthen. The Women are for the most part laborious in making Stuffs. Nay, you will hardly see a Child of four years of age that is not kept to work, and made to earn its own living; to the great commendation of their Government. The greatest of their natural Commodities is Butter and Cheese; of which, besides that infinite plenty which they spend in their own Houses, and amongst their Garrisons and Ships, they sell as much unto other Countries as comes to 100000 Crowns per annum. By which means, and by the greatness of their Fish-trade, spoken of before, they are grown so wealthy on the Land, and so powerful at Sea, that as Flanders heretofore was taken for all the Netherlands, so now Holland is taken generally for all the Provinces confederated in a League against the Spaniard.

The whole Compass of it is no more than 180 miles, no part thereof being distant from the Sea above three hours journey: and yet within that narrow Circuit there are contained no fewer than 23 walled Towns and 400 Villages; some situate in North, and others in South-Holland, as it stands divided. In South-Holland (being that part hereof that lieth next to Zeland and the middle Chanel of the Rhene passing from Utrecht unto Leyden) the principal Towns are, 1. Dort, (in Latine Dordrectum) formerly the Staple for Rhenish Wines, a large, rich, and well-peopled Town, anciently joined to the firm Land, but in the year 1421 rent from it by the violence of the Sea, and made an Island; of great command upon the Traffick of the Maes and the Wael, upon whose Confluence it stands, but of most note in these later times for an Assembly of Divines out of divers Countries following Calvin's Doctrine, for condemnation of the Lutheran or Arminian Tenets, concerning Universal Grace and Predestination, Anno 1618. 2. Gorcbum, situate on the Wael, where it meeteth with the Linge: a Town of great Trade and Riches, by reason of a daily Market of Cheese and Butter, brought hither in very great quantity; beautified anciently with a strong Castle and a fair Church, from the Steeple whereof one may behold 22 walled Towns, besides an infinite number of Villages. The Country is round about it called by that people Van Arckel, or the Land of Hercules, from an opinion that Hercules the German did there appoint his Camp, or rather from some Temple dedicated to him, in the place whereof the Lords of this Tract, who from hence took the name of Arckel, (Arcueli they are called in our Latine Writers) founded a Church unto the honour of the Virgin Mary, in the time of Thierrie the 2. Earl of Holland, by whom they were first setled in this Country. And here they flourished as Lords of Gorcbum, Leerdam, and the parts adjoining, till the year 1416; when falling to John L. of Egmond, by Mary his Wife, Daughter of John of Arckellandt, the last Lord hereof, and Mother of Arnold of Egmond D. of Geldres, it was by him sold to William the 6. Earl of Holland, and so again united unto that Estate. 3. Rotterdam, seated on a Dike or Chanel called the Rotter, not far from which at a place named Rempen, the Leck, one of the three main branches of the Rhene, falleth into the Maes: a strong, fair, and well-traded Port: the birth-place of the learned Erasmus. 4. Schoonhoven, situate on the Leck, a fair Town, having a commodious Haven. 5. Goude, one of the six principal Towns of Holland, rich and well fortified, seated on the River called Issel, which rising about Isselstein, spoken of anon, falleth into the Leck at a place called Isselmond, and therefore different from the branch of the Rhene so called, which giveth name to Over-Issel. On the same River also stand. 6. Oudwater, and 7. Isselstein: this last belonging properly to the Prince of Orange; the first of of great Trade for making Cables and Cords for shipping. 8. Lyden, or Lugdunum Batavorum, an University, founded Anno 1564. The Town consisteth of 41 Islands, to which they pass partly by Boats, partly by Bridges, whereof there are 144, and of them 104 builded with Stone. Here is in this Town a Castle, said to have been built by Hengist the Saxon at his return out of England. And not far off stood the famous Nunnery of Rainsburg, of the same nature with those of Monts and Nivelle before described; so liberally endowed, that 2000 persons did there daily receive relief. 9. Vianen, on the Leck, a Seignioury distinct from Holland, pertaining anciently to the Lords of Brederode: And so was also 10. Hueseden, a good old Town, once beautified with a fair Castle, and a goodly Territory, but belonging to the Earls of Cleve, of which House it had Lords of its own, as knowledging no subjection to the Earls of Holland, from the year 850, or thereabouts, to the year 1290, at which time Thedorick the 9. of Cleve at a merry meeting transferred the Soveraignty thereof to Florence Earl of Holland, of that name the fifth. Finally, having continued in the possession of 20 Lords of that Family, on the expiration of that Line in the person of John the 9. dying without Issue, Anno 1334. it was made a member of this Earldom (after some sharp disputes with the Dukes of Brabant, claiming it by a Relignation of the last Lord John) by William of Bavaria, Earl of Holland and Hainault, Anno 1361, or thereabouts. 11. Leerdam, upon the River Linge, which together with Yselstein, before mentioned, fell unto Philip Prince of Orange in right of his descent from the Earls of Bueren. 12. Delf, a Town of great Trade for Cloathing, but more by reason of the Cloth of England, brought thither in great quantities by the English Merchants, than for any great store of their own making; by reason of the concourse which that Trade brings with it, rich, large, and well-built, beautified with spacious Streets and goodly Churches; the birth-place of that monstrous Heretick David George, who called himself King, and Christ immortal, as is before said.

In that part thereof which is called North-Holland, lying betwixt the middle Chanel of the Rhene and the Zuider-See, the Towns or Cities of most importance are, 1. Alkmaer, encompassed with deep Fens and Marishes; a rich Town, in regard of the great plenty of Butter and Cheese which is made about it, more than in any place of Holland, and famous for the defeat which the Duke of Alva received before it. For he in the beginning of the Low-Country Troubles, having with the loss of 20000 of his own men forced Harlem, laid his Siege round about this Town. Had he left any way for the Souldiers to have fled thence, the Town had been abandoned: but having invironed them round, he put them to such a resolution, or desperation, (chuse you whether) that manfully they resisted three of his Assaults, and in the end made him depart with great loss, as well of his Souldiers, as his reputation. 2. Amsterdam, a very fair Haven-Town, where divers times at one tide 1000 Ships of all sorts have been seen to go out and in. So truly said a modern Poet,

Quod Tagus atque Hermus vehit, & Pactolus, in unum
Verè hunc congestum dixeris esse locum.

What Tagus, Hermus, and Pactolus bear,
One would conjecture to be heap'd up here.

The people thereby are so rich, that if a Fleet of 300 Sail should come into the Port fraught with all kind of Commodities, in five or six days they would be ready to buy all the Lading. Situate it is on the Gulf called the Tie, and the Dike or Chanel called Amstel, whence it hath the name of Amsteldam, in Latine Amstelodamum; built upon Piles like Venice, and resembling it in so many points, that it may justly be called the Northern Venice. It was first fortified with Towers and Ramperts by Giselbert of Amstel, about 300 years agone: But being burnt through the envy of its neighbours, it began to be walled Anno 1482. Grown to this wealth since the diverting of the Trade from Antwerp hither, and for that cause inhabited by men of all Nations and of all Religions; and those not only tolerated and connived at in private, but openly and freely exercised without any dislike. A greater Confusion (in my mind) than that of Babel; this being of Religions, that of Languages only. 3. Harlem, on the Lake called Harlem-meer, the greatest Town of all Holland, and the second for dignity; well built, and very pleasantly situated amongst many goodly Meadows, near a delightful Forest, and round about environed with wealthy Villages; famous for the invention of Printing, invented here, but perfected at Mentz in Higher Germany; the first Book which was ever printed being Tully's Offices. 4. Naerden, on the Zuider-See, fortified with a strong Castle, held of the Earls of Holland by the Dukes of Brunswick, to whom it anciently belonged. 5. Enchuisen, on the very point of the Gulf of Zuider-See, opposite to Friesland, from which not distant above two leagues. A Town of great consequence to the Prince of Orange in the first revolting of these Countries from the King of Spain. For siding with him in that war, and standing conveniently to obstruct the passages by Sea unto Amsterdam, it compelled that City in short time, by stopping all supply of Victuals and other necessaries, to yield it self unto the Prince. 6. Horn, on the same Gulf also, a rich Town, with a very good Haven, and of so great strength by reason of the multitude of Dikes and Chanels which are round about it, that it seems impregnable. 7. Edam, upon the same Gulf (of Zuider-See,) remarkable for the great number of ships which are built yearly in it, and an incredible number of the best Holland Cheeses made in the Country round about it. 8. Medemblick, on the Ocean, seated in the best Country of Holland for the feeding of Cattel; unwalled, but enjoying all the Priviledges which a walled Town hath, and fortified with a right strong Castle.

The chief of the Holland Villages is the Hague, or 's Graven Hague, in Latine Haga Comitis, because formerly the Court and Residence of the Earls of Holland, who had here a very large and beautiful Palace founded by Earl William King of the Romans, and therein a choice and excellent Library gathered together by John Haire a Canon Regular of this place, and by him given to Charles the fifth. In former time the Retidence of the Council for the Province of Holland; as it is now of the Commissioners or Delegates of the Confederate Provinces, called by the name of the States General. It is now much increased in Buildings of what it was; and yet so great in the time of Lewis Guicciardine, that it then contained 2000 households. The Inhabitants will not wall it, as desiring to have it rather accounted the chief Village in Europe, than the second City. The other Villages of note, 2. Egmond, 3. Brederode, 4. Wassenaer, which anciently gave names to three noble Families, of which none so illustrious and renowned as that of Egmond, descended lineally from Radbold, Son of Adgillis the King of the Frisons, the first Lord of Egmond, who died Anno 791. Advanced by Marriages to the Dukedom of Gelderland, the Seigniouries of Yselstein and Bueren. And finally they were made Earls of Egmond by Maximilian the Emperour, Anno 1592. But both this House and that of Wassenaer being now extinct, there is none left but that of Brederode, for ought I can learn. Near to the last stood the famous Fortress called Arx Britannica, built by Caligula in memory of his great Battel upon this Shore. For making shew of a Voyage into Britain, to subdue that Island, he borded his Galley, embattelled his Souldiers, caused his Trumpets Trumpets to ſound, gave them the Signal, and then commanded them to gather Cockles. Which Tower or Fortreſs was at the fall of the Roman Empire overwhelmed by the Sea; the Ruines whereof at a dead low water are ſtill to be ſeen.

Beſides theſe places on the firm Land or Continent, there are ſome Iſlands which pertain to the State of Holland, called by the general name of Voorn, becauſe ſituate directly againſt Holland, Voorn ſignifying as much as before, or in old Engliſh bevorne; but known by their diſtinct and more proper names of Somerſdike, 2 Gaurede, 3. Pierſebille, ſo called of their principal Towns, and 4. Voorn ſpecially ſo named, the chief of them all, being of a fat and fruitful Soil, and plentiful of moſt ſorts of Grain. The principal Towns whereof are 1. Briel, (which we call the Brill) a ſtrong Town, and the firſt that revolted againſt the Spaniard, Anno 1572. Cautionary to the Engliſh with the Town of Fluſhing; choſen by them in regard of the great command it hath upon the paſſage to Gertruydenberg and the reſt of Brabant, as alſo to Delf, Dort, and Rotterdam, the greateſt Towns of Trade in the South of Holland. 2. Gervliet, a ſmall Town, but having a Juriſdiction over many Villages. There are alſo on the North ſide of Holland the Iſles of Wierengen and Texel; of which little memorable, but that the laſt is furniſhed with a ſafe and capacious Bay for receipt of Shipping.

One ſpecial accident concerning Holland I cannot over-paſs in ſilence, namely, how Margaret Counteſs of Hennenberg, and Siſter to William King of the Romans, being of the age of 42 years, was delivered at one birth of 365 children, the one half Males, the other Females, the odd one an Hermaphrodite; all chriſtned at the Church of Looſduynen, not far from the Hague, by the names of John and Elizabeth, in two Baſins ſtill to be ſeen in the ſaid Church, by Guido the Suffragan of Utrecht; all which immediately after died, and with them the Mother.

The Arms of Holland of it ſelf, as a State diſtinct, are Or, a Lion Gules.

ZELAND conſiſteth of ſeven Iſlands, the remainder of 18, the reſt whereof the Sea hath ſwallowed, and in them 300 inhabited Towns. It is ſevered from Flanders with the left branch or arm of the Scheld, which they call Honte, and on the Eaſt from Brabant with the right branch of the ſaid River, which ſtill keeps his name; on the North from Holland with the Gulf called the Vlack, and on the Weſt with the main Ocean from the Kingdom of England. So called, as ſome ſay, quaſi Sea and Land; but, as Junius rather thinks, from Seland, an Iſland of Denmark, as before was noted.

The Country is generally more fruitful than the neighbouring Brabant, producing great quantity of excellent Corn, plenty of Coriander, and abundance of Madder, uſed in Dying: the Soil alſo is very rich in Paſture, but low and marſhy, which makes the Air to be very unhealthy: and the whole deſtitute both of Freſh water and Wood; the want of which laſt is ſupplied with Coal out of England and Scotland, or by Turf digged amongſt themſelves, but very ſparingly, for fear of weakning the Sea-banks.

The whole containeth 8 Towns and 100 Villages. The Iſlands which remain are commonly divided into the Weſtern, and the Eaſtern, according as they lie with reference to the River Scheld. The Weſtern Iſlands are four in number: That is to ſay,

1. WALCHEREN, (Valachria in Latine) lying to the North of Scluys in Flanders, the richeſt and moſt populous of all this Province, in compaſs 10 Dutch, or 40 Italian miles. The principal Towns of which are 1. Middleburg, ſeated on a Creek of the Sea, well walled and fortified, the Streets ſpacious, the Houſes and Churches well built, inhabited by wealthy Merchants and induſtrious Tradeſmen, and of late times (ſince the removing of the Engliſh Trade from Antwerp) a moſt flouriſhing Empory. So called becauſe built in the midſt of the Iſland; or becauſe built (as ſaith Ortelius) by Prince Zelandus, of whom this Province was thus named, in honour of his Grandfather Metellus, and by him called Metelli Burgum. 2. Fluſhing, of great note for its good Port and invincible ſtrength. One of the firſt Towns which the Low-Country men took from the Spaniards, by the diligence of Voorſt a Seaman, and Monſieur de Berland, then the Bayliff thereof, and not long after put into the hands of the Engliſh as a Town of Caution; the firſt Governour of it being the renowned Sir Philip Sidney. A poor Town then it was, God wot, now the Key of the Netherlands, without whoſe licenſe no Ship can paſs either to or from the City of Antwerp; inſomuch that if the Duke of Alva, in the beginning of his Government had beſtowed that pains in the fortifying this and others of the Maritime Towns as he did in the ſtrengthning Antwerp and ſome Midland Cities, he had in all probability hindred the remedileſs Revolt of theſe flouriſhing Countries. Not far off ſtandeth the Fort called the Rammekins, once Cautionary to the Engliſh alſo, together with the Briel, the chief Town in the Iſle of Voorn, (an Iſle of Holland) all three being taken from the Spaniard Anno 1572, made Cautionary to Queen Elizabeth Anno 1585, and finally ſurrendred by King James to the States United Anno 1616. Robert Lord Liſle, (afterwards created Earl of Leiceſter) the Brother of Sir Philip Sidney, then Governour of Fluſhing. 3. Ramne, or Armuyden, an unwalled Town, but beautified with one of the goodlieſt and moſt frequented Havens in all the World; out of which one may ſometimes ſee 500 Sail of Ships of great burthen ſet forwards on their Voyages to ſeveral parts. 4. Vere or Camfere, ſeated in the North part of the Iſland, which once gave Title to a Marqueſs, and from the which the noble Family of the Veres (now, and of long time, Earls of Oxford) took denomination. So as it is no marvel that ſo many of that Family have ventured their Eſtates and lives in the Wars of this Country, being their Grandmother in a manner, or their primitive Parent, from whence they were tranſplanted into England.

2. SOUTH-BEVERLAND, ſituate betwixt Walcheren and Brabant, the greateſt of the Iſles of Zeland; heretofore 20 Dutch miles in compaſs, but now much diminiſhed by the rage and fury of the Sea, by which the Town and Seigniory of Borſuſle, with all the Countries round about it, was ſwallowed up Anno 1532. That which remains hath in it many goodly Woods and pleaſant Thickets, full of Fowl and wild Beaſts for Hawking and Hunting. Chief Towns here are 1. Romerſwale, ſeated on the Eaſt toward Bergen op Zoome, ſevered at the ſame time from the reſt of the Iſland, and made an Iſland of it ſelf, defended with continual charge from following the ſad fate of the Town of Borſuſle. 2. Goes, or Tergoes, on the Northern Coaſt, a ſtrong Town, well priviledged, and the only walled Town in all the Iſland.

3. NORTH-BEVERLAND, lying betwixt South-Beverland and the Iſle of Schowen, in former times eſteemed the Paradiſe of Zeland, and having in it a proper Town, called Chart Cheen, but ſo deſtroyed by the Sea-breach ſpoken of before, that there is nothing now remaining but a few poor Villages.

4. WOLFERSDIKE, lying between the two Beverlands, the ſmalleſt of the Weſtern Iſlands, as having in it no more than two Villages, but replenilhed with good ſtore of Paſture.

And

And these are all which fall in the division of the Western Islands, so called because they lie Westward of the River Scheld; as those which they call the Eastern Islands, on the East thereof. Of which last there are three in number.

1. SCHOWEN, lying on the South-west of Holland, so near unto North Beverland in former times, that the Inhabitants could talk together from one shore to the other: but now the Sea hath set them at a greater distance. It containeth in compass six Dutch miles. Chief Towns wherein are, 1. Zirickzee, the ancientest Town of all Zeland, once beautified with a fair and commodious Haven, now choaked up with Beach, yet still reputed for the second Town of all the Province: the whole Trade thereof consisting in Salt and Madder, of which it yields good plenty. Most famous for the birth of Levinus Lemnius, that renowned Philosopher and Physician. 2. Brouwers-Haven, inhabited only by Fishermen, not else remarkable.

2. DUVELAND, so named from the multitude of Doves or Pigeons, situate between Schowen and Tolen, in compass about 4 Dutch miles. It hath no good Town in it, but only Country-Villages and Gentlemens Farms. Surrounded by the Sea, Anno 1530, but by the industry and diligence of Adolph of Burgundy and the Lord of Boforeres in Flanders recovered again, and at the excessive charge of the people hitherto preserved.

3. TOLEN, so called from the chief Town of the Island, where the Earls Toll was wont to be paid, whence it had the name, is situate over against the North-west of Brabant, from thence disjoyned by a narrow Creek or Arm of the Sea: the second Town of note being called S. Martins Dike, walled, but not otherwise considerable.

Agreeable to the quality of this Country of Zeland art the Arms thereof, being Or, a Lion Gules rising out of a Sea wavie Argent and Azur.

WESTFRIESLAND, hath on the East Groening-land and a part of Westphalen in High Germany, on the South Over Yssell and the Zuider-See, on the North and West the main Ocean. The Country is generally moorish and full of Fens, unapt for Corn, but yielding great store of Pasturage: which Moorishness of the ground makes the Air very foggy and unhealthy; nor have they any Fewel wherewith to rectifie it, (except in that part of it which they call Seven-Walden) but Turf and Cow-dung, which adds but little to the sweetness of an unsound Air. Nor are they better stored with Rivers, here being none proper to this Country, but that of Leewars, the want of which is supplied by great Chanels in most places, which do not only drain the Marshes, but supply them with water. Which notwithstanding, their Pastures do afford them a good breed of Horses fit for service; plenty of Beeves both great and sweet, the best in Europe, next these of England; and those in such a large increase, that their Kine commonly bring two Calves, and their Ewes three Lambs at a time.

The Country is divided into three parts. In the first part, called WESTERGOE, lying towards Holland, the principal Towns are, 1. Harlingen, an Haven-Town upon the Ocean, defended with a very strong Castle. 2. Hindelopen, on the same Coast also. 3. Staveren, an Hanse-Town, opposite to Enchuisen in Holland, the Town decayed, but fortified with a strong Castle, which secures the Haven. 4. Franeker, a new University, or a Schola Illustris, as they call it. 5. Sneck, in a low and inconvenient situation; but both for largeness and beauty the best in this part of the Province, and the second in esteem of all the Country. In OSTERGOE, or the East part, lying towards Groening-land; the Towns of most note are, 6. Leewarden, situate on the hinder Leewars the prime Town of West-Friesland; and honoured with the Supreme Court and Chancery hereof, from which there lieth no Appeal; a rich Town, well built, and strongly fortified. 7. Dockum, bordering upon Groening, the birth-place of Gemma Frisius. In SEVEN-WOLDEN, or the Country of Seven Forests, so called from so many small Forests joyning near together, is no Town of note, being long time a Wood-land Country, and not well inhabited till of late. The number of the walled Towns are 11 in all; of the Villages or Burroughs, 345.

To this Province belongeth the Isle of Schellink, the Shores whereof are plentifully stored with Dog-fish, took by the Inhabitants in this manner: The men of the Island attire themselves with Beasts Skins, and then fall to dancing; with which sport the Fish being much delighted, make out of the waters towards them; Nets being pitched presently betwixt them and the water. Which done, the men put off their disguises, and the frighted Fish hastning towards the Sea are caught in the Toyls.

Touching the Frisons, heretofore possessed of this Country, we shall speak more at large when we come to East-Friesland, possessed also by them, and still continuing in the quality of a Free Estate, governed by its own Laws and Princes: here only taking notice that the Arms of this Friesland are Azure, semy of Billets Argent, two Lions Or.

The ancient Inhabitants of these three Provinces were the Batavi and Caninefates, inhabiting the Island of the Rhene situate betwixt the middle branch thereof and the Wael, which now containeth South-Holland, Utrecht, and some part of Geldres; the Frisii, dwelling in West-Friesland and the North of Holand; and the Mattiaci, inhabiting in the Isles of Zeland. By Charles the Bald these Countries, being almost unpeopled by the Norman Piracies, were given to Thierrie, Son of Sigebert, a Prince of Aquitain, with the Title of Earl: his Successors acknowledging the Sovereignty of the Crown of France, till the time of Arnulph the 4. Earl, who turned Homager to the Empire. In John the 2. they became united to the House of Hainault, and in William the 3. to that of Bavaria; added to the Estates of the Dukes of Burgundy in the person of Duke Philip the good, as appeareth by this Succession of

The Earls of HOLLAND, ZELAND, and Lords of WEST-FRIESLAND.

863 1. Thierrie or Theodarie of Aquitain, the first Earl, &c.
903 2. Thierrie II. Son of Thierrick the 1.
3. Thierrie III. the Son of Theodorick the 2.
988 4. Arnulph, who made first this Estate to be held of the Empire; slain in a War against the Frisons. From Sigefride the second Son of this Arnulph came the Lords of Brederode, advanced by Marriages to the Seigniouries of Genep and Vianen, and many other fair Estates both in Brabant and Holland.
993 5. Thierrie IV. Son of Arnulph.
1039 6 Thierrie V. Son of Theodorick the 4.
1048 7. Florence, Brother of Thierrie the 5.
1092 9. Florence II. surnamed the Fat, Son of Thierrie the 6.

1123 10. Thierrie VII. who tamed the ſtomachs of the Friſons.
1163 11. Florence III. a companion of Frederick Barbaroſſa in the Wars of the Holy Land.
1190 12. Thierrie VIII. Son to Florence the 3.
1203 13. William the Brother of Thierrie, and Earl of Eaſt-Frieſland, which Country he had before ſubdued, ſupplanted his Niece Ida, his Brother's Daughter; but after her deceaſe, dying without Iſſue, ſucceeded in his own right unto the Eſtate.
1223 14. Florence IV. Son of William.
1235 15. William II. Son of Florence the 4. elected and crowned King of the Romans; ſlain in a War againſt the Friſons.
1255 16. Florence the V. the firſt, as ſome write, who called himſelf Earl of Zeland: the Title to thoſe Iſlands, formerly queſtioned by the Flemings being relinquiſhed to him on his Marriage with Beatrix, the Daughter of Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders.

1305 19. William III. ſirnamed the Good, Father of the Lady Philippa, Wife of our Edward the 3.
1337 20. William IV. of Holland, and the II. of Hainault, ſlain in a War againſt the Friſons.
1351 22. William V. ſecond Son of Lewis and Margaret, (his elder Brother Steven ſucceeding in Bavaria) in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter and Coheir of Henry Duke of Lancaſter, ſucceeded in the Earldom of Leiceſter.
1377 23. Albert, the younger Brother of William the fifth, fortunate in his Wars againſt the Friſons, Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c.
1404 24. William VI. Earl of Oſternand, and by that name admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2. eldeſt Son of Albert.
1417 25. Jaqueline, only Daughter of Earl William the ſixth, firſt married to John the 4. Duke of Brabant, the Son of Anthony of Bourgogne; from whom divorced under colour of Conſanguinity, ſhe was married after to Humfrey Duke of Glouceſter, and then to Frank of Borſelles, a private Gentleman: being unworthily handled by Duke John of Burgundy, ſhe ſurrendred her Eſtates to Duke Philip the Good.
26. Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, Son of John Duke of Burgundy, and of the Lady Margaret Siſter of Earl William the ſixth, and Daughter of Albert, Earls of Hainault, Holland, &c. ſucceeded on the Reſignation of the Lady Jaqueline, his Couſin-german, tranſporting theſe Eſtates to the Houſe of Burgundy. His Succeſſours we ſhall meet with ſhortly in another place.

15. UTRECHT. 16. OVER-YSSELL.

THE Biſhoprick of UTRECHT, I mean the temporal Juriſdiction and Eſtate thereof, contained once all that Tract of ground which now makes up the Provinces of Utrecht, Over-Yſſel, and Groening. But Groening was long ſince diſmembred. Utrecht and Over-Yſſel remaining parts thereof till the year 1528, then added to the reſt of the Belgick Provinces by Charles the 5.

UTRECHT hath on the Eaſt Gelderland, on the Weſt, North and South, environed with Holland. The Country is very fruitful, much drier than Holland, and ſo fitter for all ſorts of Grain. It containeth 70 Villages, and 5 walled Towns: that is to ſay, 1. Wyck at Duerſtede, ſituate on the middle Chanel of the Rhene, where it diverteth into the Leck; well built, and fortified anciently with a good Caſtle; ſuppoſed to be the Batavodurum ſpoken of by Tacitus, the Manſion at that time of the Second Legion. 2. Rhenen, upon the ſame branch or Chanel, whence it hath the name: about which is digged abundance of Turf for fewel. 3. Amersfort, on the River Ems, (called in Latine Amiſus) a fair Town, and well peopled. 4. Montfort, upon the Yſſell, pleaſantly ſeated, and of great ſtrength, as being anciently a Frontier-town againſt the Hollanders. 5. Utrecht, ſituate on the middle Chanel of the Rhene: firſt called Antonina, from one of the Antonines of Rome; but Dagobert King of France gave it the name of Trajectum, (or Ultrajectum, we now call it Utrecht) becauſe there was at that time the common Ferry over the River. The Town is large, beautiful, and very ſumptuouſly built, having in it many goodly Churches, of which 5 were anciently Collegiate; beſides two famous Monaſteries of noble Women, ſuch as thoſe ſpoken of elſewhere: the private houſes well contrived, moſt of them having goodly Cellers, vaulted with wonderful art and skill, to which the people may reſort in all times of danger. Sometimes the Seat-Royal of Radbold, King of the Friſons, then of the Biſhops; honoured of old with a Juridical reſort for the parts adjoyning, and now the principal of this Province. A City ſo miraculouſly ſeated amongſt walled Towns, that a man may go from hence in one day to any one of 50 walled Towns or Cities, thence equally diſtant; or to any one of 26 Towns to Dinner, and come home to bed.

OVER-YSSELL, in Latine Tranſiſalana, ſo named from its ſituation beyond the Yſſell, is bounded on the Eaſt with Weſtphalen, on the Weſt with the Zuider-See, on the North with Weſt-Frieſland, on the South with Gelderland. The Country is very plain and without Hills, but wet and mooriſh, affording excellent good Paſturage, and not defective in Corn. It is divided into three parts, that is to ſay, Twent, confining upon Weſtphalen; Yſſelland, on the River Yſſell; and Drent, beyond the River Vecht: in all which are contained 11 Towns, and 100 Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Deventer, on the River Yſſell, ſtrong and well fortified, and withal beautiful and well peopled; an Hanſe-Town, and the chief of all this Province; firſt taken for the States by the Earl of Leiceſter, then Governour of thoſe Countries for Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1586, treacherouſly re-yielded to the Spaniard by by Sir William Stanley, but in the year 1590 again recovered by the States. 2. Swoll, ſtanding on a little River which runs into the Vidre, anciently fortified with a double Ditch and very ſtrong Ramparts, an Hanſe-Town; as is alſo 3. Campen, ſituate on the left Shore and fall of the Yſſell into the Zuider-See, a fair and large Town, and of very great ſtrength by reaſon of thoſe inacceſſible

Mariſhes

Mariſhes among which it is ſituate. Theſe three are in that part hereof which is called Yſſel-land, and by ſome Saland, by whom (erroneouſly) it is ſuppoſed to be the Country of the ancient Salii. In that part hereof which is called Twent we have the Towns of 4. Oldenzeel, 5. Enſchede, 6. Delden, 7. Almeloo; of which little memorable. And in that of Drent, the Town and Caſtle of Vallenhoven, ſtanding upon the Zuider-See, well ſerved with all ſorts of Victuals, and for that cauſe made the ordinary Reſidence of the Governour and ſupream Council for the whole Province.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe two Provinces were ſome parts of the Batavi and Friſii minores, for that of Utrecht; the Bructeri and (as ſome ſay) the Salii in Over-Yſſel. Both Provinces belonging anciently to the Epiſcopal See of Utrecht, founded by Dagobert King of France, who endowed it with great Lands and Territories; the firſt Biſhop being Willibald an Engliſh-man, who converted theſe parts to Chriſtianity. His Succeſſors grew to ſo great power that they were able to bring 40000 men into the Field, and with great courage did maintain their Eſtate and Patrimony againſt the encroaching Earls of Holland. But at the laſt, having continued for the ſpace of 900 years, Henry of Bavaria Biſhop hereof, being extreamly diſtreſſed with War by the Duke of Geldres, and driven out of the City of Utrecht by his own Subjects, (perhaps upon ſome humour of Reformation) alienated all the Temporalties of his Biſhoprick to Charles the fifth, Anno 1527, and the next year the Imperialiſts by one of the Factions were let into Utrecht; at what time both the Eſtates of the Country and Pope Clement the 7. confirmed the Alienation made by the Biſhop. After which ſolemn Acts of theirs, the Emperour cauſed himſelf to be inveſted in this Eſtate by the States of the Empire, (for Utrecht was of old an Imperial Fief,) and, for the better Government and Adminiſtration of it, divided it into two Provinces, as it ſtill continueth. But what this Biſhop loſt in Power, his Succeſſors not long after gained in Title; the Biſhop of Utrecht being made an Archbiſhop or Metropolitan Anno 1561. But by reaſon of the change of Religion, which was then working, and the falling off of theſe Countries, which ſoon after followed, he had but little joy in his new Preferment.

17. GELDERLAND. 18. ZUTPHEN, and 19. GROENING.

THE Dukedom of Gelderland, at ſuch time as it was firſt taken in by Charles the fifth, contained under it the Dutchie of Geldres properly & ſpecially ſo called, the Earldom of Zutphen, & the Town & Seigniory of Groening, held by diſtinct Titles, and governed ever ſince their union with the Belgick Provinces as diſtinct Eſtates.

GELDERLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with Cleveland and the Earldom of Zutphen, on the Weſt with Holland and Utrecht, on the North with Over-Yſſel and the Zuider-See, and on the South with Brabant and the Land of Gulick. The Country is flat, having few Hills in it, but may pleaſant and commodious Woods, eſpecially that called Echterwaldt; of Corn and Cattel very fruitful.

The whole Country is generally divided into two parts. 1. The Veluwe, contained within the Zuider-See, the middle Chanel of the Rhene, and the Yſſel; the barrener of the two, and the worſe inhabited; the people hereof preferring Health before Wealth, as in other places; but affording a more pure Air, and a pleaſanter dwelling than the other; the Woods and Foreſts well repleniſhed with moſt kinds of Game. The Betuwe (ſo called of the Batavi, who poſſeſſed theſe parts) intercepted betwixt the ſaid middle Chanel of the Rhene and the Wael, exceedingly fruitfull in Corn, and of ſo excellent a Paſturage for the feeding of Cattel, that in the year 1570 there was a Gelderland Bull ſold in Antwerp which weighed 3200 pounds.

In both diviſions (not reckoning in the County of Zutphen) are contained 300 Villages, and 16 walled Towns, beſides ſome fortified of late ſince the Wars began. The chief whereof are, 1. Nimmegen, (in Latine Noviomagus) an Imperial City, ordained by Charles the Great to be one of the three Seiges of the Empire for theſe outer parts; the other two being Theonville in Luxemburg, and Aix or Aken in the Land of Gulick. And as a Town Imperial it had anciently the privilege of Coyning money: for which and other Freedoms or immunities indulged unto it, the people did no other Service to the Emperours than once a year to ſend a man to Aix or Aquiſgrave with a Glove full of Pepper. But the Town being ſold to the Gelderois by William Earl of Holland and King of the Romans for 21000 Marks of Silver Anno 1248, the power of Coinage fell to thoſe Princes; and yet the Town was brought to do better ſervice than formerly it had done at Aken. The Town is high-mounted on the top of an Hill, the Wael, which is there large and deep, running at the foot of it; rich, great, and populous, having beſides the modern Fortifications an ancient Caſtle, with ſo goodly a Proſpect, that from thence one may behold the beſt part of the Country; built, as ſome ſay, by Julius Cæſar, to command thoſe parts. Under the Juriſdiction of it are, 2. Tiel, and 3. Bomel, two walled Towns, both ſituated on the Wael, both ſtrong, and having many rich Villages under their command; and 4. Ghent, on the Wael alſo, an unwalled Town, but having all the Privileges which the walled Towns have. Not far off, at the firſt meeting of the Wael and the Maes, ſtands the ſtrong Fort of S. Andrews, raiſed by the Archduke Albert to command the paſſage of thoſe Rivers; but in the year 1600 taken in by Maurice Count of Naſſau, (after Prince of Orange) and ever ſince garriſoned by the States to ſecure that paſſage. 5. Ruermond, ſeated on the mouth of the Ruer, where it falleth into the Maes; a beautiful and well-peopled City, ſtrong by Art and Nature, and ſeated in a fruitful Country, heretofore of the Dioceſs of Liege, (as Nimmegen anciently of Colen) but made a See Epiſcopal by King Philip the 2. Anno 1559. This is the ſecond capital City of Gelderland, and hath under the Juriſdicton of it 6. Venlo, a ſtrong Town on the Maes, in which the Duke of Cleve yielded himſelf to Charles the fifth, Anno 1543. 7. Geldres, heretofore of ſuch reputaion, that it gave name to all the Country; and well it doth deſerve to do ſo ſtill, being the only Town in all this Dukedom which neither firſt nor laſt hath been wone by the Holanders, but ſtill preſerved themſelves in their Obedience to their natural Princes. 8. Strael, or Straelen, a well-fortified piece; but which, according to the chances of War, hath often changed its Maſters. 9. Arnhem, the Arenacum of Tacitus, and in thoſe times the Manſion of the tenth Legion, ſituate on the Rhene, not above a mile from the great Chanel, which Druſus to keep his Souldiers from idleneſs cauſed them to dig, to let the waters of the Rhene into thoſe of the Yſſel; called therefore by the Ancients Foſſa Druſiana, by the Moderns Yſſel Dort. The Town is large and well built; the ordinary Reſidence heretofore of the Dukes of Gelderland, who had here their Chancery, and other ſupreme Courts of Juſtice. This is the third Capital City of Gelderland, (anciently of the Dioceſs of Utrecht) and hath under the Juriſdiction of it, beſides divers Villages, 10. Wageningben on the Rhene, the ſame which Tacitus calls Vada. 11. Harderwick on the Zuider-See, burnt to the ground Anno 1503, but ſince re-edified, and now more ſtrong and beautiful than ever formerly. 12. Hatem, upon the Yssell, a good Town of War, but not else observable.

Within the limits of this Dukedom stands the Town and County of Culemberg, erected into a County by King Philip the 2. by reason of the fair Territory which belonged unto it; formerly held in Fee of the Dukes of Gelderland, but otherwise not reckoned as a Member of it. 2. The Town and Earldom of Bueren, situate on the River Linge, having a strong Castle anciently, and a goodly Territory, holden immediatly of the Empire, as a Fief Imperial. It was first made an Earldom in the person of Frederick Lord of Egmond, Brother's Son to Arnold of Egmond, the sixth Duke of Geldres, created Earl of Bueren by Maximilian the first Anno 1492. which Frederick was Grandfather of the valiant Maximilian of Egmond, Earl of Bueren, who died Anno 1549. after whose death it fell at last to Philip of Nassau, eldest Son of William Prince of Orange, and of Anne the Daughter and Heir of the said Maximilian upon the death of the said Anne Anno 1551.

ZUTPHEN, accompted formerly for the fourth capital City of Gelderland, now a distinct Province of it self, is bounded on the East with Westphalen, on the West with that part of Gelderland which is called the Veluwe, on the North with Over-Yssel, on the South with Cleveland. It containeth 8 walled Towns, besides many Villages; that is to say. 1. Dotecum, standing on the old Yssell, rising out of Westphalen. 2. Doesburg, where the old Yssell falleth into the new Yssell, or the Trench called Fossa Drusiana, communicating thereunto its name. 3. Bronchorst, a County of it self, which anciently had its particular Governour. 4. Lochem, upon the River Berckel. 5. Tsheerenberg, a Town and County. 6. Groll, taken by the Prince of Orange for the States Confederate Anno 1627. 7. Bredervord, a Town of War, and subject to the change of Masters, as such places are. 8. Zutphen, or Zuidsen, so called of the Southern situation of it amongst the Fens, on the right Shore of the Yssel, where it receiveth into it the River Berckel, which runs through the Town. A Town indifferently well built, as well for private as publick Edifices; a distinct State in Civil matters, but in Spiritual subject (in former times) to the Bishop of Munster. A thing observable and not to be parallel'd elsewhere, that the four chief Towns and Quarters of one Province only should appertain (as here in Gelderland) to four several Dioceses. Of which there may some reason be assigned for Zutphen, in regard it is a State more ancient than that of Gelderland it self, and not depending anciently on the fortunes of it; united to it by the Marriage of Otho of Nassau, the first Earl of Gelderland, with Sophia, Daughter and Heir of Wickman the last Earl of Zutphen. So as this Earldom ended when that first began. After this it continued subject to the Earls and Dukes of Geldres, till the Revolt of Holland and the other Provinces from the King of Spain; at what time it was besieged for the States by the Earl of Leicester: at the Siege whereof fell that gallant Gentleman Sir Philip Sidney, of whom our British Epigrammatist thus versifieth;

Digna legi scribis, facis & dignissima scribi;
Scripta probant doctum te tua, facta probum.
Thou writ'st things worthy reading, and dist do Things worthy writing too:
Thy Acts thy Valour show,
And by thy Works we do thy Learning know.

And though upon the loss of that gallant man (Nephew and Heir unto that Earl) the Siege was raised at the present; yet was it re-inforced again Anno 1590, and the Town then taken, continuing ever since in the Confederacy of the States United.

GROENING-LAND hath on the East East-Friesland, on the West West-Friesland, on the North the main Ocean, on the South Over-Yssel; so wedged in as it were betwixt both Friesslands, that some hold it to be but a part of the West. It containeth under it the Country called the Ommelands, (corruptly for the Emmelands, as I conjecture, because lying along the River Ems) and therein 145 Burroughs and Villages. The chief thereof are. 1. Dam, near the Ems, bordering on East-Friesland. 2. Keykirk. 3. Old-Haven standing on the Sea. 4. As for the Town of Groening it self, it is rich, great, and very well built, situate amongst divers small Streams which run through it, and having also divers Chanels for conveiance of waters, which adds much to the safety and strength thereof. A Town of great Jurisdiction both within and without, judging absolutely without Appeals in causes both Civil and Criminal; in Spirituals subject heretofore to the Bishop of Munster, till made one of the new Bishopricks by King Philip the second Anno 1559. And though the Prince in Civil Causes had his Officer or Lieutenant there, yet in Criminal the Town was Sovereign, and granted Pardons as Sovereign of the whole Estate, paying to the Prince for all Duties yearly but 6000 Crowns. Both Town and Country anciently belonging to the Bishops of Utrecht, for whose negligence in defending them they submitted their Estate to the Duke of Gelderland. But the Dukes of Saxony laying some claim to it, disturbed this agreement for a time; during which Ezardus the Earl of East-Friesland possessed himself of it; but not able to make good his unjust possession, sold his estate therein to the Duke of Geldres Anno 1514, to whom of right it did belong. Afterwards in the year 1536 they put themselves under the command of Charles the fifth, but with the reservation of all their Priviledges and ancient Liberties; for preservation of the which, in danger to be over-born by the power of the Spaniard, they confederated with the rest of the United States Anno 1594, and so still continue.

The ancient Inhabitants of these Countries were the Menapii and Sicambri, very valiant people, possessing Gelderland; and the majores Frisii, which were planted in Groening and the rest of Friesland. Of these the Sicambri were accompted the most valiant people, uniting with other Nations in the name of French, and by that name possessing with the rest of those Nations the mighty Empire of the West. In the division whereof by the posterity of Charles the Great, these Countries were first part of the Kingdom of Austrasia or East-France, afterwards of the German Empire; governed at the first by Guardians or Protectors created by the people in the Reign of Charles the Bald, the two first being Wickard and Lupold (or Leopold,) two Brethren, who fixing their chief Seat in the Castle of Geldres, occasioned the whole Country to be called Gelderland. But they and their Successors, by what name or title soever called, were in effect but Provincial Officers, accomptable to the Emperours for their Administration; the first free prince hereof being Otho of Nassau, who having to his first Wife the Lady Alcide, Daughter of Wickard, the last Guardian, was by the Emperour Henry the third made first Earl of Gelderland, adding thereto the State of Zutphen by a second Marriage, as is said before. In Rainold the ninth Earl it was made a Dukedom by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1339. Sold by Duke Arnold (justly incensed at his ungracious Son Adolph) to Charles Duke of Burgundy for 92000 Florens of ready money and an annual Pension, Anno 1472. But notwithstanding this Agreement, Adolph (upon the death of Charles) possessed himself of it, and left it unto Charles his Son, who finally surrendred it unto Charles the fifth Anno 1547.

Earls

Earls and Dukes of GELDERLAND.

1131 3. Henry, the Son of Gerard.
1162 4. Gerard II. Son of Henry.
1180 5. Otho II. Brother of Gerard.
1202 6. Gerard III. Son of Otho 2.
1229 7. Otho III. Son of Gerard, who walled the Towns of Ruermond, Arnhem, Bomel, Goch, Wageningen, and Harderwick.
1271 8. Rainold, Son of Otho 3. taken and imprisoned till his death by 1326 9. Rainold II. his own Son, created the first Duke of Geldres by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria at Francfort, Anno 1339, liberal to the Poor, and a great Patron of the Muses.
1343 10. Rainold III. Son of Rainold 2. molested with continual Wars with his Brother Edward, by whom he was taken and imprisoned till his dying day.
1371 11. Edward, the Son of Rainold the 2. by Eleanor the Daughter of Edward the 3d. of England, his second Wife, died the same year with his Brother; the last of the male issue of Otho of Nassau.
1371 12. Mary (by some called Joan) Sister of Edward, by the same venter, and Wife of William Earl of Gulick.
13. William, Son of William Duke of Gulick and Mary of Geldres, admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2.
14. Rainold IV. the Brother of William.
15. Arnold of Egmond, Son of John Lord of Egmond and Mary his Wife, Daughter of Joan, the Sister of Rainold and William, the two last Dukes, succeeded in the Estate of Geldres; the Dukedom of Gulick being seized on by Adolph, Son of William the first Duke of Berg, as the next Heir-male to the two last Dukes. Being afterwards taken, imprisoned, and most barbarously handled by his own Son Adolph, and delivered by Charles the Warlike, Duke of Burgundy, he sold to him his Estates of Geldres and Zutphen, to be enjoyed by him after his decease, Anno 1472.
1473 16. Adolph, the wicked Son of Arnold, dispossessed of his Estate by the said Agreement, which D. Charles enjoyed for his life, after the death of the said Charles was restored to liberty by the Gauntois, An. 1467, and made the General of their Forces against Lewis the 11.
1477 17. Charles, Son of Arnold, after long Wars with the Princes of the Houses of Burgundy and Austria, pretending the Sale and Legacy of Duke Arnold to Charles the Warlike, surrendred his Estates unto Charles the 5. to be enjoyed by him after his decease, if he left no Issue. According to which Contract the Emperour Charles succeeded him in Geldres and Zutphen, Anno 1538, being the year of his decease; after which time they were accompted in the number of the Belgick Provinces.

The Arms hereof were Quarterly, 1 Azure, a Lion Or, crowned Gules, for the Dukedom of Gelderland; 2 Azure, a Lion Gules, for the Earldom of Zutphen.

Thus have we seen a Country which at the first erecting of these Estates was nothing in a manner but Bogs and Marishes, and at the best but a continual Wilderness of Woods and Forests, by the great Providence of the Princes, and extreme industry of the people, made the most populous, best planted, and the wealthiest Estate (for the bigness of it) in the whole habitable world. And we have seen those several Estates and Principalities, by Marriages and other Contracts, reduced into the hands of the House of Burgundy: under the Princes of which great and illustrious Family, inferiour to no Kings of Christendom for Power and Riches,) especially under Duke Philip the Good) the Subjects hereof did so abound in wealth and plenty, that Philip de Comines, who then lived, affirmeth, that this Country seemed like the Land of Promise. Some thought there was a purpose in this Duke Philip of erecting these States into a Kingdom, from which he was diverted by the difference and variety of Laws and Privileges which those people severally lived under, not to be brought without great difficulty and distaste to one form of Government: yet might he have done it, if he would, as himself openly affirmed to the Embassadours of King Lewis 11. But Charles his Son, being more bent on the Design, negotiated to that end with the Emperour Frederick, whom he met at Triers, An. 1473: and doubtless had obtained his purpose, upon the Marriage of his Daughter with Maximilian Frederick's Son, (which was then propounded) had not his rash Engagement against the Swissers, and his untimely death therein, broke the course of these Projects: which Projects had they took effect, as in all probability they had but for that Engagement, he had extended his Dominions all along the Rhene, and on both sides of it, from the Alpes unto the German Ocean, and been the most considerable Prince at that time in Christendom; all Elsass in High Germany being sold or morgaged to him by the Duke of Austria, the Dukedom of Lorrain at his mercy; besides the hopes he had of the Earldom of Provence, intended to him by King Reny, which would have opened him a way to the Mediterranean. He being dead, the Government continued as before it was; each Province having its distinct Laws, and living according to their ancient Privileges, till the attempt of Philip the second, King of Spain, most resolutely (but unfortunately) bent to bring them under the command of that Crown, to cancel all their Privileges, and new mould the Estate according to his own will & pleasure; occasioning thereby the Revolt of a great part of the Country, and the setting up of a new Estate opposite unto him, and destructive of his Interest in it. but before we come unto this Change, we will first look upon the Prince's Power, Revenue, and other things considerable touching this Estate, whilest it stood intire under the Princes of the House of Burgundy and

Lords of BELGIUM.

1404 2. John the Proud, Duke of Burgundy, &c.
1419 3. Philip the Good added to his Estates the Dukedom of Brabant and Limburg, the Marquisate and Mechlin, by the death of his Cousin Philip; the Earldoms of Hainault, Holland, Zeland, and the Lordship of West-Friesland, by the Resignation and death of the Countess Jaqueline, whose next Heir he was; the Dukedom of Luxemburg, and the Earldom of Namur, which he bought for money.
1467 4. Charles the Warlike, who bought the Estates of Geldres and Zutphen, and held them peaceably all his life.

1476 5. Mary, the Daughter and Heir of Charles, married to Maximilian, Son of the Emperour Frederick, from whom King Lewis the eleventh of France took the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the greatest parts of the Counties of Burgundy and Artois, unfortunately killed with a fall from her horse, and an unseasonable Modesty in not suffering the Chirurgion to dress her wound, the hurt which she had taken being on her thigh.

1482 6. Philip III. Son of Mary and Maximilian, to whom Charles the 8th. of France restored all the places in Artois and the County of Burgundy taken by his Father, married Joan, Daughter of Ferdinand and Isabel King and Queen of Spain.

1506 7. Charles II. Archduke of Austria, King of Spain, and Emperour of that name the fifth, added to his Estate in these Countries the Dukedom of Gelderland, the Earldom of Zutphen, the Lordships of Utrecht, Over-Yssel and Groening.

1558 8. Philip IV. of Belgium, and the II. of Spain, invading these Countries against their Priviledges, was by a great part of them rejected from being their Prince, Anno 1581, which made him, after a long and bloody War to surrender all his Interest in them to 1599 9. Isabella Clara Eugenia, his Daughter, and Albert, Archduke of Austria, whom he married to her; during whose Government a Truce for 12 years was made, and in the Preface to that Truce, the Confederate Estates declared to be treated with as a Free State, to whom the Kings of Spain could pretend no Title.

10. Philip V. of Belgium, and the IV. of Spain, on the decease of the Archdutchess Isabella his Aunt, succeeded in the possession of some, and the Title unto all the Belgick Provinces.

The ordinary Revenue of these Countries to the Dukes of Burgundy, and after to the Kings of Spain, before the Breach, were estimated at three millions of Crowns yearly; which was more than any King in Christendom at those times received, the French only excepted; the very measuring of Corn in the City of Antwerp being farmed yearly for 100000 Crowns in ready money: but the extraordinary was far greater; the Estates of these Countries in the year 1550 granting to Charles the fifth an Aid which they call the Noventale, amounting to 150000 Crowns a month; and yet the Provinces of Luxemburg, Limbourg, Geldres and Groening, were not rated to it. And it is said that Philip the 2d, at his first coming to the Estate, was presented with a Grant of 40 millions of Florens, to be paid in few years. So that these Countries were the true Correlative of both his Indies: the loss of which, before the making of the Truce, Anno 1609, cost him above 100 millions of Crowns, and the loss of 400000 men.

The Forces of these Princes by Land may best be seen in the expedition of Charles (then Earl of Charolois) against Lewis the eleventh, whom Duke Philip the Good his Father furnished to that enterprise with 9000 Archers and 14000 men at Arms, every one of which had five or six great horses attending on him; and at his setting forward he was told by his Father, (never accompted for a Braggart) that if he fell into any danger, he should not be abandoned for the want of 100000 fighting men. The said Duke having thus sent away his Son, and being provoked by the indignities of those of Liege and Dinant, who revolted from him, suddenly raised an Army of 28000 Horse, and a proportionable number of Foot, for the chastisement of that proud and rebellious people. And Charles himself, succeeding on the death of his Father, in his unprosperous attempt upon the Switzers had no less than 80000 men at the Battel of Morat. As for their power at Sea, I find not that they kept any standing Navy, nor needed they so to do, as the case stood with them; considering that when they had occasion of any such service, they used to take up all the Ships which they found in their Harbours, (of which there never wanted good store) employing as many as they pleased, and dismissing the rest.

The principal order of Knighthood ordained by these Princes was that of the Golden Fleece, first instituted by Duke Philip the Good (in imitation of the order of Saint George in England) Anno 1430. The name and fancie was borrowed, as some conceive, from Gideons's Fleece; from Jasons's Fleece, as others think; but more probably from the Golden Fleeces of England, which brought him in so much gold and treasure in the way of Custom. Their Habit is a Collar of Gold interlaced with Irons, seeming to strike fire out of a Flint, (Ex ferro flammam being the Word:) at the end whereof hung the Toison d'Or, or Fleece of Gold. Their number at the first was but 25, (which is the number of Knights of the English Garter) increased afterwards by the same Duke Philip unto thirty one. Charles the first raised them to fifty one; and now the King of Spain hath assumed a liberty of making as many as he pleaseth: this being the only Military or Civil Order of which those Kings have the bestowing; the Orders of Alcantara, Calatrava, and the rest of Spanish institution, being rather Religious & Monastical, at the best but mixt. St. Andrew's day is the day of Installation.

In this great Pomp and Glory did these Princes live as long as they continued in good terms with the subject Provinces, being masters of more goodly Jewels, magnificent Furniture for their Houses and costly Moveables, than any three of the greatest Princes in all Europe. And on the other side, the Subjects, whilest they lived in Duty under so great Princes, attained unto the height of all worldly happiness; in their Apparel excessively gorgeous, in their Feasts and Banquets over-sumptuous, in their Manners dissolute; Vices which usually accompany that kind of Felicity. An happiness too great to continue long. By the Ambition and Violence of Charles the Warlike they were first plunged into a War against Lewis the eleventh, of which they did not only feel the present miseries, but lost all the Towns and Holds which they had in Picardy, with the whole Dutchy of Burgundy. And by a like, but better-grounded, Ambition of Charles the fifth, they were exercised in continual Wars against the French, who miserably harrassed and ransacked the Countries of Luxemburg, Hainault and Artois, bordering next unto them. Charles at his death commended them to the special care of Philip his Son, advising him to use them kindly, as those that were the chief Supporters of his State and Glory; adding, that if he should deal otherwise with them, it would prove the ruin of his Fortunes. And on the other side, the people, to obtain his favour, presented him at his first entrance on the Government with a Grant of 40 Millions of Florens, as before was said. But he, transported with Ambition and a Catholick zeal, not only forgot their Love, but his Father's counsel; & had no sooner concluded a Peace with France, effected by the Treaty of Cambray, Anno 1559, but presently he cast his thoughts on the subjection of this People ple to his will and pleasure. For they were so fortified with Priviledges, which their former Princes had granted, and the latter had been sworn to observe, that he wanted much of that absolute & uncontrollable command which he strongly aimed at. Some of which Priviledges were, 1. That the Prince could place no Stranger amongst them with Jurisdiction over their Estates and Persons, in Offices of War or Justice. 2. The Prince could give nothing to the Clergy; nor 3. Levy any Subsidies without the States of the Country. 4. But the main Prerogative was that of the Brabanters, (viz.) That if the Prince by violence or wrong did infringe any of the said Charters and Franchises, the people, after declaration thereof made, might go to election of a new Prince. This not a little grieved the Spaniards, that such base and unworthy people (for so they esteemed them) should in such liberty possess so brave and rich a Country; their King bearing no title of Majesty or absolute command over them. Besides, the Reformation of Religion, which then began to grow to some strength, moved the King to reduce them back to the Church of Rome by the power and terror of the Inquisition, and by the erecting of some new Episcopal Sees amongst them, (for before there were but three in all) to settle some more constant course of Ecclesiastical Discipline. Against both which when the people violently opposed, he then resolved of bringing them by Spanish Rhetorick (that is, by the Sword and the Cannon) to their old Obedience. To these ends he sends the Duke of Alva, an old and expert Captain, (as having 60 years been a Souldier) with a puissant Army, to be his Vice-Roy among them. He also gave him a Commission of that large extent, that he might place and displace whom he would, and execute all such as he could find opposite to his Designs. At that time the two chief men among them where the Prince of Orange and Count Egmont; the first more potent with the People, the latter with the Souldiers. Had these two joyned together, they might easily have prevented D. Alva's entrance; but Egmont was so soothed up with Letters from Spain, that he believed not the intelligence which the Prince had concerning the Duke's Commission. The Earl exhorted the Prince to submit himself to the pleasure of the King, and so to prevent the ruine of his House. The Prince desired the Earl to maintain the Liberty of the Country; as for himself, He had rather be a Prince without a House, than a Count without an Head. Being thus resolved, the Prince retires to his County of Nassau in High Germany; the Earl stayeth to congratulate the entrance of the new Governour: who had no sooner setled himself, but he entrapped the Counts of Horn and Egmont, and beheaded them An. 1567. Being thus rid of these two, with divers others of good quality, who living would have much hindred his proceedings, he quartered his Spaniards in the Towns and Provinces, spoiled the people not of their Priviledges only, but their Liberty. Amongst the Reformed he brought in the bloudy Inquisition; and indeed so tyrannically did he behave himself, that the people were forced to a Defensive War, as well for their Lives as Substance. This was a War of State, not Religion, the most part of the Hollanders being Papists at the time of their taking Arms. During these Troubles the Prince of Orange was not idle, but but he in one place, and Count Lodowick his Brother in another, kept Duke Alva imployed; though divers times not with such fortunate success as they did expect. In the year 1572. Flushing was surprised by Voorst and Berland, as we have before said: so also was the Briel in Voorn, an Island of Holland, by the Count de la March. And not long after all Holland, except Amsterdam, followed the fortune and side of the Prince; together with all the Towns of Zeland, Middleburg excepted. Anno 1573, Duke Alva being recalled, Don Lewis de Requisens was appointed Governour; during whose rule many of the Belgians abandoned their Country, some flying into Germany, others into France, most into England. After his death, and before the arrival of Don John, the Prince and his Party recovered strength and courage again, till the coming of the Prince of Parma, who brought them into worse case than ever. Yet Anno 1581. they declare by their Writings directed to all people, that Philip of Spain was fallen from the Government; and take a new Oath of the People, which bound them never to return to the Spanish Obedience. This done, they elect Francis Duke of Anjou, Heir apparent to the French King, and then in no small hopes of marrying Queen Elizabeth of England, to be their Lord. But he intending rather to settle a tyranny in himself, than to drive it from the Spaniard, attempted Antwerp, put his men into the Town, but was by the valour of the Burgers shamefully repulsed. Shame of this ignoble enterprise, especially grief for its ill success, took him out of the world. About which time the Estates of these Countries were thus by this Hieroglyphick expressed. A Cow represented the Body of Belgium: there stood the King of Spain spurring her, the Queen of England feeding her, the Prince of Orange milking her, and Duke Francis plucking her back by the tail, but she foul'd his fingers. During his unfortunate Government, Parma prevailed in all places, especially after the death of William Prince of Orange, treacherously slain with a Pistol, Anno 1584. Now were the poor Hollanders truly miserable, desperate of Pardon from their Prince, and having none to lead them, none to protect them, but such as were likely to regard their own profit more than theirs. England was the only Sanctuary they had now left; to which they sue, offering the Queen thereof the Soveraignty of their Provinces, who had, if not a Right, yet a plausible Title to them, as being lineally descended from Edward the third and Philip his Wife, who was Sister and (as some say) Heir to William Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c. If Margaret, from whom the Right of Spain is derived, were Daughter to Earl William, then was our Queen to succeed after Philip, who was rejected: if that Margaret were (as many write) his younger Sister, then was our Queen the undoubted Heir, her Predecessor Philippa being Earl William's eldest Sister. But that Heroick Queen not disputing the right of the Title, nor intending to her self any thing save the honour of relieving her distressed Neighbours, and providing for her own Estate by this diversion, took them into her Protection. Under which the Belgian Affairs succeeded so prosperously (I will not now stand upon the particulars) that before they would hearken to any Treaty of Peace, they forced the King of Spain to this Conclusion, that he treated with them as with a Free Estate, abstracted from all Right and title which he might pretend unto the places which they were possessed of. This Peace was concluded Anno 1609. since which time they have kept Garrisons well disciplined, and as well paid: so that these Countries have in these late days been the Campus Martius, or School of defence, for all Christendom, to which the youth of all Nations repair to see the manner of Fortifications, and learn the Art of War, and the use of their Weapons. Thus did they for 40 years hold the staff against a most puissant Monarch, and in the end capitulated with great advantage; that it is observed, that whereas all other Nations grow poor by War, these only grow rich. Whereupon it is remarkable to consider into what follies and extremities Princes run by using their people to the War. The Kings of France place most of their hopes in their Cavalry, because in policy they would not that the vulgar should be exercised in

Arms;

Arms. Lycurgus gave a Law to the Lacedæmonians, that they ſhould never fight often with one enemy: the breaking whereof made the Thebans, a ſmall Commonwealth, to be their equals in power: whereupon it was tartly ſaid by Antalcidas to Ageſilaus King of Sparta, that by his frequent warring on them and fighting with them he had made the Thebans good Souldiers againſt their wills. The Turks won the vaſt Empire they now poſſeſs by making many and ſpeedy Wars. But now that Policy being worn out of faſhion, we ſee that (to omit Perſia) the little and diſtracted Kingdom of Hungary hath for 200 years reſiſted their Forces. So was it between the Dukes of Auſtria and the Switzers, & ſo it is betwixt the Spaniard and Low-country-men; who formerly being accounted a dull and heavy people, altogether unfit for the Wars, by their continual combating with the Spaniard, are become ingenious, full of action, and great managers of cauſes appertaining to Fights, either by Sea or Land. We may hereby alſo perceive what advantage a ſmall State gaineth by fortifying places and paſſages: there being nothing which ſooner breaketh a great Army, and undoeth a great Prince than to beleaguer a well-fortified Town; for that herein he conſumeth his time, and commonly loſeth his men, credit and money; as the Romans before Numantia, the great Turk in Malta, and Charles of Burgundy before Nancie. For where War is drawn out of the Field unto the Walls, the Mattock and Spade being more neceſſary than the Sword and Spear, there the valour of the Aſſailant is little available, becauſe it wanteth its proper object.

Thus as before we brought theſe ſeveral Eſtates and Provinces into one hand, ſo now we have broke them into two; the one part continuing in Obedience to the Crown of Spain, the other governing themſelves as a State apart. Under the King remain the Dukedoms of Luxemburg, Limbourg and Brabant, (ſome few Towns excepted) the Marquiſate of the Empire, the Earldoms of Hainault, Namur, Artois and Flanders, (except only Scluys) and the Lordſhip or Seigniory of Mechlin, with many places of importance in the Dutchie of Geldres, to countervail the Towns are held from them in Flanders and Brabant. This is by far the greater part of the Country, and more fruitful in regard of the Commodities there naturally growing, but as much inferiour to the other in power and riches, by reaſon of their ſtrength in Shipping, by which they have the command at Sea, and thereby draw the whole Trade of Chriſtendom, driven before at Antwerp, to Amſterdam, and other Towns of their Confederacy.

For the general Government of theſe Provinces, there is a Regent ſent from the Court of Spain, whoſe Authority is generally as great as that of the King; ſave that all matters of moment paſs under the King's name, and that all Officers of any great truſt and concernment are appointed by him, and that all Laws, Decrees, Sentences and Negotiations are diſpatched in his name alſo. For the aſſiſtance of the Regent there is a Privy Council, a Council of State, and a Council of Finances, by whom all things are ordered which concern the Publick, the Regent's Authority co-operating and concurring with them, without which, though they may conſult, they can execute nothing. And for the Governance and well-ordering of the ſeveral Provinces, there is in every one of them a Lieutenant or Provincial Government, ſubordinate to the Regent, and accomptable to him; and in each Province a particular Council held in the King's name, conſiſting of more or leſs Counſellours, (as the bigneſs of the Province is) for the moſt part Doctors or Licentiates of the Civil Laws, with a Preſident as the Head thereof; which in ſome places they call the Parliament, after the manner of the French, and in ſome the Chancery. To theſe Courts all the Subjects do reſort for Juſtice, in Cauſes both Criminal and Civil: to theſe are brought Appeals from inferiour Judicatures, ſuch as the Courts of great Towns and particular Franchiſes: and from theſe lieth an Appeal to the great Council at Mechlin ſupreme and ſuperintendent unto all the reſt.

When any thing is to be done which concerns the profit of the Prince, or otherwiſe is of publick moment, the Regent ſendeth out Letters in the King's name, to command the Eſtates, that is to ſay, the Clergy, the Nobility, and the principal Towns of every Province, (except thoſe of Luxemburg, Geldres, Weſt-Frieſland and Over-Yſſel, who by ſpecial Priviledge cannot be called out of their own Countries) to come before him. The place of their Aſſembly is for the moſt part at Bruxels, the Court and Reſidence of the Regent; becauſe the Brabanters are alſo priviledged not to be ſummoned out of the Precincts of their own Province. Where being come, the States aſſemble not altogether, but thoſe of one Province at a time, ſo one after another: to whom the Preſident, or ſome one of the Council of State propoſeth in the Prince's name that which he demandeth. To which if any Town oppoſe, then all which the reſt have done is of no effect, nothing being granted by the Deputies or States of any Province, but with this condition, that all the reſt of the Eſtates do agree unto it. Without this punctual conſent of all parties intereſſed, the Prince can impoſe nothing, by their Laws, upon the Subject, nor alter any thing at all in the publick Government.

And as the people are thus priviledged in regard of the Prince, ſo are the Princes and Prelates priviledged in regard of the Pope; it being agreed upon between them.

1. That the Prince is to give Clergy-Benefices, and the Pope to confirm them.
2. That neither Prelate nor Lay-perſon may be cited to Rome, but the Pope to ſend his Delegates or Commiſſioners into the Country.
3. The Pope not to give a Benefice, nor grant a Pardon, nor ſend a Bull into the Country, without the leave of the Prince.
4. That no Clergy-man can buy Lands or other immoveables, without the Prince's conſent. And
5. That the Prince hath power to viſit the Clergy, to ſee if they be well governed or not; and if they be not, to reform the Abuſes.

Great Priviledges, if conſidered rightly; greater than which few Proteſtant Princes do pretend to in their own Dominions.

As for the Revenue raiſed by the Spaniard out of his part of this Eſtate, it is not eaſie to be gueſſed at; and of that which is, there comes but little to his Coffers. The expences of his Court there is as great as ever under any of the former Regents; and his charge of entertaining Souldiers for his Towns and Garriſons greater than before. Nor doth it now ſtand with reaſon of State to lay any arbitrary Taxes upon the people, leſt he exaſperate them to a ſecond Rebellion, or ſtartle them to ſome new Confederacies againſt his Quiet.

Under the Government of the Confederate Eſtates are the Dukedom of Gelderland, excepting ſome few Towns in the hands of the Spaniard, the entire Earldoms of Holland, Zeland and Zutphen, the Seigniouries of Weſt-Frieſland, Utrecht, Over-Yſſel, Groening, the Town of Scluys, with the Iſle of Caſſandt in Flanders, and many pieces of importance in the Dutchy of Brabant. This is the leſſer part by far, and far inferiour to the other in regard of the Soil, but the more populous of the two, and by the Induſty dustry and great Trading of the people the more rich and powerful. They are governed after their own old Laws, by the particular Estates of every Province, not yet united into one entire Body of a Commonwealth; saving that, for the better preservation of their Confederacy, the Commissioners of the several Provinces do consult together, whom they have honoured with the name of the States General.

The Estates of the particular Provinces, elected out of the principal Towns and places of most importance, do order the Affairs thereof according to their ancient Priviledges, Rights, and Customs, as well by themselves as by their Collegues and Officers whom they do appoint; and that as well for matters of State, as in point of Justice. For Administration of the which, the Governours, Presidents, and Counsellors of the Provincial Courts, have the cognizance of all Cases, both civil and criminal, and in all Causes of Appeal from inferiour Courts; in each of which they proceed without Appeal, making their Acts and Commissions in the name of the said Governours, Presidents, and Council, but pronouncing Sentence and executing Judgment in right of the Soveraignty of the said Province. And these Provincial States are chosen generally out of the Plebeians or common People, and the Burgers (at the best) of the greater Townships: the Nobility and Gentry being so worn out, that in all Holland and Zeland there are not left above three Families of Gentlemen, and those compelled to live after the Plebeian fashion for fear of Envy, and to avoid the Insolency of the saucy Clowns, who, out of rudeness and the desire of Equality, hate nothing more among them than the name of a Gentleman.

Out of these Provincial States, which hold not for any certain and determinate time, but only during the pleasure of the Community for which they serve, are chosen one or more for each several Province, according to the condition and capacity of those which are chosen, to reside at the Hague, there to consult of the Affairs which concern the publick: but so, that be they more or less out of every Province, they make amongst them but one Suffrage, when any thing is put unto the Vote. And these they call the States General, first, because a collected Body out of all the Provinces; and, secondly, because they are not properly to deal in any matters of particular concernment, which are determinable absolutely by the States Provincial, but only in such things as concern the general good of the whole Estate, as treating with Ambassadours, making War and Peace, &c. For their assistance in the which, there is a Council of State, made up of the Governours and some eminent men of every Province, (in which the Ambassadour of England, as long as we held Flushing and the other Cautionary Towns, had his voice or suffrage) by whose advice they dispose of all things which concern the publick: but so, that if any difficulty do appear in the businesses, they conclude nothing, till they have the approbation and consent of the particular Cities and Provinces for which they are chosen, to whom they are accomptable for their Administration, and by whom revocable whensoever they please.

The Revenue of this Estate doubtless is exceeding great, the Army which they keep in continual entertainment consisting of no less than 30000 men; which they can draw into the field, leaving the Forts and Towns very well provided, yet so well paid, that we never read of any Mutiny amongst them for want thereof. The whole Charge, with the entertainment of Captains and superiour Officers, is said to amount to 500000 l. per annum, raised on the people by Excise laid upon all Commodities, and many Taxes of like nature, so insupportable in themselves, and amongst men which would be thought to live in a Free State, that should the Spaniard or any Prince in Christendom lay but half so much on their Subjects, it would occasion a Revolt. So that whereas one of the first causes of their falling off from the King of Spain was to free themselves from Taxes and Impositions, illegally (as they said) enforced upon them; they have drawn upon themselves more arbitrary and illegal Payments than any Nation in the World. So little have they got by the change of Government. Touching their power at Sea, we have spoke already. All I shall now add to it is by way of instance, which is, That in the year 1587 the King of Denmark, on pretence of some displeasure, arrested 608 Ships of theirs of all sorts at one time in the Sound; and that the next year after they set out, upon very short warning, an hundred good men of War, to join with England against the invincible Armada, which then threatned both. To conclude, there is nothing wanting to these Countries wherewith the God of all blessings doth enrich a Nation, but a gracious Prince, unity of Religion, and a quiet Government: which if it pleased the Almighty to confer upon them, they would surpass all neighbouring States in Treasure, Potency, Content, and all worldly Happiness.

There are in these Countries.

And thus much for BELGIUM.

OF GERMANY.

GERMANY is bounded on the East with Prussia, Poland, and Hungary; on the West with France, Switzerland and Belgium, on the North with the Baltick Seas, the Ocean, and some part of Denmark: on the South with the Alpes, which part it from Italy. By which accompt the modern Germany much differeth from that described by Tacitus and others of the Roman Writers: That comprehending the three Kingdoms of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, with so much of the Kingdom of Poland as lieth on this side of the River Vistula; but bounded on the East with the Rhene, and on the South with the Danow: the modern Germany containing on the farther banks of those Rivers five whole Roman Provinces, that is to say, Noricum Ripense, and Mediterraneum, Rhætia secunda, Belgica and Germania prima, with some parts of Rhætia prima and Germania secunda; but terminated with the Danes and the Baltick Sea.

It was first called thus by the Romans, (as some conceive) who seeing the people both in Customs, Speech and course of life so like those of Gallia, called them the Germans to the Gauls; the word Germanus in the Latine signifying a Brother of the whole blood, (as our Lawyers phrase it) that is to say, a Brother both by Father and Mother; those which have the same Mother, but divers Fathers, being called Fratres uterini. And of this mind is Strabo, who speaking of the great resemblance which was betwixt these Nations in Manners, Speech, Customs, and way of life, concludes it thus, that the Romans did with very good reason call them Germans, cùm fratres eos Gallorum hoc nomine vellent ostendere; intending to signifie by that name, that they were the Brethren of the Gauls. But this is to be understood of those people only which dwelt next to Gaul, and not of all the Nations which inhabited in this vast Continent according to the ancient extent thereof; it being very well observed by Tacitus, that Germany was at first Nationis, non Gentis, nomen, the name of some of the Nations only, not of all the Country; the name in process of time spreading over all that large Tract of ground and those scattered Nations which were either conquered by them or incorporate with them. Others will have the name to be meerly Dutch, deriving it from Ger, which signifieth All, and the word Man, signifying in that Language as in ours; whence also they derive the name of Almans; by which they would imply that the Almans or Germans are a very warlike Nation, a people that have in them nihil nisi virile, nothing not worthy of a man. Bochartus, somewhat near to this, telling us that Ger in the ancient Gallick did signifie as much as Guerre in the modern French, would have them at their first coming over the Rhene to be called Germans by the Gauls, that is to say, men of War, (or Gens de Armes in the present French) by reason of the great and many Victories obtained by them.

The like diversity I find for the name of Almans. For though some gave them the name of Almans from the same originals from whence they fetch the name of Germans, as was said before, yet others as probably conjecture, that they had that name because they consisted of so many several Nations coming out of the North and North-east hither, that they seemed to be a Hotch-potch of all sorts of men, kneaded into one name and Nation; which is the conceit of Asinius Quadratus. But for my part, I do conceive (supposing the name of Almans to be Dutch originally) that the whole Country was not called Almain till such time as the Princes of the Dukedom of Almain (since called Suevia, or Schwaben) did possess the Empire; which continuing in that potent Family near 100 years, might very well occasion them to be called the Emperours of Almain, or the Almain Race, and so impart that name to the Empire also. And for the Almans naturally and properly so called, (of whom we shall speak more when we come to Suevia) I see no Etymology more agreeable to true Antiquity, than to derive the name from Mannus, the Son of Tuisco, one of their Gods, and a principal Founder of this Nation, (Tuisconem Deum & filium Manuum, originem gentis conditoréque,) as is said by Tacitus: the people being called Alemanni (with a double n) in all ancient Writers, as men that did derive themselves from this Mannus, the Son of Tuisco. In like sort as (I think) the Marcomanni, inhabiting the Countries of Moravia, were so called, as being the Manni of the Marches or out-borders of Germany, and not the Markmans, as if they were men of mark, the only men of fame and honour of all those Nations; which might as well be pressed from the Dutch original as that of All man, in the meaning by them pretended. And unto this opinion I am swayed the rather, because I find the Dutch Nation generally so much inclined to derive their Original from Tuisco, (from whom the Teutones, inhabiting about Brandenburg, may well fetch their Pedegree;) the name of Dutchland or Dutchmen coming near in sound to Tuisc-land and Tuisc-men. In which I shall subscribe to Verstegan's opinion, though for the most part I look upon him but as the second part of Goropius Becanus.

But being the Etymologies of the names of most ancient Nations are very uncertain, and for the most part founded on Conjectures only; let us leave the Name a while, and survey the Country: the length whereof (according to the truest and exactest measurement) from East to West, that is to say, from the Vistula or Weissell to the Rhene, is estimated at 840 Italian miles; the breadth from North to South, that is to say, from the Ocean to the Town of Brixen in Tyrol, 740 of the same miles. So that the Figure of it being near a Square, it may take up 3160 miles in compass, or thereabouts. Situate in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and tenth Climates, the longest day in the most Southern parts being 15 hours and an half, and in the most Northern 17 hours and a quarter.

In this compass and extent of ground are supposed to live 10 millions of people. The men of the poorer sort are laborious, painful, and of a sincere and honest carriage; the Nobles for the most part either Scholars or Souldiers, and true lovers of Honour; though Tacitus hath otherwise resolved it, affirming that the Gauls fight for Liberty, the Belgians for Honour, and the Germans for Gain. Which yet is true enough of the common Souldiers, who, if they fail fail of Pay, fail in Courage presently. Of both sorts they are generally tall and big, of great Bones, much Flesh, and large Sinews, but commonly of such a phlegmatick constitution, that they have not spirit enough to manage such a mass of flesh as they bear about them. Which want of natural heat to concoct that humor makes them for the most part to be men of a bright or light brown Hair, & fair Complexions. They are little addicted to Venus, and very much to Bacchus; whence the Proverb, Vivere Germanorum est bibere, and the old Verses, Germani possunt cunctos tolerare labores.

O utinam possent tam bene ferre sitim.

The Dutch themselves to labour well inure.
O would they Thirst could half so well endure.

This love unto their liquor, together with their natural Temper, maketh them fat and corpulent. Whereupon Pope Julius the second, styling the Spaniards Birds of the Air, because of their Ambition, the Venetians and Genoeses Fishes of the Sea, because so much accustomed to Navigation, called the Germans by the name of the Beasts of the Field. And when Augustus was resolved to take unto himself the supreme Government of Rome, he was advised by Agrippa to chuse a Guard of Germans to attend upon him. The reason was, (as Dion giveth it) Because in those great Bodies there was little Malice hidden, and less Subtilty; and that they were a people that took more pleasure to be commanded than to command. In matters of War this people have been formerly in a measure famous; yet not so much by the valour or conduct of their Captains, (for they have had but few such) as by their own hardiness. They withstood the Romans 210 years, afflicting and troubling them more in that space than either the Charthaginians, Spaniards, Gauls, or Parthians; and even at the last (saith Tacitus) Triumphati magis sunt quam victi. In our times the Ratters and Lansknights of Germany (for so they call their Horse and Foot) have been much employed: but more by reason of their numbers, easily rais'd out of so large a Country, than any opinion of their Valour; being slow of motion, dull of apprehension, fearful of putting any thing to the chance of War. By reason of which fearfulness, as they are very cruel upon all advantages, not sparing either age or sex when they get the Victory; so are they apt to run upon any Alarm, not to be rallied, if once routed, upon any perswasions. Insomuch as Charles Count of Mansfield, General of an Army of 50000 fighting men, but most of this Nation, was forced to suffer a small Army of 10000 Turks to pass by his Trenches, being then strongly encamped before Strigonium (now Gran) a Town of Hungary, and to victual the Town before his face; not daring to set upon them or disturb their purpose, for fear lest, being lustily charged, his Germans would give back and indanger all. And yet besides these weaknesses, they have some great faults. One of which is a custom, if their wages be not duly paid, (though it be in the very midst of a Battel) to cry Guelt, Guelt, throw down their weapons, and suffer themselves to be cut in pieces by the Enemy. And so they served Frederick the Electour Palatine at the Battel of Prague. The other is an extreme humour of Spoil and Plunder: on which they are so bent wheresoever they come, that such as entertain them have just cause to say, that they receive more damage by them than they do by their enemies. Two undeceivable notes of mercenary Valour.

The Women are of a good Complexion, but by reason of their intemperance in eating and drinking, much given to Corpulency; women of a good carriage, (as the saying is) good Beaters, and as fruitful Breeders; servilely obsequious to their Husbands, whom many of good rank serve at the Table with Trenchers and other necessaries, and take away when he hath done, eating the residue apart with and amongst their Maids, scarce sitting down with him once a week, and then too at the lower end, or at some such distance. And though the Women by their Laws have a property in the Goods which they bring with them at their Marriage, or are given them after, (so as the Husband hath but the use of them only) and may dispose of them by their last Will at the time of their death; yet is their condition thereby little better, the Husband being no less churlish and imperious than he would be otherwise. Which made Caracalla to say often, that only that Nation knew how to rule their Wives, which added the Feminine Article to the Sun, and the Masculine to the Moon, as the Germans do. Most of them, as well Wives as Virgins, (except persons of Honour) use to go bare-footed within doors, and seldom put on Shoes or Stockings, but when they are to go abroad on their occasions. A thing that seems the more strange, in regard of the extreme coldness of the Country, which is so fierce, that generally they lodge between two Feather-beds both in Summer and Winter; and in the most houses have their Stoves, of which the doors and windows are kept very close, as well to retain the heat, as to keep out the cold. Which though they may be useful and inoffensive in Gentlemens houses; yet in the Common Inns, where all sorts of people are necessitated to throng together, the ill Smells, never purged by admitting any fresh air, are ready to stifle and choak up the spirits of raw Travellers, not accustomed to them.

The Diet of Germany, France, and Italy, is by a Traveller thus censured: The Germans have much meat, but sluttishly dress'd; the French little, but neatly cooked; the Italians neither the one nor the other. And to say truth, the Germans have meat enough; the people being generally of good stomachs, and either by nature or ill custom excessive both in eating and drinking, seldom rising from the Table till they have consumed all which was set before them. Insomuch as in some places it is provided by Law, that in their Feasts they shall not sit above five hours at the Table. During which time, if by Intemperance either in eating or drinking a man disgorge his foul stomach in his fellow's Lap, or piss under the Table, it is no disgrace to him, nor at any time taken notice of to his reproach. Which humour of gormandizing and excessive drinking is not only cherished among the Vulgar, but even amongst their greatest Princes; who, beside what they do in this kind themselves, have their drinking Champions, as well to answer all Challenges, as to challenge all comers, contending with each other, as a point of State, whose Cellar shall afford the greatest and most capable Vessels.

The Title of the Father descends to all the Children; every Son of a Duke being a Duke, and every Daughter a Dutchess: a thing which the Italians hold so ridiculous that they put it in the fore-front of this facetious Satyre, The Dukes and Earls of Germany, the Dons of Spain, the Monsieurs of France, the Bishops of Italy, the Nobility of Hungary, the Lairds of Scotland, the Knights of Naples, and the Younger Brethren of England, make a poor Company. For by this common assuming of the Father's Honour, and the parting his Lands among all the Brethren, the Nobility is beyond reason multiplied, and no less impoverished; there being not long since seventeen Princes of Anhalt, and twenty seven Counts of Mansfield; to most of which their Arms have been the best part of their Riches, & nihil nisi arma & manus, & in his omnia, as Tacitus once said of the ancient Britains. And yet there is not one of this poor Nobility that will vouchsafe to marry with the Daughter of the wealthiest Merchant, or suffer any of their Sisters to be married to any under the degree of a Nobleman; nor any juſter cauſe of a Diſheriting their Children than ignoble Marriages: they never permitting the Iſſue of ſuch a Bed to ſucceed in any of their Fees, Eſtates, or Titles: by means whereof, though they debar themſelves of ſuch acceſſions of wealth as Matches of that kind might bring them, yet, to the great honour of their generoſity in this particular, they preſerve the pure Stream of their Blood from running into muddy Chanels, and keep the Spirits of brave men, though they want the Fortunes.

The Languages here ſpoken are, the French in Lorrain, and in ſome Towns of the Biſhop of Triers; the Italian in the higheſt part of Tyrol, which lie next to the Commonwealth of Venice; the Sclavonian ſpoken in Bohemia, Moravia, and ſome part of Luſatia; and the high Dutch the general Language of the Country. A Language very ancient doubtleſs, (though I am not ſo much a Goropian as to think it ſpoke in Paradiſe, or before the Flood) and ſuch as, by reaſon of the little or no impreſſion which the Roman Armies made upon this Country, hath leſs commixture with the Latine than any which is uſed in theſe Weſtern parts, (the Welſh excepted) and is very harſh by reaſon of its many Conſonants.

This Country was eſteemed by Tacitus to be rude and barren, containing nothing but unpeopled Foreſts, unprofitable Heaths, and unhealthful Pools. Germaniam informem terris, aſperam cœlo, triſtem cultu aſpectuque, as he farther addeth. And ſuch no doubt it was in thoſe times wherein Tacitus lived; the people not being civilized, nor the Country cultivated, nor any means found out to rectifie the ſharpneſs of that Northern Air. But he who doth obſerve it now, cannot but confeſs that there is no Country in the World either better planted, or repleniſhed with more goodly and gallant Cities; being alſo in moſt parts both pleaſant, healthy and profitable; abounding with Mines of Silver and inferior Metals, plentiful in Corn and Wines, with which they ſupply the defect of other Nations, as alſo with Fleſh, Fiſh, Linen, Quickſilver, Alume, Saffron, Armour, and other Iron-works. The Arable lands are ſo ſpacious in the Eaſtern parts, that the Husbandman going forward with his Plough in the morning, turneth not back again till noon; ſo making but two Furrows for his whole days work. For this Verſtegan is my Authour; and if it be not credible, let him bear the blame.

Souldiers of moſt eminency in the elder times were 1. Arminius, the Prince of the Cheruſci, who overthrew Quintilius Varus and the Roman Legions. 2. Witikind, the laſt King of the Saxons. For the middle Ages, 3. Otho the firſt, 4. Frederick Barbaroſſa, 5. Rodulph of Habſpurg, Emperours and Kings of Germany; 6. Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony. And in the laſt Century of years, 7. Frederick the ſecond, Elector Palatine, who made good Vienna againſt the Turks; 8. Albert of Brandenburg, of whom more hereafter; 9. Erneſt Earl of Mansfield, 10. John-George of Jagerndorf, 11. Albert Wallenſtein Duke of Fridland, and divers others of late days.

Scholars of note the elder times afforded none, nor the middle many; Learning being here ſo rare in the middle of the eighth Century, that Vigilius Biſhop of Saltzburg was condemned of Hereſie for holding that there were Antipodes. In the next Age there flouriſhed Rabanus Maurus, Haimo of Halberſtadt, Walafridus Strabus, men learned for the times they lived in. And in the following times, Ockam, a ſtout defender of the Rights of the Empire againſt the Encroachments of the Pope, Otho Friſingenſis the Hiſtorian, Albertus Magnus the Philoſopher, of which laſt it is ſaid, that he made the Statua of a Man, which with the help of artificial Engines could ſpeak articulately, and was the work of 50 years. Then in the days of our Grandfathers we have 1. Martin Luther, that great inſtrument of the Reformation. 2. Philip Melanchthon, his Coadjutor in that work, but of more excellent parts, and far better temper; thence called the Phœnix of that Age. 3. Joachim Camerarius, a great friend of Philip. 4. Martin Chemnitius, a ſolid and laborious Writer. 5. Flacius Illyricus, the chief Author of the Magdeburgian Centuries, and Father of the Rigid Lutherans. 6. Sebaſtian Munſter, an induſtrious Coſmographer, and a learned Linguiſt. 7. Silburgius, and 8. Buxtorfius, as great Linguiſts as he. Not to deſcend to farther inſtances in thoſe who have ſo filled the Marts of Francfort in theſe latter times.

But the greateſt excellency of this people lieth in the Mechanical part of Learning, as being eminent for many Mathematical Experiments, ſtrange Water-works, Medicinal Extractions, Chymiſtry, the Art of Printing, and inventions of like noble nature, to the no leſs benefit than admiration of the World. Amongſt which I cannot chuſe but inſtance in that work of Regiomontanus, an excellent Mathematician, and a cunning Artizan, ſpoken of by Keckerman; who, at the coming of the Emperour Maximilian to the City of Nurenberg, made a wooden Eagle, which flew a quarter of a mile out of the Town to meet him; and being come to the place where he was, returned back of its own accord, and ſo accompanied him to his Lodging. A thing, if true, (as the Relator was a man of too much gravity to abuſe the World with an untruth) exceedingly beyond that Miracle of a flying Dove, for which Archytas is ſo famed amongſt the Ancients. Exceeded only by himſelf in a like invention, which was that of an Iron Fly, (the greater Miracle of Art, becauſe leſs in quantity) which at a Feaſt, to which he had invited ſome of his ſpecial Friends, flew from his hand about the Room and returned again, as is affirmed by Peter Ramus; expreſſed thus by Divine Du Bartas.

Once as this Artiſt, more with mirth than meat,
Feaſted ſome Friends, whom he eſteemed great,
From his learn'd hand an Iron Flie flew out,
And, having flown a perfect Round about,
With wearied wings return'd unto her Maſter,
And as judicious on his arm he plac'd her.
O divine Wit, that in the narrow Womb
Of a ſmall Flie could find ſufficient room
For all thoſe Springs, Wheels, Counterpoiſe and Chains,
Which ſtood inſtead of life, and ſpur, and reins!

And amongſt theſe I reckon Bertholdus Swart, a Franciſcan Frier, the Inventer (though by accident) of that fatal Inſtrument, the Gun. Studious in Chymiſtry, he mingled dried Earth, Sulphur, and ſome other Ingredients, which he had put into a Mortar covered with a ſtone; and ſtriking fire to light a Candle, as the night came on, a ſpark by chance fell into the Mortar, and catching hold of the Sulphur and other Minerals, with great violence blew up the ſtone wherewith it was covered. Amazed at which, he made trial ſeverally of theſe Ingredients, to find out which of them it was which produced that effect: which having diſcovered, he cauſed an Iron Pipe to be made, crammed it with Sulphur, Saltpeter and Stones; and putting fire to it, ſaw with what violent noiſe and fury it diſcharged it ſelf. This Invention he is ſaid to have firſt communicated to the Venetians, Anno 1330, or thereabouts, who having been often vanquiſhed by the Genoeſes, and driven almoſt to a neceſſity of yielding to them, by the help of their Guns (Bombards they were then called) gave unto their enemies a notable diſcomfiture. And this was the firſt Battel that ever thoſe warlike Pieces had a part in; which not long after put to li-

lence all the Engines and Devices wherewith the Ancients were wont to make their Batteries. The next that made use of this instrument were the Inhabitants of the Baltick Sea; and not long after them the English, at the Siege of Calice, Anno 1347; about which time they began also to be used in France. The French, it seemeth, learned the use of them from the English: and the first benefit received by them was the death of that famous Leader, Thomas Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, who at the Siege of Orleans was slain with a great shot Anno 1425. Twenty years after this, Anno 1446, they were first used in Spain, at the Siege of Setteville, a Town of the Kingdom of Granada, by the Castilians, and after by degrees made common to the rest of that Continent. And being grown common in this Continent, as well unto the Jews and Moors as unto the Christians, it was not long before they taught it to the Turks. For the Jews, being forced to abandon Spain Anno 1492, betook themselves to Greece and other parts of the Turks Dominions, to whom they shewed the Art of making Ordnance, Gunpowder, Harquebusses, sufficiently since used by that people to the hurt of Christendom. But somewhat before this the Turks had been in part beholden for them to the Wars they had with the Venetians; beholden, I say, for notwithstanding the harm received by them at first, yet afterwards, growing expert in managing of them, they gave unto Vsan Cassanes and Hismael, two of the most mighty Emperours of Persia, two memorable Overthrows by the help of their great Ordnance only. The Portugals were in this Art the Tutors to the Persians: for, as Solyman the Turkish Emperour objected against them, they not only aided Tamas the Sophi with certain Harquebussiers, but also sent him workmen to shew him the use and making of Artillery. These great Pieces at the first invention were rude, unwieldy, and charged with Stone-bullets only: but by degrees they came to that perfection, both for the wall and the hand, which they now have. Whether now Archery or Gunning be to be preferred, I stand not here to determine; only this I am sure of, that Victories have been of late purchased with less expence of blood and life than ever formerly. But of this Theam more perhaps hereafter, when we shall come to take the Parthian Archery into consideration.

The Religion of this Country it is not easie to name, considering so many are here allowed; Jews being intermixt with Christians, and these divided into Papists and Protestants; the latter also divided into Lutherans, Calvenists, &c. The Christian Faith was first planted here, if Dorotheus Bishop of Tyre be of any credit, by S. Thomas surnamed Didymus, one of the Twelve. But being there is little truth unto his Relations, the best were to say with the Magdeburgians and the Martyrologies, that the Germans had not all the same Apostle; that the Gospel was first preached amongst the Rhetians and Vindelici by S. Lucius of Cyrene, amongst those of Noricum by S. Mark, by S. Crescens at Mentz, S. Clement at Metz in Lorrain, all of them Apostolical men, and of the number of the 70. after that by S. Maternus at Colen, and by S. Eucherius at Triers. That the Faith was planted very early in these Countries, Irenæus, the renowned Bishop of Lions, Anno 170, is sufficient evidence, who takes notice of it; and that it prospered very well and took very good root, appeareth by the Bishops of Mentz, Triers, Worms, Spires, Basil, and Straesburg, subscribing to the Council of Colen in the Reign of Constantius the Son of Constantine the Great, Anno 347. But the light hereof, being extinguished for a time by those barbarous Nations who fell upon these out-parts of the Roman Empire, began to shine again on the Conversion of the French in all parts of this Country; the Conquests and example of this puissant Nation giving great incouragement thereunto. In which as those of other Countries do not want their honour, so the greatest part thereof belongs to the English-Saxons; Willibrode the first Bishop of Utrecht; Willibald of Aichstat, Swibert of Verden, Willibald of Breme, and specially Boniface the Archbishop of Mentz, being most gloriously fortunate in that sacred service. The Moravians, Bohemians, and others farther off, came not in till afterwards. Not fully converted to the Faith, they began to suck in the Corruptions of the Church of Rome; discerned and opposed by John Husse and Hierom of Prague Bohemian Divines, who, by reason of the Marriage of King Richard the second of England with the Daughter of Wenceslaus Emperour and King of Bohemia, had opportunity to be acquainted with the Preachings of Wicleff, the Points of whose Doctrine they approved and propagated. But these two being burnt at Constance by the decree of that Council, their followers in Bohemia would not so give over, but after many sufferings and much bloodshed, obtained at last a Toleration of the Emperour Sigismond their King, more able to make good his word in his own Dominions, than he had been to save the two Martyrs from the fire at Constance, to whom he had granted his safe Conduct for their coming and going. In this condition they remained under the name of those of the Sub utraque or Calistini, because of their administring the Sacraments in both kinds, till the rising of Luther; who justly offended at the impious and unwarrantable Assertions of Frier Tokel, and others of the Pope's Pardon mongers, first opposed their doings, and after questioned that Authority by which they acted, falling from one Point to another, till he had shaken the Foundations of the Roman Fabrick. Of the success of his undertaking we shall speak but little, as in a thing well known to all men of knowledge. Suffice it in this place to say, that his Doctrine was not only received in Germany, but generally imbraced in the great Kingdoms of Denmark and Swethland, with the Provinces and Islands appertaining to them, in great part of Poland, Hungary, and Transylvania, as far almost as to the banks of the Euxine Sea; but for the progress of it here, (which we are more especially at this time to enquire into) it was so well approved of, that the Dukes of Saxony, Brunswick, Lunenburg, Wirtenberg, Mecklenberg, and Pomerania, the Marquess of Brandenburg, the Lantgraves of Hassia, and most of the Free and Imperial Cities, did adhere unto it; who from their Protestation made at Spires (the Imperial Chamber) to that effect Anno 1529 had the name of Protestants. The next year following they delivered in the Confession of their Faith at Ausburg, a City of Suevia, thence called Confessio Augustana; authorized, or tolerated at least, after a long War, with variable success on both sides, by the Emperour Charles the fifth, at the Pacification made at Passaw, Anno 1552, and afterwards more fully at Ausburg, (where their Confession had first been tendred) Anno 1555.

But not to pass over this matter in these generals only, we may know once for all, that in the year 1530 the Protestant Princes having tendred their Confession at Ausburg, (as before is said) and finding it not so well received as they did expect, entred into a Confederation at the Town of Smalcald (belonging to the Duke of Saxony) for defence thereof, and for the defence of one another in pursuance of it. Into this Confederacy first entred John Frederick the Duke of Saxony and his Son, Ernest and Francis Dukes of Lunenburg, Philip the Lantgrave of Hassia, George Marquess of Brandenburg, the Cities of Straesburg, Nurenberg, Heilbrun, Ruteling, Ulme, Lindaw, Constance, Memming, and Compedune. Afterwards, Anno 1535, there entred into it Barnimus and Philip Princes of Pomeren, Ulrick Duke of Wirtenberg, Robert Duke of Zweibrucken, (or Bipont, as some Writers call him) William Earl of Nassau, George, and Joachim Earls of Anhalt, the Cities of Francford, Hamborough, Ausburg, Hanover; and not long after the Palsgrave and King of Denmark. But this Confederacy was like to have dashed the business. For Charles the fifth looking upon it as a matter of dangerous consequence to the power and safety of the Empire, and withall instigated thereunto by the Popes of Rome, whose interest was no less concerned in it, considering that he could not otherwise untie this Gordian knot, resolved to cut it with the Sword. At first the War succeeded luckily with the Protestant Princes, who armed themselves upon the noise of his Preparations: But there being an equality of Command between the Duke John Frederick and Philip the Lantgrave, the one sometimes not approving, otherwhiles thwarting the others projects, the end proved not answerable. Besides, the politick Emperour, knowing full well that the Forces of confederate States are oftner broken by Delays than Battel, avoided all occasions of fighting, and thereby wearied out this great Army, which without performing any notable exploit disbanded it self, every man hasting home to defend his own. But none had more reason so to do than the Duke Electour: For in his absence his Cousin Maurice (forgetting the Education he had under him, and how formerly the Duke had conquered for him and estated him in those parts of Misnia (maugre all opposition of the Popish party) which formerly had belonged to Duke George his Uncle) combined himself with the Emperour, and invaded the Electour's Country; who notwithstanding recovered not only all his own, but a great part also of those Lands and Territories in which he had before estated his ungrateful Kinsman. But while he was in this Career, the Emperour suddenly falls upon him not far from Mulberg, (where the Duke was then hearing a Sermon) and by the suddenness of his coming routed his tumorous unprovided Army; the Duke himself with some few resolute Gentlemen making head against him, till the most of them were slain, and the Duke taken Prisoner. The next morning he was condemned to lose his head, but pardoned at the last upon some Conditions: amongst which it was none of the least, that he should surrender his Estates, and resign the Electoral dignity to be disposed of by the Victor; as also that he should without ransom release Marquess Albert of Brandenburg, (a busie and unquiet man) who was then his Prisoner. This done, the Emperour fraudulently intrappeth the Lantgrave, as we shall shew more at large hereafter in another place; and carrying on the War from one Free City to another, compelled them to receive the Mass, and to submit to such Composition as he pleased to grant them; insomuch as it was thought that the Emperour gained in this journey a Million and 800000 Crowns, and 500 pieces of great Ordnance. But these Successes were too great and too unjustly grounded to continue long. For Maurice, the new Duke Electour, who had married the Lantgrave's Daughter, and engaged himself unto his Children both by Word and Bond and that too at the Emperour's instance) for his safe returning, conceived himself unworthily dealt with so to be made the instrument of his Father's thraldom, and therefore that he was obliged both in love and honour to leave no way untryed which might gain his liberty. And withall, finding cause to fear that the course of the Emperour's great Successes might end at last in the subversion of the common Liberty, he secretly by an under-hand practice called in the French, and raising Forces under colour of the Emperour's service, gained Marquess Albert before mentioned (who had then a running Army in the field) to associate with him, and fell so suddenly on the Emperour lying then at Inspruck, that he compelled him to run away in post-hast by torch-light, and the Prelates to break off the Council of Trent, where at that time they were assembled. Upon which turning of the balance a Peace soon ensued, which brought forth the Edicts of Passaw and Ausburg, spoken of before, the best and surest Pledges of the Peace of Germany.

In the mean time, while the Lutherans thus played their game, there started up another party, begun at first by Zuinglius amongst the Switzers, of whose both Doctrine and Success we have spoken there. These not communicating Counsels went two several ways, especially in the Points of Consubstantiation and the Real Presence; not reconciled in their times, nor like to be agreed upon amongst their followers. For Calvin, rising into the esteem and place of Zuinglius, added some Tenets of his own to the former Doctrines touching Predestination, Free-will, Universal Grace, Final Perseverance, (Points fitter for the Schools than a popular Auditory;) by which the Differences were widened, and the Breach made irreparable: the Cause being followed on both sides with great impatience, as if they did not strive so much for Truth, as Victory. And, of the two, those of the Lutheran party seemed more violent, (though the other was altogether as irreconcilable) who could not chuse but stomach it, to see themselves undermined and blown up by a new form of Doctrine not tolerated in the Empire, but under colour of Conformity to the Confession of Ausburg. For Zuinglianism being entertained amongst the French, a busie and active people, spred it self farther in few years than it was propagated by the Switzers (men of the same temper with the Dutch) in all times before. Insomuch as it did not only prevail in France, but by the reputation of Calvin, and the diligence of his Followers, was wholly entertained in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Netherlands, in many parts of the Kingdom of Poland, and even in Germany it self, in which it got footing in all the Territories of the Counts Palatines of the Rhene, in some of the Lantgraves of Hassia, in the Imperial City of Straesburg, many of the Hanse-Towns, and amongst other Princes and free Cities of inferiour note. The rest of Germany, containing the Patrimonial Estates of the House of Austria, the Dukedoms of Bavaria and Lorrain, the Territories of the three Spiritual Electors, and of all the other Bishopricks in the hands of the Clergy, some of the Marquesses of Baden, part of the Subjects of Cleve, and but three of the Imperial Cities, (and those small ones too) that is to say, Gemund, Uberlingen, and Dinckell-Spyell, (unless some more be added by the great late Successes of the House of Austria) remain in their Obedience to the See of Rome; all which together will hardly make up one fifth part of this spacious Country, the other four being in the power and possession of the Protestant party: yet so that there be many Protestants in Bohemia, Austria, and in other the Estates of the Popish Princes; as there be Papists in the Free Cities of Frankford, Nurenberg, Ulm, Aken, and some other places, besides the late increase of them in both the Palatinates. Of such a speedy growth was the Reformation, that within the space of 40 years it was not only received in all those Countries which do now profess it, but had also got some footing both in Spain and Italy.

And here perhaps it will not be improper to look upon the means which were chiefly used for the Promoting of this Work, by which it came to spread so far in so little time, and next upon the Stops and Hinderances which were given unto it, by which it was restrained from spreading farther. 1. For the means used in the Advancement of this Work, (next under the Almighty power of the most wise God) they were these especially. 1. The translating of the Scripture into Vulgar Languages, which easily discovered the Corruptions of the Church of Rome both in Doctrinals and Forms of Worship. 2. The diligent Preaching of their Ministry, both in Towns and Villages, for the expounding of the Scriptures, and fitting them to the capacities of the meanest Auditors; which gained exceedingly both on the judgment and affections of the common people; the course of Preaching having been formerly neglected by the Parish Curate, and turned off wholly in a manner to the Begging-Friars. 3. The publishing of Books of Practical Piety and Devotions, which mightily inflamed the hearts of all sorts of men; accustomed before to no other Duties than to tell over their Credo's and Pater-nosters, and to keep a just account of their Ave-Maries, and that most commonly in a tongue which they understand not. 4. The Education of youth, especially in Catechisms containing the whole body of Christian Religion; which once well planted in their minds, could not so easily be pulled up and removed thence by any contrary perswasions. 5. Their continual offers of disputation with the adverse party in a publick audience; which being denied (as generally at the first it was) gave great assurance of the truth and soundness of the one side, as of the falshood and weakness of the other. 6. Their compiling of Martyrologies and Histories of the Church, which could not but produce an admirable Zeal and Constancy both in the Readers and the Hearers, animated thereunto by those brave Examples which therein were presented to them. One point of Prudence hath been wanting, which is the calling of a General Council of all the Protestant and Reformed Churches, for the composing of the Differences which have grown between them. And this I look on as the first and greatest Stop to the Reformation from proceeding farther; many men (not improbably) thinking there must be some want of truth in the Foundation of that Building, which had such wide and open breaches in the Superstructures. The Tyranny and terrour of the Inquisition, by which it is kept out of Spain, and kept down in Italy, and all other parts of the Pope's Obedience, together with those other Policies both to discountenance and suppress it, (which we have spoken of in our description of the Papacy) may come next to this. Then add to these the care and diligence of the Jesuites and Seminary Priests, in applying themselves to all those means which they found so effectual on the other side, thereby not only countermining their endeavours, but fighting them upon even ground with the self-same weapons. And last of all, the Plots and Practices of the Papal Ministers, in working on the humours of the opposite parties, thereby inraging them not only into Tongue-combats and velitations of the Pen, but even to try it out by blows in an open War, once I am sure. By these means they have not only stopped the Progress of the Reformation, but would fain give themselves some hopes to destroy it utterly, and thereby to restore the Pope to that power and splendour which formerly he had attained unto in these parts of Europe. But of these and such like self-flatteries I shall say with Seneca, or rather in his words applied to my own Intention,

——Hæ manus Trojam erigent?
Parvas habet spes Troja, si tales habet.
That is to say,
Shall these small Jars restore the ruin'd Pope?
Small hopes he hath, if this be all his hope.

As for the Government of their Churches, those that continue in Obedience to the See of Rome are under the old form of Archbishops and Bishops, coæval in all Germany (as in most places else) with the Faith it self. The Calvinists (by which name the Zuinglianist now also passeth, if not eaten out) submit themselves for Doctrine, Discipline and Forms of Worship, to Calvin's Model; whereof we have spoke more at large when we were in Geneva. And for the Lutherans, they have divided the Episcopal Function from the Revenues; giving these last to some of their younger Princes, with the Title of Administrators of such a Bishoprick; the Function or Jurisdiction to some of the more eminent Clergy, with the title of a Superintendent, assigning to them a priority both of place and power before other Ministers, which they enjoy for term of life, together with some liberal maintenance in proportion to it. In other things, as Order, Habit, and Title of dignity, they differ not at all from the other Ministers. And over them, in the place of Archbishops, they have their general Superintendents; all of them of each sort accomptable to the supreme Ecclesiastical Consistory, (as formerly to the Provincial or National Synod) made up of Counsellors of State and the Heads of the Clergy. So that the Form seems to be much the same as in elder times, but is indeed more different than it seems to be; a great part of the Alteration being in the Names, and that no other in a manner than by changing the old Greek word Episcopus into the new Latine word Superintendents, both signifying an Overseer, though in different languages. And so ex Græcis bonis Latinas fecêre non bonas, in the Poet's words. Which brings into my mind the story of a people of Africk, who having received much hurt by Tigers, made a Decree that no man from thenceforth should call them Tigers, but give them a more harmless or less hated name, and then all was well. And as they do conform thus far to the elder times in form of Government, so do they also come up to them in their forms of Worship; retaining still a setled and prescribed Liturgie for all their Churches, most of the Holy-days observed in the former Ages, the Cross in Baptism, Kneeling at the Communion, and many other innocent and significant Ceremonies commended to the Church by most pure Antiquity. In point of Maintenance they are as defective as the Calvinists are; few of their Ministers having Tithes, most of them Pensions or Stipends, and those small ones also, seldom exceeding two or 300 Guldens, besides Wood for fewel, Corn, and some other necessaries.

Now because mention hath been made of the Hanse-Towns and Imperial Cities, we are to understand that the Cities of this Country are of three sorts. 1. Such as are holden in possession by some of the Princes in way of inheritance, part of their Patrimony and Estates; as Heidelberg, Vienna, Munchen, Wittenberg, &c. 2. Such as are held originally of the Empire it self: which are called Free Cities, for their great Prerogatives of Coyning money, and Governing themselves by their local Ordinances; Imperial, in regard they know no Lord or Protector but the Emperour only, to whom they pay two third parts of such Contributions as are assessed in the Assemblies or general Diets, and 1500 Florens yearly for themselves and their Territories. They are in number about 60, many of which are of a fair and large Estate; such as are Nurenberg, Ausburg, Ingolstad, Spires, Wormes, &c. Of which thus Guicciardine: Those (saith he) are called Free Cities, which, acknowledging by a certain determinate Tribute the Authority of the Empire, do notwithstanding in all other things govern themselves after their own Laws, not seeking to amplifie their Territories, but defend their Liberties. 3. The third sort is of those which are called Hanse-Towns, or Hansteden, that is, (say some) An zee steden, Towns upon the Sea; such as those were who first entred into this Confederacy: but at this time the name extends to many in-land Cities, and of no great Trading, joined with them in a League for their common defence and preservation. A League made first against the Danes and the Earls of Holstein by some of the Maritime Towns bordering next unto them; that is to say, Lubeck, Hamburg, Rostock, Wismar, Stralsund, and Lunenburg: but afterwards many other of the Imperial Cities and Towns of Trade associated with them in an offensive and defensive League against all enemies whatsoever. In number about 72, those of Livonia and Prussia being taken into the reckoning: many of which are able to put to Sea 150 good sail of Ships; such as lie more within the Land contributing in money or otherwise to the common charge. First handselled by Waldomar the 3. of Denmark, whom they vanquished in a Naval Battel. After that growing into credit, and driving a great Trade in most parts of Christendom, they enjoyed many large and ample Priviledges wheresoever they came: called amongst us sometimes by the name of Easterlings, from their Easterly dwellings; and Merchants of the Steelyard, from the place where they stowed their Commodities; and Guilda Teutonicorum, in regard of their Nation, for the most part Dutch. But the English learning so much wit at the last as to make use of their own Shipping, they began here by little and little to decay, and are now almost worn out of memory with us, though still of good esteem and credit in other Countries.

The principal Rivers hereof are 1. Danubius, or the Danow, which rising out of Nigra Sylva, or Schwartzenwald, as the Germans call it, at a little Village of Schwaben called Den Eschingen, about two Dutch miles from the shores of the Rhene; passeth through Schwaben, Bavaria, Austria, &c. by the Cities of Ulm, Regensburg, Passaw, Vienna, Rab, Buda, and Belgrade, beyond which it beginneth to be called Iter, by that name most generally known amongst the Grecians: and receiving into its Chanel, from the long tracts of the Alps, the Sarmatian and Carpathian Mountains, about 60 navigable Rivers, besides lesser Brooks, disgorgeth his full stomach by several mouths (the names whereof we shall find in Dacia) into the lap of the Euxine Sea; the whole length of his course 1500 miles. Insomuch as we may say with a modern Poet, Cedere Danubius se tibi, Nile, negat.

O seven-mouth'd Nile, I plainly see,
Danow will scarce give way to thee.

2. Rhene, (of whose original and course we have spoke more fully when we were in Belgium) which running from Switzerland through Germany and Belgium, after a course of 800 miles, emptieth it self into the German Ocean. All which shall here be added is, that it gives the Title of the Rhine-grave to some Princes of as good Blood as the best in Germany, whose Possessions and Estates bodering near unto it, they were from thence so called; but of late times decayed (almost to nothing) in their Estates, and living for the most part on the entertainment of other Princes, whom they serve in their Wars; the Palsgraves of the Rhene, and two at the least of the three Bishops Electors, raising themselves upon the ruine of this House. 3. Elb. (Albis) which springing out of the Mountain of Risenberg in the skirts of Bohemia, runneth a course of 400 miles, and passeth by the Cities of Dresden, Meisen, Torgaw, Wittenberg, Magdeburg, and Lawenburg, Cities of the Electoral and ancient Saxony, and so betwixt the Dukedom of Holstein (now part of Denmark) and the rest of Germany. 4. Oder, which hath its Fountain in the hithermost parts of Moravia; and after it hath run its course through Brandenburg and Pomerania, of some 300 miles in length, falleth at last into the Baltick Sea. 5. Visurgis, or the Weser, which issuing out of the Hills of Thuringia, runneth through Hassia and Westphalen, to the City of Breme, not far from which it falls into the German Ocean. 6. Vistula, or the Wyssel, which rising out of the Carpathian Mountains betwixt Poland and Hungary, first passeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Pole, then betwixt Pomeren and Prussia, and so into the Baltick Sea; the ancient Boundary of this Country, dividing it from Sarmatia Europæa. 7. Mosele, which rising out of the Mountain Vauge, in the Confines of Lorrain and the County of Burgundy, passeth directly through Lorrain, and the District of Triers, by the Cities of Toul, Metz, and Triers it self, beyond which last it falleth into the Rhene, at the Town called Confluentz. 8. Sala, or Salza, which rising in the Mountains of Fitchelberg in the Borders of the Upper Palatinate, and passing by the skirts of Misnia and Saxony specially so called, falleth into the Elb beyond Wittenberg, having first watered the Cities of Naumburg, Mersburg, and Jene, very observable for being the most Eastern bounds of the Saxon Conquests, by this River parted from the Sclaves. 9. Mænus, or the Maine, which hath its spring in the Mountains of Bohemia, and passing by the Cities of Bamberg and Wurtzburg, is received into the Rhene beneath Frankford. 10. Amisus, or the Ems, which hath its Fountain near Paderborn in Westphalia, and passing between the two Friselands, falleth into the German Ocean not far from Emden.

Chief Mountains of this mighty Country, besides the Alps spoken of before, which run in a long tract betwixt it and Italy, are 1. Abnoba, now called Schwartzenwald, (the present name both of this Mountain and the Forest of Martiana, which doth overshadow it) out of which rise the Springs of Danow and the Neccar, two principal Rivers of this Country. 2. The Sudetæ, incircling Bohemia, covered with the Woods called anciently Gabreta and Luna, now called the Wolds of Passaw and Behaimer, from the places adjoining. 3. Cetius in Austria, now called Culemberg, the ancient Bounds betwixt Pannonia and Noricum, two Roman Provinces. 4. Vogesus, commonly called Vauge, and by some French Writers le Monte de Faucities, which incircling Lorrain, divideth it on the East and South from Elsass & the County of Burgundy. As for the Forests of this Country, besides those spoken of already, that of most note was the Forest of Hercynia, (of which all the rest were but limbs or branches,) the beginning whereof was about the Borders of Switzerland and Alsatia, from thence running Eastward along the course of the Danow unto Transilvania, and thence declining on the left hand through the vast Countries of the Lituanians, Moscovites, and Russes, in which last there are still many vast Deserts of it; the greatest part thereof in Germany being long since consumed, in place whereof are many goodly Corn-fields and well-built Cities. A Wood so formidable to the Romans, that they durst never venture to search the end of it; the length thereof, after the end of 60 days journey, being undiscoverable, and the farther search into it quite laid aside.

These Boundaries and Land-marks being thus described we shall the better follow the Chorography of this great Continent, according to the several Principalities and Estates therein; having first taken a survey of the ancient condition of it, with so much of the Story as concerns the whole, before it came to be divided into so many hands. The Country was first planted by the posterity of Gomer, who, descending from the Mountains of Albania, their first Seat, in memory thereof first called Gomerini, after Cimmerini, by that name known to Pliny, Ptolomy, and others of the ancient Writers, removed into the more fruitful Plains of Phrygia, and there built the City Cimmeris, which Pliny speaks of. But that small Province proving of too narrow a compass to contain his Offspring, and the adjoining Countries being taken up in the former Plantations, they removed unto the North-west of the Euxine Sea, where we find a City of their building

ing called Cimmerium, mentioned both by Pliny and Strabo, and the adjoyning Streight or Fretum called by the name of Bosporus Cimmerius by the Greeks and Latines. Driven from these Dwellings by the more powerful Scythians, they spred themselves into the West, where they began to be called Cimbri, and by that name, and under those of the Ambrones and Teutones, several Branches of them, intended an Invasion and Conquest both of Gaul and Italy: wherein they had prevailed in all probability, nisi isti seculo Marius contigisset, had not Marius happened to have lived in that Age, by whom they were discomfited and destroyed. That these Gomerians or Cimbri were the first Inhabitants of Gaul, Germany, and all the Nations of the North and West of Europe, is generally agreed upon by all the Learned. Divided they were into several Nations, and those also subdivided into lesser Tribes, and more obscure Families; amongst which those of Teutones or Tuiscones, from which the Dutch do so affect to derive themselves, might be some of the principal. There setled, and not pleased with that desert dwelling, such of them as dwelt neerest to the Rhene passed over that River, and beating the Gauls farther up into the Country, possessed themselves of their Dwellings, enjoying them (till conquered by Julius Cæsar) without any Rival. But Cæsar, moved with the complaints of the Gauls, and the insolencies of Arioviſtus a King of the Germans, (for by that name for the reasons aforesaid the Romans called them) marched into their Quarters: the Roman Legionaries being so afraid of this dreadful Enemy, ut testamenta passim in principiis scriberentur, (saith the Historian) that many of them made their Testaments at the Gates of their Camp, before they fell upon the Enemy. Vanquished by Cæsar, and Arioviſtus being fled over the Rhene, the Romans by command of their General made a Bridge over the River, and rather terrified than conquered the neighbouring Germans; who were more fully brought into subjection by Drusus, the adopted Son of Augustus Cæsar, from thence called Germanicus, by whom not only the Rhæti and Norici, then lying out of the bounds of Germany, now included in it, were subdued in fine, and brought into the form of Roman Provinces; but the whole Country in a manner to the very Ocean was forced to yield obedience to the Roman Empire. But this was for so short a time, that it was both won and lost during the Reign and Government of Augustus Cæsar. So that the whole established Conquests of the Romans upon this Country, as it is now bounded, contained no more than the Provinces of Germania and Belgica Prima, with part of Germania Secunda, belonging unto the Diocess of Gaul; the greatest part of the two Rhætia's being under the Diocess of Italy; Noricum Mediterraneum and Ripense, with some parts of Pannonia, parts of the Diocess of Illyricum. But none of these (as lying on the West side of the Rhene, and the South of the Danow) did ever pass in the accompt of the ancient Germany, the Germans not enduring the yoke so long as to be brought within the number of the Roman Provinces. Provoked with the Lust and Insolencies of Quintilius Varus, who succeeded Drusus in that charge, they set upon him under the conduct of Arminius, a chief Prince amongst them, kill him, and utterly cut off three Legions; as we shall see more particularly when we come to Brunswick, the ancient Seat of the Cherusci, by whom the Forces of that Emperour were driven over the Rhene. After which defeat Augustus laid aside the Affairs of Germany, confining his Empire within the Rhene, which Drusus had extended to the banks of the Ocean. Hâc clade factum, ut Imperium quod in littore Oceani non steterat, in ripa Rheni fluminis staret, saith the Historian. Nor did the Romans only forbear to revenge this Loss by making a new War upon them, but seemed more careful to defend themselves against their Invasions, than to incur the hazard of a new Defeat; quartering eight Legions with their several Wings and Aids on the shores of the Rhene, and four upon the banks of the Danow, to keep these people from incroaching on the Roman Provinces. But the fatal period of that Empire drawing on apace, the French, Burgundians, Almans and other Dutch Nations break through those Guards, dispossess the Romans of all Gaul, Rhætia and Noricum, which they share amongst them: till in the end the French, prevailing over the rest, extend their Empire over all the modern Germany; chiefly performed by the valour of Charles the Great, created Emperour of the West by the people of Rome, and crowned with the Imperial Crown by Pope Leo the 4. on Christmass day, Anno 801. So that now the old Prophesie of the Druides, concerning the removing of the Empire into the West, came to be accomplished; though Tacitus in his time accounted it for a vain and idle Prediction. For when Civilis raised a Rebellion amongst the Batavi (the Hollanders and parts adjoyning) against Vespasian then newly made Emperour, possessionem rerum humanarum Transalpinis gentibus portendi Druidæ canebant, the Druides prophesied of the translation of the Empire to the Transalpine Nations: accomplished, as before is said, in the person of Charles the Great, King of France and Germany. By whom it was divided (for the better ordering or Governance of it) into West-France, or West-reick, in the barbarous Latine of those times called Westrasia, containing the modern France, and so much of the Netherlands as lieth on the French side of the River Maes; and Ostew-reick, (i. e. the Eastern Kingdom) in the Latine of those times Austrasia, containing so much of the modern Germany and Pannonia as was possessed by the French, with the rest of the Netherlands. This was afterwards subdivided into the Kingdoms of Lorrain and Germany: whereof the first contained all Germany within the Rhene, together with the Belgick Provinces before described, the Counties of Flanders and Artois excepted only; the Kingdom of Germany taking up the rest. For in the time of Ludovicus Pius, the Son of Charles, the great Empire of his Father was parcelled out into many members, as Italy, France, Burgundy, Lorrain, and Germany, distributed amongst his Sons and Nephews with the title of Kings: by means whereof the Kingdoms of Germany and Lorrain, united in the person of Lewis the Ancient, in little time were alien'd from the House of Charles, and left off to be French, possessed by the great Princes of Lorrain, Saxony, Schwaben, and Bavaria; by them dismembred into many Principalities and inferiour States, all passing under the accompt and name of the Dutch or Germans. The Kings and Emperours of which here follow.

The Kings and Emperours of GERMANY.

A. Ch.

801 1. Charles the Great, Emperour, King of France and Germany.

815 2. Ludovicus Pius, King of France, Germany, and the Emperour of the Romans.

841 3. Lewis, surnamed the Ancient, second Son of Ludovicus Pius, King of Germany, to which Anno 876. he united that of Lorrain also.

4. Charles the Gross, Son of Lewis the Ancient, reigned at first joyntly with Carloman and Lewis his elder Brethren, after their deaths sole King of Germany. Anno 880. he succeeded Ludovicus Balbus in the title of Emperour, continued unto his Successors; and during the minority of Charles the Simple by a Faction of the French Nobility was chosen King of France: the whole Estate of Charles the Great becoming once again united in the person of one Soveraign Prince.

891 5. Arnulph, the natural Son of Carloman, the Brother of Charles, King of Germany and Emperour.

903 6. Lewis or Ludovicus IV. (Lewis the Brother of Charles and Carloman being reckoned for one) King of Germany and Emperour, the lawfully begotten Son of Arnulph.

913 7. Conrade, the Son of Conrade, the Brother of Lewis the 4. the last Prince of the masculine issue of Charles the Great. After whose death the Francones and Saxons, seeing Charles the Simple, King of France, overlaid by the Normans, or embroyled by the Princes of the House of Anjou, took that advantage to transfer the Empire to themselves: and they made choice of Henry Duke of Saxony to be their Emperour. A worthy Prince, by whom some Nations of the Sclaves, the Hungarians and part of Lorrain were subdued or added to the Empire.

929 8. Henricus, surnamed Auceps, or the Fowler, Duke of Saxony, elected by the German Princes, but designed by Conrade, as being eldest Son of Otho Duke of Saxony by Luitgardis Daughter to the Emperour Arnulph, and consequently a branch of the Caroline Stock.

938 9. Otho, surnamed the Great, the Son of Henry, Emperour and King of Italy. 36 years.

974 10. Otho II. Son of Otho the first, Emperour and King of Italy. 10.

984 11. Otho III. Son of Otho II. Duke of Saxony, and the last of that House which had the title of Emperour and King of Italy. After whose death, all right of Succession being disclaimed, the Emperours became elective; but for the most part the Election was ingrossed or monopolized (since the Faileur of the House of Saxony) by the Dukes of Franconia, Suevia, Bavaria and Austria, notwithstanding the liberty or freedom of Election pretended to by the Electors. The business was first projected in the Court of Rome, to make the Emperours less powerful, and distract the Germans, whom they feared, into Sides and Factions: confirmed by a Decree of Pope Gregory the fifth, being a Native of that Country.

1002 12. Henry II. surnamed the Saint, Duke of Bavaria, the first Emperour elected according to the Constitution of Gregory the fifth, but so elected, that he challenged it in a manner by the right of Bloud, as being the Grandchild of Henry surnamed Rixosus, the first Duke of Bavaria of the Saxon race) the second Son of Henry the first, and consequently the next Heir-male of that House after Otho the 3. compelling some of the Electors, who opposed his Title, by the force of Arms to yield unto it. So that the first Emperour who came in by a clear Election, but not without pretension of a Title also, was 1025 13. Conrade II. Duke of Franconia, surnamed Salicus, Husband to Luitgardis, one of the Daughters of Otho the first, and consequently not a Stranger to the former Family.

1040 14. Henry III. surnamed Niger, the Son of Conrade.

1056 15. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third, in whose days the Popes began to usurp Authority over the Emperours; insomuch as Leo the ninth, having received the Popedom at the Emperour's hands, repented himself of it, put off his Papal Vestments, went to Rome as a private person, and was there new chosen by the Clergy. This was done by the perswasion of a Monk called Hildebrand, who being afterwards made Pope by the name of Gregory the 7. excommunicated this Henry, the first Prince that was ever excommunicated by a Pope of Rome. From which time till the year 1254. there were continual Wars and Thunders betwixt them and the nine following Emperours, some of them being excommunicated, some forced to put their Necks under the Feet of the Pope, others to quit the care of the Commonwealth, and betake themselves unto the Wars of the Holy Land, leaving the Pope to do what he list in Germany.

1106 16. Henry V. Son of Henry the 4. armed by the Pope against his Father; whom he had no sooner succeeded in the Empire, but the Pope excommunicated him, for being too stiff in the business of Investitures, and raised up the Saxons against him; by whom being vanquished, and otherwise afflicted by the Pope's Practices, he was forced to submit unto his commands, and was the last Emperour of the House of Franconia.

1125 17. Lotharius, Duke of Bavaria, seizing on the Empire without any Election, was reconciled unto the German Princes by the means of St. Bernard. He setled the Affairs of Italy in two Journies thither. 13.

1139 18. Conrade III. Son of Frederick, the first hereditary Duke of Sueve or Schwaben, and Sister's Son unto Henry the fifth, vanquished Henry surnamed the Proud, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria; and going to the holy Wars with Lewis King of France, discomfited the Turks near the Banks of Meander. 15.

1153 19. Frederick, surnamed Barbarossa, Duke of Sueve, crowned at Rome by Adrian the 4. and not long after excommunicated by Pope Alexander the 3. to whom he was fain at last to submit himself, the Pope insolently treading on his Neck. He went after to the Holy Land, where he died, having discomfited the Turks in three great Battels. 37.

1190 20. Henry VI. Son of Frederick, and King of Sicily, in right of Constance his Wife, crowned by Pope Celestine, who imployed him in the Wars of the Holy Land; in his Journey towards which he died at Messina. 8.

1198 21. Philip, Duke of Sueve, Brother of Henry the 6. excommunicated by the Pope, (who loved not this Family) by whose means Otho, the Son of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, was set up against him. The occasion of great Wars among the Germans, reconciled by Marriage of Otho with a Daughter of Philip. 9.

1207 22. Otho IV. Son of Henry surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, crowned at Rome by Pope Innocent the 3. by whom not long long after he was excommunicated, for taking into his hands some Towns of Italy which belonged to the Empire: vanquished in Brabant by the Faction raised up against him, he relinquished the Empire to his Competitor.

1212 23. Frederick II. King of Sicily and Naples, Son of Henry the 6. having settled Germany, disposed himself for the Wars of the Holy Land, where he recovered the possession of the Realm of Jerusalem. He was excommunicated by the Pope at his return into Italy, and not long after poisoned.

1250 24. Conrade IV. Son of Frederick, the last Emperour of the House of Schwaben. After whose death the Empire being distracted by the Pope's practices into many Factions, each Faction chose an Emperour or King of the Romans: so that at one time there were elected Henry Earl of Thuringia, William Earl of Holland, Alfonso King of Castile, the renowned Authour of the Alfonsine Tables, and

1254 25. Richard Earl of Cornwall, Brother of Henry the third of England, the best monied man of all his time, supposed therewith to buy the Suffrages of the Archbishop of Colen and Elector Palatine, by whom he was elected and crowned King of the Romans, An. 1254: and after he had dealt in the affairs of the Empire 6 years, he returned into England, where he died. After whose death, or an Interregnum of 12 years from his Exit rather, the Title was at last accepted by 1273 26. Rodolph, Earl of Habspurg, a petit Prince, (others of greater Estates and Fortunes not daring to take up the honour) the Raiser of the present Austrian Family.

1292 27. Adolph, Earl of Nassau, who served in person under King Edward the 1. of England against the French; for which being distrelithed by the Germans, he was encountred and slain near the City of Spires.

1308 29. Henry, Earl of Luxemburg, who made a Journey into Italy to recover the Rights of the Empire, (where an Emperour had not been seen in 60 years:) supposed to be poisoned in the Chalice by a Frier at Benevent, a Town of the Pope's. 6.

1314 30. Lewis, Duke of Bavaria, crowned at Aix in the wonted manner; opposed by Frederick Duke of Austria, chose by another Faction, and crowned at Bonna, a Town of the Archbishop of Colen: but he being defeated, Lewis remained sole Emperour, and was excommunicated by Pope John 22. 33.

1346 31. Charles IV. Son of John King of Bohemia, and Grand-son of Henry the 7. crowned with the Iron Crown at Millain 1354; the framer of the Golden Bull. 32.

1378 32. Wenceslaus, King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, deformed and vicious; deposed by the German Princes. 22.

1400 33. Rupertus, Elector Palatine, passed into Italy for the recovery of the Dukedom of Millain, sold by Wenceslaus; but was well beat by John Galeazzo, and so returned. 10.

1410 34. Jodocus Barbatus, Marquess of Moravia, Uncle to Wenceslaus.

1411 35. Sigismund, Brother of Wenceslaus, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, crowned at Rome on Whitsunday 1432. He travelled exceedingly for establishing the Peace of Christendom, distracted at that time with three Popes at once; and was a great promoter of the Council at Constance.

1439 36. Albert II. Duke of Austria, Son-in-law of Sigismund, whom he succeeded in all his Estates and Titles, excepting Luxemburg. 1.

1440 37. Frederick III. Duke of Austria, the Son of Ernest of Austria, and next Heir of Albert the 2. He procured the calling of the Council of Basil for the Peace of Christendom, travelling for that cause to Rome, where he was declared Emperour, Anno 1442. 54.

1494 38. Maximilian, Son of Frederick, Duke of Austria, who first united the Estates of Burgundy to the House of Austria. A Prince that undertook many great Actions, but went through with none. 25.

1519 39. Charles V. King of Spain, Son of Philip King of Spain and Archduke of Austria, Son of Maximilian by the Lady Mary of Burgundy. A puissant Prince, who had Prisoners at the same time the French King and the Pope of Rome. He ruined the League made by the Protestants at Smalcald, took Prisoners the Electour of Saxony, and the Lantgrave of Hassia, drave the great Turk from Vienna, won the Kingdom of Tunis, and in the end resigned all his Estates, and died in a Monastery. 39.

1558 40. Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, the Brother of Charles, King of Hungary and Bohemia, elected King of the Romans by the procurement of Charles, Anno 1531. Upon whose Resignation he was chosen Emperour, Anno 1558. 7.

1565 41. Maximilian, the Son of Ferdinand, elected King of the Romans in the life of his Father, Anno 1562, succeeding the Empire after his decease.

1577 42. Rodolphus, the eldest Son of Maximilian, had great Wars against the Turk, with whom in the year 1600 he concluded a Peace; but being undermined by his Brother Matthias, was forced to surrender to him the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia, and to content himself with Austria and the Empire only. These eight last Emperors were all of the Order of the Garter.

1612 43. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, King of Hungary, Bohemia, and Archduke of Austria; in whose time were sown the seeds of that terrible War which had almost destroyed the Empire. Having no Children of his own, he procured Ferdinand of Gretz to be declared Successour into his Estates. 7.

of the Proteſtant Religion, occaſioning thereby that long and bloody War in the Empire of Germany, not yet fully ended.

1637 45. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the 2. broke the great power of the Swedes, (called in for the ſupport of the German Liberty, and againſt the violent reſolutions of his Father at the Battel of Norlingen; the twelfth Emperour of the Houſe of Habſpurg, and the ninth of the Houſe of Auſtria without intermiſſion. The cauſe of which is to be attributed to Charles the 5. who procured in his life-time that his Brother might be choſen Rex Romanorum, as his Succeſſor in the Empire: a policy which hath been ever ſince continued by his Succeſſors. And the Germans are the more willing to hearken to it, becauſe the Auſtrian Princes are not only Natives of this Country, but better able to back out the Empire in its complete Majeſty than any of the reſt of that Nation are.

And to ſay truth, it is but need that ſome great Prince or other be elected to it, who by the power and reputation of his own Eſtate may preſerve the Honour of the Empire, confined in a manner within Germany, and there ſo weakned by the alienating of whole Countries from it, (ſome Titulary acknowledgment excepted only) that it is nothing in effect but magni nominis umbra, the ſhadow of a mighty body, a meer empty Title. For if we look upon the preſent ſtate and condition of it, we ſhall find it otherwiſe too weak to ſupport the great and ſwelling Title of the Roman Empire. For as for the Empire it ſelf, it hath ſome Countries reputed as parts of it, which yet acknowledg no Subjection; as Belgium, Switzerland, and Denmark: Some do acknowledge a kind of Subjection, but the Princes of them come not to the Imperial Diets; as the Dukes of Savoy & Lorrain, and ſome of the Italian Potentates: Finally, ſome both confeſs the Emperour to be their Sovereign, and that they owe Service to his Courts, which are the Princes and Cities of Germany only; but thoſe ſo priviledged, ſo exempted from his commands, ſo abſolute & incontrollable in their own Eſtates, that they care little for his power, and not much (if any thing) for his perſon; of which we ſhall ſpeak more heraſter, when we come unto the form of the publick Government. In the mean time, if we would know by what occaſions the Empire became ſo infeebled, it may be ſaid, that the reaſons and occaſions of it have been very many. As firſt, The weakneſs and improvidence of the Caroline Race, diſmembring from it many powerful and wealthy Provinces, reſerving only a bare Homage and ſome ſlight acknowledgment. 2. The Cunning of the Popes, who from the time of Henry the 4. to Rodolph of Habspurg had by their Excommunications and other practices ſo exerciſed the Emperors with inteſtine troubles, that they forced them in a manner to abandon Italy: inſomuch that the ſaid Rodolph, finding the inconvenience of it, ſold moſt of his Eſtates there to the faireſt Chapmen. 3. This done, and the Popes knowing well enough that they could not wax ſtrong in Italy if they did not weaken the Emperor's eſtate in Germany, they firſt wreſted out of their hands the Inveſtiture of the Biſhops, Abbats, and other Eccleſiaſtical Preferments; who being now made their own creatures, were ſo encreaſed both in Revenue and Power by little and little, and fortified with ſo many Immunities, that ſome of them grew in time to be Free Eſtates, all of them Princes of the Empire. 4. But fearing that this might not bring the Emperors low enough, they bated them with continual Factions and perpetual Broils: which put them to a neceſſity of making what Friends they could, though they paid very dearly for them; and taking up what monies they could of the wealthier Cities, paying them in Exemptions and Royal Priviledges, when they could not otherwiſe cancel or diſcharge the Debt. 5. And unto this, the making the Empire Elective gave no little help, few of them looking on the Empire but as Tenants for term of life, and therefore were more likely to diſcharge ſuch Debts by impairing the publick Patrimony, which they had no hold in, than to diminiſh any thing of their own Eſtates. 6. But being the Title of Emperor was the greateſt Honour which any of that Nation could be capable of, and ſuch as by good husbandry might be made beneficial unto their poſterity, (as we ſee what good uſes have been made of it by the Auſtrian Family, ever ſince the time of Rodolph of Habſpurg;) who would not part with ſome of the Imperial Rights, to advance his own Houſe to an equal greatneſs? And herein many of the Emperors were exceeding faulty, who, to get the Empire to themſelves, or leave it after them unto their poſterity, diſmembred from the ſame many Towns and fair Poſſeſſions, given by them to the Electors for their Votes and Suffrages. 7. A thing which the Electors underſtood ſufficiently, and therefore were reſolved to make the beſt of the market, knowing that the Commodity could be bought of none but themſelves: as in the Election of Wenceſlaus Son of Charles the 4th. of whom it was but Ask and have what they have a mind to. By means whereof the Princes grew in time ſo ſtrong, that there were few of them who durſt not undertake a War againſt their Emperours. And this appeareth by the Story of Charles the fifth, who, though the moſt puiſſant Emperor which had reigned in Germany ſince Charles the Great, yet found himſelf ſo over-matched by theſe ruffling Princes, that he was willing to reſign the Empire to his Brother Ferdinand.

But to proceed: By theſe and every of theſe means the Body of the Empire came to be divided into many Eſtates, and thoſe Eſtates to be made abſolute and independent, as before is ſaid. The principal whereof, which being deſcribed will make up the Chorography of this great Continent, are thoſe of 1. Cleveland, 2. the Eſtates of the three Spiritual Electors, 3. the Palatinate of the Rhene, 4. Alſatia, 5. Lorrain, 6. Suevia or Schwaben, 7. Bavaria, 8. Auſtria and its Appendixes, 9. the Confederation of Wederaw, 10. Franconia, 11. Wirtenberg, and 12. Baden, 13. the Palatinate of Northgoia, or the Upper Palatinate, 14. Bohemia and the incoporate Provinces, 15. Pomerania, 16. Mecklenburg, 17. the Marquiſate of Brandenburg, 18. Saxony and the Members of it, 19. the Dukedoms of Brunſwick and Lunenburg, 20. the Lantgravedom of Haſſia, 21. Weſtphalen, 22. Eaſt-Frieſland. Such leſſer States as, being abſolute and free, are of leſſer moment, ſhall be reduced (together with the Imperial Cities) to thoſe ſeveral Provinces in which they are included, or out of which they were taken. As for the Province of Holſtein or Holſatia, though it be Imperial, and in this reſpect by ſome accounted as a Province of Germany; yet being under the command of the King of Denmark, and by all Writers reckoned as a part of that Kingdom, I ſhall there ſpeak of it. Some of theſe are thus cenſured by Aubanus, a late Writer. They of Suevia (ſaith he) are Whores, they of Franconia Raviſhers and Buggers, they of Bohemiah Hereticks, thoſe of Bavaria Thieves, they of Saxony Drunkards, they of Frieſland and Weſtphalia Swearers, and they of the Palatinate Gluttons. But I hope more charitably of them all than ſo. I know there is another diviſion of this Country, made by the Emperor

Maximi-

Maximillian at the Diet of Colen, Anno 1522. who, for the better raiſing both of men and money for all publick ſervices, cauſed it to be divided into the ten Circles of 1. Lower Saxony. 2. Upper Saxony. 3. Weſtphalia. 4. Of the Rhene. 5. Of the four Electors of that part. 6. Franconia. 7. Suevia. 8. Bavaria. 9. Auſtria, and 10. Burgundy. But that before propoſed being the more particular, I ſhall follow that, according to the order before laid down; beginning firſt with thoſe which, together with the Belgick Provinces and the Dukedom of Lorrain, contained anciently the Provinces of Belgica and Germania Prima, and ſome part of Germania Secunda, and made up the Kingdom of Auſtraſia ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called.

1. CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, or the Eſtates of the Duke of Cleve, before diſmembred and divided betwixt the Competitors for the Dukedom on the death of the laſt Duke hereof, Anno 1609, contained the Dukedoms of Cleve, Guilick and Berg, and the Earldom of Mark or March, all lying in a ring together. And though theſe two laſt lie on the other ſide of the Rhene, and ſo not properly within the old Precincts of the Kingdom of Lorrain, or any of the Roman Provinces before named; yet being they belonged all to the ſame Prince, not parted by the interpoſition of other Countries, they ſhall be handled here together as the ſame Eſtate.

1. The Dukedom of CLEVE, properly and diſtinctly ſo called, hath on the Eaſt the Countries of Mark and Berg with ſome part of Weſtphalen, on the Weſt Gelderland and ſome part of Limbourg, on the North the Earldom of Zutphen and the Land of Over-Yſſel, and on the South Gulick and the Land of Colen. So called from Cleve the chief Town of it.

The Country is very Fruitful both for Corn and Paſturage, well ſtocked with Cattel of all ſorts for neceſſary uſe and pleaſure; hath good ſtore of Fowl, both tame and wilde; is bleſſed alſo with an healthy Air, and, in a word, with all things needful for the life of man, well watered with the Rhene, the Roer, the Duſſel, the Ezſat, and the Nirſi, common to this and the reſt of the incorporate Provinces.

The places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Cleve, (in Latine Clivia) ſo called, becauſe built on the ſides of three little Hills (which the Latines call Clivi) gently deſcending towards the Banks of the Rhene, which not far off divides it ſelf into ſeveral Chanels. An ancient Town, and of great note in former time, as appears by many old Foundations and other monuments of Antiquity continually digged up in the Fields adjoining; but chiefly by an old four-ſquare Tower built on the higheſt of the three Hills, of great height and ſtate, Founded by Julius Cæſar as a Bulwark againſt the Germans inhabiting the farther ſide of the River. For proof of which, beſides the old Tradition conſtantly maintained, there is an Inſcription on the Gates of the Duke's Palace, near adjoyning to it, which ſaith, Anno ab Urbe DCXCIIX. C. Julius Dictator, his partibus ſubactis, hanc Arcem fundavit; i.e. that in the year 698, from the building of Rome, Julius Cæſar the Dictator, having ſubdued thoſe parts of the Country, cauſed this Tower to be built. 2. Santen, on the banks of the Rhene, a Town of great Antiquity, as the Ruines of it do declare; ſuppoſed by Pighius to be the Trajana Colonia of the Ancients. 3. Weſel, (in Latine Veſalia) a fair and rich Town, ſeated on the Confluence of the Rhene with the River of Lippe, which, riſing in Weſtphalia, doth here loſe it ſelf: of great note for a Colledge of Secular Canons built here by Eberard the 9th Earl, Anno 840, or thereabouts; and an Hoſpital liberally endowed for old impotent perſons, Founded by Henry de Baers, the Duke's Chancellour. A Town not ſubject to theſe Dukes, though within the Dukedom, being reckoned an Imperial City, and one of the Hanſe-Towns; now neither ſo Imperial nor ſo free as formerly: poſſeſſed firſt with the Spaniard with a Garriſon of 3000 men (at the beginning of the War of Cleve) by D. Lewis Velaſco, and from them taken by the States of the United Provinces, Anno 1628. 4. Burick, on the French ſide of the Rhene, over againſt Weſel, amongſt goodly Corn-fields and pleaſant Paſtures. 5. Duysburg, or Tuitchburg, in Latine called Teutoburgum, a Town of the ancient Germans, (as the name importeth) ſituate on the Rhene, betwixt the Angra and the Roer, two noted Rivers. A Town formerly of great Trading, and notably well built; Imperial, and one of the Hanſe: but ceaſed to be Imperial when ſold by Rodolph of Habſpurg to Theodorick the ninth of that name, Earl of Cleve; together with 6. Cranenburg, another Town of this Dukedom, but of leſſer note. 7. Emmerick, on the Rhene, a well-frequented Town, remarkable for a very fair School. 8. Rees. 9. Griet, and 10. Grietbuiſen, all upon the Rhene. 11. Calcar, a Town more within the Land, but not far from the River; grown wealthy by the trade of Cloathing, and the beſt Beer or Ale in all theſe parts, ſold thence abundantly into the Country round about. Not far from whence, at a place called Auff de Baern, it is ſuppoſed that Cæſar Germanicus built his Bridge over the Rhene, when he went from Vetera Caſtra againſt the Marſi, a Nation of Germany. 12. Gennep, upon the Niers or Nirſi, not far from its influx into the Maes: which together with Duiſſele and Riexwald were bought of Sigiſmund, the Emperour, by Adolph the firſt Duke of Cleve, for a great ſum of money.

South of the Land of Cleve, betwixt it and Colen, lieth the County of MUERS, extended all along on the banks of the Rhene; a diſtinct State, the Earl of which is ſubject to no other Prince but the Emperour only; ſo called from Muers, the chief Town of it, ſituate on the French ſide of the Rhene, over againſt Duysburg. Next Towns to which are, 2. Orſey. 3. Augur; of which little memorable. A ſmall Territory, but in a very fruitful Soil. The neighbourhood whereof to the Land of Colen (to which it ſerveth as an Outwork upon that ſide) preſerved it in former times from the Dukes of Cleve, who otherwiſe, no doubt, either by Arms or Marriage had been maſters of it, as they were of the adjoining Provinces on both ſides of the River.

2. GULICK-LAND, or the Dukedom of Gulick, hath on the Eaſt the County of Muers and the Land of Colen, on the Weſt Gelderland and Limbourg, on the North Cleve, and on the South the reſt of the Land of Colen. The Air and Soil are much of the ſame nature as in Cleve; ſave that here is a greater plenty of Woad for dying, and a better breed of Horſes than in the other. The Seat of the Menapii in the times of old.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Guilick, in Latine Juliacum, (whence the French call it Juliers) known by that name in the Itinerary of Antoninus, ſufficient proof for the Antiquity thereof, but not otherwiſe famous; ſeated upon the River Roer; the chief Seat heretofore of the Dukes of Guilick, before the uniting hereof with Cleve; and, ſince the diſſolution of that Eſtate, poſſeſſed ſometimes by the States of the United Provinces, and ſometimes by the Spaniards, called in by the Competitors to aſſert their Titles. 2. Dueren, on the ſame River, the Marcodurum of the old Writers; and of late memorable for the long Siege which it held againſt Charles the fifth;

in

in his Wars againſt William Duke of Cleve and Guilick for the Dukedom of Geldres. 3. Munſter Eyfel, (in Latine Monaſterium Eyfaliæ) ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Munſter of Weſtphalen, pleaſantly ſeated in a Valley begirt with Mountains, not far from the ſpring or fountain of the River Erp. 4. Caſter, ſo called of a ſtately and magnificent Caſtle built for defence of this part of the Country. 5. Berken, on the River Erp. 6. Meroden, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, which gives name to an honourable and ancient Family. 7. Enskirck. 8. Berklen, &c.

There is alſo within the limits of this Dukedom the famous Town of Aix, as the French, or Aken, as the Germans call it; famous of old time for the hot Baths both within and without the Town, whence it had the name of Aix, or Aquen, (in Latine Aquiſgranum;) ſituate on the edge of Limbourg, in a fruitful Soil, but the Buildings nothing anſwerable to the fame of the place, inhabited for the moſt part by Smiths and Braſiers, who drive the greateſt Trade herein, working continually on Iron and other metals, with which they are ſupplyed abundantly out of Liege and Limbourg. The Town is Imperial, but under the Protection of the Dukes of Cleve: at the expiration of which Family, under colour of ſome quarrels about Religion, it was ſeiſed on and garriſoned by Marqueſs Spinola for the King of Spain. It was of great fame formerly for the death and ſepulture of Charls the Great, by him made one of the three Seats of the Weſtern Empire, and deſigned by him to be the place in which the King of the Romans ſhould receive his Crown for the Kingdom of Germany at the hands of the Archbiſhop of Colen. The Town is ſuppoſed to be formerly the wintering Camp of the Romans, called in Tacitus Vetera, which was taken by Civilis in the beginning of his Rebellion againſt Veſpaſian; during which Wars it is often mentioned by the Writers of thoſe times. They were built and ſtrengthened by Auguſtus, the better to keep under the Germans; quippe illis hybernis obſideri premique Germanias Auguſtus crediderat, as Tacitus. At this day this Town and Triers, are reputed famous for holy Reliques; here being ſaid to be amongſt others the Bearing-cloth wherewith our Saviour was wrapt when he was in his Swadling-clouts, which the Emperour ſolemnly worſhippeth at his Inauguration. Concerning the ambition which the Papiſts have to be thought poſſeſſors of theſe Reliques, ſee I beſeech you, how pitifully they have mangled the Head of S. John Baptiſt. They of Amiens brag that they have his Face, and ſo do they of S. John d' Angelie. The reſt of his Head is at Malta; yet is the hinder part of his Scull at Namur, and his Brain at Novum Roſtovienſe: another part of it is at Maurienne, another piece at Paris; his Jaw at Weſel, his Ear at S. Flowres, his Forehead and Hair at S. Salvadore's in Venice: another part of his Head is at Noyon, and another at Luca: Yet is his whole head entire and unmaimed in S. Sylveſter's Church at Rome. And ſo no doubt is this Bearing-cloth at more places than one.

But to return again to Gulick. It was once part of the poſſeſſions of the Dukes of Lorrain; whether laid to it at the firſt erection of that Dukedom, as ſome Writers ſay, or added to it by the Princes of the Houſe of Ardenne, when they ſucceeded in the ſame, I dare not poſſibly determine; although the lying of this Country within the ancient Verge or Perambulation of the great Foreſt of Ardenne makes the laſt in my opinion not to be improbable. It was firſt made an Earldom of it ſelf in the perſon of Euſtace, Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain, who ſeiſed upon it as his part of the Eſtate on the death of Godfrey, his elder Brother Baldwin being abſent in the Holy Hand. In the perſon of William the fourth of that name it was made a Marquiſate, advanced unto that honour by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1329, created not long after Duke of Guilick by Charles the fourth, Anno 1356. His Eſtate was much augmented about that time, or but ſhortly after, by his Marriage with Mary, Siſter and Heir of Rainold and Edward Dukes of Geldres, adding thereby that Dukedom unto this of Gulick. His two Sons, William and Rainold, both Dukes ſucceſſively, dying without iſſue, the Eſtate fell to Adolphus, Duke of Berg or Monts, as the next Heir-male, Anno 1425; and finally, together with that of Berg, was added to the Dukedom of Cleve, by the Marriage of Mary Heir hereof with John the 3. Duke of Cleve, and with it conjoyned till the expiration of that noble Family; whereof more anon.

As for the Eſtates of Berg and Mark, they had one original, begun by two Brothers, the Sons of Theodorick Lord of Teiſterbant, of the Houſe of Cleve: out of which Houſe as they deſcended, ſo into that they finally were again reſolved, as their firſt materials. Of theſe two Brothers, Adolphus, being the elder, was by the Emperour Henry, ſurnamed the Fowler, made Earl of Altena Anno 930, or thereabouts; and Eberard, the younger, by the ſame Emperour made Earl of Berg. But Eberard, entering a Monaſtery of his own Foundation, left his Eſtate and Earldom of Berg to the Elder Brother. United thus into one Eſtate, they became again divided betwixt the Sons of Adolph, the 3. of that name, and fourth Earl of Altena and Berg; Engelbert the younger Son enjoying the Eſtate of Berg, and Eberard the elder ſucceeding his Father in that of Altena. How they became united to the Houſe of Cleve, we ſhall ſee hereafter, having firſt looked over the Chorography or Deſcription of them.

3. The Dukedom of BERG is bounded or the Eaſt with Weſtphalen and the Country of Mark, on the Weſt with the Rhene from Weſel up as high as Colen, by which 'tis parted from the Dukedom of Cleve, on the North with the River Lippe, which ſeparates it from the reſt of Cleve, and on the South with the Land of Colen. So called from the Hilline's of the Country, Berg in Dutch ſignifying an Hill, (as Burg doth a Town or Burrough;) from whence the Earls and Dukes hereof are called Montenſes in Latine, and les Contes and Ducs de Mont in French. The Country for the moſt part, in the Vales eſpecially, yields a great ſtore of the beſt Wheat, and conſequently of the pureſt Bread; and in the Hill-countries rich Mines of Coal, wherewith they do ſupply their neighbours.

Chief places in it are, 1. Duſſeldorp, ſo called of the River Duſſel, upon which it is ſituate, the River not far off falling into the Rhene. 2. Adenburg, built by Eberhard the firſt Earl of Berg, the Seat of him and his Succeſſours, till removed to Duſſeldorp. 3. Keiſerſwerd, ſituate on the Rhene, belonging anciently to the Empire, but bought for a great ſum of money of Charles the 4. by John Earl of Cleve. 4. Mulheim, on the Rhene alſo, juſt againſt Colen on the other ſide of the water; fortified in the year 1614, and made the Receptacle of the Proteſtants of that Biſhoprick, prohibited the free exerciſe of Religion in their own dwellings; but razed not long after by Marqueſs Spinola, on complaint made by thoſe of Colen to the Emperour Matthias. 5. Stelt, or Steltium, on the Roer, amongſt the Coal-mines. 6. Angermond, on the mouth of the River Angra, as the name imports. 7. Eſſen, or Eſſendia, on the borders of the County of Mark, once an Imperial, but under the Protection of the Earls of Berg; of moſt note for a Monaſtery here built by Alfride the 4. Biſhop of Hildeſheim, for 52 Nuns and 20 Canons, liberally endowed, and having great command on the Dorps adjoyning.

How

How Berg at first was made an Earldom, how joyned unto Altena, and disjoyned again, hath been shewed before. No sooner made a State distinct, but it was added to the Patrimony of the Earls of Gulick, by the Marriage of Earl William with the Daughter and Heir of Berg. Parted again betwixt William and Adolphus, Sons of Gerrard the 2. An. 1247. the first succeeding in the Earldom of Gulick, and the last in Berg. During this Partage it was made a Dukedom in the person of William the first of that name by Wenceslaus, the Emperour, Anno 1389. whose Son Adolphus, as next Heir, succeeded in the Dukedom of Gulick, An. 1423. How both were added unto Cleve hath been said already.

4. The Earldom of MARCH, or MARK, hath on the East and North Westphalia, on the West the Dukedom of Cleve, on the South that of Berg or Monts. So called, as being seated in the Marches of Westphalen, out of which it was taken. The Country for the most part, like the rest of Westphalen, is more fit for Pasturage than Corn, woody, and yielding store of Pawnage to those herds of Swine with which it plentifully abounds.

Chief places in it are, 1. Werden, upon the River Ruer, on the edge of Westphalia, the people whereof get great wealth by grazing of Cattel. 2. Soest, (in Latine Susatum) for wealth and greatness not inferiour to any in Westphalen, (except Munster only) consisting of ten Parishes, and lording it over many rich and pleasant Villages. Anciently it belonged to the Bishops of Colen; but in the year 1454. did voluntarily yield it self to the Duke of Cleve (being then Earl of March also) and was by Duke John the 4. couragiously defended against those Prelates. 3. Arusberg, a fine and pleasant site, used for a retiring-place by the Electors of Colen, unto whom it belongs. 4. Dortmund, (in Latine Tremonia) a County anciently of it self, and held immediately of the Empire, possessed by the Trotmanni, a Tribe of the Suevians, from whence first called Trotmania, and at last Tremonia. 5. Blancostein, built commodiously by Adolphus the fifth of that name, and first Earl of March; as was also 6. Hom, or Hammone. 7. Unna, of which nothing memorable. 8. Altena, the first Title of the Earls of this House, before they assumed that of the Earls of March, assumed first by Adolphus the 4. on the Conquest of some Lands in the Marches of Westphalen, continuing in that Family till united with Cleve.

As for the Earldom or Dukedom of CLEVE, out of which it was taken, and to which the rest of those Estates did in time accrue; it was one of the most ancient Estates or Principalities in these parts of the world, continuing in a direct line for the space of 900 years, held by them of the Kings of France, and afterwards of the Kings of Lorrain, till the incorporating of that Kingdom with the German Empire. Begun first by Elias Grallius, Companion to Charles Martel in his Wars against the Frisons, Saxons and Bavarians, whose Son Theodorick added hereto by Marriage the County of Teisterbant, containing the Towns and Seigniouries of Altena in Westphalen, as also of Bornel, Heudson, Bueron, Culemburg, in the Belgick Provinces. By Baldwin the sixth Earl was added the Territory of Twentzen, (in Latine Regio Twentana) given him by Ludovicus Pius; by Theodorick the fifth, the Town and Seigniory of Dinslack, setled upon him on his Marriage with Matilda the Heir thereof; by Theodorick the 9. the County of Hulkenrade, near Nuys in the Land of Colen, together with the Towns of Duysburg and Culemburg, bought of Rodolphus Habspurgensis, by John his Son the Town & Territory of Keiserswerd, bought of Charles the 4. By Adolph the 29. Earl the Earldom of March, formerly taken out of it, was again united. By Adolph his Successor (made the first Duke hereof by the Emperour Sigismund, Anno 1417.) were added the Lordships of Gennep, Duiffele, and Ricxwald bought of the said Emperour; together with the County of Ravenstein, the Towns of Leoburg, Limers, and Hatteren, for the ransom of William Duke of Berg, and other noble persons taken prisoners by him, An. 1397; by John, the first Duke of that name, the the Town and Territory of Soest; and finally by John the 3. the Dukedoms of Berg and Gulick, as Heir thereof by his Mother Mary, sole Daughter and Heir of William the fifth and sixth, the last Duke thereof. To which great height this ancient and noble Family had not long attained, and thereby made themselves and their Sons and Daughters fit Matches for the greatest Princes, but it pleased God to bring to its fatal end, and by that means to dissipate this brave Estate in the hands of Strangers, as shall be shewed in the conclusion of this Catalogue of 1521 33. John III. Duke of Cleve, and Earl of March, &c. by descent from his Father; and Duke of Gulick and Berg in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of William the last Duke thereof.

1539 34. William, Son of John the 3. and Mary his Wife, Daughter and sole Heir of William the last Duke of Gulick and Berg, Father of the Lady Anne of Cleve, one of the Wives of Henry the 8 of England. He contended very strongly against Charles the fifth for the Dukedom of Geldres; but, being two weak for so great an Adversary, made his Submission to him at Venlo and so saved his Estates.

1584 35. John-William, Son of the former William, during the life of Charles-Frederick, his elder Brother, was Bishop of Munster; on whose death, Anno 1575. he resigned that dignity, and in the end succeeded his Father in his whole estates, which he managed with great piety and prudence till the year 1610. and then died issueless; the last of that ancient and noble Family of the Dukes of Cleve. After whose death much quarrel and contention grew about the Succession betwixt the several Competitors and Pretenders to it: of which the principal were, 1. Leopold, Archduke of Austria, pretending an Investiture from the Emperour Rodolphus in the Dukedom of Juliers, to whom for want of Heirs-males the Estate was said to be escheated. 2. John-George, Duke of Saxony, descended from Sibyll, Daughter of Duke John the third; at whose Marriage with John-Frederick the Elector of Saxony, Anno 1535, it was said to have been solemnly agreed upon, that on the failing of the Heirs-males of Cleve, the Issue of that Marriage should succeed therein. 3. George-William, Duke of Prussia, Son of John Sigismund the Elector of Brandenburg by the Lady Anne his Wife, eldest Daughter of Albert of Brandenburg, Duke of Prussia, and of Maria Eleanora, the eldest Sister and next Heir of the Duke deceased. 4. Wolfgangus-Gulielmus, Palatine of Newburg, Son of Magdalen, the younger Sister of that Mary, who claimed the Estate as nearest Kinsman by one degree to the said last Duke. And though the right seemed most apparently on the side of Brandenburg, the Estate in tail, pretended by the Duke of Saxony, being formerly cut off by Imperial authority, and that pretended to by the Duke of Newburg not of force in Germany:

yet being that Leopold was in Arms, and had already forced a poſſeſſion of Juliers and of moſt parts of that Country, the two Princes of Brandenburg and Newburg ſoon agreed the controverſie, and by the help of the Proteſtant Princes their Confederates recovered the greateſt part of it from the hands of Leopold. But the Palatine of Newburg, not content with his Partage, firſt married with a Daughter of the Duke of Bavaria, then reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome, and called in the Spaniſh Arms, under the command of Marqueſs Spinola, to abett his Quarrel: which made George-William, Son of the Elector of Brandenburg and the Lady Anne, to call in the Forces of the States, under the command of Maurice Earl of Naſſau, after Prince of Orange. The iſſue of which War was this, that Spinola poſſeſſed himſelf of Weſel, Aken, Mulheim, Duſſeldorp, and moſt other places of importance in Berg and Gulick; and the States got into their power ſome Towns of Gulick, with Rees and Emerick in the Dukedom of Cleve, and almoſt the whole County of Marck. And though moſt parts of theſe Eſtates have been delivered ſince to the rightful Owners, yet other places of importance are detained from them. Which notwithſtanding that they both pretend to keep for the uſe of thoſe Princes in whoſe cauſe they ſtood: yet when ſuch ſtrong parties keep the Stakes, it is moſt eaſie to determine who will win the Game: ſuch Alterations as have happened in the chance of War, by the reciprocal winning and loſing of ſome Towns on both ſides, not much conducing to the benefit of the rightful Owners.

The Arms of theſe Princes were, 1. Gules, over an Eſcocheon in Feſſe Argent, a Carbuncle pierced, pometted and flowred Or, for the Dukedom of Cleve. 2. Or, a Lion Azure, armed Gules, for the Dukedom of Gulick. The Arms of Berg and Marck I have no-where found.

2. The Eſtates of the Three ELECTOR-BISHOPS.

ADjoyning to the Eſtates of Cleve are thoſe of the Spiritual Electors of the Empire of Germany, Colen, Mentz, and Triers; not ſo contiguous and conterminous as thoſe of Cleveland, and therefore to be laid out ſeverally by their Metes and Boundaries. And firſt for COLEN-Land, or the Eſtate of the Archbiſhop and Elector of Colen. It is bounded on the Eaſt with the Dukedom of Berg, divided from it by the Rhene, on the Weſt with Gulick, on the North with Cleve it ſelf and the County of Muers, and on the South extending to the Land of Triers. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Ubii, in former times poſſeſſed of the Countries of Berg and Marck; but being warred on by the Germans bordering next upon them, they were by the clemency of Agrippa, then Lieutenant of Gaul, received into protection, and by him placed along the French ſide of the Rhene, as well for defence of the Borders of the Roman Empire, as for their own ſecurity againſt that Enemy. Won from the Romans by the French in the Reign and under the conduct of Childerick, An. 412, or thereabout; and from the French by the Emperour Otho the firſt, An. 949. By Otho the 2. made a part of the Dukedom of Lorrain, or at the leaſt given by him unto Charles of France, the firſt Duke thereof. After whoſe death, deceaſing without Iſſue-male, the Town of Colen and many other pieces upon the Rhene were ſeized on by Otho the 3. and by him reſtored to the Empire. Since that time the City of Colen hath remained Imperial, and of late times incorporated amongſt the Hanſe-Towns; but the Territory near unto it, and a great part of Weſtphalen, ſubject immediately to the Biſhop. The Biſhop's See was firſt founded here by S. Maternus, one of the Diſciples of S. Peter, as hath been conſtantly affirmed by old Tradition: but howſoever it was an Epiſcopal See, without all queſtion, in the time of Conſtantine, Maternus, Biſhop hereof, ſubſcribing amongſt others to the Council of Arles, Anno 326. And being Colen was in thoſe times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Secunda, the Biſhop had the power of a Metropolitan; according to the rule and obſervation ſo often mentioned. Afterwards when the Empire was made Elective, theſe Biſhops, with their brethren of Mentz and Triers, were made three of the ſeven which were to nominate and elect the ſucceeding Emperour: after which time it is no wonder that they grew both in Power and Patrimony.

Places of moſt importance within this Electorate are, 1. Bonn, ſituate on the banks of the Rhene, in the moſt pleaſant and fruitful place of all the Country; the ordinary Reſidence of the Archbiſhop, whoſe Houſe or Palace here is ſaid to be one of the fairеſt in all Germany. By Tacitus it is called Bonna, and ſometimes Caſtra Bonnenſia, the Wintering-camp in his time of the Sixth Legion. 2. Nuys, by the ſame Writer called Noveſium, (Niveſia by Antoninus) ſeated on the Erp, not far from its fall into the Rhene; the break-neck of the glories of Charles Duke of Burgundy, who being reſolved to get this Town into his hands, as a convenient paſs into Germany, lay ſo long before it, that he loſt the opportunity of joyning with King Edward the 4. of England, whom he had purpoſely invited to the War of France, and yet was fain to go without it. By means whereof he grew ſo low in reputation, that he was undermined by the French, defied by the Lorrainer, forſook by the Engliſh, baffled by the Switzers, and at laſt overthrown and ſlain by that beggerly Nation. 3. Ernace, or Andernach, by Marcellinus called Antenacum, one of the ten Garriſons erected by the Romans on the banks of the Rhene, to ſecure their Province from the Germans; the other nine being Confluentz, Boppart, Worms, Bing, Zabern, Altrip, Seltz, Straesburg, and Waſſenburg. 4. Lintz, ſeated on the ſame River alſo. 5. Sontina, a Town of good repute. 6. Zulp, now a Village of no eſteem but for the Antiquities of it, by Tacitus and Antoninus called Tolliacum, moſt memorable for the great Victory which Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French (upon a Vow made in the heat of the Fight to embrace the Goſpel) obtained againſt the whole power of the Almans, never preſuming after that to invade his Territories. 7. Rhineberg, commonly called Berck, the moſt Northern Town of all the Biſhoprick, ſituate on the Rhene, (as the name imports) there where the Lands of this Biſhop as alſo of the Dukes of Cleve and the Earls of Muers meet upon a point. A Town which for theſe 60 years hath been of little uſe or profit to the right Owner, poſſeſſed ſometimes by the Spaniards, ſometimes by the Confederate States; for each commodiouſly ſeated, as opening a paſſage up the River, and receiving great Cuſtoms on all kind of Merchandiſe paſſing to and fro. But having finally been poſſeſſed by the Spaniard from the year 1606 till 1633, it was then regained for the States by Henry of Naſſau, Prince of Orange, with the loſs of no more then 60 men: there being found in the Town 30 braſs pieces of Ordnance, 70 barrels of Powder, with Victuals and Ammunition of all ſorts thereunto proportionable. 8. Colen, ſituate on the Rhene, firſt built by the Ubii before mentioned, and by them called Oppidum Ubiorum, afterwards, in honour of Agrippina, (Daughter of Germanicus, and Wife of Claudius) who was here born, made a Roman Colony, and called Colonia Agrippina, and ſometimes by way of eminency Colonia only; thence the name of Colen. A rich, large, populous and magnificent City, containing about five miles in compaſs, in which are numbred 19 Hospitals, 37 Monasteries of both Sexes, 30 Chappels of our Lady, 9 Parishes, and 10 Collegiat Churches, besides the Cathedral, being a Church of vast greatness, but of little beauty, and not yet finished: the Metropolitan whereof is Chancellour of Italy, the second of the three Electors, and writes himself Duke of Westphalen and Angrivaria. Nigh to this Town did Cæsar with incredible expedition make a Bridge over the Rhene, which more terrified the barbarous enemy than the reports of his valour. So powerful is laborious industry, that it overcometh all disasters, and maketh the most unpassable waters yield to heroick resolutions.

In this Town also is said to lie the bodies of the Three wise men which came from the East to worship our Saviour, vulgarly called the three Kings of Colen. The whole Story is at large written in Tables which are fastned unto their Tombs; the pith whereof is this: The first of them, called Melchior, an old man with a large Beard, offered Gold, as unto a King; the second, called Gasper, a beardless young man, offered Frankincense, as unto God, the third, called Balthasar, a Blackmore with a spreading Beard, offered Myrrhe, as unto a Man ready for his Sepulchre. That they were of Arabia, the Table saith is probable; 1. because they came from the East, and so is Arabia in respect of Hierusalem; and 2. because it is said in the 72. Psalm, The Kings of Arabia shall bring gifts. As for their bodies, they are there said to have been translated by Helena, the Mother of Constantine, unto Constantinople; from thence by Eustorsius, Bishop of Millain, removed unto Millain, and finally brought hither by Rainoldus Bishop hereof, Anno 1164. This is the substance of the History; which for my part I reckon amongst the Apocrypha, (except it be their coming from some part of Arabia) but have not leisure in this place to refel the Fable.

As for the temporal Estate of the Bishops of Colen, it came unto them specially by the munificence of the Emperours of the House of Saxony; the Dukedom of Engern, containing a good part of Westphalen, being acquired unto this See by Bruno, once Archbishop hereof, one of the younger Sons of the Emperour Henry the first, surnamed the Fowler, with the consent of Otho the first, his elder Brother. To which was added not long after the whole Land of Colen (as we have formerly described it) by Otho the 2. which being formerly a part of the Kingdom of Lorrain, was taken out of it, and settled on the Bishops hereof, at such time as the Dukedom of Lorrain was erected by him; such pieces only as are found on the other side of the Rhene (neither great nor many) being added by the wit and industry of the following Bishops: exceedingly increased both in Power and patrimony by the addition of Liege to this Electorate; it being of late the constant custom of the Canons of Liege to chuse the Archbishop of Colen for their Prince and Pastor.

Next to the Bishoprick of Colen lieth the Land of TRIERS, extended all along the course of the Mosselle, from the Dukedom of Lorrain on the South, beyond the Influx of that River into the Rhene at the City of Confluentz, where it bordereth on the Land of Colen. It is bounded on the East with Luxenburg, as on the West with that part of Franconia which lieth below the confluence of the said two Rivers, and is now called Rhinegow; more Southward on that side with the Country of West-reich and the Dukedom of Zweibruck, parts of the Palatinate of the Rhene. The Country towards Lorrain and Luxenburg is somewhat wilde and barren, more fruitful about Triers it self and the bank of the Rhene; in all parts generally more pleasant than profitable, the greatest Riches of it lying in Woods and Minerals. The Bishop's See was here first erected by Eucherius, a Disciple and follower of S. Peter. The reality whereof is not only testified by the Martyrologies, but by Methodius, a Writer of approved credit, who adds Valerius and Maternus for his next Successors; the line Episcopal continuing till the Council of Arlees, Anno 326, Agritius Bishop of Triers subscribing to the Acts thereof. From this time forwards, and before, the Bishop had the reputation and authority of a Metropolitan, the City of Triers being anciently the Metropolis of Belgica Prima, within which it stands. It increased exceedingly by being made one of the three Electors of the Spiritualty, though the last in order, and Chancellour to the Emperour for the Realm of France: the Fortunes of which Realm it followed, till wrested from it, with the rest of the Kingdom of Lorrain, by the German Emperours.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Confluentz, or Coblentz, the Confluentes of Antoninus, so called because seated on the Confluence or Meeting of the Rhene and the Mosselle; the Station anciently of the First Legion. A populous and well-built Town, and seated in a pleasant and fertile Country. 2. Eerenbretstein, over against Coblentz, on the other side of the Rhene, beautified with a strong Castle of the Bishop's, mounted upon a lofty Hill, which not only gives a gallant prospect to the eye, but commands both the Town and River. 3. Boppart, seated on the Rhene, and called so quasi Bonport, from the commodiousness of the Creek (upon which it standeth) for the use of Shipping: one of the Forts (as Confluentz before mentioned also was erected by the Romans on the Rhene for defence of Gaul against the Germans; occasioning in time both Towns. It was once miserably wasted by Richard Earl of Cornwall and King of the Romans, because the Bishop of Triers agreed not unto his Election; but soon recovered of those hurts. The ancient name hereof in the Itinerary of Antoninus is supposed to be Bodobrica. It was pawned to the Bishops of Triers by Henry the 7. and not yet redeemed. 4. Sarbrucken, on the edge of Lorrain, (by Antoninus called Pons Sarnix) seated on the River or Brook called Sar, (whence it had the name) at the fall thereof into the Mosselle: possessed at the present by a Branch of the House of Nassau, (but Homagers of this Electour) entituled hence, according to the Dutch fashion, Counts of Nassau in Sarbruck. 5. Veldentz, and 6. Beilstein, on the Mosselle, of which nothing memorable. 7. Treves, or Triers, in Latine Augusta Trevirorum, the principal City of the Treviri, who possessed this Tract; seated upon the Mosselle also; the Metropolis of the Province of Belgica Prima, and honoured with the Residence of the Vicar or Lieutenant-General for the whole Dioces of Gaul; by consequence the Seat of a Metropolitan when it submitted to the Gospel. Of such antiquity it is, that it is said to have been founded 150 years before the City of Rome: of no great beauty of it self, and as little Trading; the River not being capable of Ships of burthen, and the Air generally so cloudy and incined to rain, that it is by some called merrily Cloaca Planetarum. It passed sometimes among the number of Imperial Cities, but now acknowledgeth the Electour for the Lord thereof; by whom it was made an University, one of the ancientest in all Germany, and of as much resort for the study of good Arts and Sciences as the best amongst them. 8. Ober-Wesel, or Vesalia superior, (so called to distinguish it from Wesel in the Dukedom of Cleve, which is Vesalia inferior, or the Under-Wesel) the farthest place of this District, seated on the Rhene, not far from Baceharach a Town of the Palatinate; of no great note, but that it is accompted for a Town Imperial.

This Country anciently was part of the great and famous Earldom of Mosselle, denominated from the River Mosselle, along the Course whereof it was first erected; an an Estate founded by the disherited Sons of Clodian, second King of the French, at the same time (and on the same occasion also) in which the Earldom of Ardenne was erected by them, of which we have already spoken when we were in Belgium: this of the two the more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Mentz, as lying nearer to the Court, and so more in sight; the other being farther off, in Countries far less cultivate, but more defensible. This Earldom comprehending, besides this of Triers, the Countries of Zweibrucken and West-reich, and so much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the French side of the Rhene, occasioned the Princes of it to be much looked after; and they maintained their Port to the very last: insomuch that Gislebert or Gilbert Earl of Moselle, in the time of the Emperour Henry the first, surnamed the Fowler, was thought by him a fit Husband for his Daughter Gerberg, married after his decease to Lewis surnamed Transmarine, King of France: and Gertrude, Daughter of Theodorick, who came after Gilbert, was married to Henry surnamed Gozelo, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, and by him made the Mother of another Henry, Successour unto Otho the 3. in the Roman Empire. Impoverished not a little both in Power and Patrimony by the erection of the Dukedom of Lorrain, there grew some Feuds between those Houses, occasioning the death of Albert another of these Earls, slain (as it is said by Lazius) by Godfrey, Son of Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain: more probably by some other Prince of the House of Ardenne, it not being founded in any other approved Authour, that Godfrey of Bouillon was the Father of any Children. But this Difference being reconciled by the Marriage of Bertha, Daughter of Simon Earl hereof, with Thierrie the 9. Duke of Lorrain, and the Family of these Earls expiring in a short time after, this part of the Estate was seized on by the Bishops of Triers; that part of the Palatinate which lieth on the Gallick side of the Rhene, by the Bishops of Mentz, Spires, Wormes, and the Princes Palatine; the rest being taken in by the Dukes of Lorrain, who do still enjoy it; the Emperours of those times being either willing to it, or not able to help it.

3. The Bishoprick of MENTZ is not laid out by Bounds and Limits, as the other, because the Patrimony & Estate thereof doth not lie together, dispersed for the most part about Franconia, intermixed with the Lands & Towns of the Princes Palatine, the Bishops of Wormes, Spires, and others. So that the temporal Estate of this Electour is every way inferiour unto those of Triers and Colen; superiour unto both in place and dignity, he being the first in rank of the whole Electoral College, Chancellour for the Empire, and in all Meetings sitteth at the right hand of the Emperour. The Bishop's See was first placed here, as some report, by S. Crescens, one of the Disciples of S. Paul, of whose being sent by him into Gallia (for so the ancient Writers understand Galatia) the Apostle speaketh 2 Tim. 4. Though others with more probability seat him at Vienna in Daulphine. But whether it were here or there, certain it is, that anciently this City was a See Episcopal, Martine the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. And if a Bishop, certainly a Metropolitan Bishop, this City being in those times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Prima. But Christianity being worn out of these parts of Germany by the conquests of the French, Almans, and other Infidels, was again restored in this Tract by Boniface, an English-man, the first Archbishop of Mentz of this new Plantation, (in and about the time of Pepin surnamed the Gross, Major of the Palace to the French Kings, and Father of C. Martel) who, for the Orthodoxy of his Doctrine, and the number of Churches planted by him, hath been deservedly honoured with the title of the Apostle of Germany.

Towns of most note belonging to the Bishops hereof are, 1. Mentz it self, the Moguntiacum of the Ancients, so called from the River of Maine, formerly Mogus and Moganus in the Latine, (now better known by the name of Mœnus) opposite to the fall whereof into the Rhene it was built of old, so having the command of both Rivers; and for that cause made the Seat of a Roman Officer, commonly called the Duke of Mentz, who had a charge of the Frontiers, and especially of those ten Garrisons planted on the banks of the Rhene, spoken of before. It is stretched out in great length on the River's side, but not of answerable breadth; well built, and populous towards the water, in other parts not so well inhabited. The publick Buildings generally are very large and beautiful, the Houses built according to the old Roman Model; the most magnificent whereof is the Bishop's Palace, who is the immediate Lord both of the Town and Territory, extended on both sides of the Rhene, fruitful in all natural Commodities, and abounding with most excellent Wines. Of good note also for an University here founded by Theodorick, one of the Electors; but especially for the Art of Printing, which was here invented, or perfected at the least, and made fit for use. 2. Bing, seated on the Rhene, another of the Garrison-Towns erected by the Romans on the banks of that River. In a small Island of which, not far from this Town, is a Tower or Castelet called the Mouse-turn, i. e. the Tower of Mice, built by one Hatto (or Hanno) Archbishop of Mentz, Anno 900, or thereabouts, who in a year of great Scarcity pretending to relieve the poor people oppressed with Famine, caused them to be gathered together into an old Barn, where he burnt them all, saying, they were the Rats and Mice which devoured the Corn. After which barbarous act he was so persecuted by these Vermin, that, to avoid them, he was fain to build a Palace in the midst of the Rhene, whither the Rats and Mice followed him, and at last devoured him. 3. Lausstein. 4. Hasford, 5. Oxenford, 6. Alderburg, 7. Middleburg, 8. Carlostadt, the Birth-place of Carolostadius, of great note in the time of Luther. 9. Bischoffstein. 10. Koningsberg, (Mons regius in Latine) the Birth-place of Joannes de Monte regio, a famous Mathematician, as appeareth by his Comment upon Ptolemie's Almagest. Most of which Towns being in Frankenland, though of his Electorate, were not gained in gross by these Electours, as were the Land of Colen and District of Triers, but piecemeal in a manner, and by retail; partly upon the failure of the House of Schwaben, Dukes of Franconia also; partly by the munificence of the German Emperours; but specially by making the best use of their Votes and Suffrages in the Choice of Emperours, which they did not part withal for nothing. Such Towns hereof as lie on the French side of the Rhene were gained by like means upon the expiration of the House of Moselle.

3. The PALATINATE of the RHENE.

THE PALATINATE of the RHENE is bounded upon the East with the Dukedom of Wirtenberg and some part of Franconia, with the residue thereof and the River Maine on the North, on the South with Elsass or Alsatia, and on the West with the Land of Triers: extended in length from Coub to Gemersheim, North and South, 72 miles; and in breadth from Zweibruken to Lauden, East and West, 90 miles.

It is called also the Lower Palatinate, to difference it from the Palatinate of Bavaria, which is called the Upper; the Palatinate of the Rhene, because lying on the banks of that famous River. The whole Country is said to be the most pleasant part of all Germany, stored with all sorts of Fruits and Metalls, abounding with those cool Wines which, growing on the banks of the Rhene, have the name of Rheniſh; adorned with many goodly Towns, both for ſtrength, populouſneſs, and beauty; and finally, watered with the famous River of the Rhene, and the Neccar.

The Religion of this Country, and that of the Upper Palatinate, which depends upon it, hath much varied ſince the firſt Reformation eſtabliſhed by Frederick the ſecond according to the Form and Doctrine of the Confeſſion of Augsburg; the Doctrine and Diſcipline of Calvin being introduced by Frederick the third, the Lutheran Form reſtored again by Lewis or Ludowick the fifth, after his death exchanged by Frederick the fourth for that of Calvin, as more conducing to the ends of ſome needy Statiſts, who could not otherwiſe raiſe their Fortunes than by invading the Tithes and Glebe, and other poor remainders of the Churche's Patrimony; of which the Clergy being univerſally deprived throughout this Country, and reduced to miſerable ſhort Stipends, by the name of a Competency, became ſo contemptible, and neglected by all ſorts of men, that at the laſt the Church of the Palatinate was in the ſame condition with the Church of Iſrael under the reign of Jeroboam, when Prieſts were made out of the meaneſt of the people. And for the Government of the Churches, though moulded to the Geneva Plat-form as near as it might be, yet were thoſe Princes loth to leave too much power in the hands of the Elderſhips, and therefore did appoint ſome ſuperiour Officers to have an eye on them, whom they called Inſpectores & Præpoſitos, their Power being much the ſame with that of the particular Superintendent amongſt the Lutherans, and over them a ſtanding Conſiſtory conſiſting of three Miniſters and as many Counſellers of State, of the Prince's nominating, who in his name were to take care of all things which concerned the Church. A Temperament for which they were beholden to Eraſtus, a Doctor of Phyſick in the Univerſity of Heidelberg, who made this Pill, to purge Presbytery of ſome Popiſh humours which ſecretly lay hid in the body of it. But this whole Model and Religion of the Country is much changed of late, and the Religion of the Church of Rome reſtored in moſt parts thereof, ſince the Conqueſt of them by the Spaniards and Bavarians, which before we ſpake of.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Moſpach, a pretty neat Town on the banks of the Neccar, and a Præfecture, not far from the borders of Wirtenberg. 2. Ladenberg, near the influx of the ſame River into the Rhene; the moiety whereof was bought by Rupertus, the Emperour and Palatine, of the Earls of Hohenloe, An. 1571, the other moiety belonging to the Biſhop of Wormes. 3. Weinheim, a ſmall Town not far from Ladenberg, belonging once to the Archbiſhop of Mentz, but, on ſome controverſie ariſing about the Title, adjudged unto the ſaid Rupertus and his Heirs for ever. 4. Scrieſſen, in the ſame Tract, well ſeated, but not very large, ſold with the Caſtle of Straluberg to the ſaid Rupertus by Sifride (or Sigefride) of Straluberg, the right Heir hereof, Anno 1347. 5. Heidelberg, on the right ſhore of the Neccar, (going down the water) compaſſed on three ſides with Mountains, and lying open only towards the Weſt, which makes the Air hereof to be very unhealthy. The chief Beauty of it lieth in one long Street, extended in length from Eaſt to Weſt: on the South-eaſt ſide whereof is a fair and pleaſant Market-place and not far off a very high Mountain called Koningſtall, (that is to ſay, the Kingly Seat) upon the middle aſcent whereof is the Caſtle, where the Princes Electours uſe to keep their Courts; and on the very Summit or top thereof, the ruines of an old Tower blown up with Gunpowder. A Town of no great bigneſs, nor very populous, there being but one Church in it, which was uſed in the time of my Authour for Prayer and Preaching: the reſt being either ruined, or employed unto other uſes, if not repaired again, ſince the Spaniards became maſters of it, for more frequent Maſſes. Howſoever, it hath the reputation of being the chief City of this Palatinate; not long ſince furniſhed with a great and gallant Library, which for choice and number of Books (eſpecially Manuſcripts) was thought not to be fellowed in all Europe, till matched, if not over-matched, by the famous Bodleian Library of Oxford. Moſt of them, to the great prejudice of the proteſtant Cauſe were carried to Rome, and other places of that party, when the Town was taken by the Spaniards, Anno 1620. Finally for the Town it ſelf, it was once part of the poſſeſſions of the Biſhop of Wormes, from whom it was taken by the Palatines; and it is now famous for being the Seat of the Palſgraves, the Sepulchre of Rodolphus Agricola, and for an Univerſity founded by the Emperour and Palatine Rupertus, An. 1346. 6. Baccharach, on the Banks of Rhene, ſo called quaſi Bacchi ara, for the excellent Wines. 7. Coub, on the other ſide of the water; near unto which is the old and fair Caſtle called Pfalts, from whence the name Pfalts-grave, or Palſgrave, ſeemeth to ſome to have been derived. 8. Openheim, a ſtrong Town, which togerher with Keiſers-Lantern and Ingelheim were given to the Palatines by Wenceſlaus, and after ſettled on them by Rupertus the Emperour and Palatine for 100000 Florens, Anno 1402. 9. Creutznach, called anciently Stauroneſus. 10. Frankendale, lately a Monaſtery only, but being well peopled by ſuch of the Netherlands who to avoid the fury of the Duke of Alva fled hither, is now a Town of principal ſtrength. 11. Gemerſheim; and 12. Manheim, a well-fortified Town, ſeated on the Confluence of Rhene and Neccar.

On the Eaſtern part of the Country ſtandeth 13. Laden, ſituate on the little River Tauber, the ſartheſt bound of the Palatinate towards the North-eaſt, there adjoyning to the reſt of Frankenland. And on the Weſt ſide the Towns of 14. Newſtat, 15. Keiſers-Lautern, in Latine called Cæſarea Lutra, once a Town Imperial, from which, and from its ſituation on the River Lauter, it received this name. 16. Zweibrucken, inveſted with a large and ample Territory round about, called the Country of Zweibruck, the Patrimony and Title of a younger Houſe of the Pfaltzgraves, whom the Latine Writers call Principes Bipontani, the French the Princes of Deuxponts. 17. Simmeren, on the North-weſt point of it, where it meets with the Diſtrict of Triers; the Title of another Branch of the Palatine Family, called the Dukes of Simmeren, ſituate in that part of the Country which is called Weſtreich, of which Zweibrucken is alſo part. In all there are contained within the Palatinate 24 walled Towns, and 12 fair Palaces of the Prince: moſt of which they have added to their eſtate within little more then 400 years. Such excellent managers have they been of their own Eſtates, ſo potent in ordering the affairs of the Empire both in War and Peace, and ſo ingraffed themſelves into the moſt notable Families of Germany, that I may well ſay with Irenicus, Non eſt alia Germaniæ Familia cui plus debeat Nobilitas.

Within the Limits of this Country, and intermingled with the Lands of the Princes Palatine, are the Biſhopricks of Spires and Wormes; both ancient, and of great Revenue, but Feudataries for a great part of their Eſtates to theſe Electors. Of theſe, more towards the head of the Rhene, and on the Gallick ſide thereof, ſtands the City of Spires, by Ptolemy called Neomagus, from the newneſs of the building when that name was given; by Antoninus, Civitas Nemetum, from the Nemetes, who poſſeſſed this Tract; and ſometimes Spira, by which name it doth ſtill con-continue. A Town Imperial, and anciently a Bishop's See; Tessis the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. A neat Town, and very delectably seated; of great resort, by reason of the Imperial Chamber, the sovereign Court of Judicature of all the Empire, capable of Appeals from the Tribunals of all the Princes and free States thereof. A Court which first followed the Emperour in all his Removes, (as anciently the King's Bench in England) but by Maximilian the Emperour first made sedentary, and fixed at Francford; removed after to Wormes, and finally to this City by Charles the fifth. Sufficiently famous in that the name of Protestants was here taken up, given to the Princes and free Cities following the Reformed Religion, upon their legal Protestation here exhibited. More down the water, and on the same Shore thereof, stands the City of Wormes, one of those built upon the Rhene for defence of Gaul against the Germans; by Ptolemy called Borbetomagus, by Antonine Civitas Wormensis, whence the modern name; but generally Civitas Vangionum, from the Vangiones, the old Inhabitants of those parts, whose chief City it was. A Town Imperial as the former, and a See Episcopal as that is, and as ancient too; Victor the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen before mentioned. A Town to be observed for the first appearance which Luther made before Charles the 5. (the Imperial Chamber then being holden in this City,) who, being dissuaded from that journey by some of his Friends, returned this resolute Answer, That go he would, though there were as many Devils in the Town as there were Tiles on the Houses. Chief Towns belonging to these Bishops are, 1 Udenheim, a Town belonging to the Bishop of Spires, whose Residence it sometimes is; conveniently seated for the command of the Country, and therefore upon some design which was then in hand fortified strongly by the Bishop. But this new Fortification, being begun in a time of Peace, gave great occasion of distrust to the neighbouring Princes, who interposed with Frederick the fifth, then Prince Elector, (of whom it was held in chief) to cause the Bishop to desist from the finishing of it. Which when he had refused to do, pleading a Placart from the Emperour Matthias to compleat the work, the Prince Elector with the rest of the Confederates beat it down by force. For this contempt they were cited to Spires, the Imperial Chamber, in which it was also resolved to proceed suddenly and severely to their condemnation. One of the chief motives which occasioned that unfortunate Prince to entertain the offer of the Crown of Bohemia, and consequently a chief cause of the German Wars. In managing whereof this Town was thought so commodious, that Marquess Spinola caused the works to be raised again, made it the strongest Hold in all those Countries, and caused it to be called it by the name of Philipsburg. 2 Rottenberg, originally belonging to the Bishops of Spires, but of late times possessed by the Princes Palatine. Others of lesser note I forbear to mention.

The first Inhabitants of this Country on the French side of the Rhene were the Nemetes and Vangiones spoken of before; on the other side, the Intuergi. That on the West side of the River was first conquered by the Romans, and from them by the French, of whose Empire it remained a part, but so that it was subject more immediately to the Earls of Moselle, first under the Sovereignty and Vassalage of the Kings of Metz, and after of the Kings of Lorrain. In the dividing of which Kingdom between the Emperors of Germany and the Kings of France, it became subject to the Empire, but still possessed by those of Moselle as it was before. Escheating to the Empire on the expiration of that Family, partly by force of Arms, partly by paying down ready Money, and partly too by selling of their Voices, as they saw occasion, it was gained by the Electors Palatine: and so was also that part of it which lies on the Dutch side of the Rhene, which being anciently and properly a part of Frankenland, followed the fortunes of that Country, till the faileur of the House of Schwaben, and then devolved unto the Empire, as the other did. By little and little it got into the hands of the Princes Palatine, who being originally Officers of the Emperor's Houshold, (such as the Maiors of the Palace to the French Kings at the first institution) had first the honour of Counts Palatine bestowed upon them, and afterwards the place of an Elector in the choice of the Emperor. But where their Estates then lay, where they fixed their dwelling, and what Provinces or people they had subject to them, à nullo inveni scriptum, I could never find any good Record to build on, saith the learned Munster; their habitation and possession in and of these parts (acquired for the most part by Arms and Money) not being above 450 years standing at the utmost. Likely it is, they had their residence for the most part in the Emperor's Palace, living upon their Rents, (as other great Officers of Court in these later times) the Dignity and Authority of so great a place seeming sufficient to content them: but were called Count-Palatines of the Rhene, because their Jurisdiction and Authority lay most especially in those parts of the Empire which were towards that River. Afterwards, on the Marriage of Otho, the second of that name, Duke of Bavaria, with Gertrude, the Daughter of Henry the Elector Palatine, this Office with the Electoral Dignity fell into that House, possessed at that time of those parts of Franconia and the Earldom of Moselle, who not long after, on the dividing of that Estate betwixt Rodolphus and Ludovicus, the Sons of Ludovick the 2. Elector Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, made up this Palatinate. A State which suddenly received a great augmentation, partly by the care and good husbandry of Rupertus, Emperor and Elector Palatine; partly by the weakness and ambition of Wenceslaus, Emperor and King of Bohemia; and partly by the valour of Frederick the Prince Elector. Of these the first bought in the Towns of Weinheim, Ladenberg, Scriessen, and the Castle of Straluberg, with their Lands and Territories. The second gave unto the Palatines, for their voices in his Election, three strong Towns of the Empire, viz. Keisers-Lautern, Ingelheim, and Openheim. And the last took in Battel, Anno 1452, the Earl of Wirtenberg, the Marquess of Baden, the Bishop of Spires, and the Archbishop of Mentz, and ransomed them on what condition he pleased. More particularly the Earl of Wirtenberg (for it was not yet erected into a Dukedom) payed for his ransom 100000 Florens. The Bishop of Mentz redeemed himself for 450000 Florens. The Bishop of Spires gave for his liberty the Towns of Rottenberg and Werfaw. And the Marquess of Baden yielded up in lieu of his freedom the Country of Spanheim, of which Crentznach is a part, the Towns of Besiken and Binheim, the right which he pretended to Eppingen, a Town over against Gemersheim, and his Royalties between this Gemersheim and Seltz, a Town of Alsatia, in Fishing and Hunting. So having brought these Princes unto their Estates, let us next take a view of those who have successively enjoyed both the State and Title, as far as we can go by the light of Story.

1559 25. Frederick III. Duke of Simmeren, descended from Stephen Palatine of Zweibruck or Bipont, younger Son of the Emperor Rupert, succeeded on the decease of Otho-Henry without Issue.

1576 26. Ludovicus V. Son of Frederick the third, a munificent Benefactor to the University of Heidelberg.

1583 27. Frederick IV. Son of Lewis the fifth, married Ludovica, or Louisa, Daughter of William, and Sister of Maurice, Princes of Orange.

1610 28. Frederick V. Son of Frederick the 4th, married the Princess Elizabeth, Daughter of James King of Great Britain. In danger of being proscribed for demolishing the Works of Udenheim, he accepted the Crown of Bohemia. But worsted at the Battel of Pragne, and warred upon by the Bavarian and the Spaniard, he lost both that and his own native Estates and Dignities; of which he was deprived by Ferdinand the prevailing Emperour: the Lower Palatinate being assigned over to and conquered by the King of Spain; the Upper Palatinate, with the Electoral Dignity, bestowed on the Duke of Bavaria. Restored to the possession of the most part of his Country by the power of the Swedes, he died at Mentz, November 29. 1632. the whole Country falling again not long after under the Power and Government of the former Conquerours.

1631 29. Charles-Ludowick; the Heir both of his Father's Estates and Misfortunes too; not yet admitted to his Honours, (contrary to the Fundamental Constitutions of the Empire, by which the Sons of the Electors and other Princes are not involved in the guilt of their Fathers offences) but in fair hopes to be restored thereto in part, by the Pacification made at Munster this present year 1648: which I pray God to prosper, for the peace of afflicted Christendom.

Now to proceed to the Civil State, and the Concernment of these Princes. The Palsgrave hath many Prerogatives above the Electors of either sort. He taketh place of the Duke of Saxony and Marques of Brandenburg, because Henry the Palatine was descended of Charles the Great: for which cause he is also, in the Vacancy of the Empire, Governour of the Western parts of Germany. In which Office he had power to alienate or give Offices, to take Fealty and Homage of the Subjects, and, which is most, to sit in the Imperial Courts, and give Judgment of the Emperor himself. And look whatsoever shall in the Vacancy of the Empire be by the Palatines enacted, that the new Emperors are bound by Oath to confirm and ratifie.

The Revenues of these Princes were conceived to be about 100000 l. per annum, nor could they be supposed at less: the Silver Mines about Amberg only in the Upper Palatinate yielding 60000 Crowns a year, and the passage of one Bridge over the Rhene about 20000 Crowns more; besides the Demesne Lands and the Lands of the Church, incorporated (since the Reformation) into their Estate.

The Arms hereof are Diamond, a Lion Topaz, Armed and Crowned Ruby.

4. ALSATIA.

ALSATIA (or ELSASZ, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the East with the Rhene, which parteth it from the Marquisate of Baden and some parts of Schwaben; on the West with the Mountain Vauge or Vogesus, which separateth it from Lorrain; on the North with the Palatinate; on the South (where it groweth very very narrow) with a point of Switzerland. A Country for the Pleasantness and Fertility of it inferiour to none in Germany: called therefore Elsasz, (as some think) quasi Edelsasz, that is to say, a noble Seat; derived more probably by others from the River Ill, the only River of note in all this Tract, and called so, quasi Illsasz, the Seat or situation on the River Ill.

It is divided generally into the Lower, and Higher, to which the Country called Sungow may come in for a third. The LOWER ALSATIA is that which bordereth on the Palatinate, so called because farther off from the Mountains, and down the water in respect of the course of the Rhene. A Country so abundantly fruitful in Wine and Corn (with which it furnisheth some parts of Germany, and not a few of the neighbour-Countries) that it is generally called Germaniæ Nutrix, or the Nurse of Germany; by Wimphelegius, the Epitome or Abstract of it. Chief Towns therein are, 1. Straesburg, so called from the multitude of Streets, (the Dutch call them Straets) anciently Argentoratum, and then Argentina, from the Roman Exchequer or Receipt, here kept in the time of their Greatness; or from some Mines of Silver which were found about it. A stately, rich and populous City, well stored with publick Garners and Cellars of Wine against times of Dearth; situate on the two Rivers Ill and Brusch, where they both fall into the Rhene, by which, and by the helps of Art, it is very strongly fortified: designed from the first Foundation for a Town of War, this being another of the Towns which the Romans built to defend the Rhene against the Germans; now an Imperial City, and a See Episcopal, the Bishop whereof is Lord of the Lower Alsatia. The Church Cathedral is one of the fairest in all Germany, much famed for a clock of most admirable workmanship, and a Steeple of as curious a frame as that, mounted 574 foot in height, the highest of any in Christendom, higher (if the measure of it be not mistaken) by 40 foot than the Steeple of St. Paul's in London before the firing of it. Of this thus saith the Poet in Adrianus,

Urbs præclara situ, ripis contermina Rheni,
Maxima cui celsæ metiuntur mœnia turris.
Straesburg on Rhene's inamell'd Banks doth lie, Whose Tower even bids defiance to the Skie.

2. Zabern, or Elsasz Zwern, the Tabernæ of Antonine and Marcellinus, another of the old Roman Garrisons, destroyed by the Almans, and repaired again by Julian the Apostate, then Emperour; now the chief place of Residence for the Bishops of Straesburg, and well frequented in regard of the Courts of Justice kept by his Officers in this City for the Lower Alsatia. 3. Altrip, so called from Alta ripa, from the high Banks of the River on which it is seated; another of the Towns or Forts which the Romans, like politick Conquerours, built on the Westside of the Rhene, to prohibit the Incursions of the barbarous Nations. And so was 4. Seltz, seated on the Rhene, betwixt Straesburg and Zabern. And 5. Weissenburg, more towards the Palatinate, now a Town Imperial, but seated on the River Lutra, not far from its fall into the Rhene; encompassed with little Hills and delightful Groves, the River gently washing the Walks thereof, and adding much to it both of strength and beauty. 6. Hagenaw, between Seltz and Straesburg, but not so near unto the Rhene as either of them; first walled by Frederick Barbarossa, Anno 1164, and since that time of great importance for command of the Country, but seated in a sandy and unfruitful Soil; frequented chiefly heretofore by the old Lantgraves of Elsasz for the commodities of hunting. More from the Rhene, 7. Stechfelt, corruptly so called for Steffansfelt, from the Monastery of S. Stephen there founded. 8. Hasle, on the Brusch, &c.

Places of most importance in the HIGHER ALSATIA are, 1. Ruffach, on the River Ombach, belonging to the Bishops of Straesburg, of old called Rubeacum, from the red colour of the earth, well built, inironed with a double Suburb; in ancient times of great resort by the Roman Nobility, much taken with the fruitfulness and pleasures of it, and well inhabited at this day, as is all the Country round about it, by reason of their vigorous proceedings against Thieves; from whence the Germans have a Proverb, that the old Gallows at Ruffach is made of Oak. 2. Ensheim, or Ensisheim, on the River Ill, anciently the Station of the Tenth Legion, and then called Aruncis; now of most note for the Supreme Court of Justice there held for Brisgow, Sungow, and this part of Alsatia, by the Archdukes of Austria, the chief Lords thereof. 3. Colmar, an Imperial City, raised out of the Ruines of old Argentaria destroyed by Attila and the Huns; well built, and situate almost in the very Navel of Alsatia, not above an hour's journey from the foot of the Mountains, but in a fruitful and rich Soil both for Corn and Pasturage, the Country hereabouts being very well watered with the Lauch, Duro, Fech, and Ill. 4. Schlestad, in the modern Latine Selestadium, but by the Ancients called Elcebus, the Station at that time of the 19. Legion; afterwards of great fame for a Church here built by Hildegardis Dutchess of Schwaben, Anno 1044. according to the pattern of the Temple of Jerusalem, which in tract of time became the richest Monastery in all these parts. It is situate in a very fertile and delightful Soil, having the Rhene on the one side, and some spurs of the Mountain Vauge, shadowed with Groves of Chesnuts, upon the other; walled in the time of Frederick the second, about the year 1216, and on the East defended with impassible Fens. 5. Gebwiler, and 6 Watweil, both seated near the aforesaid Mountains, and both subject to the Abbat of Murbach. 7. Keisersberg. 8. Turcheim, two Imperial Towns, but not otherwise memorable; as neither are many of the rest, but for name and number: there being reckoned within this small Province of Elsasz, (not including Sungow) 46 Cities and Towns begirt with Walls, besides Castles, Forts and Villages, almost innumerable, and amongst them more Free and Imperial Cities than in any one Province of the Empire, except Schwaben only.

The Southern part of Elsasz, bordering on the Canton of Basil, is commonly called by the name of SUNGOW, in Latine Sungovia and Sungoia; but in former times the Dukedom of Pfirt, from Pfirt the chief Town of it, and the Dukes's Seat. The Country is very plentiful in Corn and Wine, (as the rest of Elsasz) affording good store of each to the neighbouring Switzers. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Mulhausen, on the River Ill, heretofore under the command of the Bishops of Straesburg, as were also Keisersberg and Colmar; but being taken in by Rodolph of Habspurg, after his advancement to the Empire, it was made Imperial, and is now confederate with the Switzers. 2. Befort, remarkable for a Collegiate Church there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, in which lie buried 13 Earls and as many Countesses. 3. Masz-munster, so called from a Monastery of Nuns there Founded by Maso, a Prince of the old Almans. 4. Thann, a neat Town, beautified with the fair Castle of Engelburg, mounted upon the top of a lofty Hill. 5. Morsz-munster, so named of an ancient Monastery there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, most of them great Builders of Religious Houses. 6. Altkirk, not far from the head of the River Ill. 7. Pfirt, it self, seated on the Ill, not far from Altkirk, in a Country heretofore overgrown with Woods and Forests, whence it had the name, called by the French le Pois de Forrette, (corruptly for le Pais de Forrest) by the Dutch moulded into Pfirt: by which which name (of the County of Ferrette) it is called by Philip de Comines and other French Writers; and by that name pawned by Sigismund the Archduke to Charles Duke of Burgundy, made by that means too near a neighbour to the Switzers, as it proved in fine.

Westward hereof, betwixt it and the County of Burgundy, lyeth the Town and Earldom of MONTBELGARD, (Montis Belgardium in the Latine) united by the Marriage of Henrica, Daughter and Heir of Henry the first Earl hereof, Anno 1396, to the House of Wirtenberg. Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Clarewang, 2. Passewang. 3. Grans, all anciently beautified with Castles; and 4. Montbelgard, a Town of great strength, proud of a Castle-Royal on the top of a fair and lofty Mountain, whence it took that name: once the Seat of its proper Earls, as after of the Princes of the House of Wirtenberg; but now both Town and Castle in the power of the French, who after their good luck in the Dukedom of Lorrain, caused a good Garrison of their own to be put into them, Anno 1633, under pretence of keeping them for the Children of a Brother of the Duke of Wirtenberg, to whom the Inheritance belonged.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract were the Tribochi, with parts of the Nemetes and Rauraci; first conquered by the Romans, then subdued by the Almans, after by the French, and by them made a part of the Kingdom of Lorrain; in the fall of which Kingdom it was reckoned for a Province of the German Empire. Governed for the Emperours by Provincial Earls, in the Dutch language called Lantgraves: at first officiary only, and accomptable to the Emperours under whom they served; in the end made hereditary, and successional unto their posterities. The first hereditary Lantgrave is said to be Theodorick in the Reign of Otho the third: after whose death the Empire being made elective, gave the Provincial Governours some opportunities to provide for themselves. In his Male-Issue it continued till the reign of Frederick the 2. who began his Empire, An. 1212, and died An. 1250; during which interval this Estate was conveyed by Daughters to Albert the 2. Earl of Habspurg, Albert Earl of Hohenburg, and Lewis Earl of Oetingen. Rodolph of Habspurg, Son of this Albert, afterwards Emperour of the Germans, marrying with Anne the Daughter of the Earl of Hohenlhe, became possessed also of his part of the Country; which added to his own, made up the whole Upper Elsass; continued since that time in possession of the House of Austria, descended from him. The third part, comprehending all the Lower Alsatia, was not long after sold by the Earl of Oetingen to the Bishop of Straesburg, whose Successors hold it to this day, assuming to themselves the Title of the Lantgraves of Elsass. But as for Sungow, or the County of Pfirt, that belonged anciently to the Princes of the House of Schwaben: in the expiring of which potent and illustrious Family, by the death of Conradine the last Duke, Anno 1268. that great Estate being scattered into many hands, it was made a distinct Earldom of it self. And so it continued till the year 1324, when Ulrick the last Earl dying without Issue-male, left his Estate betwixt two Daughters: whereof the one, named Anne, conveyed her part in Marriage to Albert Duke of Austria, surnamed the Short, Granchild of Rodolphus the Emperour before mentioned; the other, named Ursula, sold her moiety to the said Albert for 8000 Crowns. Since that it hath been always in the possession of the Dukes of Austria, (save only for the time in which it was pawned or mortgaged, together with Alsatia, to the Duke of Burgundy) governed in Civil matters and points of Judicature by the Parliament or Court of Ensheim in the Upper Elsass.

5. LORRAIN.

THE Dukedom of LORRAIN is bounded on the East with Elsass, and that part of the Lower Palatinate which passeth by the name of West-reich; on the West with the River Meuse or Maes, with part of the Country of Barrois in France, (belonging to the Duke hereof) and part of Champagne; on the North with Luxemburg and the Land of Triers; and on the South with the County of Burgundy, from which, and from the Province of Elsass, it is parted by the Vogesus or Vauge, wherewith it is encompassed on those sides. Assigned unto Lotharius, second Son of Lotharius the Emperour, (who was eldest Son of Lewis the Godly) with the style of a Kingdom; from thence called Lot-reich by the Dutch, Lot reigne by the French; from which the modern name of Lorrain and the Latine Lotharingia are to fetch their Pedigree.

The Country is in length about four days journey, almost three in breadth, much over-grown with Forests and swelled with Mountains, the spurs and branches of Vogesus, and the once vast Wilderness of Ardenne; yet so sufficiently stored with all manner of necessaries, that it needeth no supply out of other places. Some Lakes it hath which yield great quantity of Fish; one more especially 14 miles in compass, the Fish whereof yields to the Duke's Coffers 20000 l. yearly. It affordeth also divers Metals, as Silver, Copper, Tin, Iron, Lead, in some places Pearls: Chalcedonians also of such bigness, that whole Drinking-cups are made of them, and a matter of which they make the purest Glasses, not to be parallel'd in Europe. They have also a goodly breed of Horses, equal to those of Barbary, or the Courser of Naples.

The people, by reason of their neighbourhood to and commerce with France, strive much to imitate the French in garb and fashion; but one may easily see that it is not natural: they have much in them also of the Dutch humour of Drinking, but far more moderately than the Dutch themselves. Generally they are a politick and an hardy Nation; not otherwise able to have held their Estate so long against the French Kings and the Princes of the House of Burgundy. They lived very happily in former times under their own Dukes, not being at all oppressed with Taxes; which made them very affectionate towards the Prince, and useful unto one another. Their Language is for the most part French, as in Artois, Luxemburg, Triers, and other of the bordering Provinces, members of the French Monarchy in former times: not so refined and elegant as is spoke in France, nor so corrupt and coorse as that of Montbelgard and the County of Burgundy.

I know that many, in respect of the French language spoken here among them, account this Country among the Provinces of France, and usually describe it so in their Charts and Writings: but I have placed it with more reason (as I conceive) amongst those of Germany; first, in regard that a Duke hereof is a Prince of the Empire; but especially because that, in the division of the Kingdom of Lorrain betwixt the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, whatsoever lay on the East-side of the River Meuse (as this Dukedom of Lorrain for the most part doth) was reckoned in the share or portion of the German Emperours.

The Rivers of chief note are, 1. Murta, or the Meurte, which receiving into it many Rivers, and passing with a swift stream by the walls of Nancie, glides along fairly for a good space within sight of the Moselle, into which at last it falls near Conde. 2. Mosa, the Meuse, or or Maes, whose spring and course hath been already described in Belgium. 3. Moselle, famous for the design which Lucius Verus, Governour for the Emperour Nero, had once upon it. For whereas it ariseth in the Mountain Vauge, not far from the head of the River Soasne, and disburtheneth it self into the Rhene at Confluentz; he intended to have cut a deep Chanel from the head of this unto the other, so to have made a passage from the Ocean to the Mediterranean, the Soasne emptying it self into the Rhosne, a chief River of France, as the Moselle doth into the Rhene. 4. Selle, which mingleth waters with the Moselle not far from Metz. 5. Sar, 6. Martane, 7. Voloy, with others of less note: all of them plentiful of Salmons, Perches, Tenches, and the best sorts of fish; as in their Lakes are great store of Carps, some of them three foot long, and of excellent taste.

Principal Cities in it are, 1. Metz, by Ptolomy called Divodurum, Metis and Civitas Mediomatricum by Antoninus, the chief City of the Mediomatrices, who possessed this Tract. It is seated in a pleasant Plain at the confluence of the Selle and Moselle; the Royal See, in former times, of the French Kings of Austrasia, hence called Kings of Metz; long before that a Bishop's See, as it still continueth. 2. Toul, the Tullum of Ptolomy, the Civitas Leucorum of Antoninus, so called from the Leuci, the Inhabitants of it and the Tract about it; pleasantly seated on the Moselle, and anciently honoured with a See Episcopal. 3. Verdun, an ancient Episcopal See also, the Civitas Verodunensium of Antoninus, seated on the Meuse or Maes. The Town and Territory adjoining in preceding times belonged to the great Princes of the House of Ardenne, at and before the time that they attained the Dukedom of Lorrain: but whether they had it in right of their Patrimonial Estate, as lying in the North part of this Country towards Luxemburg, as it well might be, or that it came to them in the right of Marriage with some Daughter of the House of Mosselle, or other Heirs thereof, I have no where found. But howsoever it came to them, it gave unto this House the Title of Earls of Verdun, used in their Style, till swallowed with the rest in that of Lorrain. The Bishop whereof, as also those of Metz and Toul, (being the only ones of this Country of Lorrain) acknowledge the Archbishop of Triers for their Metropolitan. All of them were in the number (heretofore) of Imperial Cities, possessed of large and goodly Territories and of great Revenue; but taken by the French King Henry the 2. Anno 1552, during the Wars between Charles the fifth and the Protestant Princes of Germany, under colour of aiding them against the Emperour. And though Charles tryed all ways to recover them to the Empire again, and to that end maintained a long and desperate Siege against the City of Metz: yet was the Town so gallantly defended by the Duke of Guise, that he was fain to raise his Siege, and go off with dishonour. Since that, they have been always under the subjection of France; a Parliament being erected at Metz for the ease of the people, as in other Provinces of that Kingdom.

Of such Towns as immediately belong to the Duke of Lorrain, the principal are Nancie, not great, but of a pleasant and commodious site, well watered by the River Meurte or Marta, and fortified better than before, in the year 1587, on occasion of a great Army of the Germans passing into France to aid the Protestants: most commonly the Duke's Seat, and famous for the Discomfiture which Charles Duke of Burgundy here suffered, with the loss of his life. 2. S. Nicolas, a Town so populous, well seated, and neatly built, that were it walled, it would hardly yield precedency unto Nancie it self; so called from a Church here built to the honour of S. Nicolas, Bishop of Myra in the lesser Asia, whose Body they pretend to be buried here, or at least some part or Relick of it to be here inshrined, occasioning a great resort of Pilgrims and other People. 3. Pont a Mousson, about 4 leagues from Nancie, so called from a Bridge on the River Mousson upon which it standeth, of especial note for a small University lately founded in it, and for giving the Title of a Marquess to the eldest Son of the Dukes of Lorrain, called commonly and contractedly Marquess du Pont, Marchio Musso-Pontanus by our modern Latinists. 4. Vaucoleur, the Birth-place of Joan the Virgin, to whose Miracles and Valour the French attribute the delivery of their Country from the power of the English. But being at last taken Prisoner, she was by the Duke of Bedford, then Regent of France, condemned and burned for a Witch. Of which crime I for my part do conceive her free. Nor can I otherwise conceive of her and her brave exploits, than as of a lusty Lass of Lorrain, tutored and trained up by the practice of the Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Bastard of Orleans, and so presented to Charles the seventh, French King, as if sent immediately from Heaven. A project carried on of purpose, (as the most intelligent of the French Writers say) pour fairer evenir la courage aux Francois, to revive the drooping spirits of the beaten French, not to be raised again but by help of a Miracle. Upon the sight of her Statua on the Bridge of Orleans, a friend of mine did adventure on a Copy of Verses in her commendation, too long to be inserted here, but they ended thus;

She dy'd a Virgin: 'Twas because the earth
Bred not a man whose valour and whose birth
Might merit such a Blessing. But above
The Gods provided her an equal Love,
And gave her to Saint Denys. She with him Protects the Lillies and their Diadem.
You then about whose Armies she doth watch,
Give her the honour due unto her Match:
And when in field your Standards you advance,
Cry loud, Saint Denys and Saint Joan for France.

Next these we have, 5. Vaudemont, which gave the Title of an Earl to a younger Branch of the House of Ardenne, succeeding at the last in the Dukedom of Lorrain in person of Duke Rene 2. and since a Title of the younger Son of the Dukes hereof, 6. Neuf-Chatteau, on the edge of the Country towards Barrois. 7. Amante, seven leagues on the South of Metz, sometimes the Chancery of Lorrain. 8. Riebe-Court, near the Lake called Garde-lake, out of which floweth a River which runs into the Meurte. 9. La Mothe, seated on a River which falls presently into the Mosselle. 10. Charmes, seated on the Mosselle, the place of Treaty between the Duke of Lorrain and the Cardinal Richelieu; the result whereof was the surrender of the Town of Nancie, and by consequence of all the Dukedom, into the hands of the French, September 1633. 11. Stenay, in the extream North of all this Country, a well fortified Town, and of great consequence and importance to the Dukes hereof; but whether properly belonging to the Dukedom of Lorrain, or wrested from the Soveraignty of Sedan, upon which it bordereth, (as Jamais near unto it was) I have no where found. Of less note there are, 1. Saint Die, 2. Saint Hippolite, 3. Bouquenon, and 4. Saverden; the first Towns of this Dukedom taken by the Swedes, Anno 1633, in the War against Lorrain, 5. Saint Miel, 6. Oden Chasteau, 7. Mirecour; all taken the same year by the French, in the prosecution of that War, before the Treaty at Charmes. 8. Romberville, 9. Espinul, 10. Gerbevillier, &c.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Mediomatrices and the Leuci ſpoken of before, together with the Viridonenſes; all of them conquered by the Romans, under whom this Country and the Diſtrict of Triers made up the whole Province of Belgica prima. From them being taken by the French, with the reſt of Gaul, it was made a Kingdom; the Provinces of Germania prima and ſecunda (containing all the parts of Germany before deſcribed, and ſo much of the Netherlands as lie on the Weſt ſide of the Rhene) being added to it: called firſt, from the Eaſtern ſituation, by the name of Ooſtenreich, or Auſtraſia; the portion of Theodorick, the fourth Son of Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French, from the chief City of his Kingdom called the King of Metz, whoſe Succeſſors follow in this order.

The Kings of AUSTRASIA, or METZ.

514 1. Theodorick, the baſe Son of Clovis the Great, vanquiſhed the Thuringians, and extended his Kingdom as far as Heſſia and Thuringia, as we call them now.

537 2. Theodebert, the Son of Theodorick, repulſed the Danes infeſting the Coaſts of the Lower Germany, and added Provence (taken from the Gothes of Italy) unto his Eſtates.

548 3. Theobaldus, the Son of Theodebert, ſubdued the Almans, and added much of their Country to his own Dominions.

555 4. Clotaire, King of Soiſſons, the youngeſt Son of Clovis the Great, ſucceeded Theobald in this Kingdom, as afterwards his Brother Childebert in the Realm of France, Anno 560, uniting in his perſon the whole French Dominion.

565 5. Sigebert, the Son of Clotaire, vanquiſhed the Hunns, then falling into his Eſtates: killed in his Tent by the practices of Fredegond, the Wife of Chilperick King of France.

577 6. Childebert, the Son of Sigebert, Succeſſour to his Uncle Guntram in the Realm of Orleans.

598 7. Theodebert the II. the Son of Childebert, vanquiſhed and outed of his Kingdom by Clotaire the ſecond of France, from whoſe eldeſt Son Sigebert deſcended the illuſtrious Family of the Earls of Habſpurg.

617 8. Clotaire II. King of France, on the death of Theodebert King of Auſtraſia, and his Brother Theodorick King of Orleans, the ſole King of the French.

9. Dagobert, in the life of his Father King of Metz or Auſtraſia, whom he ſucceeded at his death in the Realm of France.

645 10. Sigebert II. the eldeſt Son of Dagobert, made choice of this Kingdom for his part of the whole French Empire; therein preferring it to Weſt-France, or France it ſelf, which he left to Clovis the 2. his younger Brother. He brought the Suevians to obedience, and ſubdued the Selaves.

656 11. Childebert II. Son of Grimoaldus, Maior of the Palace to Sigebert, was by the power of his Father made King of Metz; Dagobert the Son of Sigebert being ſhorn a Monk, and ſent into Scotland.

12. Clovis the 2. King of the French, having vanquiſhed and beheaded Grimoald, diſpoſſeſſed Childebert of the Kingdom, which he took to himſelf.

662 13. Childerick, the 2. Son of Clovis, after the death of Clotaire his elder Brother, ſucceeding in the Kingdom of France, united all the French Dominions into one Eſtate. In which condition it remained (but with ſome inlargement of the Bounds) till the Partition made by and amongſt the Children of Lewis the Godly; the name of Auſtraſia, or Eaſt-France, being extended by Charles the Great over all Pannonia, and ſo much of Germany as was under the command of the French. In which diviſion, Lewis the ſecond Son, ſurnamed the Ancient, being inveſted in the Kingdom of Germany, or ſo much of Eaſt France or Auſtraſia as lay on the Eaſt-ſide of the Rhene; Lotharius, the eldeſt Son, had for his ſhare the Title of Emperour, and therewith Italy, Provence, Burgundy, and ſo much of Auſtraſia or Eaſt-France as lay on the French ſide of the River. Afterwards being ſubdivided into three Eſtates, Italy, with the Title of Roman Emperour, was given to Lewis the eldeſt Son; to Charles, the youngeſt, Provence, with the Kingdom of Burgundy; and to Lothaire, the ſecond Son, Auſtraſia on this ſide of the Rhene, from hence called Lot-reich, Lot-reigne, and Lotharingia, as before was ſaid. But Lothaire dying without iſſue, the Kingdom of Lorrain, containing all the Netherlands, (except Flanders and Artois) and all the parts of Germany before deſcribed, became divided betwixt Charles the Bald, Emperour and King of France, and Lewis ſurnamed the Ancient, King of Germany; the one calling himſelf King of Lorrain on that ſide, the other King of Lorrain on this ſide of the Maes; the River Maes or Meuſe parting their Poſſeſſions. But this Partition held not long amongſt their Succeſſors: For Lewis and Carloman King of France (the Sons of Ludovicus Balbus) reſigning their part hereof to Charles the Groſs, Emperor of the Romans and King of Germany, the ſaid Charles, Arnulph, Lewis and Conrade, ſucceſſively Emperors of the Romans and Kings of Germany, (together with Zwentobald the Baſtard-Son of Arnulph interloping in the very middle of them) enjoyed it wholly to themſelves. And ſo did alſo Charles the Simple, King of France, on the death of Conrade, till, forced thereto by Henry the firſt, (who ſucceeded Conrade in the Empire and Kingdom of Germany) he gave way to the old Partition ſpoken of before: the Germans after that encroaching more and more on that part hereof which of right belonged unto the French, till in the end (after much viciſſitude and interchangeableneſs of affairs) both Princes laid aſide the Title of Kings of Lorrain, incorporating ſo much as they held hereof into the reſt of their Eſtates; Otho the third of Germany and Lewis the fifth of France being the laſt that pleaſed themſelves with that broken Title. In the mean time this Country of Lorrain it ſelf, as it is now bounded, together with the Country of Luyck land, a great part of Brabant, ſome parts of the Land of Triers, Colen, and, as ſome ſay, the Country of Gulick alſo, (but in this of Gulick I demur, as before was ſaid) being taken out of it, were by Otho the ſecond made a Dukedom, Anno 981, and by him given with the Title of Duke of Lorrain to Charles of France, Son of Gerberge his Aunt by Lewis the 4. of France ſurnamed Tranſmarine, Son of Charles the Simple. Charles thus advanced by his Couſin, and forgetting that he had been made Duke of Brabant not long before by Lothaire the French King, his Brother, ſhewed himſelf ſo alienated from the French, and wedded to the Germans, than the French, after the death of his Nephew Lewis the fifth, (whoſe next Heir he was) rejected him, and accepted Hugh Capet for their King. Otho, the Son of this Charles, dying without iſſue, left his Eſtate to Geofry Earl of Ardenne, Bouillon, and Verdun, his near Kinſman by the Mothers ſide; from whom the preſent Dukes of Lorrain do derive themſelves. From Hermingrade, one of the Daughters of this Charles, married to Albert (some call him Charles, and others Godfrey) Earl of Namur, by Alice their Daughter, married Baldwin the 5. of Hainault, descended Baldwin Earl of Flanders and Hainault, the Father of the Lady Isabel of Hainault, Wife of Philip the 2. King of France, thereby uniting the Blood of Pepin and Hugh Capet, to the great content of Lewis the 9. her Nephew: of whom it is said, that being a man of a tender Conscience, he never joyed in the Crown of France, till it was proved that he was lineally descended by his Grandmother from Charles of Lorrain, whom Hugh Capet had so unjustly dispossessed. But to return again to the Dukes of Lorrain, I find not any great improvement made of the Estate by any of them, more than the accession of the remaining Patrimony of the Ears of Ardenne in the person of Godfrey or Geofrey the third Duke hereof, and the adding of the Dutchy of Bar in France by Rene Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples; but on the contray, a great weakning and distraction of it by the Dukes hereof: Luyck-land and the Dukedom of Bouillon being sold unto the Bishops of Liege by Godfrey sirnamed of Bouillon, after King of Hierusalem; Brabant torn from it by Geofrey Earl of Lovain, in the time of Baldwin Brother of Godfrey; and Gulick-land by Eustace the Brother of Baldwin; the Bishops of Triers not being negligent all this while of the opportunity. Besides which, somewhat had been done by the Emperour Otho the 3. to the diminution of this Estate, seeing that Otho the Second Duke, Son of Charles of France, had no Issue-male, and thinking this Estate, to be great enough without those Additions, and some other pieces on the Rhene, by him restored unto the Empire. The rest of this Estate was conferr'd on Godfrey of Ardenne, and not without good reason neither: it being probable enough that as it was first given by Otho the 2. unto Charles of France with reference to his Mother Gerberge that great Emprour's Aunt; so Otho of Lorrain Son of Charles might look on Godfrey of Ardenne as most capable of it, with reference to his Mother Matilda, the same Emperour's Daughter. And unto this he might be moved not only in a noble gratitude to the bloud of Otho, from whom his Father had receiv'd so great a benefit, but on the solicitation of the Emperour Henry 2. (a Prince of the same House of Saxony) to whom the Alienation of it from the Daughters of Charles is ascribed by some. Which said, we have no more to do, but to present the Reader with the Catalogue of

The Dukes of LORRAIN.

	29. Henry, Son of Charles, married Katharine, Sister to Henry the 4. of France.
1624	30. Francis, Brother of Henry.
1630	31. Charles, Nephew to Francis by his Brother the Earl of Vaudemont, and Son-in-Law to him by the Marriage of his Daughter and Heir, succeeded by a mixt Title of Descent and Marriage. Being resolved to hold it in his own right, he put away his Wife, the Daughter of Francis, and took another to his Bed, which he better fansied. Punished not long after by the loss of his whole Estate: For immediately he engaged himself in the Wars of Germany in behalf of Ferdinand the 2. but being beaten by the Swedes at the Battel of Pfaffenhofen in the County of Hanaw, he lost a great part of his Country to the Victors, who pursued him home. And on the other side, Lewis the 13. of France, picking a quarrel with him for receiving the Monsieur his Brother, and the Marriage of the Monsieur with the Lady Margaret the Duke's Sister, deprived him of the Dutchy of Bar, and falling into Lorrain with a puissant Army at such time as the Swedes were there, compelled him to put into his hands the City of Nancy, and by consequence all the rest of his Estates, Septemb. 1633. Since which time the Duke hath never been restored thereto, nor hath any thing left him in it, for ought I can hear, but the Town of La Mothe, (if that) together with a good Cause, many hearts, and an invincible courage.

The Revenues of this Prince are said to be 700000 Crowns; whereof 200000 arise from the Customs of the Salt made in his Country, and the other 500000 from his Coronet-lands. He is an absolute Prince, and giveth for his Device an armed Hand coming as it were from Heaven, and grasping a naked Sword; to shew that he holdeth his Estate by no other Tenure than God and his Sword; the only hope, at this time, of the present Duke. For though he be accompted a Prince of the Empire, and his Dukedom reckoned for a part of the fifth Circle thereof, which is called the Circle of the Rhene; yet he neither comes unto the Diets, nor holdeth himself bound by any of the Orders and Decrees which are made therein, as do the rest of the great Princes of Germany; his neighbourhood to the French formerly securing his Estate against any force which the Empire durst bring against him for those neglects.

The Arms of Lorrain are O, a Bend Gules charged with 3 Larks Argent. But herein I find Bara, an old French Herald, to differ from Paradine, the most exact Genealogist of the French Nation. For Bara chargeth the Bend not with 3 Allovettes, Larks, as Paradine doth, but with 3 Allerions, which are in Blazon small Birds wanting beaks, feet, and legs. Of this last opinion is the most worthy Antiquary Cambden Clarencieux; who withal telleth us, that when Godfrey of Bouillon was at the Siege of Hierusalem, shooting at S. David's Tower there, he broached three feetless Birds called Allerions upon his Arrow, and thereupon assumed this Arms.

6. SUEVIA, or SCHWABEN.

THE Dukedom of SUEVIA or SCHWABEN, according to the ancient limits and extent thereof, was bounded on the North with Frankenland and the Lower Palatinate, on the South with Switzerland and the Alps of Tyrol, on the East with the River Leck, parting it from Bavaria, and on the West with the Rhene, dividing it from Sungow and both Alsatia's. But now the Dukedom of Wirtenberg, the Marquisate of Baden, and other lesser Estates being taken out of it, it is contracted and restrained within narrower Bounds, having on the East Bavaria, on the West the Dukedom of Wirtenberg, and so much of the Rhene as serveth to divide it from Sungow and the Upper Elsass, on the North Franconia or Frankenland, and on the South a little of the Rhene, with some part of the Switzers.

The Country for the most part is mountainous and hilly, overspread with some spurs of the Alps, and the Woods of Nigra Sylva or Swartzenwald: recompensed notwithstanding with great plenty of Springs and Rivers (and amongst them the Neccar and the renowned Danubius) which do issue from them: which makes the Vales hereof to be very fruitful, sufficiently stored with all necessary provisions. Nor are the Woods and Mountains so unprofitable, but that besides the great plenty of Fewel and the pleasures of Hunting, they do afford some Mines of Iron and other Metals.

The people in regard of their mountainous situation, are more fierce and warlike than the rest of the Germans, and so accompted of by Plutarch in former times; industrious in several Trades and Manufactures, especially in the weaving of Linen-cloth, which is made here in great abundance: and by reason they have so much in them of the South, they are supra modum in Venerem proni, as Aubanus tells me, at least more given to Venus than the other of the Germans are; the women also being said to be very forwards in this kind, as tractable and easie as the men could wish them.

The whole is generally divided into the Hegow, lying next to the Lake of Constance; the Algow, extending to Bavaria; Brisgow, upon the West of the River Rhene; and North-Schwaben, on the Northern side of Danubius. Principal Cities in the HEGOW are, 1. Lindaw, situate like an Island in the Lake of Constance, encompassed almost with the waters thereof, but joined to it with a Causey of 290 paces long: one of the Free or Imperial Cities, made so, for money, by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, Anno 1166. 2. Buchorn, and 3. Uberlingen, on the same Lake; both Imperial also. 4. Scaffhausen, seated on both sides of the Rhene, not far from the efflux thereof out of the Lake Cell, (so called from a Town of that name belonging to the Archdukes of Austria, but anciently known by the name of Lacus Venetus) and near those dreadful falls or Cataracts of that River no less than 50 Cubits downwards, with great noise and violence. For which cause all Vessels that go down the Rhene are fain to unlade themselves, and by Carts to carry their goods to this Town, where they imbark them again. Which as it yieldeth great benefit unto the Town by Tolls and Imposts, so doth it always keep it stored with abundance of Barks and other Vessels; whence it hath the name of Scaff-hausen, that is to say, the house of Skiffs, or the Town of Skip-boats. The Town is conveniently seated amongst rich Pastures and sweet Groves on both sides of the River; not without some pleasant Hills, and those well planted with Vines, near adjoining to it: Imperial once, but now a Canton of the Switzers, as hath there been shewn. 5. Arbon, upon the Lake it self, (the Arbor Felix of Strabo) belonging to the Bishop of Constance. 6. Mersburg, the ordinary Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Constance, Lord of the most part of this Tract, on the same Lake also. 7. Constance it self, situate on both sides of the Rhene, where it issueth out of the Lake, called from hence the Lake of Constance, but by the Dutch Boden-zee, from the Castle of Bodmen; by Pliny and other Ancients Lacus Acronius, and Brigantinus, made by the Confluence of the Rhene & some other Rivers falling out of Switzerland. The Town is Imperial, an Episcopal See, and a flourishing Emporie: famous for the Council here holden Anno 1414, of great renown as well for the multitude and quality of the people which were there assembled, as for the importance of the matters which were therein handled. The people of most note there assembled were, Sigismund the Emperour, 4 Patriarchs, 29 Cardinals, 346 Archbishops and Bishops, 564 Abbats and Doctors, 10000 secular Princes and Noblemen, 450 common Harlots, 1600 Barbers, and 320 Minstrels and Jesters. The Business there handled was, first the pacifying of a Schism in the Church, there being at that time 3 Popes, (or rather Anti-Popes) viz. Gregory the 12. resident at Rome, John the 23. at Bononia, and Bennet the 13. in Spain; all three deposed by the Council, and Martin the 5. made sole Pope by the unanimous consent of the Council, declaring both by matter of fact, and by a publick Constitution here made and ratified, that a Council is above the Pope. The other main business was the proceeding against John Hus and Hierome of Prague, (spoken of before) both which, notwithstanding the Emperour's safe conduct, were here condemned of Heresie, degraded, and burnt. Now the manner of degrading a Priest is this: (I hope to be excused for this Digression) The party to be degraded is attired in his Priestly Vestments, holding in the one hand a Chalice full of wine & water, and in the other a gilt Plate (or Paten, as they call it) with a Wafer. Then kneeling down, the Bishop's Deputy, 1. taking from him all those things commandshim to say no more Masses for the quick and dead. 2. Scraping his Fingers ends with a piece of Glass, he commandeth him from that time forwards not to hallow any thing. And 3. stripping him of his Priestly Habit, he is clothed in a Lay attire, and so delivered over to the secular Magistrate. But to return again to the City of Constance: being proscribed by Charles the 5. for refusing the Interim, and not able to withstand such Forces as were raised against them, they put themselves under the Protection of Ferdinand, then King of the Romans, and Brother of Charles. But herein they fell out of the Frying-pan into the Fire, as the saying is: For Ferdinand being possessed of the Town, seised on the common Treasury, and upon all Records and Writings which belonged unto them; set out an Edict, that all the Ministers within eight days should depart the City; and that no Citizen from thenceforth should wear any Weapon. And so, instead of a Protector, he became their Master.

Chief Cities in the part hereof lying towards Bavaria, which is called the ALGOW, are, 1. Buchau, on the Lake called Feder-zee; a Town Imperial. 2. Ravenspurg, a Free City, seated amongst Mountains, whereof one hangeth eth over it, the River Ach running by it in a bed so narrow that not able to receive the waters which fall down from the Hills, it much endamageth all the Country by frequent Land-flouds. 3. Wangen, (the Nemavia of Antoninus) Imperial also. 4. Kempten, the Campodunum of Strabo, and 5. Memmingen, the Drusomagus of Ptolomy; both Imperial Cities; the last about three miles in circuit, populous, rich, and very well traded. 6. Pfullendorf, 7. Zeukirk, 8. Bibrach; all three Imperial; the last supposed to be the Bragodurum of the Ancients. 9. Augsburg, on the River Lech, looking into Bavaria, first made a Roman Colony by Augustus Cæsar, and by him called Augusta Vindelicorum, the principal City in those times of the Vindelici, a potent People of this Tract. A City of great wealth and state, containing about 9 miles in circuit, and very strongly fortified; by Nature on the East and North, where the ground lies low and under water, and on the West and South by Art. The Buildings for three parts of it are of Clay and Timber; but on the West part, seated on an Hill, built of Free-stone, six or seven Stories high; in which are many fair Houses of the principal Citizens, and many stately Palaces, which belong to the Fuggers, a Family of very great (almost Princely) Revenues, possessed of many goodly Dwellings both in the City and the Suburbs, and adjoining Territories; who though they have of late obtained the honour of Barons, in regard of their Wealth, still keep themselves (contrary to the custom of Germany, where Traffick is counted a disgrace to a Noble-man) to the trade of Merchandise. The publick Edifices of it are very decent, especially the Cathedral-Church, a majestick Building; the other Churches, being ten in number, and the Religious Houses, correspondent to it. Of old time Ceres was here worshipped, from whence (or from the fruitfulness of the soil) the City gives a Sheaf of Corn for the Arms thereof. Since their Conversion unto Christianity it was made a Bishops See. Destroyed by Attila and his Huns, it was after built more beautifully than it had been formerly; at last made Imperial, and the Mistress of as large a Territory as most Cities of Germany. Famous for the Confession of Faith exhibited in this place to Charles the 5. by the Protestant Princes, hence called Confessio Augustana, An. 1530. 2. For the Interim, or mixt form of Doctrine, containing some Points of Protestanism, but most of Popery, here tendred to both parties by the said Emperor, (but received by neither) to be subscribed to and observed till the Differences could be setled by a General Council. And 3. for the publick allowance here given by Decree of all the States of the Empire to the Protestant party, to profess openly their Religion without any impeachment, An. 1555. a Limitation only laid on the Ecclesiasticks, that if they changed their Religion, they should lose their preferments, which were to be bestowed on others more addicted to the See of Rome.

In the third part hereof, called BRISGOW, lying on the East of the River Rhene, and the West of Wirtenberg, and on the South closed in with the Canton of Basil, Places of most importance are, 1. Friburg, upon the Trieße and other Streams descending from the Mountains of Swartzen-wald, under which it lieth: founded by Berchthold the third, Earl or Duke of Zeringen, (the Castle of Zeringen, founded by Berthold the first, Son of Gebizo, the youngest Son of Guntram, the second Earl of Habspurg, once the chief Seat of those Princes, being then near adjoining to it) in the reign of Henry the Fifth Emperour, Anno 1112, or thereabouts. Famous in those days for Silver mines, now for an University here established Anno 1459, and being in present estimation the chief of the Country, of which more anon. 2. Offenbach, 3. Gengenbach, both upon the Kintrich, and both Towns Imperial: the first so named from Offa an English Saxon, the Apostle of these parts of Germany. 4. Hochberg, which gives the Title of a Marquess to the Marquesses of Baden, who are Lords thereof. 5. Zel, once Imperial, but of late times belonging, as doth also 6. Badenwiller, to the Marquess of Baden; this last accruing to them by the Marriage of Rodolphus the sixth of that name, Marquess of Hochberg, with a Sister of John Earl of Friburg, the then Lord thereof. 7. Waldshut, upon the Rhene, in a barren, cold and mountainous Country, but well stored with Woods. 8. Brisac, by Antonine called Mons Brisacus, a Garrison in his time against the encroaching Almans, and situate at that time on the French side of the Rhene, the course of the River being since turned on the other side, where now it runneth. It is built Castle-wise on the top of a round Hill, in which there is also a strong Tower or Fortress, raised by Berchthold the third for defence of the place; otherwise strong enough by its own natural situation, and might be made impregnable, but for want of water, which is all drawn from one deep Well in the heart of the Town, or brought with great charge and trouble from the Rhene which runs underneath it. The Town is fair, populous, and well built, once of most note in all the Country, from hence called Brisac-gow, or Brise-gow; but after the building of Friburg by Berchthold the 4. it grew by little and little to be less frequented, the other being seated more conveniently for Trade and business. Here also, not far off from the Castle of Zeringen, stood that of Kiburg, somewhat the ancienter of the two; of such authority and repute in those elder times, that the Emperours do still retain the Title of Earls of Kiburg in the Style Imperial: descended on the House of Habspurg by the Marriage of Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir of Hartman the last Earl hereof, to Eberhard of Habspurg, Cousin-german to the Emperour Rodolph; on the expiring of which Line, Anno 1356, it fell, together with many fair Estates among the Switzers, to Albert Duke of Austria, surnamed the Short.

Finally, in the fourth and last part hereof, called NORTH-SCHWABEN, because on the North-side of the Danow, the places most observable are, 1. Gemund, on the Rheems. 2. Dinckel-Spyel, on the Warnitz, two Imperial Towns; which with Uberlingen or Werlingen, (all three but mean in Building, Territory, or estimation) spoken of before, are the only three Imperial Cities in all Germany which totally adhere unto the Doctrines of the Church of Rome. 3. Bopfingen, on the Egra, an Imperial City. 4. Norlingen, on the same River, but in a low and mooriſh ground, yet of great resort, populous, and well traded; most memorable for the Defeat here given the Sweeds by Ferdinand the third, now Emperour, at his first entrance on the Government; in which Bannier, one of the principal Commanders of that Nation, was slain on the place, Gustavus Horn, another of as great eminence, taken Prisoner, their whole Forces routed, and thereupon so strange an alteration of the Affairs of Germany, which they had almost wholly conquered, (though not for themselves;) that the Palatinate, not long before restored to its proper Owner, was again possessed by the Spaniards, Frankendale by the Imperialists, and the remainder of the Swedes forced to withdraw into their Holds on the Baltick Seas, Anno 1637. 5. Rotweil, not far from the head of the Neccar, an Imperial City, and a Confederate of the Switzers. 6. Donawert, seated on the Confluence of the Donaw and the Werdt, whence it had the name, most commonly called only Werdt; an Imperial Town, the habitation of John de Werdt, once a Brewer herein, but afterwards a chief Commander of the Forces of the Duke of Bavaria in the late German Wars. 7. Villingen, on the Bregentz, a small River falling into the the Danow; a Town belonging to the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria. Not far from which ſtands 8. Furſtenburg, an ancient Caſtle. The Earls hereof are Princes of the Empire, and Lords of a great part of the Country, deſcended lineally from Eginon, or Eggon, the youngeſt Son of the Lady Judith, Siſter and Heir of Berthold the fifth, the laſt Duke of Zeringen, and conſequently a Branch of the illuſtrious Houſe of Habſpurg; exceedingly increaſed both in power and Patrimony, by the Marriage of Frederick Earl hereof (in the time of Charles the fifth, under whom he ſerved in his Wars againſt the Proteſtants) with Anne the Daughter and Heir of Chriſtopher the laſt Earl of Werdenberg, poſſeſſed of many fair Eſtates amongſt the Switzers and the adjoining parts of Schwaben. In a Village of this Earl, called Den Eſchingen, is the Head of Danubius. 9. Ulm, an Imperial City, ſituate on the meeting of the Blave, the Iler, and the Danow, the principal City of North Schwaben; about ſix miles in compaſs, rich, populous, well fortified, and ſtored with an Armory for Ordnance and all manner of Ammunition not inferious to any in Germany. The Town is but new taking its firſt riſe from a Monaſtery here founded by Charles the Great, which after grew to be a great City; and took the name of Ulm from the Elms about it. At firſt it belonged unto the Monks; of whom having bought their Freedom in the time of Frederick the third, it became Imperial. The Danow hereabouts begins to be navigable, having ſo violent a Stream, that the Boats which go down the water uſe to be ſold at the place where they land, it being both difficult and chargeable to bring them back again. Not far hence on the banks of the Danow lie the Suevian Alps, and amongſt them the old Caſtle of Hohenberg; the Lord whereof, on the Ruine of the Houſe of Schwaben, became poſſeſſed of a great Eſtate here and in Upper Elſaſs; ſold afterwards to Rodolph of Habſpurg, the Founder of the now Auſtrian Family.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Brixentes, Suanetes, Ruguſci, and Calucones, who, together with the Vindelici (of whom more hereafter) and other Tribes of the Rhæti, (of whom ſomewhat hath been ſaid before in the Alpine Provinces) poſſeſſed themſelves of that Country which lieth betwixt the River Inn and the head of the Rhene, Eaſt and Weſt, Danubius and the Alps of Italy, North and South. Within which compaſs are the greateſt part of the Griſons, the Dukedoms of Schwaben and Bavaria on this ſide the Danow, and part of the County of Tyrol, and not a few of the Cantons of Switzerland. Subdued by Druſus and Tiberius Nero, Sons-in-law of Auguſtus, they were made a Province of the Romans: divided into Rhætia prima, taking in all the Countries from the Rhene to the Leck, or Lycus; and Rhætia ſecunda, lying betwixt the Leck and the River Inn, which by another name was called Vindelicia. By which accompt all Schwaben on the South ſide of the Danow was part of the Province of Rhætia prima, continuing ſo till vanquiſhed and ſubdued by the Almans in the time of Valentinian the third, Emperour of the Weſtern parts. As for the Almans who ſucceeded in poſſeſſion hereof, they were originally ſome Tribes and Families of the Suevi, the moſt warlike Nation of the Germans, inhabiting upon the Banks of the Riber of Albis: who, jealous of Cæſar's great Succeſſes, brought againſt him 430000 fighting men, of which 80000 were ſlain, and many drowned. They uſed to ſtay at home and go to the War by turns: they which ſtayed at home tilling the Land, to whom the reſt returning brought the Spoil of the Enemies. But after this blow we hear little of them, till the time of Caracalla the Son of Severus; during whoſe Reign, deſcending towards the Banks of the Rhene and the Danow, and mingling with other Nations as they paſſed along, they aſſumed firſt the name of Almans; either from that promiſcuous mixture of all ſorts of men, or (as I rather think) from Mannus the Son of Tuiſco, one of the great and national Gods of the Germans. And though they were well beaten by him at their firſt coming down, near the River Mœnus, and afterwards more broken by Diocleſian, who ſlew at leaſt 60000 of them at one time in Gaul; yet never left they to infeſt the Provinces of the Empire which lay neareſt to them, till in the end, following the tract of the Hunns who had gon before them, and beaten down many of the Forts and Garriſons which were in their way, they made themſelves Maſters of Rhætia prima, Germania prima, and part of Maxima Sequanorum, containing, beſides the Countries ſpoken of before, Alſatia, and ſo much of the Lower Palatinate as lies on the French ſide of the Rhene. But quarrelling with the French, their next neighbours, (of whoſe growth and greatneſs they began to be very ſenſible) they were firſt vanquiſhed by Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French in that great and memorable Fight at Zulp near Colen, and afterwards made wholly ſubject to the Conquerour, who oppreſſed them with an heavy and laſting Servitude. About this time they returned again to their old name of Suevians, their Eſtate being erected into a Dukedom, called many times the Dukedom of Almain; and, when ſo called, divided into the Upper Almain, comprehending the Country of the Griſons, with ſome parts of Switzerland and Tyrol, and the Lower or the proper Almain, which contained the reſt of the Eſtates of the ancient Almans, called for the moſt part by the name of the Dukedom of Suevia or Schwaben, and finally tranſmitting that name to this Province only, the beſt part thereof. Theſe Dukes were at firſt officiary only, removeable at the will of the Emperour, and accomptable to him; not ſeldom many at one time, eſpecially whileſt under the command of the French, ſome of them being Dukes of the Upper, and others of the Lower Almain. So that there is no great certainty of their Succeſſion, nor much care to be taken in ſearching after it; though otherwiſe men of great Authority and command in their ſeveral Times. The moſt remarkable amongſt them was Rodolph, Earl of Reinfelden and Duke of Schwaben, (deſcended from the Earls of Habſpurg) in the reign of Henry the fourth, againſt whom he was choſen Emperour by the practice and procurement of Pope Hildebrand, but overcome and wounded at the Battel of Eyſter, he died not long after of his wounds, with great Repentance for rebelling againſt his Soveraign. After his death, ſome Provinces being diſmembred from it, and other leſſer Eſtates firſt erected out of it, it was made hereditary in the perſon of Frederick Baron of Hohenſtauffen, ſurnamed the Ancient, by the munificence and bounty of the ſaid Henry the fourth, whoſe Daughter Agnes he had married. His Succeſſors follow in this order.

The Dukes of SCHWABEN.

1. Frederick the Ancient, the firſt hereditary Duke of Schwaben.
2. Frederick with one eye, Son of Frederick the Ancient.
3. Frederick III. ſurnamed Barbaroſſa, Son of Frederick with one eye, Duke of Schwaben, and Emperour: he ſucceeded the Emperour Henry the fifth in the Dukedom of Franconia, and left the ſame unto his Succeſſors.

1190 4. Frederick IV. ſecond Son of Barbaroſſa; his elder Brother Henry ſucceeding in the Empire by the name of Henry the ſixth.

5. Conrade

5. Conrade, Brother of Frederick the fourth.
6. Philip, Brother of Conrade, after the death of Henry the 6. elected Emperour.

1207 7. Frederick V. Son of Henry the sixth, elected Emperour by the name of Frederick the second; King of Naples and Sicily also in the right of his Mother.

1250 8. Conrade II. Son of Frederick the fifth, King of both Sicilies, and Emperour of Germany after the death of his Father; poisoned, as was supposed, by his base Brother Manfred, who succeeded in his Kingdom of Sicily.

1254 9. Conradine, the Son of Conrade, pursuing his Right unto the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, was overcome and taken prisoner by Charles of Anjou, Successour unto Manfred in those Estates, and by his command beheaded at Naples Anno 1268. After whose death (being the last of that powerful and Imperial Family) this vast Estate was brought unto a second dismembring, and divided amongst the Bishops, Princes and Free Cities hereof: of which last there are more within the old Precincts of this Dukedom than in all Germany besides. So that beholding it in the first and second Dilapidation, we find many goodly Patrimonies and fair Estates (besides what belongeth to the Cities and Episcopal Sees) to have been raised out of the Ruines of this great Dukedom: that is to say, the Dukedoms of Zeringen and Wirtenberg, with the Marquisate of Baden, dismembred from it when conferred on Frederick of Hohenstauffen; the Earldoms of Pfirt, Hohenberg and Friburg, (besides a great improvement of the Earldom of Habspurg) advanced out of the second Ruine. How Pfirt and Hohenberg were united to the House of Austria hath been shewn already; and what becomes of Wirtenberg and Baden shall be shewn hereafter. Here it is only to be noted, that the Family of Zeringen, possessed of almost all Brisgow and a great part of Switzerland, owe their Original to Berthold, the Son of Gebizo, a younger Son of Guntram the 2. Earl of Habspurg. Which being extinguished after a Succession of seven Princes only in the person of Berthold the fifth, (who died the same day in which the Emperour Rodolph of Habspurg was born) Anno 1218, the Rights hereof descended on the Earls of Friburg, the principal City of that Country: Cuno, the first that bare the Title of Earl of Friburg, being the eldest Son of Judith, Sister and Heir of Berthold the last Duke of Zeringen. Eggon, the last Earl of which House, being overlaid by his undutiful and rebellious Subjects, sold his Estate therein for 12000 Ducats to Albert and Leopold Dukes of Austria, Sons of Albert the Short, whose Successors enjoy all Brisgow to this very day.

The Arms of Schwaben were Argent, 3 Leopards Sable, as is said by Bara: But Paradine will have them to be three Leopards Sable, crowned Gules, in a Field Or.

7. BAVARIA.

BAVARIA is bounded on the East with Austria, on the West with the River Leck or Lycus, which parts it from Schwaben, on the North with Norgoia, or the Upper Palatinate, and on the South with the Earldom of Tyrol and Carinthia. It containeth the whole Province of Rhetia secunda, and so much of Noricum mediterraneum as now maketh up the Bishoprick of Salczburg, and by a distinct name was called Vindelicia, as being the ancient habitation of the Vindelici; so named from the two Rivers of Vindis and Lycus, (now the Werd and the Leck) upon which they lived. According whereunto it is thus verified by a German Poet:

Respicit & latè fluvios Vindimque Licumque
Miscentes Undas, & nomina Littoris, unde
Antiquam Gentem, populumque, Urbemque vocârunt
Vindelicam.———

In English thus,

Vindis and Lycus, Floods of noted fame,
He next beholds mingling their Streams and Name;
To which the old Vindelici do own
The name of both their Nation and their Town.

Meaning by their Town, as I conceive, Augusta Vindelicorum, their Metropolis or Capital City. But after such time as the Boii or Boiarians had driven out the Romans, and got possession of this Country, the name of Vindelicia and Rhætia secunda grew into disuse, that of Boiaria succeeding in the place thereof, mollified or corrupted into Bavaria, the present name of the Country amongst the Latines; but by the Dutch called Bayeren, by the French Bavier.

The whole is divided into three parts: the Higher, lying towards the Alps of Tyrol, the Lower, extending all along the banks of the Danow; and the District of Saltzburg, situate betwixt the Inn and the Dukedom of Austria: all three much over-spread with Woods and Forests, remainders of the Hercynian Forest described before. But more particularly the Higher, lying towards the Alps, is cold and barren, affording no Wines, and but little Corn: the Lower being more fruitful, and better planted, for some parts (especially about Regenspurg and Landshut) inferior unto none in Germany for Richness and pleasantness of the situation. Of the District of Saltzburg we shall speak by it self, because by some not reckoned as a part hereof. In all there is great quantity of Fewel for the fire, and of Timber for Building; no less of Swine fatted in the Woods, and sent away by numerous Herds into other Countries.

The Christian Faith was first preached here amongst the Boiarians by Rupertus Bishop of Wormes, driven from his See by Childebert King of the French, Anno 540, or thereabouts, and here made the first Bishop of Saltzburg: corrupted at this time with the Leven of the Church of Rome, to which this Country (setting aside the Imperial Cities) is more entirely devoted than any other in all Germany.

Principal Cities in the HIGHER are 1. Munchen, (in Latine Monachium) the Duke's Seat, seated on the Isar, or Isara, in a very sweet and delightful Soil, among Ponds and Groves, daintily interlaced with pretty Riverets, and enriched with many excellent Gardens; that of the Duke being hardly to be parallel'd in all this Continent: first founded by Henry Duke hereof in the time of Otho the first, Anno 972, now grown a large and populous City; the publick Buildings, as Churches, Turrets, Libraries, the Senate-house, or Guild-hall, and common Market-place, of such excellent Structure, that they serve not only for Use and Ornament, but for Admiration. Amongst them none is more eminent than the Library in the Ducal Palace, wherein are conceived to be 11000 Volumes, the most part of them Manuscripts. A Town made choice of by Maximilian, the now Duke of Bavaria, to be the receptacle of the Spoils got by him in the Wars of Germany: here being found (at such time as the Town was taken by the King of Sweden) 140 Brass Pieces (besides other great Guns) hidden under the ground, one of the which was charged, instead of Powder and Shot, with 30000 Crowns in Gold. 2. Landsperg, upon the Leck or Lycus, near the Alps of Tyrol: once of great strength, because a Frontier towards Schwaben; but proving a dangerous neighbor to the Swedish Garrisons planted in these parts, during that War against the Duke of Bavaria, was by them taken and dismantled, and is now an open Village only. 3. Martenwald, now a place of no note or beauty, heretofore the Inutrium of Ptolomy, seated near the Alps. 4. Fridberg, well fortified by Duke Ludowick or Lewis the second for a Bulwark against those of Augsburg. 5. Here stood also the old Castle of Schyre, built by Arnulph 2. Son of Arnulph the first, Duke of Bavaria; the Seat and honorary Title of his posterity, (Dynastæ Schyrenses in the Latine) till Otho of Wittlesback, by the favour of Frederick Barbarossa and his own good fortune, did attain that Dukedom.

In the LOWER Bavaria there first offers it self to consideration the Town of Rain, seated on the Leck, not far from the fall thereof into the Danow; memorable for the Skirmish near to it betwixt the Swedes and Bavarians at the first passing of the Swedish Forces over that River, in which John Earl of Tilly, so famous for his long and fortunate Conduct of the Imperial Armies, received his death's wound, of which he died at Ingolstad within few weeks after. 2. Newburg, upon the Danow, not far from Rain; the first Town of Bavaria taken in by the Swedes after the said Defeat of Tilly. 3. Ingolstad, said to be built by a Tribe or Nation of the Sueves called Angeli, and thence called Angelostadium, or Angelstade; first made a City by Ludowick of Bavaria Duke and Emperour, and in the year 1410 made an University, much priviledged by Duke Lewis or Ludowick the fifth and Pope Pius the second. A Town so strongly fortified both by Art and Nature, that it seems impregnable; and indeed proved so to Gustavus the late King of Sweden, who here found the first check to his prosperous Fortunes, being forced to raise his Siege without endangering it, and find work elsewhere. 4. Regenspurg, (in Latine Ratisbona) on the Danow also, where it receives the River Regen, whence it hath its name; built in the place of Tiberina, or Augusta Tiberii, so called of a Colony brought hither by Tiberius Cæsar about the time of our Saviour's Passion; afterwards called Rhætopolis, or the City of the Rhætians, the chief of Rhætia secunda. At this time it is a fair, rich, and populous City, beautified with an infinite number of Churches and Religious Houses: anciently an Episcopal See, and of late made the ordinary place for the general Diets of the Empire. In former times it was the Seat of the Kings and first Dukes of Bavaria, then made Imperial, and now mixt, or both: for being still Imperial, at the least in name, it was seized on unexpectedly by the now Duke of Bavaria, when the Swedes first got footing within his Dominions; held by him with a very strong Garrison, after the loss of Munchen his chief place of Residence, till at last won from him by the Swedes, Anno 1633. 5. Passaw, by the modern Latinists Patavia, but by some thought to be the Boiodurum of Ptolomy, then a Roman Garrison: seated on the Danow, where it meeteth with the Inn and the Iltz; by which it is divided into three Towns, Passaw, Instadt, and Ilstadt, the whole Compositum being a rich, fair, and well traded City: a See Episcopal, and subject immediately to the Bishop as chief Lord hereof, who hath his dwelling in the Castle of Oberhausen, adjoining to that part hereof which is called Ilstadt. A place remarkable for many Meetings and Consultations of the German Princes, especially for that of the year 1552, in which, all former Quarrels being laid aside, the Protestants were first permitted the free Exercise of their Religion, by the consent and Edict of Charles the fifth, who had most laboured to suppress it. More in the Land is 6 Frising, on the swelling of a fine round Hill near the River Ambra, which runs beneath it, called anciently Fraxinum, conceived to be built by some of the Presidents or Lieutenants for the Roman Emperours; honoured with an Episcopal See about the year 716. One of the Bishops whereof, commonly called Otho Frisingensis, was the best Historian of his time. 7. Landshut, upon the River of Iser, in the richest and most pleasant Country of all Bavaria; a beautiful and well built City, the work of Lewis Duke hereof, in the year 1208, adorned with a Church of most curious building for the service of God, and a magnificent Palace for the use of the Duke. 8. Freistat, the only Imperial Town, (except Regenspurg) in all this Dukedom. The whole number of Cities and great Towns in both Bavaria's is supposed to be 80; that is to say, 34 Cities, and 46 great Towns, of which these are the principal.

The Bishoprick or District of SALTZBURG, being the third part of Bayeren or Bavaria, (according to our former division of it) extendeth from the Inn or Oenus towards the Confines of Austria. The Soil hereof is rocky, dry, and barren, excepting some few Vallies only, as seated in the midst of the Julian Alps, the habitation heretofore of the Norici mediterranei, of whom more hereafter. The principal Town hereof is Saltzburg, seated upon the River Saltzach, whence it had the name; raised out of the Ruines of Juvavia, placed hereabouts by Antoninus, the Station of a Cohort of Roman Souldiers belonging to the First Legion. An Alpine City, strongly situate among the Mountains; but no less beautiful than many of the lower grounds. The Royal Seat of some of the Bavarian Kings, after of the Archbishops hereof, the most powerful Prelates for Revenue or Jurisdiction of any in Germany. The See was first fixed here by Rupertus or Rutbertus, the first Apostle of these parts, spoken of before; whose Image or Impress is stamped to this day on the Coins of this Bishoprick. At the time when Luther first endeavoured a Reformation, Cardinal Matthæus Langius was Bishop here, who did ingenuously confess, that the Mass did not want its faults; that the Court of Rome was much corrupted, and the lives of Priests and Friers fit to be reformed: sed quod misellus Monachus omnia reformet, id non esse tolerabile; but that such a sorry fellow as Luther should attempt the work, was by no means to be endured. 2. Newkirch, on the same River, near the head thereof. 3. Rotenburg, on the East-side of the Inn, bordering on Bavaria. 4. Traunsheim, upon the Traun, rising out of the Lakes. 5. Wildeshut, one of the farthest Northwards, and 6. Bishopsstoffe, one of the most Southern in all this Tract.

The first Inhabitants of Bavaria (excluding the District of Saltzburg) were the Vindelici, as aforesaid: a people so resolvedly bent to maintain their Freedom against the incroachment of the Romans, that when Drusus, the Son-in-law of Augustus, and Father of Germanicus Cæsar, made War upon them, the very Women thereof took the Alarm; & deficientibus telis, Infantes in ora militum adversa miserunt, and when their Darts were spent, threw their young Infants (saith the Historian) at the heads of the Romans. After them, in the declining of the Empire, succeeded the Boiarians, some of the many Tribes of the Boii, the most diffused and multitudinous Nation of Gaul and Germany. Originally they were of Gaul, inhabiting the Dukedom of Bourbon, from whence some of them passed with the Senones and others of the Gauls to the farther side of the Alps (in respect of them) where they took up the Country between the Appennine and the Po. Wearied with many Bickerings, at last with sharp and bitter Wars against the Romans, and by them depriv'd of half their Country, some of them passed into Germany, and mingled themselves with the Taurisci, then dwelling in those parts which we now call Stiermark: others advancing farther, thrust themselves into the Norici, (of whom more anon;) and some retired themselves into the shelters and fast places of the Hercynian

Forest

Foreſt. Driven from this laſt by the Marcomanni, they fell into the Countries of the Hermanduri and Norici, (now the Upper Palatinate) who, mingled into one Nation with them, took the name of Boiarians, and were by that name firſt known in the time of Clovis the 5. King of the French; by whoſe perſwaſion, in the 17 year of Anaſtaſius Emperour of the Eaſt, they paſſed over the Danow, and poſſeſſed themſelves of Vindelicia, or the ſecond Rhætia, with ſome part of Noricum, to which they gave the name of Boiaria, as before was ſignifyed. They were governed firſt by Kings, (as all Nations were) of whom we meet with none but Aldigerius, (and he the laſt of that Race) ſlain fighting on the ſide of the Almans againſt the French, at the great Battel of Zulp near Colen. After which they were made ſubject to the Conquerors, as their neighbours and Confederates the Almans were, but ſuffered to live under the command and Government of their own Princes, by the name of Dukes. Of theſe, from Theodo the Son of Aldigerius, to Taſſilo the laſt Duke, outed of his Eſtate and Honours by Charles the Great, for conſpiring with the Lombards againſt him, are reckoned 15 Dukes in all; whoſe names (for there remaineth little of them but the empty names) we ſhall ſubjoyn in the enſuing Catalogue of the Dukes of the BOIARIANS.

493 1. Theodo, Son of Aldigerius the laſt King; from whoſe younger Brother Utilo deſcended Pepin the Father of Charles the Great.
511 2. Theodo II. ſirnamed the Great.
537 3. Theodebert.
4. Theodo III. the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Boiarians.
565 5. Taſſilo Son of Theodebert.
593 6. Garibaldus.
612 7. Theodo IV.
630 8. Taſſilo II.
650 9. Theodo. V.
10. Theodebert II.
11. Theodo VI. Son of Grimoldus, the Brother of Theodebert the ſecond.
708 12. Grimold.
13. Hugobert, Brother of Grimold.
735 14. Utilo.
765 15. Taſſilo III. the laſt Duke of the Boiarians, of whom more anon.

Amongſt theſe, few were of any note but 1. Theodo the firſt, Son of Aldigerius, who abandoning the name of King becauſe leſs pleaſing to the French, who had newly conquered them, aſſumed that of Duke, and paſſing over the Danow, extorted the whole Province of Rhætia ſecunda, with part of Noricum, from the Romans, Anno 508. or thereabouts. 2. Theodo the ſecond, named the Great, for his great and many Victories againſt the Romans, whom he outed of all Noricum and Vindelicia, and whatſoever they held on the Dutch ſide of the Alps. 3. Theodo the third of that name, and the fourth in number of the Dukes, converted with his people to the Chriſtian Faith by the preaching of Rupertus before mentioned, An. 580. 4. Taſſilo the third of that name, and the laſt of their Dukes of the Race of Aldigerius, or of the old Boiarian bloud; who being depoſed by Charles the Great, the whole Country became immediately ſubject to the French, governed at firſt by their Lieutenants. Diſmembred from the French Empire by Lewis the Godly, it was made a Kingdom, (Pannonia being added and united to it) by whom it was conferred on Lotharius his eldeſt Son, who was afterwards Emperour of the Romans: after his death poſſeſſed by the Kings of Germany, but as a diſtinct Kingdom both in name and Title, till the deceaſe of Lewis the Son of Arnulph, the laſt of the direct Line of Charles the Great. He being dead, and the Bavarians loth to be made a ſubject Province to the Kingdom of Germany, one Arnulph of the Iſſue of the ſaid Charles, with the general liking of the Boiarians, took upon himſelf the Title of King; but being oppoſed therein by Conrade the Brother of Lewis, Emperour and King of Germany, and alſo by Henry the firſt who ſucceeded, he changed the Title of King into that of Duke: the Founder of the preſent Houſe of

The Dukes of BAVARIA.

1. Arnulph, of the Houſe of Charles the Great, firſt Duke of Bavaria.
2. Eberhard, Son of Arnulph, depoſed by Otho the firſt.
3. Berchthold, the Brother of Arnulph, confirmed in the Eſtate by the ſaid Emperour Otho. After whoſe death it was conferred on Henry, the Brother of Otho the 1. who had married Judith, Daughter of Arnulph the firſt Duke, and Siſter to Eberhard.
4. Henry, Brother of Otho the firſt, ſirnamed Rixoſus, or the Quarrelſom.
5. Henry II. Son of the former Henry, ſirnamed Hezelo.
6. Henry III. ſirnamed the Saint, Son of Henry the 2. the firſt Emperour who came in by Election, according to the Order made by Pope Gregory the 5. After whoſe coming to the Empire this Dukedom was transferred for 14 Succeſſions from one great Family to another, according to the power and pleaſure of the preſent Emperour, in manner following.
7. Henry IV. ſirnamed Hezzel, Brother to Cunegund, the renowned Wife of Henry the Saint, by whom he was preferred to this Dukedom, and by him depoſed.
8. Henry Guelph, Son of Robert Earl of Altorff in Schwaben, (of the ſtrange Original of which Family we ſhall ſpeak in Brunſwick) made Duke by the Emperour Conrade the 2.
9. Guelpho, Son of Henry Guelph, or Henry the 5.
10. Erneſt, created Duke hereof by the ſame Conrade the 2. and by him depoſed again for conſpiring againſt him.
11. Henry VI.
12. Cuno, accuſed of conſpiracy, and diſplaced by Henry the 3. to make room for
13. Henry VII. Son of the ſaid Emperour Henry the 3. whom he ſucceeded in the Empire by the name of Henry the 4.
14. Agnes, the Mother of the ſaid Henry the 4. by the gift of her Son.
15. Otho, by the gift of the Empreſs Agnes, depoſed not long after by Henry the 4.
16. Welpho III. Son of Coniza, the Daughter of Guelph the 2. by Azon an Italian Marqueſs, made Duke hereof by the ſaid Emperour Henry the 4.
17. Welpho, IV. Son to Welpho the 3.
18. Henry VIII. ſirnamed the Proud, Brother of Guelpho the 4. by the Marriage of Gertrude Daughter of Lotharius the ſecond, Duke of Saxony alſo. Deprived of both by the Emperour Conrade the 3.
19. Leopold, Son to Leopold the 4. Marqueſs of Austria, made Duke by the said Conrade the 3.

20. Henry IX. Brother of Leopold, after Marquels, at last Duke of Austria.

21. Henry X. sirnamed the Lion, Son of Henry the Proud, restored by the Arbitrement of Frederick Barbarossa, (the Duke of Austria being otherwise satisfied) by whom he was not long after proscribed, and deprived of both his Dukedoms. After which this Estate became fixed and setled in the person and posterity of 1180 22. Otho of Wittlesbach, so called from the place of his birth or dwelling, descended lineally from Arnulph the Lord of Schyre in the Upper Bavaria, and 2. Son of Arnulph the first Duke hereof; advanced unto this honour by Frederick Barbarossa, sensible of the too-great power of the former Dukes: the whole extent of this Estate being reduced by this time to the limits of the modern Bavaria, and the Palatinate of Northgoia.

1183 23. Ludovick, or Lewis Son of Otho.

1231 24. Otho II. Son of Lewis, who, by marrying Gertrude, the sole Daughter of Henry Count Palatine of the Rhene, brought the Electoral Dignity into the House of Bavaria.

1290 25. Henry, Duke of Bavaria and Count Palatine of the Rhene, the Son of Otho the 2.

1294 26. Ludovick or Lewis II. Brother of Henry Duke of Bavaria and Elector Palatine of the Rhene.

1312 27. Ludovick or Lewis III. second Son of Lewis the 2. succeeded in the Dukedom of Bavaria; Rodolph, the eldest Son, succeeding in both Palatinates and the Electoral Dignity. He was afterwards elected and crowned Emperour, known commonly by the name of Ludovicus Bavarus.

1347 28. Stephen, the eldest Son of Ludovick the Emperour; William and Albert, his two Brethren, successively enjoying the Earldoms of Hainault, Holland, &c. in right of their Mother.

1375 29. Stephen, II Son of Stephen the first; his Brothers, Frederick and John, sharing with him parts of the Estate.

1413 30. Ludovick II. sirnamed Barbatus, deposed and imprisoned by his own Son Ludovick, who yet died before him without Issue.

1447 31. Henry II. Son of Frederick, the second Brother of Stephen the 2. succeeded on the death of Ludovicus Barbatus.

1450 32. Ludovick V. sirnamed the Rich, the Son of Henry the 2. banished the Jews out of his Estates, and seised their goods.

1503 34. Albert III. Son of a former Albert, Nephew of John Munchen by his Son Ernestus: which John was youngest Brother to Stephen the 2. who by the power and favour of Maximilian the Emperour succeeded unto George the Rich: the cause of a long and unhappy War betwixt the Electors of the Rhene and Dukes of Bavaria; the worst whereof, besides the loss of this Estate, fell upon the Palatines, proscribed and outed of their Country upon this quarrel; but, upon their Submission, restored again.

1508 35. William, the Son of Albert the 3.

1577 36. Albert IV. a great Champion of the Doctrines and Traditions of the Church of Rome; and so extremely affected unto the Jesuites, that he built Colledges for them at Landsberg, Ingolstad and Munchen, his three principal Towns.

1579 37. William II. Son of Albert the 4. as zealous as his Father in the cause of the Church of Rome; therein exceeded very much by

38. Maximilian, eldest Son of William the 2. who chiefly out of the same zeal of th with Ferdinand the 2. in the Wars of German ...es 1620. and took upon him the conduct of the Armie... the said Emperour against Frederick Count and Elector-Palatine, chosen King of Bohemia: in which having done great service to the Imperial and Romish Interest, he was by the said Ferdinand invested in the Upper Palatinate, called anciently (but not more properly than now) the Palatinate of Bavaria, together with the Electoral Dignity. This last was conferred at first upon him but for term of life in the Diet at Regenspurg, 1623. the Electors of Mentz, Saxony and Brandenburg then protesting against it; but afterwards, in the Diet at Prague, Anno 1628. conferred upon him and his Heirs for ever, to the great prejudice of the Princes of the Palatine Family, who, by reason of their simultaneous Investiture with the first of their House, are not to be deprived of their Estates and Dignities for the offence of their Fathers; the punishment not being to extend beyond the person of the offender. But notwithstanding their Pretensions and Allegations, the Duke is still possessed of the Title and Dignity, and confirmed therein by the Conclusions of the Treaty of Munster, a new Electorate being to be erected for the Palatine Princes.

The Arms of this Duke are Lozenges of 21 pieces in Bend, Argent and Azure.

8. The Archdukedom of AUSTRIA.

THE Archdukedom of AUSTRIA, reckoning in the incorporate Provinces and the Members of it, is bounded on the East with Hungary and part of Sclavonia on the West with Bavaria, and some parts of the Switzers and the Grisons, on the North with Bohemia and Moravia, and on the South with Istria and some part of Friuli in Italy. Within which circuit are contained the several Provinces of Austria properly so called, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, and Tyrol. The quality of the whole will be best discerned by the Survey of particulars.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole were the Norici of the Romans, parted into the lesser Tribes of the Sevaces, Alauni, Ambifontii, Ambilici, and Ambidranni; subdued by Drusus, Son-in-law to Augustus Cæsar, and made a Province of the Empire. After by Constantine the Great divided into Noricum Mediterraneum, comprehending the Countries of Carinthia, Carniola, Stiria, and some parts of Tyrol, with the Bishoprick or District of Saltzburg; of which Solva was the Metropolis or capital City: and Noricum Ripense, containing only Austria, and those parts of Bavaria which lie Eastward of the River Inn, extended all along on the banks of the Danow. It was known by no other names while possessed by the Romans; from whom being conquered by the Avares and other Nations, it gained those several names and appellations specified before.

1. AUSTRIA properly so called hath on the East the Kingdom of Hungary, on the West Bavaria, on the North the Bohemian Mountains towards the West, and on the other side the Teye, which separates it from Moravia, on the South Stiria, or Stiermark. It is called by the

the Dutch Oſtenreich, and contractedly Oſtrich, that is to ſay, the Eaſtern Kingdom, (a part aſſuming to it ſelf the name of the whole) this being the extreme Province of Eaſt-France, or the Eaſtern Kingdom of the French, in the barbarous Latine of thoſe times called by the name of Auſtraſia, whence the modern Auſtria.

The Air is generally very healthy, and the Earth as fruitful, yielding a plentiful increaſe without help of Compoſt or other Soiling, and of ſo eaſie a Tillage to the Husbandman, that on the North ſide of the Danow it is ploughed and managed by one Horſe only. Exceeding plentiful it is of Grain, and abundant in Wine; with which [illegible] eth the defects of Bavaria: it hath grea[illegible] ill. Then[illegible]on, ſome proviſion of Salt; and at the foot [illegible] his Ma[illegible]ntains, not far from Haimburg, ſome Ginger alſo. Nor wants it Mines of Silver in a large proportion. It is divided by the River Danow into the Lower, and the Higher: that lying on the North ſide of the River, towards Bohemia and Moravia; this on the South ſide, towards Stiermark.

Places of moſt importance in the HIGHER AUSTRIA are, 1. Gmund, ſeated on a Lake called Gmunder-See, bordering on Bavaria, at the Efflux of the River Draun, which ariſeth out of it. 2. Lintz, ſeated on the Confluence of the ſaid Draun with the famous Danow; the Aredate of Ptolemy: a Town before the late Wars almoſt wholly Proteſtant; but then being put into the hands of the Duke of Bavaria, began to warp a little to the other ſide. 3. Walkenſtein, on the Ens or Aniſus, near the borders of Stiermark. 4. Ens, on the fall of that River into the Danow, raiſed out of the Ruines of Laureacum, ſometimes the Metropolis of Noricum Ripenſe, the Station at that time of the 2. Legion; afterwards an Archbiſhop's See, made ſuch in the firſt planting of Chriſtianity amongſt this people by S. Severine, An. 464. On the Reviver whereof (ſuppreſſed by the Hunns, Boiarians, and others of the barbarous Nations) by the diligence and preaching of S. Rupertus, the Metropolitan dignity was fixt at Saltzburg. 5. Weidhoven, near the head of the River Ips. 6. Ips, ſeated at the Influx of that River, and from thence denominated; the Geſodunum of Ptolemy and other Ancients. 7. Newſidle, on a great Lake ſo named. 8. Wels, on the main ſtream of the Danubius. 9. Haimburg, on the Confluence thereof and the River Markb. Near to which, at the foot of the Mountains now called Haimburgerberg, (from the Town adjoyning) but anciently named Mons Cognamus, is ſome ſtore of Ginger: a wonderful great rarity for theſe colder Countries. 10. Newſtat, firſt called ſo from the newneſs of it, being built of late. 11. Vienna, by the Dutch Wien, the principal of all theſe parts, by Ptolomy called Juliobona, Vindebona, by Antonine; the Station in their times of the Tenth Roman Legion; of whoſe being ſetled here there are many Monuments both within the City & without. Seated it is on the banks of Danubius, well built, both in regard of private and publick Edefices; each private houſe having ſuch ſtore of Cellarage for all occaſions, that as much of the City ſeems to be under the ground as is above it. The Streets for the moſt part are ſpacious, and all paved with Stone, which makes them very clean and ſweet in the midſt of Winter. It is fenced with a mighty Wall, deep and precipicious Ditches on all parts of it, and many Bulwarks, Towers and Ramparts in all needful places. The Walls hereof were firſt raiſed with ſome part of the money paid unto Leopold Duke of Auſtria, for the ranſom of K. Richard the firſt of England, taken Priſoner by him as he paſſed homewards through this Country from the Holy Land. Eſteemed to this day the ſtrongeſt hold of Chriſtendom againſt the Turks; and proved experimentally ſo to be in that moſt notable and famous Repulſe here given them An. 1526. at what time 200000 of them, under the conduct of Solyman the Magnificent, beſieged this City; but by the valour of Frederick the ſecond, Elector Palatine of the Rhene, and other German Princes, were gallantly reſiſted, and compelled to retire, with the loſs of 80000 Souldiers. Nor doth the Strength hereof ſo diminiſh the Beauties of it, but that it is one of the goodlieſt Towns in all the Empire; the Reſidence for theſe laſt Ages of the Emperours: made an Univerſity by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond; revived and much advanced by Albert Duke of Auſtria, An. 1356: adorned with an Epiſcopal See, many magnificent Temples, and ſtately Monaſteries: but above all, with a moſt ſumptuous and Princely Palace, wherein the Archdukes and Emperours uſe to keep their Courts; built by Ottacar, King of Bohemia, during the little time he was Duke of Auſtria. In the middle Ages, as appears by Otho Friſingenſis, it was called Fabiana: but being ruined by the Hunns, and again re-edified, was firſt called Biana, (the firſt ſyllable omitted by miſtake or negligence) from whence the Dutch Wien, and the Latine Vienna.

We ſhould now take a view of the Towns and Cities in the LOWER AUSTRIA, if there were any in it which were worth the looking after. The Country having never been in the hands of the Romans, hath no Town of any great Antiquity; nor many new ones built or beautified by the Auſtrian Princes, ſince it came into their poſſeſſion: the only one of note being Crems, or Cremis, on the left-hand ſhoar of Danubius, going down the water. 2. Recz, on the River Teye, bordering on Moravia; and 3. Freiſtat, at the foot of the Mountains on the skirts of Bohemia.

2. STIRIA, or STIERMARK, is bounded on the North with Auſtria, on the South with Carniola, on the Eaſt with Hungary, and on the Weſt with Carinthia; extended in length 110 miles, but in breadth not above 60, or thereabout. For the moſt part mountainous and barren, as being over-ſpread with the Spurs and branches of the Alps, and rich only in Minerals. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

Towns of moſt conſequence are, 1. Gratz, ſeated upon the River Mur, and the chief of the Province, from which the third Branch of the Houſe of Auſtria (ſince the time of Ferdinand the firſt) was called de Gratz, and had the Government of the Country for their part of that Patrimony. A Town once full of Proteſtants, and thoſe ſo ſtrong, that they could neither be forced out, nor hindred from the free exerciſe of their Religion, till the year 1598, in which Margaret, the late Queen of Spain, Siſter to the Archduke Ferdinand de Gratz, was by the Citizens ſolemnly entertained; with whom entred ſo many Souldiers, that the City was taken, and 14 Miniſters of the Reformed Religion preſently baniſhed. 2. Rackelſpurg, and 3. Pruck, both ſituate alſo on the Mur. 4. Stechaw, an Epiſcopal See, ſeated on the Dra, or Dravus, a well-known River, not far from the fall of the Mur into it. 5. Petaw, the Petovia of Antonius, ſeated ſomewhat higher upon the Dravus. 6. Lambach, the Ovilabis of Antoninus, on the Dravus alſo. 7. Voitſperg, upon the River Kainach. 8. Celey, the Celeia of Pliny, of great antiquity, as appeareth by many Roman Inſcriptions and other evident ſigns of Age which are upon it; for this cauſe thought by ſome to be that Celia, or built at leaſt out of the Ruines of it, which Ptolomy placeth in this Tract. It is ſituate on the River Savus, and hath a large juriſdiction over the adjoyning Countries. 9. Cauiſia, ſeated in a Mariſh on the edge of this Country: a place of great ſtrength both by art and nature; once one of the ſtrongeſt Bulwarks againſt the Turks in all theſe parts, and a great eye-ſore to them for many years; but taken by them at laſt, An. 1600, and never ſince regained by the Princes of the Houſe of Austria, though many times in vain attempted.

The whole Country, being mountainous and hilly, generally over-spread with the spurs and branches of the neighbouring Alps, and rich only in Minerals, as before was said, was anciently the Inhabitation of the Tauriſci, (part of the Norici) from whom it took the name of Stiermark, the Germans calling that a Stier which the Latins call Tauriſcus, or a little Bullock. By which account Stiermack is nothing but the Borders or Marches of the Tauriſci, the utmoſt Bounds of their poſſeſſions; as indeed it was. Laid to Pannonia in the diſtribution of the Roman Provinces, it was called Valeria, in honour of Valeria the Daughter of Diocletian. But once diſmembred from the Empire, it fell unto the name of Stiermark, with reference to the Tauriſci ſpoken of before. Firſt made an Earldom in the perſon of one Ottacarus advanced unto that Honour by the Emperour Conrade the 2. Leopold the 4. from this Ottacarus (two other Ottacars intervening) was made Marqueſs of Stiermark; and his Son, Ottacar the 4. was made Duke hereof by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa. But being without hope of iſſue, and infected with the incurable diſeaſe of the Leproſie, he ſold his Country to Leopold the fifth of Auſtria; who bought it with ſome part of that vaſt ſum of money which he extorted for the Ranſom of King Richard the firſt. It hath continued ever ſince in the poſſeſſion of this potent Family, but ſo, that it hath many times been aſſigned over for the Portion of the younger Brethren: as, namely, to Leopold the ninth of that name, one of the younger Sons of Albert the Short; Erneſt, the youngeſt Son of that Leopold: and, laſtly, to Charles the youngeſt Son of Ferdinand the firſt, called Charles of Gratz, Father of Ferdinand the ſecond, Succeſſour to Matthias in Auſtria it ſelf and all the reſt of the Eſtates incorporate with it: not like hereafter to be ſo impolitickly diſmembred from the chief of the Houſe, as in former times.

3. CARINTHIA, by the Dutch called Karnten, is bounded on the Eaſt with Stiermark and the River Lavand, on the Weſt with the Diſtrict of Saltzburg and the River Saltzach, on the North with Auſtria it ſelf, and on the South with Carniola, and the River Dravus, which, having its original in the skirts hereof, paſſeth through theſe Auſtrian Provinces into Hungary, and falls at laſt into the Danow. The Country, being ſituate in the worſt part of the Alps, is generally poor and barren, except only in Minerals; extending all along the Dravus for the length of 100 Engliſh miles, and 47 in breadth, betwixt that River and the Mur, by the which it is bounded.

Places of principal note in it are, 1. S. Veit, or Sancti Viti, the chief Town of the Country, ſituate at the meeting of the Glan & the Wunics, two ſmall Rivers, adorned with a ſpacious Market-place and a beautiful Conduit. 2. Villach, ſeated on the Dravus, in a pleaſant Valley encompaſſed about with Rocks; the Houſes thereof adorned on the out-ſide with painted Stories, very delightful to behold. 3. Gurck, a ſmall Town, but an Epiſcopal See. 4. Clagenfurt, on the Lake called Wera-See, a well-fenced place, called anciently by the name of Claudia. 5. Wolffperg, upon the Lavand, ſo near to Stiermark, that it is by ſome reckoned for a Town thereof. 6. Lavamundt, on the ſame Border, an Epiſcopal See, ſituate at the Influx of that River into the Dravus. 7. Freiſach, a Town of much antiquity, ſeated on the Oleza. 8. Spittal, &c. The Story and Succeſſion of the Dukes hereof, before the uniting of it to the Houſe of Auſtria (this Province and Carniola making but one Eſtate between them) we ſhall ſee anon.

4. CARNIOLA, by the Dutch called Krain, is environed with Sclavonia Eaſt, Friuli Weſt, Carinthia and part of Stiermark North, and Iſtria South. It is in length, from Eaſt to Weſt, (extended along the River Savus) 120 Italian miles, and about 76 in breadth. The Alps here being lower and leſs cold and rocky than more towards the Weſt, maketh it to be the more rich both in Corn and Wine, and other the productions of nature, than it would be otherwiſe.

The chief Towns are, 1. Newmarkt. 2. Eſling. 3. Marſpurg. 4. Pogoneck, and 5. Saxenfelt, all upon the Savus, which, ariſing in this Country, runneth through the very middle of it, and after falleth into the Danow. 6. Laibach, ſeated on a ſmall River of the ſame name; by Ptolomy called Pamportus, but by Pliny Nemportus, famous in old Mythology for the tranſport of the [illegible] with, called Argo, wherein Jaſon and his Comrades [illegible] 20. and the Golden Fleece: who coming out of Pontus, [illegible] ſaid Euxine Sea, took their courſe up the Danow, ſo into the Savus, then into this Town; hence carried their Ship over land into the Adriatick, and from thence ſailed into Greece, where they firſt began the undertaking. 7. Goritz, called anciently Noreia, or ſeated in the place where Noreia ſtood, is ſituate on the River Liſonzo, an Italian water, which not far off falleth into the Adriatick. A Town of ſo much note, that anciently it was an Earldom, and in the diviſion of the Eſtate of Mainard Earl of Tyrol, (to whom it formerly belonged) was given to Albert his ſecond Son, with the ſtyle and Title of Earl of Goritz; continuing in his Houſe till the year 1500. when, on the death of Leonard the laſt Earl hereof, it deſcended upon Maximilian the firſt, as next Heir unto it; whoſe Succeſſors, not only in the Eſtates of Auſtria, but the Empire alſo, do ſtill retain the Title of Earls of Goritz in their uſual Style.

The firſt Inhabitants of both theſe Provinces of Krain and Karnten, were the Carni of Pliny and other Ancients, who made them part of Venetia, the Tenth Region of Italy; but afterwards, in the diſtribution of the Roman Provinces, they were caſt into Noricum, and made a Member of the Dioceſe of the Weſtern Illyricum, but ſubject, or ſubordinate rather, to the Præfectus Prætorio of Italy. From them not only the Alps adjoyning had the name of Carnice, but theſe two Countries had the names by which now they go. They were united a long time in the perſons of the Dukes of Karnten, of whom the firſt mentioned upon good record was Henry, Son to Berchtbold, a Nobleman of Bavaria, in the time of the Emperour Otho the third, by him advanced unto this Honour and Eſtate; diſpoſed of in ſucceeding times at the will of the Emperours, and given from one Family unto another, as their fancies ſerved them; not fixed in any Houſe, till it came to Henry the Son of Engelbert, Preſident or Præfect of Iſtria: in which Family it continued under this Henry, and his Brother Engelbert, Ulric the firſt, Henry the ſecond, Herman, and Ulric the ſecond, the laſt Prince hereof, who, by his Marriage with Agnes, Siſter and Heir of Otho the ſecond, Duke of Meran, added that Eſtate to his former Patrimony. But being old, and without Children, he ſold his whole Eſtate to Ottacar, King of Bohemia and Duke of Auſtria; by whom theſe Countries were ſurrendred unto Rodolphus of Habſpurg, on the concluſion of the Peace which was made between them. And although Rodolphus gave Carinthia to Mainard Earl of Tyrol, (in right of whoſe Daughter Elizabeth Albert of Son of Rodolph was poſſeſſed of Auſtria;) yet on the death of Henry the Son of Mainard without Iſſue-male, it fell (according to the Contract) unto Albert the Short, younger Son of Albert, and Grandchild of Rodolphus; continuing ever ſince in that Family, though not always in the chief Houſe of the Dukes of Auſtria.

The ſtrange and obſervable Ceremonies with which the Archdukes of Auſtria are acknowledged Dukes of Carin- Carinthia take here out of Munster. In the Meadows adjoining to the Town of S. Veit, a certain Country-man, to whom that office by inheritance belongeth, sitteth on a Marble-stone there being, holding in his right hand a Cow with a black Calf, and in his left hand a Mare as lean as a Rake. Then cometh the new Duke attired in a plain rustick Habit, his Courtiers attending him in their richest Apparel: at whose approach the Country-man above mentioned demandeth, What is he that so majestically cometh hitherward? And the people answer, that it is the future Duke. He again asketh, whether he be a just Judge, and one that will maintain the liberty of the Country, and sincerity of the Religion. The people answer, He will. Then he asketh, by what right he will displace him of his Marble-seat. To whom the Steward of the new Duke's House replieth, He shall give thee 60 pence in Silver, the Cattel now standing by thee, the Clothes which he hath at this time on, and thy House shall ever be free from Tax and Tribute. The fellow upon this taking the Duke by the hand, and bidding him to be a good Prince, giveth him a gentle cuff on the ear, setteth him on the Marble-stone, and taking away the Cattel departeth. This done, the new Duke goeth to S. Veit's Church, and having done his Devotions, putteth off his rustick weeds, and dresseth himself in Clothes befitting a Prince: for such after their Ceremonies he is acknowledged.

The Arms of these Dukes were Argent, 3 Lions Leopards Sable.

5. TYROL is bounded on the East with Friuli and Marca Trevigiana, by the interposing of which, or some parts thereof, disjoined from Carniola; on the West with the Grisons and some part of Switzerland, on the North with Bavaria, and on the South with Lombardy. It is extended over the greatest part of the Alpes Rhæticæ, and some part of the Juliæ; yet intermixt with many rich and fruitful Vallies, those especially which lie on the banks of the Inn and the River of Adise. Nor are the Hills so void of profit unto the Inhabitants, but that they afford good store of Metalls digged out of them, especially of Brass and Silver; which last have yielded to the Arch-duke 230000 Crowns yearly.

Towns of most note are, 1 Oenipons, or Inspruck, so called from a Bridg on the Inn or Oenus, which gave denomination to the second Branch of Austria, descended from Ferdinand the second Son of the Emperour Ferdinand; the House of Gratz issuing from Charles the third Son of that Emperour. Most memorable for the hasty Flight of Charles the 5. upon the news that D. Maurice, whom he had lately made Elector of Saxony, was coming against him with his Forces, which so terrified him, that he fled away by Torch-light with some of his followers; the residue of his Court, (most of which were persons of great eminency) trudging in the dark on foot, with the black Guard and the Skullery. The Town hath been many times the Residence of the Dukes of Austria; who have here a very Royal and magnificent Palace. And, to say truth, the Town deserveth to be so honoured; amongst pleasant Meadows, spacious Corn-fields and shady Mountains sweetly seated: the Houses fairly built of stone, enriched by the Courts of Judicature here settled for all the Country, and provided of a gallant Armory. 2 Trent, (Tridentum it is called in Latine) situate in the Confines of Germany and Italy; for which cause the Inhabitants speak both Languages: built on the banks of the River Athesis, or Adise; honoured with an Episcopal See; but made more famous by the Council which was there begun by Pope Paul the third, An. 1545, against the Lutherans. It was for 22 years together before their meeting dashed by one Pope, and animated by another; advanced by Charles the fifth upon worldly Policies, and for as wordly Policies retarded by the Court of Rome: for 18 years after this first Convention of it, at sundry times assembled, suspended, and dissolved: and finally, when fixed here seriously by Pope Pius the fourth, Anno 1562, managed with so much art & cunning by the Papal party, that nothing was determin'd among the Prelates but what had been formerly resolved on in the Roman Conclave, and certified accordingly by especial Posts; occasioning that most bitter Jest of one of the Hungarian Bishops who was present at it, that the Holy Ghost was sent unto them in a Cloak bag from Rome. The effects of which Council, so artificially carried on by the strength of wit, I cannot better describe than in the words of the History of it, which are as followeth. "This Council, desired and procured "by godly men, to re-unite the Church which began to be "divided, hath so established the Schism, and made the "parties so obstinate, that the Discords are irreconcilable; "and being managed by Princes for Reformation of Ec-"clesiastical Discipline, hath caused the greatest Defor-"mation that ever was since Christianity did begin; and "hoped for by the Bishops themselves to regain the Epi-"scopal Authority, for the most part usurped by the Pope, "hath made them lose it altogether, bringing them into "greater servitude: on the contrary, feared and avoided "by the See of Rome, as a potent means to moderate the "exorbitant power thereof, mounted from small begin-"nings, by divers degrees, to an unlimited excess; it hath "so established and confirmed the same over that part "which remained subject unto it, that it was never so "great nor soundly rooted. So far the words of the History. The next of note is, 3 Falkenstein, remarkable for Mines of Brass; as 4 Hall upon the Inn for Salt-wiches, and 5 Schwas, for the richer Mines of Silver. 6 Malk, near the head of the River Athesis. 7 Pollen, upon the borders of Italy, by the people thereof called Bolgiano, and Bolsano. 8 Tyrol, an ancient Castle, the first Seat of the Earls or Governours hereof, and giving name for that reason to the Country adjoining. 9 Meran, neighbouring the old Castle of Tyrol, which gave the Title of Dukes to a Branch of the Caroline Race, descended from Rathboldus, a base Son of the Emperour Arnulph, possessed of many large Estates in these Alpine Countries, now appertaining to the Princes of the House of Austria. From one of which Dukes, called Otho of Meran, married to Beatrix, Heir of the County of Burgundy, the Earls of Burgundy (since that time) do derive themselves.

The Earls hereof were at the first no other than Provincial Officers: when made Proprietaries, I am yet to seek. The first of whom we have any certainty was Mainard, Earl of Tyrol and Goritz, who died in the year 1258, leaving his Earldoms to that Mainard who by Rodolphus Habspurgensis was infeoffed with the Dukedom of Karnten. But Henry the second Son of this last Mainard dying without Issue-male, his Daughter Margaret by the consent of all her people, settled her Estate therein on the Sons of Albert called the Short; which continues ever since in the House of Austria, though sometimes made the Portion and inheritance of the younger Princes. By Ferdinand the first it was given in Apennage to his second Son Ferdinand, sirnamed of Inspruck for that reason, who, by marrying with Philippina, a Burger's Daughter of Augsburg, so displeased his Brethren, that, to buy his peace of them, and enjoy his own content with her, it was finally agreed upon amongst them all, that Tyrol should not descend upon his Children of that Venter. In pursuance whereof, after his decease, Tyrol fell to the House of Gratz; his eldest Son Charles being made Marquess of Burgh, and Andrew his youngest Cardinal of Brixia. Who were the old Inhabitants of the Roman Austria we have seen already. The old Inhabitants of the other part are supposed to be the Quadi, in that part which lieth next to Bohemia; the Marcomanni, in those parts which are next Moravia: who intermingled with the Boii, and united with them into the name of Boiarians, won from the Romans the whole Province of the Second Rhætia, and so much of Noricum as lieth betwixt the Inn and the Ens, leaving the rest to the Avares, who possessed that and the two Pannonia's, extorted also from the Romans in the fall of that great and mighty Empire, as we shall shew more fully when we come to our description of Hungary.

But these Boiarians being conquered by Clovis the Great, and the Avares driven out of Pannonia by Charlemaigne, both Provinces became members of the French Empire, till the subduing of Pannonia by the Hungarians. To oppose whom, and keep in peace and safety these remoter parts, some Guardians, or Lords-Marchers, were appointed by the Kings and Emperors of Germany, with the Title of Marquesses of Ostreich, at first officiary only, but at last hereditary; made so by the Emperour Henry the first, who gave this Province to one Leopold, sirnamed the Illustrious, the Son of Henry Earl of Bamberg, of the House of Schwaben, and therewithall the Title of Marquess, Anno 980. This Marquisate was by Frederick Barbarossa raised to a Dukedom 1158; Henry being the first Duke, whose Nephew Leopold took Richard the first of England prisoner, in his return from Palestine; for whose Ransom he had so much money, that with it he bought Stiermark, together with the Counties of Neoburg and Lintz, and walled Vienna. His Son Fredericus, sirnamed the Warlike, was made King of Austria by the Emperour Frederick the second, Anno 1225. Eleven years he continued in this Dignity; at the end of which he was spoiled of his Royal Ornaments by the same hand, for denying his appearance at the Emperour's Summons, unto whom for some Outrages he had been complain'd of. Finally, he died in the year 1246, discomfited and slain in Battel by the King of Hungary. Leaving no Issue of his body, this Estate of right should have descended on Frederick, Son of Hermannus, Marquess of Baden, and of Gertude his Wife, the Niece of this Frederick the Warlike by his Brother Henry, who was afterwards beheaded at Naples by Charles of Valois, Anno 1268. But Ottacar, Son of Primislaus King of Bohemia, pretending to it in the right of Margaret his Wife, one of the Sisters of the said Frederick the Warlike, by a strong hand possessed himself of the Dukedom of Austria, which he increased by the addition of Carinthia & Trevigiana; all which he held, together with the Kingdom of Bohemia, till the year 1278, in which he was vanquished and slain by Rodolphus of Habspurg, not long before advanced to the German Empire. Rodolphus thus possessed of these great Estates, conferred them on Albertus his eldest Son, who had then married Elizabeth, Daughter of Mainard Earl of Tyrol by Elizabeth (or Agnes) his Wife, the Daughter of Gertrude, and Sister and sole Heir at last of Frederick, so cruelly murthered at Naples, as before was said. By means of which Marriage and Investiture Albert was quietly possessed of the Dukedoms of Austria, Stiermark, Carinthia, Carniola, together with Marca Trevigiana; to which the Earldom of Tyrol and many other fair Estates in Schwaben and Alsatia were after added. By whom it was first raised to the Title of Archduke is not yet agreed. Some attribute it to Rodolphus of Habspurg, at the Investiture of his Son Albert into these Estates, Anno 1298. Other to Charles the fourth, advancing to that Honour Rodolph the Ingenuous, Anno 1360. Some make it to be first given to Albert Duke hereof, in the year 1430: and others post it lower to the Marriage of Philip, Son of Maximilian of Austria and of the Lady Mary of Burgundy, with Joan Princess of Spain. But by whomsoever given at first, it is now the constant and hereditary Title of all this Family: the successive Princes whereof from the first Investiture follow in the ensuing Catalogue of 926 1. Leopold of Bamberg, the first Marquess.

The Marquesses, Dukes, Kings, and Arch-dukes of AUSTRIA.

988 2. Henry, Son of Leopold.
1014 3. Albert, Son of Henry, sirnamed the Victorious.
1056 4. Ernestus, Son of Albert.
1075 5. Leopold II. Son of Ernest, a Companion of Godfrey of Bouillon.
1096 6. Leopold III. Son of the second, Founder of the Abby of Neuburg.
1116 7. Leopold IV. Son of the third, by his Half-brother Conrade the third, then Emperor of the Germans, made Duke of Bavaria.
1141 8. Henry II. Brother of Leopold, Marquess of Austria and Duke of Bavaria, made the first Duke of Austria by Frederick Barbarossa, Anno 1158, the whole Country betwixt the Inn and the Ens being added by the said Emperor unto his Estate, on his relinquishing of Bavaria to the Duke of Saxony.
1173 9. Ludovick, Son of Henry, built Ens and Newstat; of great note in the Wars of the Holy Land.
1193 10. Leopold V. Son of Ludovick, the irreconcilable enemy of our Richard the first, taken prisoner by him in his passage homewards, and put unto a grievous Ransom, the Dukedom of Stiermark being purchased with a part thereof.
1230 11. Frederick the Warlike, Son of Leopold the 5. made King of Austria by the Emperor Frederick the second; the last of the Male-issue of the House of Bamberg.
1246 12. Ottacar, Son of Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, pretending the right of Margaret his Wife, Sister of Frederick, possessed himself of this Estate, adding thereto the Countries of Carinthia and Carniola, which he bought of Ulrick the last Prince thereof; but was dispossessed of all by Rodolph of Habspurg.
1283 13. Albert II. Son of Rodolph of Habspurg, by his Father made Duke of Austria, married Elizabeth, the lineal and direct Heir of Gertrude, one of the Nieces and (on the death of that Frederick who was slain at Naples) the next Heir of Frederick King and Duke of Austria; after his Father's death chosen Emperor also.
1308 14. Rodolph the Ingenuous, his other Brother sharing with him in the Estate.
1315 15. Albert, sirnamed the Short, the youngest and surviving Brother of Rodolph, succeeded in the whole Estate; a great advancer of this House.
1358 16. Albert IV. Son of Albert the Short.
1365 17. Albert V. Son of Albert the fourth.
1404 18. Albert VI. Son of Albert the fifth, King of Hungary and Bohemia in right of Elizabeth his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Sigismund the King thereof.
1439 19. Ladislaus, Son of Albert & Elizabeth, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Duke of Austria.

1493 21. Maximilian, Son of Frederick, enriched his House with the Marriage of the Heir of Burgundy.

1519 22. Ferdinand, Granchild to Maximilian by his Son Philip King of Spain & Archduke of Austria, succeeded his Grandfather in this Dukedom, King of Hungary, Bohemia, and Emperor of Germany.

1565 23. Maximilian II. Son of Ferdinand.

1577 24. Rodolphus III. Son of Maximilian the 2.

1612 25. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus.

27. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the second, now living, Anno 1648, Archduke of Austria, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Emperor of the Germans.

The Arms of these Earls when distinct from the House of Austria were Argent, an Eagle Sable, membred Or.

Thus have wee seen by what means and under what Princes all these Provinces, belonging unto several Lords, became united and incorporated into one Estate. Besides which, there was added to it by Rodolph of Habspurg all the Upper Elsass, the Castle and Territory of Habspurg it self, with many fair Estates amongst the Switzers; by Albert the Short, the Country of Sangow; and by his Sons, the Advocateship of Friburg, or the Country of Brisgow. So that these Princes are undoubtedly the greatest for Power & Patrimony of any in Germany, and would be of a great Revenue, if the ill neighbourhood of the Turks did not put them to continual Charges, and make the Borders of the Country to be thinly planted, and not very throughly manured. Howsoever, it is thought that they may yield yearly two millions of Crowns and upwards to the Archduke's Coffers.

The Arms of these Princes are Gules, a Fess Argent; assumed by Marquess Leopold at the Siege of Acon or Ptolomais in the Holy Land, because his whole Armour being covered with blood, his Belt only remained white. The Arms thereof in former times having been six Larks Or, in a Field Azure; supposed to have been taken by the first Marquesses, because they possessed those six Provinces, for defence of which the Tenth Legion, called Alauda, had been fixed at Vienna.

And now we are to take our leave of the Roman Empire, which we shall meet withal no more till we come to Hungary; the Countries on the North side of Danubus and the East side of the Rhene being almost as soon abandoned as conquered by them. So that in our survey of these Northern Countries we are not like to find such matter of Antiquity as we have before, but must content our selves both with Towns and Villages of a later date, and a lesser continuance. In which we shall begin with those Countries which lie on the other side of the Rhene, bordering on the Estates of Cleveland and the Bishops-Electors; and so proceed on Eastward till we come to the farthest parts of Germany, and the Confines of Hungary; afterwards turning to the North, till we meet with Denmark, which is next of all to be considered.

VETERAVIA, or WETERAW, is bounded on the West with the Bishoprick of Colen, on the East with Frankenland, on the North with Hassia and Westphalen, and on the South with the Lower Palatinate. It containeth a Combination of many small Estates, which being joined in a common League for defence of each other in the preservation of their Laws, Liberties and Religion, are called the Confederation of the Weteraw. The principal of the States which are thus confederated are the Earls of 1 Nassau, 2 Hanaw, and 3 Solms, 4 the Lord of Lichteberg, and the Imperial Cities of 5 Friberg, and 6 Wetzelaer.

The County of NASSAU (for Fruitfulness of Soil and Delightsomness of situation not inferiour to most parts of France) lieth at the foot of the Mountains which divide Hassia from Engern and Westphalen, anciently called Melibocus; a branch of the long ridge of Mountains which were called Abnobi. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Nassau, situate on the South-side of the River Lon, not far from the fall of it into the Rhene; the first Seat and honourary Title of this famous Family, and still in the possession of the Princes of Orange, the first branch hereof. 2 Dillenburg, the usual Seat of the Earls of Nassau before their settling in the Low Countries; whence they are named the Earls of Nassau of the House of Dillenburg, to difference them from others of the same Family. 2 Catzenelbogen, which gives the Title of an Earl to the owners of it; in Latine Catti Meliboci, which shews the name to be compounded of the Catti, anciently possessed of these parts of Germany, and the mountainous parts of Melibocus, then inhabited by them. The possession of this Town is much controverted between the Earls of Nassau and the Lantgraves of Hassia. Concerning which we are to know, that Henry, the second Son of Lewis Lantgrave of Hassia surnamed the Mild, married with Anne, Daughter and Heir of Philip the last Lord hereof, and by her had a Son called William, who died without Issue, and a Daughter named Elizabeth, married to John the third of Nassau, to whom she brought Henry and William Earls of Nassau. Elizabeth, on the death of her Brother William laid claim to the Estate, as the next Heir to him; followed in the pursuit thereof by William Count of Nassau, her surviving Son. Against which, William the 2. of Hassia did alledge a grant or donation of it from his Cousin William, the Brother of Elizabeth, as before is said, and having possession of the Town, and the members of it, was made thereby the better able to defend his Title. But at the last it was surrendred by Count William of Nassau, (Father of William Prince of Orange) unto Philip the Lantgrave, in the time of Charles the fifth, for the sum of 600000 Crowns: the House of Nassau notwithstanding retaining it amongst their Titles. 3 Herborn, a small University, or Schola illustris, founded of late by the Earls of Nassau; in which Piscator was Divinity-Reader, and Alstedius (both famous in their times) Professor for the Arts and Sciences. 4 Idstein, lying South to Catzenelbogen; and 5 Wisbad, directly South of Idstein, betwixt that and the Maine: these being the Title and Possessions of the second Branch of this Family. 6 Weilburg, on the Lon, not far from Wetzelaer; which gives Title to the third Branch of this House, called the Earls of Nassau in Sarbruck and Weilbrug.

As for the Princes of the House of Nassau, they are very ancient; Otho of Nassau being made Earl of Gelderland in the year 1079. Another Otho of this House, but proceeding from a different Branch of it, died An. 1190, the Founder of the present Family of the Princes of Orange,

Orange, and of the House Wisbad and Idstein; out of which descended Adolphus Earl of Nassau, chosen Emperor in the year 1292. By the Marriage of Engelbert, the seventh Earl of this House of Dillenburg, with Mary Daughter of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, they came first to be possessed of Estates in the Netherlands: and by the Marriage of Henry, great Grand-child of this Engelbert, with Claude of Chalons, they got the Principality of Orange in France. A Family as much honoured for the personal Merit of the Princes of it as any other in Europe; of some of which although we have already given a Catalogue, (in the description and story of Provence) as Princes of Orange, yet take here the whole Succession of them as

The Counts of NASSAU.

1. Otho, the Son of Henry, and Nephew of Waleran, the first Earl of Nassau of this Line.

1190 2. Henry, the Son of Otho, who added Dillenburg, Wisbad and Idstein, unto his Estate; Grandfather, by Waldradus his 2. Son, to Adolphus the Emperour.

3. Otho II. Son of Henry.

4. Henry II. Son of Otho the 2.

5. Otho III. Son of Henry the 2.

6. John, Son of Otho the 3.

1362 7. Engelbert, the Son of John by Mary his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, added that Town, with many other fair Estates in the Netherlands, to his former Patrimony.

8. John II. Son of Engelbert, Earl of Nassau, and Lord of Breda, &c.

1475 9. John III. Son of John the 2.

1516 10. Henry III. Son of John the 3. Knight of the Golden Fleece, married Claude of Chalons, Sister of Philibert Prince of Orange.

1536. 11. Rene, Son of Henry the 3. and of Claude of Chalons, Successour to his Uncle Philibert in the Principality of Orange, Anno 1530, and to his Father in the Earldom of Nassau, Anno 1536.

1544 12. William, the Son of John the 3. by Elizabeth his Wife, Daughter of Henry Lantgrave of Hassia, and of Anne Daughter and Heir of Philip Earl of Catzenelbogen, reformed the Religion in this Country according to the Lutheran Doctrines.

1559 13. William II. Son of William the first, succeeded Prince of Orange by the Will of Rene his Cousin-german, An. 1544, and Earl of Nassau by the death of his Father, Anno 1559. What else concerns this Prince, we have had before. I only add, that William the first, besides this William, had three other Sons: that is to say, Count John, the Father of William of Nassau Governour of West Friesland; Count Ludowick, of great renown in the first Wars of the Netherlands, in the course whereof he lost his life, Anno 1574; and Count Adolphus, slain in the same Wars also, Anno 1568.

1584 14. Philip, eldest Son of William the second and of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Maximilian of Egmond, Earl of Buren, succeeded Earl of Buren on the death of his Mother, An. 1551, Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau by the death of his Father.

15. Maurice, Son of William the 2. and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Maurice Duke-Elector of Saxony, Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau: at the age of 10 years made General of all the Forces of the United Netherlands, which place he managed for the space of 37 years with great both courage and success.

1625 16. Henry IV. Brother of Maurice, (but by another Venter, the Daughter of Gasper Coligny, Admiral of France) Count of Nassau, Prince of Orange, and General of the Forces of the States United.

1648 17. William III. Son of Henry the 4. Successor to his Father in all his Honours and Commands. A Prince of great hopes and expectations.

The Arms of the Earls of Nassau are quarterly, 1 Azure, a Lion Or, Armed Gules; 2 Or, a Lion-Leopard Gules, Armed and Crowned Azure; 3 Gules, a Fess Argent; and 4 Gules, two Leopards Or, Armed and Membred of the first.

Bordering on Franconia or Frankenland lieth the County of HANAW, so called from the chief Town of it: in which the places of most note are, 1 Hanaw it self, in Latine called Hanovia, honoured with a Schola illustris also, and much enriched by the trade of Printing, with which they use to furnish annually the Marts of Francford, distant from hence about ten Dutch miles. 2 Pfaffenhofen, of no note formerly, but like to be remembred in the Stories of succeeding times, for the great Defeat there given to the Duke of Lorrain, July 31. 1633. who lost his whole Forces, all his Ordnance, Ammunition and Baggage, and, which was worst of all, his Country; taken in part from him by the conquering Swedes, who followed him close unto his home; but wholly by the French King upon that advantage. 3 Lichteberg, which gives Title to a second Branch of the House of Hanaw, called the Lord of Lichteberg. A Family of good esteem, since the time that Otho of Hanaw was ennobled with the Title of Earl thereof, which was about the year 1392. Before that, Princes of the Empire; and after that advanced unto great Fortunes, by the addition of the Barony of Mintzeberg in the person of Philip the first Earl; of the County of Rheinick, in the person of another Philip, the third of that name, great Grandchild of the former Philip; and, finally, of the Lordship and Estate of Lichteberg, accrewing to this House by the Marriage of a third Philip, the youngest Son of Reinard the third Earl hereof, with Anne the Daughter and Heir of Ludovick Lord of Lichteberg; the Title and possession of the second Branch of the House of Hanaw, called Lords of Lichteberg and Hoschenstein, and Earls of Bitsch: this last being an Estate in Lorrain accrewing to them by the Marriage of a fourth Philip, (the fifth in name and order of the House of Lichteberg) with Margaret sole Daughter and Heir of Ludovick the last Earl thereof.

Betwixt the Counties of Nassau and Hanaw, on both sides of the River Lon, lies the Earldom of SOLMS; the first Earl whereof (of whom there is any good Constat) was Henry, honoured with this Title, Anno 1220. But being I find them in the Catalogue of the Counts Imperial, made before that time, I must conclude them to be ancienter than the date aforesaid; though that be sufficient to ennoble a far greater Family. By the Marriage of Conrade, the ninth from Henry, first with Elizabeth, one of the Daughters of William of Nassau, Prince of Orange, and after with the Widow of the Earl of Egmond, they came to be of such authority amongst the Netherlands, as to be privileged with a place and Suffrage in the Council of the States General: there settled at the present in their greatest honour, especially since the Marriage of Henry of Nassau, Prince of Orange, with a Daughter of Earl Conrade by his second Wife, the Mother of William of Nassau, now Prince of Orange, and Husband to the Princess Mary, the eldest Daughter of Great Britain. But besides their Estates there, they are possessed in this Tract of 1. Braunfelez, which gives Title to the first Branch of the House of Solms; 2. Cronenberg, the possession of the second Branch of this Family; and 3. Solms, on the North-side of the Lon, the Root of both.

Of the Imperial Cities in this Confederation, the first is Friburg, called for distinction sake Friburg in Weteraw, to difference it from another Town of that name in Brisgow; situate in the middle of delicious and most fruitfull fields, and memorable for the stout resistance which it made to Adolphus of Nassau, at that time Emperour; who, when he could not get it by force or famine, obtained it by fraud, and put to death no less than 40 of the chief Nobility, whom he found in the Castle. So hated he was for that bloudy fact, that he was shortly after deprived of the Empire, and slain in fight by Albert of Austria, his Competitor. The second of the two is Wetzelaer, seated on the Lon, where it meets with the Dille, which rising near Dillenburg, a Town of the Earl of Nassau's, doth here lose its name into the greater. A Town Imperial, confederate with Friburg and the Princes before mentioned, for maintaining their common Liberties, and the Religion publickly professed amongst them, being that of the Reformed Churches of Calvin's Platform.

10. FRANCONIA.

FRANCONIA, or FRANKENLAND, is bounded on the East with the Upper Palatinate and part of Voitland, on the West with the Confederates of Weteraw and part of the Rhene, on the North with Hassia and Thuringia, on the South with the Palatinate of the Rhene and some part of Schwaben. So called from the French, Franci, or Francones, in whose possession it was when they were first known unto the Romans; the Residence of their Dukes or Princes in this noble Province appropriating the name unto it. Called also Francia Orientalis, to difference it from the Realm of France, which lay more towards the West. At that time of a larger extent than it is at the present, comprehending so much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the same side of the Rhene; since subdued from it, and made a Province of it self in these later Ages.

The Country, on the out-parts overgrown wholly in a manner with Woods and Forests, and environed almost with Mountains, part of the old Hercynian Wolds, is within pleasant, plain and fruitful, sufficiently plentifull both of Corn and Wines, but abundantly well stored with Rape and Lycoras, and yielding good Pasture for Cattel. So that we compare it to a fine piece of Cloth, wrought about with a coorse List; or an excellent fine piece of Lawn, with a Canvass Selvage.

Chief Rivers of it are, 1. The Maine, or Mænus, which, running through the midst of it, is received into the Rhene below Francfort. 2. The Sala, whence the adjoyning French had the name of Salii, and Conrade, Emperour of the Germans, the sirname of Salicus. 3. Radiantia. 4. Sinus. 5. Tubero. 6. Altus, &c.

The people of it are ingenious, patient of labour, strong of body, and very industrious, not suffering any to be idle that can earn his living, of what sort soever. The offspring of the ancient French, who, having over-mastered Gaul and the parts adjoining, left here the seminary of their strength, and a stock of their ancient Princes; Marcomir, Brother of Pharamond the first King of the French, governing in these parts as Duke, and leaving the Estate and Title unto his Posterity. The Catalogue of which Princes take in order thus.

The Princes of the FRANKS, and Dukes of FRANCONIA, of the old French Race.

A. Ch.

926 1. Genebaldus, the Son of Dagobert, descended from the old Regal stock of the Sicambri, united with other Dutch Nations about 60 or 70 years before, in the name of Franks, having subdued those parts which lay towards the River Mænus, became the first Prince of the Eastern Franks, or Lord of Francia Orientalis.

356 2. Dagobert, the Son of Genebaldus, who added the District of Triers unto his Estates.

377 3. Clodoveus, or Ludovicus, the Son of Dagobert.

398 4. Marcomir, the Son of Clodoveus, who extended his Dominion Eastwards towards Bavaria and Bohemia.

402 5. Pharamond, or Waramond, the Son of Marcomir, the first of this Line which took upon himself the Title of King of the French: on the assuming whereof (aiming at matters of more importance) he left Franconia, or East-France, with the Title of Duke, to his Brother Marcomir.

419 6. Marcomir, the Brother of Pharamond.

423 7. Prunmesser, by some called Priamus, the Son of Marcomir.

435 8. Genebaldus II. the Son of Prunmesser.

455 9. Sunno, the Son of Genebald the second.

478 10. Clodomirus, or Lutiomarus, the Son of Sunno.

515 11. Hygobaldus, the Son of Clodomir, who became a Christian, and added Wormes and Mentz unto his Estates.

541 12. Helenus, by some called Hermericus, a Christian also, who, passing over the Rhene, subdued that Tract bordering betwixt Triers and Lorrain, which the Dutch call West-reich.

571 13. Gotofridus, the Son of Helenus, a Christian also, but not able to perswade his people to the same belief.

595 14. Genebaldus III. the Son of Gotofride.

615 15. Clodomir II. the Son of Genebald the third.

638 16. Heribert, the Nephew of Clodomir the second.

668 17. Clodoveus, or Clovis II. the Cousin-german of Heribert.

680 18. Gosbertus II. the Son of Clovis the second.

706 19. Gosbertus II. the Son of Gosbert the first.

720 20. Hetanus, the Son of Gosbert the second, the last Duke of Franconia of this Line. He dying without Issue-male, Anno 740. bequeathed it at his death to Pepin, who afterwards was King of France, Father of Charles the Great, according to a former Contract made between those Princes. And Charles no sooner had it in his possession, but he bestowed the greatest part of it on Burchard, the first Bishop of Wurtzburg, Anno 752, made Bishop of that City by Boniface, Archbishop of Mentz, (the first Apostle of this People) but a year before. The Bishops of Wurtzburg by this Grant were possessed hereof as long as any of the House of Charles the Great did possess the Empire. But his posterity failing in the person of Conrade, Anno 910. Otho the first (who next but one succeeded Conrade) invested Conrade, Husband to Luitgardis his Daughter, with this Country, giving him withal the Title of Duke of Franconia. Four Princes of this House possessed it; that is to say, this Conrade, sirnamed Salicus; and after him three Henries, Father, Son, and Nephew, successively enjoying the Imperial Dignity, by the names of Henry the third, fourth, and fifth. This Henry, the last Prince of the male Line of Conrade, dying without Issue, Franconia fell to Frederick Barbarossa, Duke of Schwaben, as next Heir to Henry, by the Lady Agnes his Sister, married to Frederick the Ancient, Duke of Schwaben, the Grandfather of Barbarossa. But that House being also extinct in the person of Conradine, Anno 1268. and no one Heir pretending to the Rights thereof, the Bishop of Wurtzburg challenged it on the former Grants; content to let some great ones have a part of the spoil, that he and his Successors might enjoy the rest. By means whereof it came to be divided betwixt the Bishops of Wurtzburg, Bamberg, Mentz, the Elector Palatine of the Rhene, (for anciently so much of the Palatinate and the Bishoprick of Mentz as lay on the Dutch side of the Rhene were but parts of Frankenland) the Marquess of Onoldsbach, the Earls of Swartzenburg, Hennenberg, and Hohenloe, and as many of the Free or Imperial Cities as are seated in it. Thus every one did gather sticks when the great Oak fell: the Title of the Duke of Franconia remaining notwithstanding to the Bishops of Wurtzburg.

1. WURTZBURG, the Metropolis of Franconia, the Seat and Residence of the Bishop, who is Titular Duke hereof, is situate on the Maine or Mœnus, in a pleasant Plain environed with Meadows, Gardens, and fruitful Mountains; and very well fenced with Walls, Trenches, Bulwarks, and other Arts of modern Fortification; well peopled, and for the most part handsomely and neatly built. Passing over the Bridge built of Free-stone on many large and spacious Arches, you come unto a fair and pompous (though ancient) Castle the ordinary dwelling of the Bishop; and yet so strong, that the many vain attempts of the Boors and Citizens, apt to pick quarrels with their Prince, made it thought impregnable, to which the situation of it on the top of an Hill added some advantage: but it proved otherwise when belieged by the King of Sweden, Anno 1631. who after a short, but stout, resistence took it by assault. Other Towns of most note which belong to the Bishops of Wurtzburg are, 2. Forcheim, where it is said that Pontius Pilate was born. 3. Gemund, at the meeting of the Maine and the Saltza, or Sala. 4. Bretta, upon the Saltza or Sala, not far from Gemund; remarkable enough, if for nothing else, for being the Birth-place of Melanchthon that renowned Scholar, the Phœnix of Germany, as some call him, and that not unfitly. 5. Cronach. 6. Staffelstein. 7. Hockstadt; of which little memorable.

But to return unto the Bishop as chief Lord of all. He is called in the refined Latine of these times Herbipolitanus, but commonly Wurtziburgensis; differing in sound, but not in sense: for Wurtzburg is no other than a Town of Worts, situate among Plants and Gardens, as before is said; and Herbipolis, made up out of several languages, doth signifie no more than a City of Herbs. By whom the Episcopal See was here first erected, and how the Bishops hereof came to be entituled unto their Estates, hath been shewn already. The manner how the new Bishop is admitted, and the old interred, may be worth our knowledge. On the decease of the former Bishop, the Lord Elect, attended with a great train of horse, is to make his entrance. As soon as he comes within the Gates, he alights off his horse, and putteth off his Robes, and being attired in a poor and despicable Habit, begirt about with a Rope, bare-headed also and bare-footed, he is conducted by the Earls of Hennenberg, Castel, Werthaim, and Rheineck, to S. Saviour's Church, being his Cathedral. The Dean and Canons there meeting him, ask him what he would have: to which he modestly replyeth, that, though unworthily, he is come to discharge the Office unto which he is called. Then the Dean thus, I admit thee in the name of this Chapter, committing to thy care this Church of Saint Saviour's, and the Dukedom thereunto belonging, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Which done, he putteth on his Episcopal Habit, sayeth Mass, and from thence passeth to the Castle, where he gives entertainment to all the Company. The living Bishop thus invested, proceed we next unto the Burial of the dead: whose Body being imbowelled, is kept in the Chappel of his Castle; his Heart preserved in a vessel of Glass. The next day he is carried to the Monastery of Saint James, holding a Crosier-Staffe in his right hand, and a Sword in his left; buried with them the next day after in the Church of S. Saviour. As for the Revenues of the Bishop, they must needs be great; the Bishop hereof in the time of Charles the fifth compounding for his peace with Albert, Marquess of Brandenburg, at the price of 220000 Crowns in ready money, and entring into a Bond to pay all his Debts, which amounted to 350000 Crowns more. By which we may partly guess at the richness of his Exchequer, and partly at the greatness of his Estate.

2. The second great Lord of Franconie is the Bishop of BAMBERG, a City seated on the Maine, not far from Wurtzburg, the little River Rednitz falling there into it: supposed by Mercator to be the Branionarium of Ptolemy, and to have took this new name from the Hill Baba (so called from Babi, Daughter of Otho Duke of Saxony, and Wife of Albert once Earl hereof) upon which it is situate, the right name being Babenberg, (remember that Berg in Dutch signifieth an Hill) and contractedly Bamberg. A City delectably seated amongst Mountains and pleasant Gardens, and in a soil exceeding fruitful of all necessaries, and yielding Lycoras in great plenty: the Birth-place of Joachimus Camerarius, one of the great Lights of Germany; and a See Episcopal, the Bishop of which is exempt from the power of the Metropolitan, subject immediately to the Pope, and Lord of many fair Towns and Territories in this Country; but much diminished since the time of Charles the fifth: the Bishop thereof then being given to Marquess Albert, above mentioned, for a Cessation from Arms, An. 1530. no less than 60 of his Lordships, (most of which fall unto the share of the Marquess of Onoldsbach) besides the Tutelage or Guardianship of his Wards and Clients. Of those which are remaining in the hands of the Bishops the principal are, 1. Bragingliae. 2. Schleistat.

3. The third great Lord to be considered is the Marquess of ONOLDSBACH, or Onsbach, who is Master of no small part of this Country; but his Estate (as those of the other German Princes) confused and intermixed with his Neighbours. His chief Towns. 1. Onoldsbach, or Onsbach, the usual Residence of these Marquesses, and the Birth-place of most of their Children. 2. Hailbrun, on the edge of Wirtenberg, walled in about the year 1085, and honoured with some publick Schools there founded by Marquess George-Frederick, Anno 1482. 3. Pleinfeit, not far from Nurenberg. Such places as they hold in Voitland, we shall meet with there.

These Marquesses are of the puissant Family of Brandenburg, by whom this fair Estate was wrested from the female Heirs of Wolframius, the last Lord hereof. The first who did enjoy this Estate and Title was Marquess George-Frederick, the Son of Albert Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, called the Achilles of Germany, the Father of Albert the first Duke of Prussia, and of George the first Marquess of Jagerndorff, and the Grandfather of that Marquess Albert who in the days of Charles the fifth so haraſſed this Country. But his Male-issue by Casimir his eldest son failing in that Albert, Anno 1557 it returned to the Electoral House; and by Sigismund, a late Elector, was given to Joachim-Ernestus, one of his younger Brethren, who by the Princes of the Union for defence of the Palatine was made chief Commander of their Forces Anno 1620. A charge in which it was supposed that he carried himself neither so faithfully nor so valiantly as he should have done; being much condemned for suffering Spinola with his Army to pass by unfought with, when he had all advantages that could be wished for to impede his march: the greatest part of the Palatinate being lost immediately upon that Neglect, and by degrees the rest of the United Princes either taken off from their Engagement, or ruined for adhering to it with too great a constancy. To him succeeded his Son Christian, now possessed hereof.

As for the other secular Princes which have any considerable Estates in this Country, they are the Earls of Henneberg, Hohenloe, Rheineck, Castel, Werthaim, Horpack and Swartzenburg, together with the Lords of Limburg and Rheichinberg; all of them named so from the chief Town of their Estates, and all those Towns enriched with some suitable Territory. Of these the Earls of Henneberg, Rheineck, Castel, and Werthaim, are Homagers to the Bishop of Wurtzburg, and are to do him service at his Inthronization: the Earldom of Rheineck being now united to that of Hanaw, as was shewn before; and that of Henneberg most famous, in that one of the Earls hereof was Father of that incredible increase of Children (as many as there be days in the year) produced at one birth by the Lady Margaret his Wife, Sister of William Earl of Holland, and King of the Romans. A Family of as great Antiquity as most in Germany, fetching their Pedigree as high as to Charles the Great, without help of the Heralds. But they of greatest power and Parentage amongst them are the Earls of Swartzenburg, deriving themselves from one Wittikindus, of the House of Saxony, who fighting for his Country against the French, Anno 779, was taken Prisoner, carried into France, and there baptized, at the perswasion of Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. Wittikindus, his Son and Successor, being baptized, at the same time also by the name of Charles, was the first Earl of Swartzenburg, a Castle of his own building on the edge of Thuringia, An. 796, whose posterity do still hold the same, but much improved in their Estates by Marriages and other accruments. A race of Princes which have yielded many of great influence in the affairs of Germany: amongst them Gunther Earl of Swartzenburg, elected Emperour of the Romans against Charles the fourth, by Rodolph Elector Palatine, Ericus Duke of Saxony, Ludovick Marquess of Brandenburg, and Henry Archbishop of Mentz. By which last he was solemnly inaugurated at Aken (or Aquisgrane) Anno 1349. But being unworthily poisoned by his Competitor, though he died not of it, yet he was made so weak and unfit for action, that he was forced to surrender his pretensions to his mortal enemy; receiving in compensation for his charges 22000 marks in Silver, and some Towns in Thuringia.

Of the Imperial Cities, which share amongst them the remainders of Frankenland, the principal are, 1. Francford on the Maine, so called from its situation on the River Maine, to difference it from Francford in the Country of Brandenburg. It is divided by the River into two parts, joined together by a Bridg of Stone: the lesser part, situate on the right-hand shore of the River, being called Saxen hausen; the greater part, properly called Francford, seated on the other. Both are under one Magistrate, and both together make up a fair, rich, populous, and well traded Town; of great both riches and repute by reason of the famous Marts here held in the midst of Lent and September yearly, and the Election of the Emperour or King of the Romans, as occasion is. The City is of a round form, compassed with a double Wall, beautified with some Walks without the Town on the banks of the River, amongst Vineyards, Meadows, and sweet Groves: called thus as some say, from Francus the Son of Marcomir, supposed to be the Founder of it; or à Francorum vado, as the Foord of the Franks, before the building of the Bridge. 2. Schweinfurt, on the Maine also, in a fruitful soil. 3. Rotenburg, on the River Tauber. 4. Winsheim. Here is also the Town of 5. Coburg, which belongeth to the House of Saxony, and gives Title to some of the younger Princes of it, called from hence Dukes of Saxon Coburg. And hereto may be added 6. the fair City of Nurenberg, conceived by most to be within the Upper Palatinate; but by the Emperour Maximilian made a member of the Circle of Franconia, in regard most of the Estates and Possessions of it lie within this Country. Of which indeed they have so plentiful a share, that when Maurice Elector of Saxony and his Confederates had driven Charles the fifth out of Germany, Marquess Albert, before mentioned, (whose Sword was his best Revenue) picking a quarrel with this City, burnt no less than an hundred Villages belonging to it, seventy Mannors and Farmhouses appertaining to the wealthier Citizens, 3000 Acres of their Woods; and after all this havock made of their Estate, compelled them to compound with him for 200000 Crowns in Money, and six pieces of Ordnance. But being the City it self seems rather to belong to the other Palatinate, we shall there meet with it.

Amongst these Prelates, Princes, and Imperial Cities is the great Dukedom of Franconia at this time divided; the Title still remaining in the Bishop of Wurtzburg, and some part of the Country: but both the Country and the Title of Duke of Franconia not long since otherwise disposed of. For the Swedes having taken Wurtzburg Anno 1631, as before is said, together with the City of Bamberg, and all the Towns and Territories appertaining to them, conferred them upon Bernard Duke of Saxon-Weymer, with the style and Title of Duke of Franconia. He was inaugurated therein in the Cathedral Church of Wurtzburg, July 19. 1633, the Nobility and Gentry of the Country doing Homage to him, and all the Magistrates and Officers of the several Cities taking the Oaths of Allegiance; the new Duke also making Oath, that he would carefully maintain them in their Rights and Privileges. In the Solemnities of which day, the first great Gun discharged in the way of triumph broke in the going off, without any hurt done, but the wounding of one Souldier only. An Omen that all this solemn Act would prove but a Pageant, and break in pieces at the first giving fire unto it. And so accordingly it did: the Victory at Norlingen, which followed not long after this, putting the Bishops once more into their possessions, and leaving nothing to the new Duke but an hungry Title. And therefore leaving both the old and new titular Dukes, we will here add the Catalogue of those who were Dukes indeed, and had, together with the Title, the full Possession of the Country.

Dukes of FRANCONIA of the Dutch or German Race.

974 1. Conradus, ſirnamed Salicus, created Duke of Franconia by Otho the firſt, whoſe Daughter Luitgardis he had married: after the death of Henry the ſecond elected Emperour, by the name of Conrade the ſecond, Anno 1025.

1040 2. Henry, the Son of Conrade, Duke of Franconia and Emperour, by the name of Henry the third.

1056 3. Henry II. of Franconia, and IV. of the Empire.

1106 4. Henry III. of Franconia, and V. of the Empire.

1125 5. Frederick II. (ſirnamed Barbaroſſa) Duke of Schwaben, Nephew of Frederick the Ancient, Duke of Suevia, and of Agnes his Wife, the Siſter and next Heir of Henry, ſucceeded in the Empire after the death of Conrade the 3. his Uncle, Anno 1153.

1190 6. Frederick II. the ſecond Son of Barbaroſſa, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben.

7. Conrade II. Brother of Frederick the ſecond, ſucceeded in both Eſtates.

8. Philip, the younger Brother of Conrade, ſucceeded in both Dukedoms after his deceaſe; and on the death of Henry the ſixth his eldeſt Brother was elected Emperour, Anno 1198.

1207 9. Frederick III. of Franconia, and the V. of Suevia, Son of the Emperour Henry the ſixth, whom he ſucceeded in the Kingdom of Naples and Scicily, An. 1202, and on the death of Otho the fourth, Anno 1212, was elected Emperour, of that name the ſecond.

1250 10. Conrade III. of Franconia, the II. of Schwaben, and the IV. of the Empire, the Son of Frederick the third, whom he ſucceeded in all his Titles and Eſtates.

1254 11. Conradine, Son of Conrade the third, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben, diſpoſſeſſed of his Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily by Manfred the baſe Brother of his Father, and finally beheaded by Charles of Anjou, who ſucceeded Manfred in thoſe Kingdoms, Anno 1268. After whoſe death this Royal Houſe being quite extinguiſhed, the Biſhop of Wurtzburg did again reſume the Title of Duke of Franconia; content to let ſome of the greater Lords and Prelates, which lived near unto him, to ſhare in the poſſeſſion of it, as before was noted.

The Arms of the ancient Dukes of Franconia, before they were incorporated with the Houſe of Schwaben, were Azure, a Lion Barry of eight pieces Argent and Gules, crowned Or: which why it is now born by the Lantgraves of Haſſia, we ſhall tell you there.

11. WIRTENBERG, and 12. BADEN.

THeſe I have joyned together, though diſtinct Eſtates, becauſe both of them were taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, erected both about one time, and lie very cloſe, in a round together: bounded upon the Eaſt and South with Schwaben properly ſo called, on the North with the Lower Palatinate, on the Weſt with the Rhene, and that part of Schawen which is called Briſgow, parted aſunder by the mountainous ridge of Hills called Swartzwald; Wirtenberg lying on the Eaſt-ſide thereof, and Baden betwixt it and the Rhene.

And firſt for WIRTENBERG. The Air thereof is very healthy, neither two hot in Summer, nor too cold in Winter: the Soil near Swartzenwald lying on the Weſt, and the Alps of Suevia on the South, of it ſelf barren and unprofitable; but in ſome places, by the induſtry of the Plough-man, made to yield good Corn. But in the middle parts thereof which lie towards the Neccar, little inferiour for fruitfulneſs both of Corn and Wine unto any in Germany; beſides ſome Silver-mines near Wiltberg, and about Puellach, a ſmall Town, ſuch abundance of Braſs, that the Foundations of the Houſes ſeem to be laid upon it.

It took this name from the Caſtle of Wirtenberg, the firſt Seat of the Princes of it; as that did from the Intuergi, inhabiting the Dutch ſide of the Rhene; or from the Virthungi, as Beatus Rhenanus thinketh, mentioned by Trebellius Galio in the Life of Aurelianus; to which the word Berg, being added for a termination, made it firſt Tuerginberg, or Virthun-berg, and after Wirtenberg.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Stutgard, the Duke's Seat, a fair, rich and populous Town, and the chief of the Dukedom; ſeated in a pleaſant and fruitful Plain not far from the Neccar, yielding a quantity of Wine almoſt incredible. 2. Tubingen, on both ſides of the Neccar, united into one with a fair Stone-bridge. A Town well built, ſituate in a very rich Soil, and finally adorned with an Univerſity here founded by Eberhard the firſt Duke of Wirtenberg, Anno 1477, in which Leonardus Fuchſius that great Herbaliſt and Reſtaurator of Phyſick, was once a Profeſſor of that Faculty. 3. Canſtat, upon the Neccar alſo; not far from which, on the top of an Hill, ſtands the old Caſtle of Wirtenberg before mentioned. 4. Wiltberg, of great eſteem for its Mines of Silver. 5. Archingen, inhabited chiefly by Jews. 6. Schornadorf, upon the Rheems, much reſorted to by reaſon of the hot Baths there; as is alſo 7. Newnburg, on the Entz. 8. Haidenheim, 9. Greiningen, 10. Marbach; of which little memorable. There are alſo within the limits of this Dukedom many Towns Imperial. As 1. Wimpſen, and 2. Hailbrun, on the Neccar. 3. Gepping, upon the River Vils. 4. Weil. 5. Reutling, on the Neccar alſo, made Imperial by Frederick the 2. Anno 1240, otherwiſe of no great note but for the Paper-mills, 6. Eſsling.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Chatitni of Ptolemy, and part of the Intuergi ſpoken of before. It was made ſubject with the reſt of theſe parts to the Almans, after to the French, and finally a member of the great Dukedom of Schwaben. From which diſmembred in the time of Henry 4. after the dangerous War raiſed againſt him by Duke Rodolphus, advanced by the practice of Pope Hildebrand to the Throne Imperial, it came to have Princes of its own: the firſt Earl being Conrade, in the year 1100, by the grace and favour of the ſaid Emperour Henry. Increaſed by the addition of the Earldom of Montbelgard and many other Accruments, it was made a Dukedom in the perſon of Eberhard the 6. by Maximilian the 1. Anno 1495. The Earls and Dukes whereof follow thus in order.

The Earls and Dukes of WIRTENBERG.

1100 1. Conrade, the firſt Earl.
2. Ulric, Son of Conrade.
3. John, Son of Ulric.
4. Lewis, Son of John.
5. Henry, Son of Lewis.
6. Eberhard, Son of Henry.
7. Ulric II. Son of Eberhard.
8. Eberhard II. Son of Ulric.
1325 9. Ulric III. Son of Eberhard.

1344 10.

1344 10. Eberhard III. Son of Ulric.
1394 11. Ulric IV. Son of Eberhard.
12. Eberhard IV. Son of Ulric.
1417 13. Eberhard V. Son of Eberhard the 4. by his Marriage with Henrica, or Henrietta, Daughter of Henry Earl of Montbelgard, added that Earldom to his Houſe.
1419 14. Lewis or Ludowick II. Son of Eberhard the 5.
1456 15. Eberhard VI. Son of Lewis, Founder of the Univerſity of Tubingen, created by Maximilian the firſt, the firſt Duke of Wirtenberg, Anno 1495. He deceaſed without Iſſue, Anno 1496.
1496 16. Eberhard VII. Son of Ulric, the younger Brother of Lewis the 2. ſucceeded on the death of Eberhard his Couſin-german.
1504 17. Henry II. the Brother of Eberhard the 7.
1519 18. Ulric V. Son of Henry the 2. expulſed out of his Dukedom by Charles the 5. for the Sack of Reutling an Imperial City, and his Eſtate conferred on Ferdinand of Auſtria, the Brother of Charles: but, after 15 years Exile, reſtored to his Dukedom by Philip Lantgrave of Haſſia, he reformed Religion, and liberally endowed the Univerſity of Tubingen. 31.
1550 19. Chriſtopher, the Son of Ulric the 5. a follower of his Father's ſteps in Reformation of the Church, and Advancement of Learning.
1568 20. Ludovick or Lewis III. Son of Chriſtopher.
21. Frederick, Son of George Earl of Montbelgard, the Brother of Ulric the 5. made Knight of the Garter by Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1597.
22. John-Frederick, Son of Frederick the firſt.
23. John-Eberhard, eldeſt Son of the former Duke, now living, Anno 1648.

The Revenues of this Duke are ſuppoſed to be equal unto thoſe of the Electors Palatine, ſpoken of before; and were it not for the Silver-mines in Saxony, little inferiour to thoſe of that Duke. But for proviſions of War, (excepting Powder only) he is meanly furniſhed. A main defect, conſidering the ill terms he ſtands in with the Imperial Cities, betwixt whom and the Houſe of Wirtenberg there have been always open Wars or ſecret Jealouſies.

His Arms are Or, 3 Attires of a Stag born Palie-barrie, Sable.

As for the Marquiſate of BADEN, lying on the Weſt-ſide of Schwartzenwald, betwixt it and the Rhene, it is for the moſt part, except towards thoſe Wolds, a very pleaſant and fruitful Country, and much of the ſame nature with the reſt of Wirtenberg; ſo called from Baden, a neat Town, where the Marqueſs keeps his Seat in Winter; and that ſo named from the hot Baths there, as is alſo Baden (called, for diſtinction ſake, the Upper Baden) amongſt the Switzers: in which reſpect the City of Bath in Somerſetſhire had anciently the name of Caer-Baden alſo. Of theſe Baths it is ſuppoſed that there are in this City at leaſt 300, profitable for many Diſeaſes and exulcerate Sores, drawing a great reſort of people from the neighbouring Countries. This is the chief Town of this Marquiſate, from whence the Princes have the Title of Marqueſſes of Baden. The next to this is, 2. Durlach, or Turlach, which gives Title to a ſecond Branch of this Houſe; called alſo ſometimes Marqueſſes of Durlach only, but commonly the Marqueſſes of Baden-Durlach, 3. Liebenzel, amongſt the Hills of Schwartzenwald, famous for hot medicinal Springs. 4. Liechtenaw, remarkable for a Monaſtery, the Burial-place of the firſt Marqueſſes. 5. Gerſpach, in the very heart of that Mountainous tract. 6. Pfortzheim, adjoining to the Wood Hagenſcheis, a branch of Schwartzenwald. 7. Rotelen. 8. Badenwile, and 9. Suſenburg, all ſeated in the Upper Baden, being that part hereof which lies next to Briſgow. 10. Milberg, beautified with a fair Caſtle, the uſual Retiring-place of theſe Princes in the heats of Summer.

This Marquiſate, being alſo taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, was founded in the perſon of Herman of Verona in Italy, who deſerving well of the Emperour Henry the 5. was by him ſetled in ſome Lands about theſe parts, An. 1120. and after marrying with the Daughter of an Earl of Baden, was by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa created the firſt Marqueſs of Baden, Anno 1155. The Eſtate was after much encreaſed by the addition of the Earldom of Hochberg and the Appendixes thereof in Schwaben, into which Chriſtopher the 13. Marqueſs hereof, ſucceeded on the death of his Couſin Philip, the laſt Earl of Hochberg: both Princes deſcending originally from two Brothers; of which the eldeſt, in right of the Lady Judith his Wife, was Earl of Hochberg; the ſecond, by the favour of the ſaid Frederick Barbaroſſa, was made Marqueſs of Baden. They were Maſters alſo of many fair Eſtates in the Lower Palatinate, which the Palatines of the Rhene (as was there ſaid) are ſince poſſeſſed of. Other particulars ſhall be ſhewn (if occaſion be) in the enſuing Catalogue of 1155 1. Herman, the firſt Marqueſs.

2. Herman II.
3. Herman III.
4. Herman IV.
1281 5. Rodolph, Son of Herman the 4.
1295 6. Herman V. Son of Rodolph.
7. Rodolph II. Son of Herman the 5.
1356 8. Frederick, Son of Rodolph the 2.
9. Rodolph III. Son of Frederick.
1372 10. Bernard, Son of Rodolph the 3.
1431 11. James, Son of Bernard.
1453 12. Charles, Son of James, the firſt of theſe Marqueſſes which was poſſeſſed of the County of Spanheim in the Lower Palatinate, deſcending on this Houſe by Matild Wife of Rodolph the 2.
1475 13. Chriſtopher, Son of Charles, who after the death of Philip, the laſt Marqueſs of Hochberg, ſucceeded alſo in that Eſtate.
1515 14. Bernard, Son of Chriſtopher, his Brother Erneſt ſucceeding in that of Hochberg.
15. Chriſtopher II. Son of Bernard, his elder Brother Philibert, and Philip Son of Philibert, dying in the life of Bernard.
16. Edward, Son of Chriſtopher, intending the ſale of his Eſtates to pay his Debts, was forcibly deprived of all by
17. Erneſt, Marqueſs of Hochberg, Nephew of Erneſt above mentioned; who by that means not only preſerved the Marquiſate of Baden, but united that of Hochberg again unto it, and removed his ordinary Seat to Durlach.
18. George, Brother of Erneſt, Marqueſs of Baden and Hochberg.
19. Frederick, the Son of George, born in the year 1594. ſucceeded his Father in both Eſtates; and (if living) hath a Son called alſo Frederick, to enjoy them after his deceaſe.

13. NORTHGOIA, or the UPPER PALATINATE.

THE County of NORTHGOIA, so called from the Northern situation of it in regard of Bavaria, is sometimes also called the Palatinate of Bavaria, because anciently belonging to that Estate; but generally Ober Pfaltz, or the Upper Palatinate, to difference it from the Lower. It is bounded on the East with Bohemia, on the West with Franconia and part of Schwaben, on the North with Voitland, and on the South with Bavaria. The Country is for the most part somewhat rough and mountainous, rich principally in Mines of Iron, which it yieldeth in most places, and some of Silver about Amberg; extended from Haimburg, to the edge of Bohemia, 80 miles; and from the Hill Fichtelberg in the edge of Voitland, to Weissenburg near the banks of the Danow, 68 miles.

Observable things touching this Province are chiefly two. First, that out of the Mountain Fichtelberg, before mentioned, arise 4 Rivers running to the four Quarters of the world; that is to say, the Egra towards the East, the Maine or Mœnus towards the West, the Sala or Saltza to the North, and the Nab or Nabus to the South; so that it may be probably thought to be the highest Hill in all Germany. 2. That in the South-west corner of it are two little Rivers; the one called Altmul, which falleth into the Danow, and the other Rednitz, which runs into the Maine, and finally into the Rhene: between the Heads whereof, being not much distant, Charles the Great once began to dig a Chanel, for making a passage out of the Rhene into the Danow. In which work he employed many thousand men. But partly by excess of Rain, and partly by some strange Affrightments, (all which they did in the day being undone in the night) he was fain to desist. Some parts of the intended Water-course are to be seen near Weissenburg, spoken of before, which standeth in the middle-way betwixt both Rivers.

Chief places of this Country which belong to the Electoral Family are, 1. Amberg, on the River Vils, enriched chiefly by the commodity of Iron digged out of the neighbouring Hills, here fashioned into all sorts of Utensils, and hence conveyed in great abundance to the parts adjoyning: but prouder of its Mines of Silver than those veins of Iron, affording to the Prince's Coffers 60000 Crowns yearly. 2. Manheim, in the midst of a fruitful Valley, near a Wood of Juniper. 3. Newburg, upon the River Swartzach, which gives Title to the second Branch of the Palatine House, called the Counts Palatines of Newberg, Competitors with the Marques of Brandenburg for the whole Dukedom of Cleveland, and finally possessed of Gulick and the Members of it. 4. Kelheim, at the meeting of the Danow with the River Altmul. 5. Cham, on the edge of Bohemia, near the River Regen; which passing thence falleth into the Danow near the City of Regenspurg. 6. Castel, where the Electors for the most part hold their Residence, when they are in this Country. 7. Awerbach, 8. Saltzbach, 9. Weiden, 10. Newmarckt.

There are also in this Country some Towns belonging to the Lantgraves of Luchtenberg, one of the four old Lantgraves of the Empire; the other three being Duringen, Hessia, and Alsatia: so called from Luchtenberg, an old Castle, situate on a lofty Hill not far from Pfreimt, the chief Town and ordinary Seat of these Lantgraves, seated on the River Nab. 2. Gransfelden, 3. Schonhoffen, an ordinary pass and baiting-place in the way from Prague to Nurenberg.

But the chief City of this Country, and perhaps of Germany, is Nurenberg it self, Norimberga in the modern, but Norica in the ancient Latine. So called from an ancient Castle called Castrum Noricum, the Ruines of which are still remaining, encompassed with a deep, but dry, Ditch, now of no use nor ornament to the City at all, but reverenced for its antiquity, as the Mother of Nurenberg. The Castle is said by some to be built in the time of Claudius Cæsar. More probably by some of the Norici, who, terrified with the Invasion of Attila, in the Decline and wane of the Roman Empire, relinquished Bavaria, where before they dwelt, and passed over the Danow, there to provide themselves of a safer dwelling. Conquered by the Bavarians, it became, together with their Conquerours, subject to the French. In the time of Lewis the 3. it became Imperial, and was walled and fortified during the reign of Charles the 4. From that time it encreased so fast both in Wealth and Beauty, that it is counted the greatest and wealthiest City in all this Continent, there being reckoned in it 11 Stone-bridges for passage over the Pegnitz, which runneth through it, 12 Conduits of fresh water, 13 common Baths, 116 publick Wells, and 128 Streets. Of Figure it is square, environed with a triple Wall of 8 miles in circuit, and plentifully stored with all sorts of Ammunition. The Marquesses of Brandenburg in former times were the Burgraves of it; an Office of great power and jurisdiction, but sold for a good sum of money by Frederick the 3. Anno 1414. Albert his Son, attempting to recover the old Office again, besieged the Town, having no less than 17 Princes on his side, and yet could not force it. That for an Argument of its Strength. A proof and evidence of the Wealth of it we have seen before, in that great havock made of their Towns and Villages, and the great Ransom they were put to by another Albert, spoken of in Franconia. And it adds much unto the commendation of the people, that this great Wealth is gotten by their indefatigable Industry; the Town being situate on a barren and sandy Soil, and destitute of those Helps which commonly a navigable River brings unto a City; those great Possessions which belong unto the State hereof being gotten out of the fire, as the saying is, by their continual working of Iron and other Manufactures, occasioning a resort hither of Merchants from all parts of Germany.

Other Towns of chief note within this Palatinate are, 1. Altorff, where the Nurenbergers founded an University for the study of all Arts and Sciences, Anno 1575. 2. Herspruck, a great Town and well seated, belonging to the State of Nurenberg also. 3. Eystet, (Aichstaidium in the Latine) an Episcopal See, situate on the River Altmul. 4. Weissenburg, an Imperial City on the Borders of Schwaben. Here was also in this Province (if not still remaining) the Town Winsberg, memorable for the Piety and Gallantry of the Women of it. For the Town being besieged and distressed by the Emperor Conrade the 3. for siding against him with the Guelphs then Dukes of Bavaria, no other conditions could be gotten at the surrendry of it, but that the Women might have leave to depart in safety, and carry all their Jewels with them. Which being obtained, they took their Husbands on their backs, and so left the Town: and by that noble act so moved the affections and compassion of the angry Prince, that he spared the Town, and gave them all a general Pardon. It is said by some, that the odious names of Guelphs and Gibelines (with which the peace of Christendom was so long distracted) took their beginning at this Siege: the first so called from Guelpho, Brother of Henry the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, in whose cause they fought; the other from Veibling, (the French and Italians speak it Gueibling) a Town of Frankenland, in which that Emperor was born. Another original hereof we had in our description of State of Florence: but I take this to be the more probable of the two, though neither certain.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Nariſci of Tacitus. Afterwards ſome of the Norici, fearful or grown impatient of the Roman yoke, came over the Danubius to them, and built that famous Caſtle called Caſtrum Noricum, where now ſtands Nurenberg. Overpowered by the Boii, and uniting with them in the name of Boiarians, they followed the fortunes of Bavaria, till the year 1339, when Ludovick the Emperour, and Duke of Bavaria, on the partition of the Eſtate betwixt him and Rodolphus his elder Brother, relinquiſhed it for ever to the Houſe of the Palatines. Returned for the preſent to the Dukes of Bavaria, on whom it was conferred, together with the Electoral Dignity, by the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. in recompence of the great ſervice done him by Maximilian the now Duke thereof in the War of Bohemia, and the great charge he had been at in the reduction of that Kingdom to the Houſe of Auſtria. How long it will continue thus is known only to God, the diſpoſer of all things. Yet neither the Bavarians formerly, nor the Palatines ſince, have been ſo fully Maſters of it, but that the Lantgrave of Luchtenberg and the City of Nurenberg have put in for a ſhare.

The Arms of which great and puiſſant City are Azure, an Harpye diſplayed, crowned, crined and armed, Or.

14. The Kingdom of BOHEMIA.

THE Kingdom of BOHEMIA, containing Bohemia it ſelf with the incorporate Provinces, is bounded on the Eaſt with Poland and Hungary, on the Weſt with the Upper Palatinate, Voitland and Miſnia, on the North with the Marquiſate of Brandenburg and ſome part of Miſnia, and on the South with Auſtria and Bavaria. It comprehends in it, beſides Bohemia it ſelf, the Marquiſate of Moravia, with the Dukedoms of Sileſia and Luſatia.

1. BOHEMIA, encompaſſed about with woody Mountains, part of the Hercynian, is bounded on the Eaſt with Moravia, on the Weſt with the Upper Palatinate and Voitland, on the North with Miſnia, Luſatia and ſome part of Sileſia, on the South with parts of Bavaria and Auſtria.

It took this name from the Bemi, or Boiemi, the old Inhabitants hereof; by Pomponius Mela called Bemi, with the addition of Gens magna, by Tacitus Boiemi; who make them the Deſcendents of the Boii, a Galick Nation, who to avoid the Servitude which they feared from Rome, put themſelves into theſe Hercynian Deſarts, which from them was named Boiohemum; by which name it occurreth in Velleius Paterculus. And though the Marcomanni firſt, and the Sclaves and Croatians afterwards, became Maſters of it, theſe laſt continuing their poſſeſſion to this very day: yet it retaineth ſtill the name of Bohemia amongſt the Latines, as that Bebemerland amongſt the Dutch.

It contains in compaſs about 550 Engliſh miles. The Soil is indifferently fruitful, and enriched with Mines of all ſorts, except of Gold. Tin they have here in good plenty, the Mines whereof were firſt found out by a Corniſh-man, baniſhed out of England, Anno 1240. Which diſcovery of Tin in theſe parts was, as ſaith my Authour, in magnam jacturam Richardi Comitis Cornubiæ, (he meaneth that Richard which was afterwards King of the Romans:) and no marvel, for in thoſe times there was no Tin in all Europe but in England. Wood they have here good ſtore; and in ſome of their Foreſts a Beaſt called Lamie, which hath hanging under its neck a Bladder full of ſcalding water, with which, when ſhe is hunted, ſhe ſo tortureth the Dogs, that ſhe eaſily eſcapeth them. Of Corn they have ſufficient for their own uſe, and ſometimes alſo an increaſe above their ſpending, wherewith they do ſupply their neighbours of the Upper Palatinate: but they want Wine, the Air being too ſharp and piercing to produce a good Vintage. And it yields alſo ſtore of Saffron, no-where to be bettered; with plenty of medicinal Drugs.

The principal Rivers hereof are, 1. the Elve, or Albis, having here its ſpring; of whoſe courſe we have ſpoken elſewhere. 2. Egra, 3. the Muldaw or Multavius, and 4. the Wartz; all three exonerating themſelves into the Elve, which runneth through the midſt of the Country.

The Kingdom is not (as others) divided into Counties and Provinces, but into the Territories and poſſeſſions of ſeveral Lords, who have great authority and command over their Vaſſals. The figure of the whole is in a manner Circular, the Diameter whereof reacheth every way ſome 200 miles; containing in that compaſs 700 Cities, walled Towns and Caſtles, and (as ſome ſay) 30000 Villages. It is inhabited by a people given to Drink and Gluttony, and yet valiant and with ſenſe of Honour; this laſt belonging to the Nobility and Gentry, the former to the common people; but more moderately than moſt others of the German Nations. All of them, Princes or Plebeians, rich, poor, noble and baſe, uſe the Sclavonian Launguage, as their Mother-tongue.

The chief Bohemian Captain that ever I read of was Ziſca, who, in eleven Battels fought in the defence of the Huſſites, againſt the Pope and his Confederates, prevailed and went away victorious: inſomuch that at his death he willed the Bohemians to flay him, and make a Drum of his Skin; perſuading himſelf, if they ſo did, they could never be overcome. A fancy like to that of *Scipio Africa*n, and Vortimer K. of Britain, ſpoken of before. Scholars of moſt note, John Hus and Hierome of Prague, two eminent Divines, of whom more anon.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here preached by S. Methodius, the firſt Biſhop and Apoſtle of the Moraviant, An. 900 or thereabouts: Borzivoius, (whom ſome call Borſinous) the 8. Duke from Crocus, being the firſt Chriſtian Prince; and next to him Wenceſlaus the ſecond. This laſt was moſt cruelly murthered by Boleſlaus his Brother, at the inſtigation of Drahomira, an obſtinate Heathen, Mother to them both; who having cauſed the Miniſters of the Lord to be butchered, and their Bodies to lie unburied for two years together, was ſwallowed, Coach and all, in that very place where their Bodies lay. Confirmed by this Prodigy, they continued conſtant in the Faith to this very day; though not without the intermixture of ſome notable Vanity. For one Picardus, coming out of the Low-Countries, drew a great ſort of men and women unto him, pretending to bring them to the ſame ſtate of Perfection that Adam was in before his Fall; from whence they were called Picards and Adamites. They had no reſpect unto Marriage; yet could they not accompany any Woman, until the Man coming to Adam, ſaid unto him, Father Adam, I am inflamed towards this Woman; and Adam made anſwer, Increaſe and multiply. They lived in an Iſland which they called Paradiſe, and went ſtark naked: but they continued not long; for Ziſca hearing of them, entred their Fools Paradiſe, and put them all to the ſword, Anno 1416. But to make amends for this Folly, they were exceedingly zealous of the Reformation. For much about the ſame time the Works of Wickliff were brought into into Bohemia by a certain Scholar who had been Student in the University of Oxford, which hapning into the hands of John Huſſe and Hierom of Prague, (two men whereof this Country doth much boaſt) wrought in their hearts a deſire to reform the Church. A buſineſs which they proſecuted ſo earneſtly, that being ſummoned to the Council of Conſtance, they were there condemned for Hereticks, and burnt, Anno 1414: yet had their Doctrine ſuch deep root in the hearts of the people, that it could never be deſtroyed by the Tyrannies of War or Perſecution (though both were uſed) to this very day, multitudes of the Profeſſors of it living in this Kingdom under the names of Caliſtini and Sub utraque, as before is ſaid) but much both ſtrengthened and increaſed by the Writings of Luther, Melanchthon, Calvin, and ſuch other of the Proteſtant Doctors as travelled in the Work of Reformation. But this increaſe of ſtrength and number proved their greateſt weakening. For growing inſolent upon the ſenſe of their ſtrength and power, they formed themſelves into a party, got many of the Romiſh Catholicks to adhere unto them, under colour of aſſerting their Civil Rights, and, in the heat of ſome diſputes, cauſed certain of the Emperour's Council to be thrown out of the Windows of the Council-chamber; and finally, about the latter end of the Reign and Empire of Matthias, they broke out into open Arms. In the courſe whereof the Calviniſts being of moſt power, and having got a King of their own Opinions, ſo diſobliged the Lutherans and more moderate Papiſts, who had concurred with them at the firſt, that being invaded on the one ſide with a Lutheran Army under the command of the Duke of Saxony, and a Popiſh Army on the other by the Duke of Bavaria, they were in fine utterly ſuppreſt and made inconſiderable: the conquering and ſucceſsful Emperour (Ferdinand the 2.) taking this occaſion, to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion out of his Dominions.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Budweiſs, (conceived to be the Marobudum of Ptolomy) a Town towards Auſtria. 1. Auſt, near the Head of the Elb. 3. Tabor, a ſtrong Town built by Ziſca, to be a Retreat for the Huſſites. 4. Jaromir, and 5. Melnick, both upon the Elb. 6. Littomiſſel, an Epiſcopal See, bordering on Moravia. 7. Pilſen, the laſt Town of this Kingdom which yielded to the prevailing Imperialiſts in the late long War about that Crown: and then alſo was it betrayed to Count Tilly for a ſum of money, by ſome of the Souldiers of Count Mansfield, who was then abſent, and had ſo long defended it againſt the Enemy. 8. Elnbogen, much eſteemed for the hot medicinal Bathes; ſituate on the River Egra. 9. Egra, ſo called of the ſame River, on which (near to the borders of the Upper Palatinate) it is ſtrongly ſituate: a large, fair City, containing three miles in compaſs. Imperial once, but ſold by the Emperour Ludovicus Bavarus to John King of Bohemia, for 400000 marks of Silver: in compaſs leſs; for Sweetneſs of the place, Elegancy of the buildings, Pleaſantneſs of ſite, and Richneſs of ſoil, ſuperiour far to Prague it ſelf. 10. Prague, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, ſituate in the midſt thereof, on the River Muldaw; conſiſting of four ſeveral Towns, each of which hath its ſeveral Cuſtoms, Laws, and Magiſtrates. The principal is called the Old Town, adorned with many goodly Buildings, a ſpacious Market-place, and a ſtately Council-houſe. The ſecond, called the New Town, is ſeparated from the Old by a Ditch of great depth and wideneſs. The third, called the Little Town, is divided from the Old by the River Muldaw, joined to it by a beautiful Bridge, conſiſting of 24 Arches. And in this part thereof is the Hill Rachine, on the ſides of which are many fair and ſtately Houſes belonging to the Nobility, over-looked by the ſtrong Caſtle of S. Wenceſlaus, (ſituate on the top thereof) a magnificent Palace, wherein the Bohemian Kings and the later Emperours have kept their Reſidence. The fourth Town is that of the Jews, who have here five Synagogues, & live according to their own Law. The whole City is rather large than fair, the Streets being in Winter very dirty, of ill ſmell in the Summer; the Buildings for the moſt part of Clay & Timber clapt up together without Art, and of little beauty. And though encompaſſed with Walls and Ditches, it is conceived to be but an open Town, (ſo poor and weak are the Defences;) inſomuch that whoſoever is maſter of the Field, will be maſter of the City alſo. And yet beſides the honour of being the Royal Seat, it hath alſo of long time been an Archbiſhop's See, and was by Charles the fourth, Emperour and King of Bohemia, made an Univerſity. Near unto this Town was fought that memorable Battel between the Duke of Bavaria and Count Bucquoy, Lieutenant for the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond, with 50000 men, on the one ſide; and Frederick, newly elected King of Bohemia, which the Prince of Anhalt, the Count of Thurn, and 30000 men, on the other ſide. It was fought on the eighth of November ſtylo novo, wherein (ſuch was the unſearchable will of God) the Victory fell unto the Imperialiſts: the young Prince of Anhalt, Thurn, and Saxon-Weimar, with divers others, being taken priſoners; the Bohemian Ordnance all ſurpriſed, Prague forced to yield unto the Victor, and King Frederick with the Queen compelled to flie unto Sileſia. A moſt lamentable and unfortunate Loſs, not to this people only, but to the whole cauſe of the Reformed Religion. Yet it is not unworthy of our obſervation, that this great Battel was fought upon a Sunday, the 8. of November, about the time of Morning-prayer, in the Goſpel appointed for which day (being then the 23. after Trinity-Sunday) is that famous paſſage, Reddite CÆSARI, quæ ſunt CÆSARIS, i. e. Render unto Cæſar the things which are Cæſar's; which ſeemed to judge the Quarrel on the Emperour's ſide.

But whether of the two Pretendents had the juſter Cauſe, may beſt be ſeen by canvaſſing the Records of that State and Nation, (for the ſucceſs of War is no ſtanding Rule for meaſuring the Equity and Juſtice of the Cauſes of it:) by which it will be clearly ſeen, that ſince the erecting of that Kingdom by the Sclaves or Croatians, it hath been evermore diſpoſed at the will of the Emperour, or by Election of the States and People. But I intend not at the preſent to diſpute that Point, but only lay down the Story of the Kings and People, as in other places, ſince the firſt coming of the Sclavi. A Nation not known by that name till the time of Juſtinian; at what time they inhabited on the Banks of the Iſter, but no the farther ſide thereof, oppoſite to Illyricum and Thrace, Imperial Provinces. Grown famous by their good Succeſſes againſt that Empire, their name was taken up by the reſt of the Sarmatians of Europe; who, either wanting room, or not liking of their colder Countries, paſſed on more Weſtward, and by degrees poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe parts of Germany which formerly had been inhabited by the Almans, Burgundians and Boiarians; but were then either quite forſaken, or but ill inhabited, by the drawing down of thoſe people to the Roman Provinces, which they better liked. They were divided at, or after, their coming thus far Weſt, into four main Bodies: that is to ſay, the Winithi, poſſeſſed of the (now) Marquiſates of Brandenburg, Miſnia, and Luſatia, as alſo of the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania; the Moravians, inhabiting in Moravia, the Lower Auſtria, and the Upper Hungary; the Poles, poſſeſſed of Poland, and the Dukedom of Sileſia; and finally the Bohemian Sclaves, confined within the limits of that Kingdom only. Under what what form of Government they lived at their first coming hither, is not certainly known. But being setled in these Countries of Poland and Bohemia, it was not long before they were erected into several Kingdoms; occationed by the coming of a new Body of Sclaves, Croatians, and others of those scattered Nations, under the conduct of Zechius, a great Prince amongst them, who about the year 640, together with his Brother Leches, was banished Croatia for a Murther. He being very acceptable to the Sclaves of Bohemia, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own original Extraction, one of the same Language, Laws or Customs that themselves were of, they admitted him to be their Chief or supreme Governour, by whatsoever name he was called at first: in honour and memory of whom, the Bohemians in their own Language do call themselves Zechians. After his death, the State relapsed again into a confused Anarchy, till the year 670; at what time, not respecting the Progeny of Zechius, the Founder of their Commonwealth and first Estate, they fastned upon Crocus, a man of good esteem amongst them, and elected him to be their Duke. Crocus vir justus, & magnæ apud Bohemos opinionis, Princeps electus est, as Bertholdus telleth us. Crocus being dead, the Bohemians elected Libussa, his youngest Daughter; and of her Government soon wearied, they made choice of Primislaus for their Prince, and made him Husband to Libussa. A man taken from the Plough (as the Stories tell us) to espouse the Princess: it being ordered and agreed on by her many Suitors, that he (whosoever he was,) before whom an Horse, purposely let loose, did first make a stand, should be the Husband of the Lady, and have the Government of the State. The Horse first makes a stand before Primislaus, being then at Plough, (having perhaps some Mare in his Team;) and he accordingly is received and admitted their Prince. These, with the other Dukes, from the time of Crocus, the first Legislatour of the Bohemians, take in order thus.

The Dukes of BOHEMIA.

1. Crocus, the Law-giver or Lycurgus of Bohemia.

The Kings and Dukes of BOHEMIA.

A. C.

1086 1. Vratislaus, the Brother of Sbitignæus, Duke of Bohemia, was by Henry the 4. at Mentz created King.

2. Conrade, Brother to Vratislaus, notwithstanding that his Brother had three Sons, was elected Duke of Bohemia.

3. Brecislaus, Son to Vratislaus, the two Sons of Conrade being rejected, is by the Bohemians chosen Duke.

1100 4. Borivorius, the 4. Son of Brecislaus, is chosen by the Bohemians, his eldest Brothers then all living.

1109 5. Sutopulcus, Cousin-german to Borivorius, by the consent & favour of the people, deposed Borivorius, and caused himself to be elected in his place.

1159 8. Vladislaus III. Son to Vladislaus the 2. (the four Sons of Sobeslaus omitted) is chosen and crowned the second King of Bohemia by Frederick the Emperor; but deposed by the States, because he was not by them formerly elected, according to their Priviledges and Customs.

9. Uldericus, the third Son of Sobeslaus, his elder Brethren yet living, was by the people elected in the room of Vladislaus and his Son Frederick, whom the Emperor Frederick had by force established in the Throne.

10. Sobeslaus II. second Son of Sobeslaus, was by Frederick above named expelled; and he also by the Bohemians.

11. Conrade, Grandchild to Otho, the Brother of Sutopulcus, elected by the Bohemians in place of Frederick; between which two Princes there was continual War.

12. Wenceslaus, Uncle unto Conrade, and Son of Otho aforesaid, was preferred before many nearer the Succession. Him Primislaus expelled, but fearing his return, quitted Prague.

13. Henry, Bishop of Prague, a Stranger to the Blood, was by a general consent elected Duke.

14. Vladislaus IV. Brother to Primislaus, the Son of Wenceslaus, being put by, succeeded Henry, and soon after resigned.

1199 15. Primislaus, elected by the Bohemians, and by the Emperor Philip crowned the 3. King of Bohemia at Mentz, was Brother to Vladislaus the 4.

1248 16. Ottocarus, notwithstanding that Wenceslaus his elder Brother had been crowned in his Father's life-time, was acknowledged King. He was slain in Battel by Rodolphus the Emperor, near the Marh, a River of Moravia, An. 1278.

1278 17. Wenceslaus II. Son to Ottocarus.

1284 18. Wenceslaus III. Son to Wenceslaus the second, the last of the Bohemian Princes of the masculine race.

1304 19. Rodolphus, Son to the Emperor Albertus, is by the potency of his Father, and the election of the States, seated on the Throne, being otherwise a Stranger to the Blood-royal of Bohemia.

1305 20. Henry, Duke of Carinthia, the Son of Meinard Earl of Tyrol, and Husband to Anne, the second Daughter of Wenceslaus the 2. is chosen by the Bohemians: but being weary of his Government, they elect John Earl of Luxenburg. Finally, Henry was murthered by one of his Nephews.

1311 21. John, Earl of Luxenburg, Son to Henry the seventh Emperor, and Husband to Elizabeth, youngest Daughter to Wenceslaus the 2. is elected, the Lady Anne yet living.

1346 22. Charles, Son to John, and Emperor, of that name the fourth, the Authour of the Golden Bull.

1362 23. Wenceslaus IV. Emperor also, in whose time the Troubles of the Hussites and the Valour of Zisca was famous.

1418 24. Sigismund, Brother to Wenceslaus, maketh himself King by force; and at his death commendeth Albertus, Duke of Austria, the Husband of his Daughter Elizabeth, unto the States of the Kingdom.

1437 25. Albertus, Duke of Austria, elected upon the commendation of Sigismund by the Bohemian Lords.

1440 26. Ladislaus, Son to Albert, who, being the Brother of two Sisters, commended yet one George Pogibrachius unto the States, as fittest to succeed him.

1458 27. George Pogibrachius, neither by Affinity or Consanguinity of the blood, succeeded. And he, though he had three Sons, yet, for the benefit of his Country, advised the Nobles, after his death to elect their King from Poland.

1471 28. Ladislaus II. Son to Casimire King of Poland, and to Elizabeth the younger Daughter of Albertus Duke of Austria, the Issue of Anne the elder Sister still living, elected King of Bohemia.

1516 29. Ludovicus, Son to Ladislaus, elected and crowned by the means of his Father, then living, King of Hungary also.

1526 30. Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, Brother to Charles the 5. and Husband to Anne, Sister to Ludovicus, by his Letters reversal acknowledged that he was chosen King of Bohemia not of any right, but of meer free will, according to the Liberties of that Kingdom.

1565 31. Maximilian, eldest Son of Ferdinand, was in his Father's life-time, and at his suit, elected King, Anno 1540, into which he actually succeeded on his Father's death.

1610 33. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, was at the joint suit of them both nominated & appointed King of Bohemia by the general consent of the States, during his Brother's life-time, viz. An. 1610, which nomination they both protest in their Letters reversal should not be to the prejudice of the Liberties and ancient Customs of that Kingdom.

1618 34. Ferdinand II. Archduke of Austria, and of the House of Gretz, was by Matthias adopted for his Son, and declared Successour to the Crown of Bohemia, but never formally and legally elected: for which cause, amongst others, he was by the States rejected, in like case as Vladislaus the 3. had formerly been.

1621 36. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the 2. elected King of Bohemia during the life both of his Father and of Frederick, the Prince Elector also; after whose death he succeeded in this Kingdom both in right & fact; King of Hungary also, Archduke of Austria, and Emperour of Germany, now living, Anno 1648; more moderate in his Counsels than his Father Ferdinand, and more inclinable to Peace, (though honoured with a more signal Victory against the Swedes, in the Battel of Norlingen, than his Father was in all his life) which the Conclusions made at Munster are sufficient proof of.

Of the Revenues, Arms, and other things which concern this Kingdom, we shall speak hereafter, when we have took a view of the rest of the Provinces which are incorporated into it.

2. MORAVIA is bounded on the East with Hungary, on the West with Bohemia, on the North with Silesia, and on the South with the Lower Austria and the River Teya: fenced on the West by the Woods & Mountains of Bohemia, parts of the Hercynian Forest; on the North, by some Spurs or Branches of it, called Asciburgius by Ptolemy; on the two other sides open like an Half-moon or Semicircle. It is the most fruitful place of Corn in all Germany, and hath no small store of Frankinscence; which, contrary to the nature of it, groweth not on a Tree, but out of the Earth; and that too (which adds much to the miracle, if Dubravius do report it rightly) in the shape and figure of those parts which men and women do most endeavour to conceal.

The former Inhabitants of this Province were the Marcomanni and part of the Quadi, against whom when M. Antoninus the Emperour made War, he had unawares run himself into such a Streight, that his Army was environed with Mountains one way, and Enemies the other. To this (as Calamities seldom go alone) was added the extraordinary heat and drought then being. The the Emperour, thus put to his plunges, came the Captain of his Guard, telling him, that he had in his Army a Legion of Christians, (Melitens he calleth them) which by Prayer to their own God could obtain any thing. The Emperour sendeth for them, desiring them to make supplication for the Army: which they did, & God Almighty, that never turneth a deaf ear to the Prayers of his Servants, when when they are either for his Glory, the Churches or their own good, ſcattered and vanquiſhed the Quadi with Thunder-ſhot and Artillery from Heaven, and refreſhed the faint and dying Romans with many a gentle and pleaſant Showr. This Miracle purchaſed to that Legion the ſirname of κεραυνοβόλος, i. e. the Thunderer, and induced the Emperour to honour men of that holy profeſſion, and to make an end of the Fourth Perſecution, An. Ch. 174. Thus Xiphilinus hath it in his Dion: which coming from the Pen of an Heathen, as this Author was, is of more credit in a matter of ſuch concernment unto Chriſtianity, than if it had proceeded from Socrates, Sozomen, or any other Eccleſiaſtical Writer.

Places of moſt note herein are, 1. Olmuntz, on the River Mach (or Morava) the chief Town of the Country, and a ſmall Univerſity; near which, out of the Hill Odenberg bordering on Sileſia, ſpringeth the great River of Odera, whoſe Courſe we have before preſcribed. 2. Brin, on the River Swarta, the Seat of the ancient Marqueſſes. 3. Hradiſch, and 4. Cremſer, both upon the Marh or Morava. 5. Znaim, on the Teya. 6. Niclasberg, (Mons Nicolai in the Latine) bordering on the Lower Auſtria. 7. Iglaw. 8. Newburg. 9. Weiskerchen. 10. Boſerleitz, of which little memorable. 11. Cradiſco, near to which (and in this place only) the Frankincenſe is found to grow in the ſhape and form beforementioned.

The old Inhabitants hereof (as before is ſaid) were the Marcomanni and the Quadi: after them that Tribe or Nation of the Sclaves, who, from their habitation on the River Morava, called themſelves Moravians, and the Country which they dwelt in by the name of Moravia, (the Dutch call it Merberen.) They were extended at that time over all the Lower Auſtria, to the banks of the Danow on the South, and as far as to the river Tibiſcus (overſpreading a great part of the Upper Hungary) towards the Eaſt. Governed at the firſt by their own Kings, the firſt whoſe name occurs being Raſtai, in the time of the Emperour Lewis the Godly; by him taken Priſoner, and his Realm made tributary to the Empire. After him ſucceeded Harmodurus, and then Suentopulcus; in whoſe time the Moravians and other Nations of the Sclaves received the Goſpel by the preaching of Cyrill and Methodius, two Græcian Doctors; officiating all Divine Services in the Sclavonian or vulgar Language. For which when they made ſuit to the Pope then being, to whoſe Authority (as Patriarch of the Weſtern Empire) they were made obnoxious, and that the Pope and Cardinals delaid the buſineſs; a voice was heard, as if it had come from Heaven, ſaying theſe words, Omnis Spiritus laudet Dominum, & omnis Lingua confiteatur ei. Upon which Miracle their Suit was granted, at the laſt, and a Letter Decretal ſent unto that effect from Pope John the 8. to Suentopulcus (or Sfentopulcher, as ſome call him) above mentioned. A Priviledge by them enjoyed full 200 years, and then reverſed by Gregory 7. commonly called Pope Hildebrand, in his Letters to Vratiſlaus the firſt King of Bohemia, An. 1086.

But to return unto the Story. Suantobegius, Son to Suentopulcus, ſucceeded next, depoſed, or rather beaten out of his Country, by the Emperour Arnulph, for denying the accuſtomed Tribute. A Prince of great ſpirit, and of as great command; having at one time under him not Moravia only, according to the largeſt limits, but Sileſia, Bohemia, and Polonia alſo. Arnulph not able otherwiſe to effect his purpoſe, called in the Hungarians (though at that time Pagans) by whoſe help the Moravian was ſubdued, and his Kingdom ſhattered into pieces; ſeized on by the Hungarians, Poles, and other Nations, and finally reduced to the preſent Limits. Afterwards it was made a Marquiſate, (but by whom we find not;) one of the Marqueſſes hereof being Jodocus Barbatus, elected Emperour Anno 1410. After whoſe death, Sigiſmund, his next Heir, Emperour and King of Bohemia, gave it to his Son-in-law Albert Duke of Auſtria, Anno 1417, who in the end ſucceeded him in all his Eſtates; ſince which time it hath always gone along with the Crown of Bohemia.

The Arms of the old Dukes or Princes of it were Azure, an Eagle chequered Or and Gules, membred and langued of the ſame.

3. SILESIA, (or SCHLESIE, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the Eaſt with Poland, on the Weſt with Luſatia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Moravia. Wholly encompaſſed with Mountains, except towards the North, which lets in a ſharp Air upon them: the mid-land part being full of Woods, but withal of Minerals.

Chief Cities are, 1. Jagendorff, or Jegerndorff, of late the Patrimony of John Georgius of the Family of Brandenburg, commonly called the Marqueſs of Jagendorff. The Lands and Eſtates in his poſſeſſion were firſt given by Ladiſlaus King of Bohemia to George ſirnamed Pius, one of the Sons of Frederick of Brandenburg, the firſt Marqueſs of Onſpach of this Houſe, for the many good ſervices he had done him. But his poſterity being extinct, they fell to the ſaid John-Georgius, Brother to Sigiſmund the Elector; proſcribed by Ferdinand the ſecond, for adhering to the party of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine: A Prince of great note and activeneſs in the beginning of the late German and Bohemian Wars. 2. Munſterberg, which gives the title of Duke to the poſterity of George Pogebrachius, once King of Bohemia, advanced by him unto this Honour and a fair Eſtate. 3. Glatz, or Gletz, the laſt Town of Bohemia which held out for Frederick the Elector againſt that Emperour. 4. Glogaw, a ſtrong Town on the River Oder. 5. Neiſſe, on a River ſo named, an Epiſcopal See. 6. Breſlaw, in Latine Vratiſlavia, ſo called from Vratiſlaus the Founder of it, once one of the Dukes of this Province, by whoſe procurement it was made an Epiſcopal See, Anno 970, or thereabouts. It is ſituate on the River Oder, all the water wherein could not ſave it from being burnt down to the ground, Anno 1341, but it was preſently re-edified with a fair Free-ſtone, and is now one of the prettieſt Cities (for the bigneſs of it) in all Germany; fair, populous, and well contrived with open and even Streets, the chief of the Country. 7. Oppelen, on the Oder alſo, well fortified both by Art and Nature, barricadoed by the River on the Weſt, and on the Eaſt with good Out-works, ſtrong Walls, and a fair Caſtle. 8. Straten. 9. Reichenbach, both made Towns of War ſince the beginning of the Bohemian Troubles.

There are alſo within this Province the two Seigniouries of Prignitz and Croſſen, ſo called from the chief Towns thereof, belonging to the Elector of Brandenburg; the two Dukedoms of Oſwitz and Zator, appertaining to the Crown of Poland; as alſo the Dukedom of Liguitz and Sweinitz, all of them bearing the names of their principal Towns: of which two laſt, Sweinitz is in the immediate poſſeſſion of the Kings of Bohemia; and Liguitz hath a Duke of its own, but an Homager and Tributary of that King.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Marſigni, Burii, Gothini, and ſome part of the Quadi. In the partition of the Eaſtern parts of Germany amongſt the Sclaves, it was laid unto the Dukedom or Kingdom of Poland, continuing a part thereof till the time of Vladiſlaus the 2. who, being driven out of his Kingdom by his Brethren, was by the mediation of Frederick Barbaroſſa eſtated in this Country, to be held under the Soveraignty of the King of Poland. Divided betwixt his 3 Sons, & afterwards ſubdivided amongst their posterities, according to the ill Custom of Germany, it became broke at last into fourteen Dukedoms, of 1 Breslaw, 2 Oppelen, 3 Ratibor, 4 Cessin, 5 Bethom, 6 Glogaw, 7 Sagan, 8 Olentz, 9 Steinaw, 10 Falkenburg, 11 Sweinitz, 12 Lignitz, 13 Oswitz, and 14 Zator. Of all which only the two last do remain to Poland; the five first being made subject to the Kings of Bohemia by Wenceslaus the second, the five next by King John of Luxemburg; Lignitz remaining in the possession of a Proprietary Duke, (as before was said) and Sweinitz given to Charles the fourth, Emperor and King of Bohemia, by the Will and Testament of Boleslaus the last Duke: all Silesia by this means (except the Dukedoms of Oswitz, and Zator) being added to the Crown of Bohemia, of which it is rather an incorporate than subject Province.

4. LUSATIA, by the Dutch called Lausnitz, is bounded on the East with Silesia, on the West with Misnia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Bohemia. The Country is rough and full of Woods, yet plentiful enough of Corn, and of such Fruits as naturally arise out of the Earth: so populous and thick set with People, that though it be but a little Province, it is able to arm 20000 Foot as good as any in Germany. Most commonly it is divided into the Higher, and the Lower; the first confining on Bohemia, the last on Brandenburg.

Places of most note in the Higher Lausnitz are, 1 Bautzen, (Badissinum the Latins call it) the first Town attempted and taken in by the Duke of Saxony, when he took upon him the execution of the Emperor's Bann against Frederick Elector Palatine, then newly chosen King of Bohemia. The poor Prince in the mean time was in an ill condition, the Saxon being the Head of the Lutheran, and the Bavarian chief of the Popish party, arming both against him. So jealous are both sides of the active and restless Calvinian spirit, as to leave no means unassaied for the suppressing of it. Seated it is upon the Spre, and for the most part is the Seat of the Governour for the King of Bohemia. 2 Gorlitz, upon the River Neisse, which gave the Title of Duke to John, Brother of Sigismund, Emperor and King of Bohemia, and Father of Elizabeth, the last Dutchess of Luxemburg, before it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Burgundy. A fine neat Town, well frequented, and strongly fortified; founded about the year 1231, and not long after so consumed by a mercileſs Fire, Anno 1301, ut ne unica domus remanserit, as my Author hath it, that there was not one House left of the old foundation. But it was presently re-built in a more beautiful form, and of more strong materials, than before it was, both publick and private Buildings very neat and elegant. 3 Zittaw, on the same River, bordering on Bohemia. 4 Lawben, 5 Lubben, 6 Camitz, of which little memorable, but that together with the former they make up those six Towns which are confederate together in a stricter League for the mutual Defence and preservation, but under the Protection, and with the approbation, of the Kings of Bohemia. Then in the Lower Lusatia there is 7 Spremberg, so named from its situation on the River Spre, which runneth through the whole Country, and in ancient times was called Suevus; supposed by some (and not improbably) either to give name to the Suevians, or to take it from them; that potent Nation inhabiting originally betwixt this and the Elve. 8 Tribel, upon the Neisse. 9 Cotthuse, upon the Spre, or Suevus; which, together with some parts of the Lower Lusatia, belongs unto the Marquesses of Brandenburg.

The first Inhabitants hereof are by some supposed (and but supposed) to be the Benones of Tacitus; in the partition of these parts of Germany amongst the Sclaves, made subject to the Winithi, or Venedi, the greatest and most spreading Nation of all these People. When and by whom first made a Marquisate, I am not able to say for certain; but sure I am, it hath been very much given to the change of Masters. It had first a Marquess of its own; Conrade the Marquess hereof, who died in the year 1156. being by the Emperour Henry the fifth made Marquess of Misnia, added it unto that Estate: and it remained for some time united to it. After, being seised on by the Poles, it was sold to Frederick the second, Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg; who, keeping Cotthuse and some other Towns bordering next upon him in his own possession, surrendred the rest on Composition to George King of Bohemia, claiming it from a Grant made by Henry the fourth to Vratislaus the first Bohemian King, An. 1087. A Grant on which no Possession followed, unless it were the Homage and acknowledgment of the Princes of it, holding it afterwards of that Crown as the Lord in chief.

Thus have we brought these four Provinces into the power and possession of the Kings of Bohemia, remaining still distinct in their Laws and Governments, (as several limbs of the great Body of the Sclaves made up into one Estate) though joined together in the person of one supream Governour, who is severally admitted & acknowledged by each Province distinctly for it self, and not by any one of them in the name of the rest. Out of all which so laid together there may be raised the summ of three millions of Crowns yearly for the King's Revenues, towards the defrayment of all Charges.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Mars, a Lion with a forked Tail Luna, crowned Sol. Which Arms was first given by Frederick Barbarossa to Vladislaus the third, made by him King of Bohemia, in regard of the good Service he had done him at the Siege of Millain. And though Vladislaus was deposed by the States of that Kingdom, because never formally and legally elected by them; yet his Successors keep those Arms to this very day.

THE Marquisate of BRANDENBURG is bounded on the East with the Kingdom of Poland, on the West with the Dukedom of Saxony, on the North with Pomerania and part of Mecklenburg, and on the South with Misnia, Lusatia and Silesia. So called from Brandenburg, the chief Town of it, and because once the Marches of the Empire against the Sclaves: divided afterwards into the Old, the New, and the Middle Marches, according as they were extended farther towards Poland by little and little, as the Emperours were able to get ground of those potent people.

The Country containeth in length from East to West 60 Dutch, or 240 Italian, miles, and is of correspondent breadth; the whole compass making up 540 miles of the last accompt. Within which Tract are comprehended 55 Cities and walled Towns, 80 Towns of trade, (Mark-Steten, or Market-Towns, as they commonly call them) 38 Castles or Mansion-houses of Noblemen, 17 Monasteries, and 10 Parks well stored with Beasts of game: the Country otherwise (considering the Extent thereof) being but thinly inhabited, nor well provided of necessaries, excepting Corn, of which these North-East Countries afford very great plenty.

The Religion of this Country is for the most part according to the form and Doctrine of Luther; first introduced and authorized by Marquess Joachim the first. In which estate it continued till the Breach betwixt George-William, the Father of the present Elector, and the Palatine of Newburg. At which time the Palatine, having married married a Daughter of Bavaria, the moſt potent Prince of the Popiſh party, reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome, the better to aſſure himſelf of the Aid of Spain: and this Elector, having married a Siſter of Frederick the fifth, Prince Elector Palatine, the moſt potent Prince of the Calvinians, declared himſelf to be of that Party and Opinion, the better to aſſure himſelf to the Aid of Holland, Anno 1614. But when on the perſuaſions of his Wife, he ſet out an Edict for ſuppreſſing the Lutheran Forms, and authorizing the Calvinian only, throughout his Dominions, (which was the year 1615) the people of this Marquiſate roſe in Arms againſt him: the difference being thus compoſed, that the Lutheran Forms only ſhould be uſed in all the Churches of the Marquiſate of Brandenburg, for the contentation of the people; and that the Marquiſate ſhould have the exerciſe of his new Religion for himſelf, his Lady, and thoſe of their Opinion, in his private Chappels.

1. ALTE-MARCK, or the OLD MARCK, ſo called becauſe the ancient Marches of the Empire againſt the Sclaves, lieth betwixt Lunenburg and the Elb, withwhich it is bounded on the Eaſt. The chief Towns thereof are, 1. Tangermund, on the Elb, where it receives the River Tanagra or Angra; honoured ſometimes with the Reſidence of Charles the fourth. 2. Steindall, the chief of theſe Old Marches. 3. Soltwedel, divided into two Towns, the old and the new. 4. Gardeleben, fortified with the ſtrong Caſtle of Eiſhimp. 5. Oſterburg, 6. Senbuſen, ſaid by ſome, but falſly, to be ſo called from the Senones, whom they would make the old Inhabitants, of this Country, (by all good Writers made to be originally a Gallick Nation.) 7. Werb, of which little memorable.

In the MIDDLE MARCHES, or UPPER-MARCK, lying betwixt the Elb and the River Oder, the Towns of moſt note are, 1. Butzaw, a Commendatory of the Templers in former times. 2. Spandaw, upon the Spre, a well-fortified piece. 3. Oderburg, called ſo from that River, on which it is ſituate; remarkable for a ſtrong Caſtle built by Marqueſs Albert the ſecond, at which all Paſſengers by water are to pay their Toll. 4. Brandenburg, on the River Havel, a Biſhop's See, the Seat of the Lords Marchers in former times, taking name from hence: by ſome ſaid to be built by Brennus, Captain of the Gauls; more truly by one Brando, a Prince of the Franconians, Anno Ch. 140. 5. Franckford (for diſtinction ſake) named ad Oderam, on which River it is ſituate; the Soil about it being ſo plentifully ſtored with Corn and Wines, that it is not eaſie to affirm whether Bacchus or Ceres be moſt enamoured of it. It was made an Univerſity by Marqueſs Joachim Anno 1506. and is alſo a flouriſhing and famous Empory, though not comparable to that of the other Franckford, ſeated on the Maine. 6. Berlin, the ordinary Reſidence of the Marqueſs, ſituate on the River Spre, (or Suevus) which, riſing in Luſatia, falleth into the Albis. 7. Havelburg, on the River Havel, a Biſhop's See, who acknowledgeth the Archbiſhop of Magdeburg for his Metropolitan.

3. In the NEW-MARCK, extending from the Oder to the Borders of Poland, and called ſo becauſe laſt conquered, and added to the account of the German Empire, there is Cuſtrin, a very ſtrong and defenſible Town, ſeated on the two Rivers Warta and Odera, fortified with great charge by John, Son of Marqueſs Joachim, and by him intended for his Seat. 2. Sunnenberg, and 3. Landſperg, both upon the Warta. 4. Soldin, in former times the chief of this Marck. 5. Berlinch, or New Berlin: and 6. Falkenburg, a ſtrong Town, and fortified with as ſtrong a Caſtle, towards Pomerania.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country were the Varini and Naithones, part of the great Nation of the Suevians; and after them the Helvoldi, Wilini, Beirani, and other Tribes of the Winithi, the greateſt Nation of the Sclaves, who poſſeſſed themſelves of it. But Brandenburg being wone from them by the Emperor Henry the firſt, An. 920, (at what time the Goſpel was firſt preached amongſt them) the Country hereabouts was given by him to Sigefride Earl of Rengelheim, (eldeſt Son of Theodorick, the ſecond Earl of Oldenburg,) a valiant Gentleman, with the Title of Marqueſs, or Lord Marcher; Anno 927, upon condition that he ſhould defend thoſe Marches (the Old Mark, as they now call it) againſt the Sclaves. Theſe Marqueſſes were at the firſt Officiary, at the appointment of the Emperor, and to him accomptable. Sigard, the fourth from Sigefride, governing here for Otho the third, was the firſt Elector of theſe Marqueſſes, and Udo, the ſecond of that name, and third from Sigard, the laſt that held this Honour at the Emperor's pleaſure; that Dignity after his deceaſe being made hereditary in the perſon of Albert of Anhalt, ſirnamed Urſus, by the Emperor Frederick Barbaroſſa. Which Albert having very much enlarged his Border by the Conqueſt and extermination of the Sclaves, cauſed the unpeopled Country to be planted with new Dutch Colonies out of Holland, Zeland, Flanders, and thoſe parts of the Netherlands. The Houſe of this Albert being extinct in John the fourth, it was given by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria to Lewis his Son; by Otho, the Brother of that Lewis, ſold for 200000 Ducats unto Charles the fourth; by Sigiſmund, the Son of Charles, to Jodocus Marqueſs of Moravia: but afterwards being redeemed again, it was by the ſaid Sigiſmund conferred on Frederick Burgrave of Nurenberg, in recompence of his faithful ſervice in the Wars of Hungary & Bohemia. In his poſterity it remaineth, but much increaſed in power and Patrimony, by the additions of the Dukedom of Pruſſia, Cleve, Gulick and Berg, the Marquiſates of Onſpach and Jagerndorff, the Earldom of Marck in Weſtphalen, now a part of Cleveland, the Lordſhips of Priguitz and Croſſen in Sileſia, the Towns of Hoff and Culmbach in Voitland, with the County of Raphin, and the Town & Territory of Cottbuſe in the Lower Luſatia. Inſomuch that this is now the moſt powerful Family in all Germany. The Marqueſſes hereof from Sigefride to Albert, the Son of Urſe, &c. follow in this order.

The Marqueſſes of BRANDENBURG.

A. C.

927 1. Sigefride, Earl of Rengelheim, made the firſt Marqueſs of this Border by the Emperor Henry the firſt.

2. Gero, by the appointment of Otho the firſt.

19. Waldemar II. Nephew of Waldemar the 1. by his Brother Henry.

20. John IV. Brother of Waldemar the ſecond, the laſt Marqueſs of the Houſe of Anhalt; the Marquiſate eſcheating to the Empire for want of Heirs.

21. Lewis of Bavaria, created Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg by his Father, the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, on the ſaid eſcheat.

22. Lewis II. ſirnamed the Roman, on the Reſignation of his Brother ſucceeded in the Marquiſate and Electoral Dignity.

25. Sigiſmund, Brother of Wenceſlaus, Emperor of the Romans, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Earl of Luxenburg; who ſold this Marquiſate to Jodocus Marqueſs of Moravia, and having afterwards redeemed it, conferred the ſame on 1417 26. Frederick, Burgrave of Nurenberg, ſolemnly inveſted herein at the Council of Conſtance Anno 1414, for which Inveſtiture he paid unto the Emperor the ſum of 400000 Crowns.

1440 27. Frederick II. Son of Frederick the firſt, to whom the Emperor Frederick the 3. gave the Dukedom of Pomeren.

1470 28. Albert, Brother of Frederick the 2. called the Achilles of Germany, relinquiſhed to Bugeſlaus the 10. the poſſeſſion of Pomeren; but his Succeſſors ever ſince have retained the Title, and kept on foot their Pretenſions to it. From Frederick his ſecond Son deſcended Albert the firſt Duke of Pruſſia, Frederick the firſt Marqueſs of Onſpach, George the firſt Marqueſs Jagerndorff, and Albert called the Alcibiades of Germany, who ſo haraſſed Franconia in the days of Charles the fifth.

1620 35. George-William, Son of John Sigiſmund and the Lady Anne, claiming in her right the Dukedoms of Cleve, Gulick and Berg, the Earldoms of Mark and Ravenſpurg, and the Seigniory of Ravenſtein; which he poſſeſſed a while, divided with his Couſin Wolfgangus Palatine of Newburg, Son of Magdalen the younger Siſter of Mary-Eleanor. But falling out about their Partage, the Palatine of Newburg called in the Spaniard, and the Father of this Marqueſs, in behalf of his Son, called in the Confederate States of the Netherlands, to aſſert their Titles. After the death of Bugeſlaus the laſt Duke of Pomerania, he was to have ſucceeded alſo in that Eſtate, then poſſeſſed by the Swede. Of the Agreement made between them, and the great Accrument thereby following to the Houſe of Brandenburg, we ſhall ſpeak more there.

36. Frederick-William, Son of George-William, now Elector of Brandenburg.

The Territories of this Family are the greateſt, as before is ſaid, of any in Germany, but a great part thereof is very barren, and his Subjects in thoſe parts as poor as the Country; much of his new acceſſions yielding little but the Titles only. So that neither in Revenue or Power he is able to keep rank with the Duke of Saxony: his ordinary Revenue hardly amounting at the utmoſt to 200000 l. per annum, which is but half of the Receipts of the Duke of Saxony.

The Arms hereof are Argent, an Eagle Gules, membred and beaked Or.

POMERANIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Pruſſia, from which it is parted by the River Weyſſel, or Viſtula; on the Weſt with Mecklenburg, divided from it by the River Bartze; on the North with the Baltick Sea, extended on the Coaſt hereof for the ſpace of 200 Engliſh miles; and on the South with the Marquiſate of Brandenburg. So named from the Pomorizi, or Pomerani, a Nation of the Sclaves, to whoſe ſhare it fell; or from the ſituation of it on the Sea-ſhore, as the word in the Sclavonian doth ſeem to import.

The Country is for the moſt part plain, abundantly fruitful in Corn, carried hence to Dantzick, and tranſported thence to all parts of Chriſtendom in their times of Scarcity: yielding alſo good ſtore of Paſturage, and great Herds of Cattel; with plenty of Butter, Cheeſe, Honey, and ſome reaſonable quantities of Flax. Populous it is, and thoſe people of very ſtrong Conſtitution, as living under a ſharp and piercing Air. The whole is divided into the Continent, and the Iſlands: the Continent into 1. the Upper Pomeren, bordering upon Mecklenburg, extended from the Bartze to the River Oder; 2. the Lower, reaching from the Oder to that part hereof which is now called 3. Pomerellia, betwixt it and Pruſſia, ſubject of long time to the Crown of Poland, and there we ſhall hear farther of it.

Chief places in the UPPER are, 1. Bardt, at the mouth of the River Bartze, taking name from thence; a well-traded Town, and many times the Seat of the Dukes of this hithermoſt Pomeren. 2. Walgaſt, upon the Baltick Sea, over againſt the Iſle of Uſedom, the chief of this part of Pomeren, from whence the Dukes hereof are called the Dukes of Pomeren Wolgaſt; the firſt Town taken in by by Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, in his famous War for relief of Germany, Anno 1630. 3. Straelsund, a Town of great Trading and much resort, seated upon the same Sea also, opposite to the Isle of Rugen; a Town of great name in the course of the German Wars. 4. Gripswald, on the same Sea, betwixt Wolgast and Straelsund, made an University, Anno 1456. 5. Anclam, upon the River Pone. 6. Tribbesees, situate on a Lake out of which the said River hath its course.

Then in the LOWER Pomeren there is 7. Camin, an Episcopal See, situate on the Baltick Shore, over against the Isle of Wollin. 8. Colberg, a strong Town on the same Shore also, at the fall of the Persant into the Sea. 9. Cosslin, the last Sea-Town of this Tract lying towards Prussia. 10. Stargard, on the Ina, more within the Land; as is also 11. Griffenberg upon the Rega, and 12. Stetin on the Oder, once a poor Fisher-Town, now the Metropolis of this part of the Country; rising to this greatness (after the embracing of Christianity) by the fall of Vineta, formerly the chief Mart-Town of all these parts; the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of the Lower Pomerania, the Dukes of Pomeren-Stetin, as for distinction sake they are used to call them.

The Islands hereunto pertaining are those of Rugen, Wollin, Usedom, touched upon before, but now more punctually to be handled. That of most note is RUGEN, over against Straelsund, from which it is divided only by a narrow Streight, in length seven Dutch miles, and as much in breadth; so that the Compass of it, if it were exactly round, would amount to 20 German, or 100 Italian miles; and yet it was once bigger than it is. But in the year 1309, by the force of an outragious Tempest, a great part of it, lying towards the South-east, as far as to the Isle of Ruden, (then conjunct hereto) was torn away, and sunk so deep into the bottom of the Sea, that now the greatest Ships that be sail over it. The Island is plentiful of Corn, the Granary of Straelsund, as they call it commonly; and reasonably well stored with Cattel; full of Bays, Creeks, and winding Shores, with many and vast Promontories thrusting into the Sea, which gives them great increase of Fishing. Anciently it belonged to the Crown of Denmark, till given by Waldemar the third to Bugislaus and Barnimus Dukes of Pomeren: continuing ever since part of that Estate. The chief Town of it is called Bergen, situate in the midst of the Island, but not containing above 400 Families. Others of less note and estimation being, 2. Sagart. 3. Wick. 4. Bingst, &c. small Towns compared with Villages upon the Continent, but the best they have. And yet so populous is the Island, that they are able to arm 7000 good fighting men, if there be occasion.

The second of the three, in repute and bigness, is that of WOLLIN, situate over against Camin: so called from Wollin the chief Town, (Julinum it is called in Latine) made an Episcopal See by Wartislaus, the first Christian Prince of this Nation, which on the Sackage of this City was removed to Camin. A Town which once so flourished in Trassick, that it gave place to none but Constantinople: the Russians, Danes, Saxons, Vandals, &c. having here their particular Streets. But being miserably sacked by Waldemar King of Denmark, Anno 1170. most of the Trade hereof was removed to Lubeck, since which time it never could come near its former glories.

The last in reputation is that of USEDOM, seated betwixt both, not far from Wolgast; so called from Usedom the chief Town in it, of which little observable. All three were the Habitation of the ancient Rugii, who under Odoacer K. of the Heruli subverted the Western Empire, conquered Italy, and made themselves Masters of it, till subdued by the Goths. Those which remained in these Islands became after subject to the Sclaves, and had once Kings of their own: the first whose name occurs in Story being Crito, the Son of Ratze, a puissant Prince, extending his Dominions into Holstein, Ditmarsh, and the City of Lubeck, which he built about the year 1100, afterwards beautified and enlarged by Adolph the 2. Earl of Holstein, by some esteemed the Founder of it. But his Issue-male failing in the year 1326, it fell by Compact made between them to the Dukes of Pomeren, to whom these Islands ever since have continued subject.

And as for Pomeren it self, the old Inhabitants thereof were part of the Rugii before mentioned, the Reudigni, Longi-Nani, and Longi-Diduni, with parts of the Heruli and Burgundians; into whose void rooms the Pomortzi and other Tribes of the Winithi (the most potent Nation of the Sclaves) did in fine succeed, extending their Dominions to the Banks of the Vistula, the parts adjoining unto which, to difference them from Pomeren, were called Pomerellia. But that part of it being given by Mestovinus, the last Prince thereof, dying without Issue, Anno 1295, to Primislaus Duke of Poland; the name and power of the Princes or Dukes of Pomerania became confined within narrower Bounds than at first they had. The first Prince of it whom we meet with on good record was one Barnimus, of the noble Gryphonian Family, Anno 933, whose Grandson Suantiborus commanded over all this Tract. But his Dominions being parted betwixt his Sons, Bugislaus, who had Pomerellia, retained the Language and old Customs of the Sclavonians; Wartislaus, who possessed the residue, conformed himself to the Laws and Language of the Saxons: the Country being by that means accounted for a part of Germany, and added unto the Empire an account thereof in the time of Frederick Barbarossa, by whom Bugislaus and Casimir, Sons of Wartislaus were made Princes of the Empire and Dukes of Pomeren. The Estate being afterwards divided betwixt Bugislaus and Otho, Sons of Barnimus the first, and the Houle of Otho failing in the person of Otho the third, that part hereof was given by the Emperor Frederick the third to Frederick the 2. Marques and Elector of Brandenburg, the cause of much Contention amongst these Marquesses and the other House of the Dukes of Pomeren, which was thus agreed at last, That both Princes should continue the Arms and Title, the Possession of it to be yielded to the Duke of Pomeren, on the failing of whose Issue-male it should descend upon the Heirs of the House of Brandenburg. The Succession of these Princes followeth in this order.

The Dukes of POMERANIA.

1. Wartislaus, the first Christian Prince of the Pomeranians, Baptized by Otho Bishop of Bamberg, Anno 1124.

1128 2. Bugislaus, Son of Wartislaus, created by Frederick Barbarossa the first Duke of Pomeren.

1188 3. Bugislaus II. Son of Bugislaus, planted the void parts of Pomeren with Saxon Colonies.

1222 4. Barnimus, Son of Bugislaus the second: after whose death Pomeren was divided into two Principalities.

Dukes of WOLGAST.			Dukes of STETIN.
1277	5. Bugeslaus II. Son of Barnimus.	1277	1. Otho, Duke of Pomeren-Stetin.
1319	6. Wartislaus, Son to Bugislaus.	1345	2. Casimir, Son of Otho.
1326	7. Barnimus II.	1368	3. Casimir II. Son of Casimir.
1365	8. Wartislaus II.			1374

1394 9. Barnimus III.
1405 10. Wartiſlaus III.
1456 11. Ericus, Son of Wartiſlaus.
1413 12. Bugiſlaus III. commonly called the tenth, the younger Princes of both Houſes making up the tale, ſucceeded 1374 4. Suantiborus, Brother of Caſimir the 2.
1433 5. Caſimir III. Son of Suantiborus.
1451 6. Joachim, Son of Caſimir the 3.
7. Otho III. Son of Joachim, dyed without Iſſue, Anno 1464.

Otho the third in that part of Pomeren, uniting ſo the whole into one Eſtate.

1523 13. George, Son of Bugiſlaus the tenth.
1531 14. Philip, Son of George, in whoſe time the Reformation made by Luther was admitted into Pomerania.
1583 15. Bugiſlaus IV. but the 13. in the Dutch account, Son of Philip; his younger Brother Erneſtus-Ludovicus having that of Stetin for his ſhare.
16. Bugiſlaus V. and 14. Son of Bugiſlaus the 4. born in the year 1580, ſucceeded in Pomeren of Wolgaſt; as Philip-Julius, Son of Erneſtus-Ludovicus, did in that of Stetin. After whoſe death Bugiſlaus became Lord of all Pomerania; in a fair way to have loſt all to the prevailing Imperialiſts, had not the timely coming in of the King of Sweden ſtopped their violent Progreſs. But Bugiſlaus dying without Iſſue in the time of the War, and in him the Male-iſſue of the Houſe of Bugiſlaus the tenth being quite extinguiſhed, George-William, Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg, put in his claim for the Eſtate, according to the compact and Agreement ſpoken of before. Betwixt whom & the Swedes (who, under colour of aiding the laſt Duke, had poſſeſſed themſelves of all the ſtrongeſt places in the Country) it was accorded and concluded at the Treaty of Munſter, that all the Higher Pomerania, with the Iſles of Rugen and Wollin, and the Town of Stetin, ſhould from thenceforth belong to the Crown of Sweden: the Lower Pomeren to be enjoyed by the Houſe of Brandenburg, ſo long as the Male-Iſſue laſteth; on default whereof, that alſo to be added unto that Crown: the Arms and Titles to be uſed by both promiſcuouſly. And in regard the Marqueſs of Brandenburg was to part with the Upper Pomeren for the Contentation of the Swedes, (without which no firm Peace could be made in Germany;) it was alſo there agreed upon, that the Temporal Eſtates of the Biſhopricks of Halberſtad, Minden and Camin, together with that of Magdeburg, (after the deceaſe of the preſent Biſhop) ſhould be for ever added to the poſſeſſions of that Houſe; the Marqueſſes and Electors of it to be thenceforth intituled Dukes of Magdeburg, Princes of Halberſtad and Minden. But what will be the iſſue of theſe Concluſions future Times muſt ſhew.

THE Dukedom of MECLENBURG is bounded on the Eaſt with Pomerania, on the Weſt with Holſtein, a Province of the Kingdom of Denmark, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with Brandenburg and Saxon-Lawenburg. Só called from Mecklenburg, or Megalopolis; (both names, in the ſeveral Languages of the Dutch and Greeks, ſignifying a great City,) a great Town of that name here being in the time of the Heruli and the Vandals, (the old Inhabitants of theſe parts) whoſe chief City it was; but on their leaving of this Country decayed to nothing. The Country is of the ſame nature as Pomerania, and as rich in Corn.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Wiſmar, a noted Port, on a Creek or Bay of the Baltick Sea; raiſed out of the Ruines of old Mecklenburg before mentioned, about the year 1240. The Haven hereof is capable of the greateſt Veſſels, to which it gives a ſafe and aſſured Station, whence the name of Wiſmar; the word ſignifying, in the Sclavonian Language, idem ac Certum mare, (as my Author hath it) as much as a quiet or ſafe Sea. Now one of the Hanſe-Towns, and being it lies conveniently for the uſe of the Swedes, allotted to that Crown by the Treaty of Munſter; the Duke of Mecklenburg being in recompence thereof to have the Temporalities of the Biſhopricks of Swerin and Ratzenburg. 2. Swerin, ſeated upon the South-ſide of the Lake ſo named; an Epiſcopal See, and honoured with giving the Title of a Barony to the Dukes of Mecklenburg. 3. Malchow, firſt walled by Niclot Prince of the Vandals, Anno 1270. 4. Ratzenburg, an Epiſcopal See, ſpoken of before. 5. Roſtock, the next in reputation of all the Hanſe-Towns to Lubeck and Dantzick; large, rich, and much frequented by all ſorts of Merchants; in compaſs almoſt ſix Engliſh miles; ſituate on the River Warn, near the fall thereof into the Baltick; honoured with an Univerſity, here founded by John Duke of Mecklenburg, Anno 1419, the firſt Profeſſors in it being brought from Erfort in Saxony. 6. Stargard, which once gave the Title of Duke to the younger Princes of this Houſe. 7. Sarentine, memorable for a Nunnery there founded by Duke Magnus the ſecond. 8. Lau, built and fortified by Duke Henry the ſecond, as an Outwork to Roſtock, which he had lately bought of Chriſtopher then K. of Denmark. 9. Sternberg, of which little memorable. 10. Fridland, on the edge of Pomeren, not far from Stargard, which gave the Title of Duke to Albert of Wallenſtein, after that called Duke of Fridland, that eminent and proſperous Commander of the Imperial Forces in the late War of Germany; who was miſerably murthered after all his Services by command of the Emperour. 11. Fitchtel, both pleaſantly and ſtrongly ſeated on the edge of a Lake. 12. Dammin a ſtrong Town on the Marches of Brandenburg.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were the Vandals, with the reſt of the Heruli and Burgundians. But the Burgundians, being reckoned as a part of the Vandals, were not much took notice of, till their Irruptions on the Borders of the Roman Empire made them more conſiderable: the Princes of theſe Nations uſing no other Title than Kings of the Heruli and Vandals. Of theſe the firſt is ſaid to be one Anthyrius, Son of an Amazonian Lady, who learned his firſt Rudiments of Warfare under Alexander the Great. Out of his Loins deſcended a long Race of Kings, amongſt whom Rhadaguiſe, who together with Alarick the Goth invaded Italy, (I know not by what warrant) is accounted one. Gunderick, the ſeventeenth of theſe Kings, weary of ſó cold a Dwelling, paſſed towards the South; and, having harraſſed Gaul and Spain, ſhipped himſelf over the Streights of Gibralter, and erected the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africk; whoſe Succeſſors we ſhall meet with there. By Vitalaus, the youngeſt Son of Genſericus, the Son of Gunderick, the Line of theſe Princes is continued; who after mingling with the Obotriti and other of the Sclaves, ſucceeding into the void places of the Vandals, left off the Title of Kings of the Vandals, and called themſelves Kings of the Heruli and Obotriti; continuing it to Pribiſlaus (or Primiſlaus the ſecond, who wrote himſelf, Pribiſlaus, Dei gratiâ, Herulorum, Wagriorum, Circipanorum, Palumborum, Obotritorum, Kiſſinorum, Vandalorúmque Rex, making herein a general Muſter of thoſe Tribes of the Sclaves and Heruli which remained under his command. But he being vanquiſhed quiſhed by Henry ſurnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, the Title of King was laid aſide; his Succeſſors contenting themſelves with that of Princes. The Eſtate was divided betwixt Henry and Niclot, the Nephews of Pribiſlaus by his Son Henry, into two Eſtates, Henry aſſuming to himſelf the Title of Prince of the Obotriti, and Niclot that of Prince of the Vandals. But the poſterity of Niclot failing in William, the laſt of that Line, Anno 1430, his Title with the Lands thereunto belonging fell to Henry the Fat, the fourth Duke of Meclenburg, to which Honour Albert and John, the Sons of Henry the fourth, deſcended from the elder Houſe, had been advanced by the Emperour Charles the fourth, at Prague, Anno 1348. The Succeſſion of which Family from Pribiſlaus take in order thus:

The Princes of the HERULI, and Dukes of MECKLENBURG.

1158 1. Pribiſlaus, the laſt King and firſt Prince of the Heruli, after their Subjection to the Saxons, reſtored to this Title and his former Eſtate by the bountiful Conquerours, to be held under the Right and Homage of the Houſe of Saxony.

1179 2. Henry, Son of Pribiſlaus, baptized with all his people in his Father's life-time, by the perſwaſion of Henry Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, by whom they were reſtored to their Eſtates.

3. Henry II. Son of the former Henry, dividing the Eſtate with his Brother Niclot.

1228 4. John, ſurnamed the Divine, ſo called, becauſe created Doctor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Paris, whither he was ſent by his Father to learn good Arts.

1260 5. Henry III. ſurnamed of Hieruſalem, becauſe of his Expedition thither againſt the Saracens.

1302 6. Henry IV. ſurnamed the Lion, for his Valour and undaunted Conſtancy.

1319 7. Albert and John, the Sons of Henry, going to Prague with a Princely Train to attend on the Emperour Charles the fourth, were by him created Princes of the Empire, and Dukes of Mecklenburg, Anno 1348.

1380 8. Magnus, Son of Albert.

1384 9. John, Son of Magnus, the Founder of the Univerſity of Roſtock, Anno 1419.

1423 10. Henry V. ſurnamed the Fat, who, on the death of William the laſt Prince of the Vandals, ſucceeded into his Eſtate.

1447 11. Magnus II. Son of Henry, Founder of the Cathedral Church of Roſtock.

1503 12. Albert II. Son of Magnus the ſecond.

1578 14. John III. Son of John Albert.

1592 15. Adolph Frederick and John Albert, Sons of John the third, diſpoſſeſſed hereof by the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond, An. 1628, their Eſtates, with the Title of Duke of Mecklenburg, being conferred on Albert of Wallenſtein, Duke of Fridland; who had not long enjoyed the Title, when Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, the Aſſertor of the Liberties of Germany, reſtored it to the proper Owners. The Heir to whoſe Eſt — is Guſtavus Adolphus, the only Son and Heir of John Albert; the other of theſe two Brothers dying without Iſſue.

18. The Dukedom and Eſtates of SAXONY.

THE Dukedom and Eſtates of SAXONY (not reckoning thoſe which now paſs under other Names, and ſhall hereafter be deſcribed in their ſeveral places) are bounded on the Eaſt with Bohemia, Luſatia, and part of Brandenburg, on the Weſt with Haſſia, Brunſwick, and parts of Lunenburg and Holſtein; on the North with other parts of Brandenburg, and part of Mecklenburg; and on the South with Franconia, and ſome parts of the Upper Palatinate.

It is (we ſee) an aggregate Body, conſiſting of two general Limbs; 1. the Dukedom of Saxony, 2. the Eſtates of Saxony, or Saxony properly ſo called: the firſt containing the whole Provinces of 1. Ober-Sax, or the Upper Saxony, the proper Seat of the Duke Elector, 2. Miſnia, 3. Voitland, and 4. Thuringia; the other thoſe of 1. Anhal. 2. Mansfield, 3. Meydeburg, and 4. Lawenburg. And as it is an aggregate Body, ſo is it comprehenſive of all thoſe honourary Titles by which the Princes of Germany are diſtinguiſhed from one another; that is to ſay, the Electorſhip of Saxony, the Dukedom of Lawenburg, the Biſhoprick of Meydeburg, the Principality of Anhalt, the Marquiſate of Miſnia, the Lantgravedom of Thuringia, the Earldom of Mansfield, and the Seigniory or Lordſhip of Voitland. Of theſe eight Provinces, the 4 firſt mentioned are wholly ſituate without the Limits and Precincts of the ancient Saxony; and yet now are, and have been called long before, the Dukedom of Saxony, becauſe they make up the whole Patrimony and Eſtate of the Dukes Electors, who, ſince the Proſcription and Deprivation of Duke Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, Anno 1180, in ſome or other of theſe Countries have had their fixed Seat and Habitation. The four laſt, being parts of the ancient Saxony, and heretofore in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes hereof, do ſtill paſs under the account and name of Saxony, though in the hands of ſeveral Owners; all which do acknowledge a Superiority in the Duke Elector, if not ſome great Relation to him and Dependence on him: ſo that we have an heterogeneous Body to diſcourſe upon, and therefore muſt conſider ſeverally of the parts thereof, but ſo, that either firſt or laſt we ſhall find them all in the Succeſſion and Affairs of the Dukes of Saxony. 1. then,

The DUKEDOM of Saxony is bounded on the Eaſt with Bohemia, Luſatia, and part of Brandenburg, on the Weſt with Haſſia, and part of the proper Saxony; on the North with the proper Saxony only; and on the South with Franconia, and the Upper Palatinate. So called, becauſe the proper Seat and Patrimony of the Duke-Elector: of very different nature both for Air and Soil, but the laſt eſpecially; as we ſhall ſee by looking over the particular Provinces of 1. Ober-Sax, 2. Miſnia, or Meiſſen, 3. Voitland, 4. Thuringia, by the Dutch called Duringen.

1. OBER-SAX, or the Upper Saxony, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Marches of Brandenburg, on the Weſt with Mansfield, from which it is parted by the River Sala, on the North with Meydeburg, on the South with Miſnia. The reaſon of the name we ſhall ſee anon. The Air hereof is ſomewhat ſharp and piercing, the Soil ſufficiently fruitful, but therein not to be compared with Miſnia, and much leſs with Durengen, being both of them of a richer and more liberal nature.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Torgaw, by ſome placed in Miſnia, but by Mercator in this Province; built on the West side of the Elve, in form orbicular, and falling every way from the sides of a Mountain; beautified with a stately and pleasant Castle belonging to the Elector of Saxony, who is Lord hereof, built by John-Frederick the Elector, Anno 1535. Near to the City is a Lake of a mile in compass, for which the Citizens pay yearly to the Duke 500 Guldens. 2. Worlitz, upon the Elve, once a Commandery of the Templars. 3. Weissenburg, lying towards Brunswick. 4. Kemburg, on the Elve. 5. Bitterfeldt, betwixt the Elve and the Mulda. And 6. Wittenberg, on the Elve, in an open Plain, but strongly fenced with Walls, Ramparts, and deep Ditches. The chief beauty of it lieth in one fair Street, extending the whole length of the City: in the midst thereof is the Cathedral-Church, a large Market-place, and the Common-Council-house. In former times it was the Seat of the Dukes Electors, till the Electoral Dignity was conferred on the House of Meissen, who, liking better their own Country, kept their Courts at Dresden, but so, that Wittenberg is still acknowledged for the Head City of the Electorate; and was made an University for Divines by Duke Frederick Anno 1508. It was called Wittenberg, as some conjecture, from Wittikindus, once Lord of Saxony, when the extent thereof was greatest: famous for the Sepulchres of Luther and Melanchthon, but chiefly for that here were the Walls of Popery first broken down, and the Reformation of Religion begun by Luther, of the wonderful success whereof we have spoke already.

Of the Affairs of this little Country we can say but little, more than the means by which it came into the hands of the Dukes of Saxony, and consequently to the name which it still retains. Concerning which we are to know, that on the Deprivation of Duke Henry, surnamed the Lion, whose Greatness was grown formidable even to the Emperours themselves, the Dukedom of Saxony was dismembred into many parcels; Brunswick and Lunenburg being given unto the Children of the Duke deprived, the lower Parts of Westphalen seized on by Philip Archbishop of Colen, the parts thereof about the Weser by the Bishop of Paderborn, Herman the Lantgrave of Thuringia laying hold of that part of this Estate which was nearest to him, Lubeck and many other of the principal Cities made Imperial, or governing themselves as Free Estates, the Ancestors of the Princes of Anhalt and the Earls of Mansfield endowed with large Possessions also out of this great Patrimony; the Emperour not only conniving at it, but willingly consenting to that Dissipation, the better to reward and content those Princes who had assisted him in his Wars against the Duke. By which means there was nothing left of the ancient Saxony to be estated upon Bernard of Anhalt, whom Frederick Barbarossa had created Duke Elector in the room of Henry so deprived. And though Duke Bernard for his many good Services to the Empire had been before gratified with the City of Wittenberg by Conrade the 3. and had conquered from Duke Henry the whole Country of Lawenburg; yet all being found too little to maintain the Port of a Duke Elector, it pleased the Emperour Frederick to bestow upon him all those Lands and Territories which lay between the Sala and the Elve, on the North of Misnia, to make Wittenberg the Electoral City, and give unto the County thus united to it the name of Ober-Sax or Upper Saxony, which it continueth to this day.

2. MISNIA, or Meissen, is bounded on the East with Lusatia, on the West with Duringen, on the North with Saxony specially so called and some part of Brandenburg, on the South with Voitland & some part of Bohemia. The Country was once overspread with Woods, and full of Bogs, rendring the Air unwholsom, and the Soil unprofitable; both rectified by the care and industry of the people; now yielding some Mines of Silver, and great plenty both of Corn and Pasturage; well watered with the Rivers Sala, Plesse, Elster, and Mulda.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Dresden, seated on the Albis, having continually on her Walls and Bulwarks 150 Pieces of Ordnance; in it a Stable of the Duke's, in which are 128 Horses of service, and a Magazine, out of which 30000 Horse and Foot may be armed at a day's warning. The Town it self is situate on both sides of the River, by which it is divided into the Old Town and the New, joined into one by a Bridge of 800 paces in length. The Country round about it is very rich and pleasant, able to sustain great multitudes. For that cause it was made the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of Saxony, who have here a strong and stately Castle. 2. Naumburg, 3. Mersburg, both seated on the River Sala, two Episcopal Sees. 4. Leipzick, as famous an University for Philosophers as Jene in Lorrain is for Phytitians. It seemeth the Scholars and Citizens will not suffer their Beer to perish, of which here is so much drunk and exported, that the very Custom of it due unto the Duke amounteth to 20000 pounds yearly: yet is this Town of no more than two Churches; but wealthy, populous, and built for the most part of fair Free-stone, and honoured with the Courts of Justice for all the Country: Though seated on the meeting of Plesse, Parde, and Elster, 3. Rivers which lie almost on all sides of it; yet it is not strong, having been thrice taken by the Imperialists in less than 2 years during the late German Wars. Sufficiently famous (if for nothing else) for the great Battel fought near it between the late King of Sweden and the Count of Tilly: the honour whereof falling to the Swedes and Saxons, (with the death of 15000 on both sides, and the loss of all the Baggage, Arms and Ammunition of the Imperialists) freed all these parts of Germany from that civil and spiritual Bondage which was intended by the Emperour to be put upon them. 5. Mulberg, on the Elve, where John Frederick the Elector was discomfited and taken prisoner by Charles the fifth, and by him deprived not long after of his Estate and Dignity. 6. Meissen, on the West-side of the same River, in a hilly and uneven ground, built by the Emperour Henry the first for defence of the Empire against the Sclaves: a Bishops See, and the first Seat of the Marquesses of this Country, both which, together with the Burgrave of the Town, had their Palaces or Mansion-houses standing close together on the top of a Hill over-looking both the Town and Country. From this Town the whole Province had the name of Meissen. 7. Friberg, near the Mountains of Bohemia, rich in Mines of Silver. 8. Roclite, not far from which are rich Mines of Tin, discovered first in these parts by a Cornish-man spoken of before.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Hermanduri and Suardones, subdued or outed by the Sorabi, a great Tribe of the Sclaves surnamed Winithi: first conquered by the Emperour Henry the first, who built the strong Town of Meissen to keep them under, and to impede the neighbouring Sclaves from any Incroachments on the Empire. Being thus added to the Empire and account of Germany, it was a while governed by such Officers as by the Emperours were appointed to guard these Marches: the first proprietary Marquess being one Echard, Son of the Earl of Ostland, (descended from a younger Son of Wittikind, the last King of the Saxons) by the munificence of Otho the third: not made hereditary till the time of Henry the fifth, who gave it in Fee to Conrade Marquess of Landsperg and Lusatia, whose Nephew Theodorick by his Son Otho, surnamed the Rich, married Judith, Daughter of Herman Lantgrave of Duringen; by which Match Duringen gen accrued to the House of Meissen, Henry their Son succeeding in both Estates. To this Henry succeeded Albert his Son, and after him successively four Fredericks; the last whereof, on the faileur of the House of Anhalt, was by the Emperour Sigismund created Elector and Duke of Saxony, either because descended from the House of Wittikindus, or as most able to pay for the Investiture, or else best able to sustain the Estate and Dignity of a Duke-Elector, which had but weakly been supported by the former Family. In his posterity these Honours and Estates do as yet continue; but neither all nor always in the possession of the Dukes-Electors. For in the Partage made between Ernestus and Albert, the Sons of Frederick, (according to the ill Custom of Germany) this Country, or the greatest part of it, was assigned to Albert, succeeded in the same by George and Henry his two Sons: which Henry was Father of that Maurice, who, being setled and confirmed herein by the Duke John-Frederick, did after most unworthily take up Arms against him, supplanted him, and finally possessed himself of this whole Electorate; of which more anon.

3. VOITLAND is bounded on the East with Bohemia, on the West with Frankenland, on the North with Misnia or Meissen, on the South with the Upper Palatinate. So called, as some say, from the Ivites or Vites, (some of that People who, together with the Saxons and Angles, conquered Britain) of whom it had the name of Viteland, that is to say, the Land or Country of the Vites. But being I find not that the Saxons did spread so far Eastward, I rather think that this name was given it by the Sclaves, who finding it deserted, or but thinly peopled, at their coming thither, might call it by the name of Voidland; from which the alteration unto Voitland is both plain and obvious. It is the smallest Province of all Germany, and never of such repute as to have any particular Prince, as most others had; but always reckoned as an accessory to some greater Estate. Nor hath it any Town or Cities of great estimation: the chief of those which are being, 1. Olsnitz, 2. Worda, 3. Cornab, 4. Schneberg, near the Mountains called Sudeti by Ptolomy, famed for Silver-Mines. 5. Gotzberg, 6. Culmbach; and 7. Hoffe, not much remarkable, but only for the Princes of it of the House of Brandenburg; called formerly Curia Pegniana.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were parts of the Nertereates and Danduti, succeeded to by the French and Sclaves, as they severally descended Southwards into warmer Countries. Possessed and planted by the Sclaves it obtained this name. But being a small Nation and a small Estate, it never had the honour of a particular Prince; but did most probably belong to the Lords of Meissen, upon which it bordereth, and now, in their right, to the Duke of Saxony. But so that the Duke of Saxony is not the sole Lord hereof: the Marquesses of Onspach of the House of Brandenburg possessing the Towns of Hoffe and Culmbach, and some other parts of it: the Patrimony at present of Christian, Son of Joachim-Ernest the late Marquess of Onspach, who now enjoyeth them, with the Title of Marquess of Culmbach.

4. THURINGIA is bounded on the East with Misnia and the River Sala, on the West with Hassia, on the North with the Wood Hartz and the proper Saxony, on the South with the mountainous Forest of Duringer-wald, by it parted from Frankenland: the Forest and the Country both so called from the Thuringians, the ancient Inhabitants hereof, communicating their name to the place they dwelt in.

The Country is environed round about with woody Mountains, but within those Mountains plain and pleasant, fruitful in Corn, and very plentiful of Woods, which yield great profit to the people; not without some Mines of Gold and Silver, and rich pits of Salt; able to furnish out a Feast, but for Wine only, which is the greatest want hereof. The whole length of it is not above 120 miles, and the breadth no more; yet is it so populous and well planted, that there are said to be in it 12 Earldoms, and as many Abbies, 144 Cities, and as many Market-Towns, 150 Castles, and 2000 Villages.

The principal of these are 1. Jene, on the River Sala, bordering upon Misnia, an University chiefly of Physicians, founded in the year 1555 by the Sons of John-Frederick the Elector, taken prisoner and deprived by Charles the fifth. 2. Erfurt, on the River Gera, out of which are cut so many Chanels, that every Street almost hath the benefit of it. A rich, populous, and well-built City, accounted amongst the best of Germany, and made an University in the time of the Emperour Wenceslaus, Anno 1382. Many times burnt, but still reviving, as the Phœnix out of the Ashes, into greater glory. It was at first immediately subject to the Archbishops and Electors of Mentz, the first Founders of it, as being built by William, Son of the Emperour Otho the first, and then Archbishop of that City, of whom more anon: but having freed themselves from him, they have since governed themselves as a Free Estate, and are one of the Hanse-Towns, not subject to the Duke of Saxony as their Lord, but their Patron and good Neighbour only. 3. Mulhusen, and 4. Northusen, two Imperial Cities, but else not observable. 5. Smalcald, famous for the League here made Anno 1530 between all the Princes and Cities which maintained the Doctrine of Luther, for defence thereof, and of one another in the pursuance of that work: by which famous Confederacy Luther not only kept his head on his shoulders, but the Religion by him reformed grew to that strength, that no force or policy could ever root it up. 6. Kala, or Hale, on the River Falza; of great resort for the exceeding quantity of Salt there made, and vended in other places; at which Town Philip the Lantgrave was treacherously taken Prisoner, as you shall hear anon. 7. Weymar, a Town which, together with the Castle of Gotha, were assigned for the Estate and maintenance of that religious, though unfortunate, Prince John-Frederick Duke of Saxony, after his Discomfiture and Imprisonment by Charles the 5. the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of Saxon-Weymar, who live here in a stately and magnificent Castle made of polished Stone, most artificially contrived; and beautified with Orchards, Gardens, and other pleasures, but made more pleasant by the watering of the River Ilma, upon which it standeth. 8. Gotha, upon the River Lon, said by Rathaimerus to be built by the Goths, and by them thus named. A place not long since of great importance, and fortified with a very strong Castle, called Grummenstein, that being made the Retiring-place of one Grunbachius and other seditious persons under the Protection of John-Frederick, one of the Sons of the deprived Electors. It was taken after a long Siege by Augustus the Elector of Saxony, (to whom the strength of this piece being in the hands of the injured Family was a great Eye-sore) and by the command of the Estates of the Empire at the Diet at Regenspurg, Anno 1567, demolished, and levelled with the ground.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chasuarii of Tacitus, and after them the Thuringi, who, with the Heruli, under the Conduct of Odoacer, conquered Italy; called by some Turcilingi, by others supposed to be the Tirangetæ of Ptolomy. Not heard of in this Country till the Reign of Childerick the fourth King of the French; then taking up the whole Provinces of Hassia and Thuringia, under one Bissinius their King. Their Arms were at that time, and long after, Azure, a Lion Barrie Argent and Gules, armed and crowned Or. Being overcome at the great Battel of Zulp near Colen, where they joined with the Almans, they were afterwards totally subdued by Theodorick the French King of Metz, their King Hermanfridus taken, and most perfidiously slain; part of their Country taken from them, and given to the Saxons, (who assisted in that War against them) becoming subject for the rest to the Kings of France; but so, that for some time after they had Kings of their own, Baderick and Hermanfroy, two Brothers, Kings hereof successively, being Uncles to Radegond, a Princess of great Piety, the Wife of Clotaire King of France, Anno 559. In following times it was united to the Empire by Henry the first; conferred not long after by Otho the first (the Son of Henry) on William, one of his younger Sons, then Archbishop of Mentz, which he left to his Successors in that See; governed by their Vidames and Provincial Officers, till the time of Conradus Salicus, when Ludovicus Barbatus, one of these Vidames (or Vicedomini) made himself the Proprietary of it, and left the same unto his Children after his decease. But in the time of Conrade the 2. the Issue of this Ludovicus either failing or dispossessed, it was by the Emperour conferred on Lewis of Orleans, Son to a Sister of his Empress, the Title of Lantgrave being given to them of this Family for their greater Honour. Under eight Princes of this Line, whereof five successively had the name of Lewis, this Estate continued: next falling to Herman, a Brother of the fifth Lewis, who, by contributing to the Ruine of Henry Duke of Saxony, surnamed the Lion, in favour of Frederick Barbarossa, had for his share (in the dividing of the Spoil) those parts of his Estates which lay neerest to him, called then the Palatinate of Saxony; recovered for the most part afterward by the Dukes of Brunswick, the right Heirs of Henry. He being dead, this Country fell to a sixth Lewis, and last of all to Henry the Brother of that Lewis, in whom the Male-issue failed, having continued for the space of 252 years. To please all parties interessed in the Succession, the Estate, before entire, was divided into two Parts or Provinces: of which this now called Duringen, or Thuringia, was allotted to Henry Marques of Missnia, Son of Judith, the Daughter of Herman; the Western part thereof, with the Title of the Lantgravedom of Hessen, adjudged to Henry Duke of Brabant, in right of Sophia his Wife, Daughter of Lewis the sixth: in the description of which Countries we shall hear more of them. United thus to the House of Meissen in the person of Henry the then Marques, Anno 1263, it flourished in long Peace and Happiness under the Princes of that House. Finally, it much increased both in Power and Dignity by the addition of Ober-Sax and the Electorship of Saxony, conferred on Frederick the Fourth, Marques and Lantgrave of these Countries, Anno 1423; in which Estate it still continueth, the fourth and fairest of all these Provinces which now make up the Dukedom of Saxony, (as for the reasons above mentioned it hath long been called) though none of them, nor any part or parcel of them, within the Bounds and Limits of the ancient Saxony, as before was said.

2. SAXONY properly so called, or the Proper SAXONY, is bounded on the South with Duringen and the great Wood Hartz, part of the old Hercynian Forest, and from thence so named; on the East with part of Missnia, Ober-Sax, and the Marches of Brandenburg; upon the North with the Dukedom of Mecklenburg; and on the West with those of Brunswick, Lunenburg, and part of Holstein. So called from the Saxons, once the Lords hereof, (of whom more anon) and the sole part of all their great and many Conquests which retains their name.

The Air hereof is somewhat sharp, but healthy; the Soil in the South-west parts hilly and uneven, chiefly rich in Minerals, elsewhere sufficiently fruitful. It is divided into 4 Estates; that is to say, 1. the Principality of Anhalt, 2. the Earldom of Mansfield, 3. the Bishoprick of Meydeburg, 4. the Dukedom of Lawenburg.

1. The Principate of ANHALT is bounded on the South with Duringen and the Wood called Hartz, on the West and North with the County of Mansfield, on the East with Missnia; much shaded, if not too much over-grown, with Woods, part of the Hartz, or old Hercynian Forest, whence it had the name; Holt in the Dutch signifying a Wood or Forest; and the Princes of this House being created to this Dignity by the Style of Principes Hercyniæ in Anhalt. Chiefer Towns of it are, 1. Bernburg, the Dynastie and usual Title of this House before they were created Princes of Anhalt. 2. Ballenstede, part of the ancient Patrimony of the first Princes hereof. 3. Dessaw, the birth-place of some, and the Burial-place of others, of this Family; beautified with a strong Castle, built by Prince Albert the 2. Anno 1341. 4. Sterveft, the usual place of the Prince's Residence. 5. Coeten, a well fortified place, in vain besiged by the joint Forces of the Archbishop of Meydeburg and the Earl of Swartzenwald. 6. Candt. Here sometimes also stood the old Castle of Ascandt, the first Seat of these Princes, but long since destroyed, now only to be visited in Records and Histories.

We shall be sent no higher than the first besieging of the Roman Capitol by the ancient Gauls, to find out the Pedigree and Descent of the Earls of Lippe; but we must go as high as the Ark for the Princes of Anhalt; some fetching them from Askenaz, the Son of Gomer, and Nephew of Japhet, from whom, and no other, this Ascanian Family (for by that name it is called) are to fetch their Pedigree. But to content our selves with more sober thoughts, we are to know, that when Theodorick King of Metz undertook the Conquest of the Thuringians, he was therein aided by the Saxons with 9000 men, under the conduct of one Bernwald, or Bernthobald, a man of great power and rank amongst them. The Saxons were recompensed for that service with such parts of the conquered Country as lay neerest to them, and Bernthobald himself rewarded with the Towns of Ascandt, Ballenstede, and the Lands adjoining, Anno 524, to be holden by them under the Soveraignty of the French. From which Town and the Castle of Ascandt, afterwards razed to the ground by Pepin King of the French, (for denying the accustomed Tributes) Anno 747, most probable it is that the name of the Ascanian Family was assumed by them. So that we may behold it as a Family of as great antiquity as the most in Europe, little inferiour to any of the greatest Monarchs. His Successors were for the most part busied in Wars against their neighbours of Missnia; but rather upon hope of Spoil and plunder, than in way of Conquest; their Power & Patrimony being very little improved till the time of Albert surnamed Ursus, descended by a long succession of Princes from Bernwald or Bernthobald, before remembred. This Albert having done many signal services unto Conrade the 3. and his Son Frederick Barbarossa, (especially in taking the Cities of Breme and Luenburg) was by the last created Marques and Elector of Brandenburg Anno 1153, the Father of that Bernard who, by the munificence and bounty of the same Emperour, was created Duke-Elector of Saxony in the room of Duke Henry surnamed the Lion, Anno 1180, becoming so the Stem of the two greateſt Princes of all the Empire. Henry the 2. Son of this Bernard, was by the ſame Emperor not long after enriched with much of the Lands and Territories lying neareſt to him, which had before belonged to Duke Henry the Lion, and created the firſt Prince of Anhalt, the firſt of all this ancient and illuſtrious Family which had been honoured with that Title, both Lands and Title continuing in his Race to this very day; the two Electorates of Saxony and Brandenburg being in the mean while tranſlated unto other Families. The moſt conſiderable of which Princes, though all men of Eminence, were 1. Rodolph, General of the Forces of the Emperour Maximilian the firſt againſt the Venetians, whom he twice overcame in Battel. 2. George the Divine, a great Reformer of the Church by his diligent Preaching; whoſe Sermons and other Tractates (learned for the Times he lived in) are ſtill extant. 3. Chriſtian, born in the year 1568, Commander of the Forces of Frederick, Prince Elector Palatine, in the Wars of Bohemia.

Stem

2. The Earldom of MANSFIELD is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Sala, parting it from Ober-Sax; on the Weſt with the River Wieper, which divides it from Brunſwick; on the North with the Biſhoprick of Meydeburg, and on the South with Anhalt and part of Duringen. So called from Mansfield, once the chief Town of it, ſituate on the River Wieper, but now much decayed: the other Towns of note herein being, 2. Iſleben, more in the middle of the Country; for that cauſe more convenient for the Seats of Juſtice, firſt ſetled here by Earl Voldradus, Anno 1448, and by that means made the Metropolis of this Earldom: By ſome affirmed to have took this name from the Goddeſs Iſis, who, after the death of her Husband, (as is ſaid by Tacitus) viſited theſe parts. Famous more certainly for the Birth of Luther, tranſplanted hence for the ſtudy of good Arts to Meydeburg, and choſen thence to be Divinity-Reader in Wittenberg, where he hammered out that great Work of the Reformation, as before was ſaid; born here in the year 1483, and here deceaſing in the houſe of the Earl of Mansfield, Anno 1546. 3. Wieper, (or Wipra) ſo called of the River on which it ſtandeth. 4. Quernfort, the honourary Title of the Anceſtors of the Earls of Mansfield. 5. Rotenberg, 6. Abſted, 7. Helderung, bought of the Earls of Holſtein.

Some, who delineate the Pedigree of theſe Earls of Mansfield, fetch it out as high as from one Heger, one of King Arthur's Knights of the Round-Table, born at Mansfield in Nottinghamſhire, who, ſetling himſelf in Germany, gave that name to his Houſe: a military original, and very ſutable to ſuch an active and warlike Family. But thoſe that do not ſoar ſo high derive them from the Earls of Quernfort, men of authority in theſe parts; made more conſiderable by Lotharius Emperour and Duke of Saxony, but moſt of all by Frederick Barbaroſſa, who conferred many goodly Lordſhips lying hereabout (once part of the Eſtate of Duke Henry the Lion) on Burchard the fifth Earl thereof, a conſtant Follower of his, not only in his Wars againſt Duke Henry before named, but in thoſe alſo which he managed in the Holy Land, in the courſe whereof he died at Antioch Anno 1189. His Nephew Burchard, by a Son of the ſame name, was the firſt of this Family that had the Title of Earl of Mansfield, about the year 1250; continued ever ſince unto his poſterity, (but under ſome Acknowledgment to the Electors of Saxony.) Of theſe the moſt eminent were 1. Waleradus, one of the Council of Eſtate to the Emperour Sigiſmund Anno 1411, a great improver of the Patrimony of the Earls hereof. 2. John George, Lord Deputy or Lieutenant of Saxony under Duke Auguſtus. 3. Peter-Erneſt, Governour of Luxemburg under Charles the 5. and Philip the 2. by them much exerciſed and employed in their Wars with France and their Belgick Rebels. 4. Albert, a conſtant Friend of Luther, and a faithful Follower of John Frederick, the deprived Elector; in whoſe Quarrel being outed of his Eſtate, he retired to Meydeburg, which he moſt gallantly defended againſt the Emperour. And 5. Erneſtus, Nephew of that Albert by his Son John, ſo famous for the War which he maintained in moſt parts of Germany againſt Ferdinand the 2. in behalf of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine and the States of Bohemia, with ſo great conſtancy and courage.

3. On the North of Mansfield and Ober-Sax lieth the Biſhoprick of MEYDEBURG, having on the Weſt partsof Brunſwick and Lunenburg, and on the North and the Eaſt the Marches of Brandenburg: So called from the Epiſcopal See founded in Magdeburg the chief City, by ſome called Meydeburg and Meydenburg, whence by a Greek name Parthenopolis, and Virginopolis by a mungrel word made of Greek and Latine. A City ſeated on the Elve, divided into three parts, but all ſtrongly fortified, begirt with high Walls, deep Ditches, and almoſt unconquerable Bulwarks; yet very beautiful withall, (before the laſt Deſolation of it) of elegant Buildings, fair Streets, and magnificent Temples. It was built in the form of a Creſcent by the Emperour Otho the firſt, the Founder of it, who, having tranſlated hither the Archiepiſcopal See, for the greater honour of the place built the Cathedral of S. Maurice, where his Wife lies buried, Anno 948, teſtified by the Inſcription to be the Daughter of Edmund King of England. A Town which hath long flouriſhed in a great deal of Glory, and taſted of as much Affliction as any other in Germany. For refuſing to receive the Interim, it was out-lawed by the Emperour Charles the fifth, and given to him that could firſt take it. It was firſt hereupon attempted by the Duke of Mecklenburg; but he was in a Camiſado taken Priſoner, his Army routed, his Nobles made captive, and 260 Horſe brought into the City. Next, it was beſieged by Duke Maurice of Saxony, who on honourable terms was after a long Siege received into it, Anno 1550, when it had ſtood on its own Guard the ſpace of three years. Which long Oppoſition of one Town taught the German Princes what Conſtancy could do; it held up the coals of Rebellion in Germany; and indeed proved to be the Fire which burned the Emperor's Trophees. For here Duke Maurice coming acquainted with Baron Hedeck, hatched that Confederacy by which not long after this great Emperor was driven out of Germany. At laſt it yielded to Duke Maurice, under the protection of whoſe Succeſſors it hath ſince enjoyed a long courſe of Felicity, till the year 1631, in which it was moſt miſerably burnt and ſacked by the Earl of Tilly; of whom it is obſerved, that after that Fact he never proſpered, being ſhortly after totally routed at the Battel of Leipzick, and wounded to the death not long after that near the River Leck. Other places of note in this Biſhoprick are, 2. Wormſted, beautified with a fair Caſtle, not far from Magdeburg, the ordinary Seat or Retiring-place of the Biſhop. 3. Grabaw, upon the River Struma. 4. Mockeren, on the ſame River. 5. Barleben, beneath Meydeburg, on the Elve. 6. Louburg, betwixt the Elve and the Struma, not much obſervable.

The Archiepiſcopal See being tranſlated hither from Valerſleve and Vreſe (places too obſcure for ſo great a dignity) by Otho the firſt, and by him endowed with great Revenues and a goodly Territory round about it, the Arch-

Archbishop hereof was also by his procurement made the Primate of Germany, acknowledged so by all but the Bishop of Saltzburg and the three Spiritual Electors. For the Administration of Justice in matters Criminal and Civil, the said Otho did ordain an Officer, whom they called the Burgrave; conferring that Office first on Gero Marquess of Lusatia. Through many hands it came at last to Burchard Lord of Quernfort, and the Earls of Mansfield, many of which enjoyed this Honour, setled at last by the Emperour Rodolphus of Habspurg on the Dukes of Saxony, who by this means came to have great command and influence on the whole Estate. The Archbishops notwithstanding continued Lords of it, and the whole Territory or District adjoining to it, till the Reformation of Religion; when the Revenues, separated from the Jurisdiction, were given to Lay-Princes, (for the most part of the House of Brandenburg) with the Title of Administrator. Finally, by the Pacification made at Munster, this fair Estate is to be setled for ever on the Electors of that House, to be possessed by them, and their Heirs and Successors, by the Title of the Dukes of Magdeburg, the better to content them for the Concession which they made to the Crown of Sweden of a great part of their right and Title to the Dukedom of Pomeren.

4. On the North-west of Magdeburg, and on both sides also of the Elve, lieth the Dukedom of LAWENBURG, bounded on the North with Mecklenburg, on the West with part of Holstein, and on the South with the River Elve and part of Lunenburg; so called of Lawenburg the chief Town thereof, and the Seat of the Dukes. The Town was first built, as some conceive, by Henry Duke of Saxony, surnamed the Lion, the better to assure his Conquests on that side of the River, by whom it was called Leopolis, or Leoburgum, and Lawenburg for the same reasons by the Dutch or Germans: on the Proscription of which Prince, the Country being wasted and the Towns destroyed, Bernhard of Anhalt, designed his Successor in the Dukedom of Saxony, liking the situation of it, caused it to be re-edified in stronger manner than before, a great part of the materials of the Town of Erdenburg being carried cross the Water to enlarge this place. Afterwards being razed by the said Duke Henry in the course of that War, it was re-built again by D Bernard, the new Elector, who is therefore by some Writers made the Founder of it. Other places of note herein are, 2. Erdenburg, a well-fortified piece, opposite to Lawenburg, on the hither-side of the Elve; not so large now as heretofore, the Town of Lawenburg being made greater by the lessening of this 3. Raceburg, an Episcopal See, founded here by Duke Henry surnamed the Lion, upon his gaining of the Sclaves to the Christian Faith, and of late times the Sepulture of this Ducal Family. 4. Molne, on the farther side of the Elb, not far from Lawenburg, the cause of much Contention betwixt the Dukes hereof, and the Town of Hamburg, who pretend a Title thereunto.

This Country, being for the most part under the Command of the Sclaves, was from them conquered (together with the whole Country of Mecklenburg) by Duke Henry the Lion, and by his care converted to the Christian Faith: but he being proscribed, and this Seigniory extorted from him by Duke Bernard of Anhalt, his Successor in the Electoral Dignity, it was by Albert, Son of this Bernard, conferred on John his second Son, from whom the Dukes of Saxony commonly called Dukes of Saxon-Lawenburg, do derive themselves; who being pretermitted by the Emperour Sigismund at the death of Albert the 3. the last of the direct Line of Bernard, or else not caring for a Title which carried with it too great Sail for so small a Vessel as the Estate of the Elector at the present was, have since contented themselves with their ancient Patrimony.

It is now time we should proceed to the Story of Saxony, the ancient Inhabitants of which Tract were the Longobardi or Lombards of Magdeburg, and part of the Cherusci about Mansfield and Wittenberg. Overcome by the prevailing Saxons, they became part of their name and Country, which in the full extent thereof was once far greater than now it is, containing all the Countries betwixt the Rhene and the River Eyder in the Cimbrick Chersonese, and from the River Sala to the German and Baltick Oceans. These are said by some to be a People of Asia, and there called the Sacæ, who, finding that small Territory (now a part of Tartaria) too narrow for them, forsook their Country, and at last fixed themselves in the Cimbrick Chersonese; where they first took the names of Sacasons (or Sac-sons,) that is to say, the Sons of the Sacæ. The improbability of this we have there disputed. Omitting therefore that and the like Originations of them, I conceive them (for my part) to be natural Germans, some Tribe of that most populous and potent People of the Suevi: but for the reason of the name, let every man enjoy the pleasure of his own opinion. Certain I am that in Ptolomy's time they were possessed of those parts beyond the Elb, and thence extended to the Eyder, part of which Tract is now known by the name of Holstein; and were accounted in that time to be no New-comers. Afterwards, as they grew in number, they enlarged their quarters, and passing over the Elb, in the time of the later Roman Emperours, possessed themselves of the void places which were left by the French, then busied in the Conquest of more fruitful Countries; communicating their name to all the Nations which they overcame, as the French had formerly done before them. So that in fine they stretcht themselves from the River Sala on the East, to the German Ocean on the West, and took up the now Dukedoms of Holstein, Lunenburg, and Brunswick, the Bishopricks of Bremen, Verden, Hildesheim, Halberstadt, and Magdeburg, the Marches of Brandenburg, the Earldom of Mansfield, Westphalen, both Frieslands, Over-Yssel, with as much of Gelderland and Holland as lay on that side of the Rhene. By which account the present Electoral Family hath not one foot of the old Saxony in their possession; the Seat and Patrimony of the Electors being removed into other Countries, upon the Alterations and Changes which have happened in that Estate; the name and Title of Saxony being given to the Country about Wittenberg, for no other reason but because it was the chief Seat of the Dukes-Electors. But to proceed, a stout and valiant Nation questionless they were, the Conquerors of the Isle of Britain; and the last People of the Germans which yielded up their Country unto Charles the Great, by his means gained unto the Gospel Anno 785. Their last King was called Wittikindus, from whom descend the Kings of France since the time of Hugh Capet, the present Kings of Denmark, of the House of Oldenburg, the Dukes of Burgundy and Savoy, the Marquesses of Montferrat, besides many other noble and illustrious Families though of lesser note. The right or direct Line of the Male-issue of Wittikind (whom Charles the Great created, of a King, the first Duke of Saxony) determining in the person of Otho the third, Emperour of Germany, it was by him conferred on Bernard Lord of Lunenburg, (but the precise time I find not:) Henry, surnamed the Saint, who succeeded this Otho in the Empire, the next in the collateral Line, being pretermitted, either because at that time setled in the great Dukedom of Bavaria, or because there was no hope of Posterity by him, or for some other private grudge, which I read not of. And it continued in this Line till, on the Forfeiture incurred by his posterity, in the person of Duke

Henry

Henry the Lion, it was bestowed by Frederick Barbarossa upon Bernard of Anhalt Anno 1180; whose Issue in the right Line failing, it was finally estated by the Emperour Sigismund on Frederick Lantgrave of Thuringia and Marquess of Misnia, Anno 1423. In his Family it hath since continued, but not without a manifest breach in the course of the Succession: which happened when John-Frederick being deprived of the Electoral Dignity and Estate, his Cousin Duke Maurice was invested in them by Charles the fifth. For that religious, but unfortunate, Prince, (if he may justly have the Title of unfortunate who suffered in so good a Cause, for so good a Conscience) being discomfited and taken prisoner at the Battel of Mulberg before mentioned, was the next day condemned to die; but pardoned at the last, upon the intercession of some powerful Friends, upon condition that he should relign the Electoral Dignity, and all the rest of his Estates, into the power of the Emperour: Which done, the Emperour gave him back again of his own accord the Castle of Gotha and the Town of Weymar, with all the Lands and Territories thereunto adjoining; from which last place his Posterity are now called Dukes of Saxon-Weymar. It was also much insisted on, that he should relinquish his Religion, and reconcile himself to the Church of Rome: but thereto he opposed with such Christian stoutnes, that in the end it was omitted. These matters being thus transacted, the Emperour (with the general content of the Electors) invested Maurice, Cousin-german to the Duke deprived, in the Electoral Dignity, and all the Lands, Honours and Estates (the Seigniouries of Gotha and Weymar excepted only) which formerly had belonged to him: which though it were a great wrong both to the Person and Posterity of the Duke John-Frederick, yet it is observed by some grave Writers to have fallen out not unhappily for the advancement of the Reformation then contended for. 1. In regard of John-Frederick, whose Christian Patience and Magnanimity during the whole time of his Imprisonment added great reputation to the Cause for which he suffered. 2. In respect of Duke Maurice, who was a man of far greater parts to advance the work, and every way as zealous in pursuing of it as the other was. And 3. in relation to the Children of the deprived Duke, men not to be relied on in a matter of such weight and moment; insomuch as it was said of him after his decease, Quòd Filios reliquerit sui dissimillimos. It is now time we should proceed to the Investiture of the new Elector. And because these Transactions of State be not ordinary, I will briefly relate the Ceremonies thereat used, as I have collected them out of Sleidan. There were at Wittenberg Scaffolds erected, on which sate the Emperor and the Princes Electors in their Robes. On the back-side of the State were placed the Trumpeters; right against it standeth Duke Maurice with two bands of Horsemen: The first in a full career run their Horses up to the Pavilion: out of the second issued Henry Duke of Brunswick, Wolfang Prince of Bipont, and Albert Duke of Bavier. These, when they had in like manner coursed their Horses about, alighted, ascended to the Throne, and humbly requested the Emperour, that for the common good he would advance Duke Maurice to the Electorship. He consulted with the Electors, made answer by the Bishop of Mentz, that he was content, so Duke Maurice would in person come and desire it. Then came forth Duke Maurice with the whole Troop: before him were born ten Ensigns bearing the Arms of as many Regions wherein he desired to be invested. When he came before the Throne, he kneeled down on his knees, and humbly desired the Emperour to bestow on him the Electorship of Saxony, and all the Lands of John-Frederick late Elector. His Petition was granted. Then the Bishop of Mentz read unto him the Oath by which the Electors are bound unto the Empire: which Oath when Duke Maurice had taken, the Emperour delivered unto him a Sword, which was a sign of his perfect Investiture. Duke Maurice, now the Elector of Saxony, arose, gave the Emperour thanks, promised his Fidelity, made Obeisance, and took his place amongst the Electors. This Solemnity was on the 24. day of Febr. Anno 1548. Which said, we now proceed unto the Catalogue of

The Dukes of SAXONY.

14. Lotharius, Earl of Quernfort, created Duke of Saxony by Henry the fourth. He was also Emperour of the Romans.

1125 15. Henry Guelph, surnamed the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, the Husband of Gertrude, Daughter of Lotharius, by whom he was created Duke-Elector.

1139 16. Henry II. surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, Son of Henry the Proud by his first Wife Walfildis, the Daughter of Magnus, added to this Estate the Countries of Mecklenburg and Lawenburg, which he had conquered from the Sclaves, becoming by that means so great, that neglecting his Duty to the Emperour Frederick, surnamed Barbarossa, and siding with the Pope against him, he was by him publickly proscribed, his neighbour Princes armed against him, and by their joint Forces outed of all his Estates, every one laying hold of that which lay nearest to him; by means whereof this great Estate being parcelled and divided into many parts, the Title of the Duke Elector of Saxony was given by the said Emperour to 1180 17. Bernard of Anhalt, Son of Albert Marquess of Brandenburg, and Grandchild of Elica, another Daughter of Duke Magnus: to whom, for his Seat and Habitation, the Emperour gave the City of Wittenberg, the Head since that time of this Electorate.

1419 24. Albert III. Son of Rodolph the third, the last Elector of Saxony of the House of Anhalt.
1423 25. Frederick, Lantgrave of Duringen, and Marques of Misnia, (on the failing of the House of Anhalt Anno 1422) created Duke of Saxony by the Emperour Sigismund; the House of Lawenburg pretermitted for want of putting in their Claim: by the advancement of which Prince, the Title of Duke of Saxony returned again to the House of Wittikind, (the first King and last Duke hereof) after it had been alienated into other Families for the space of 200 years.
1428 26. Frederick II. Son of Frederick the first.

1553 32. Augustus, Brother of Maurice.
1586 33. Christian, Son of Augustus.
34. Christian II. Son of Christian the first.
35. John George, Brother of Christian the second who first sided with the Emperour Ferdinand the second against the Elector Palatine, and after with the King of Sweden against the Emperour.

The Revenues of this Duke are thought to be the greatest of any one Prince's of Germany, (the Imperial Family excepted) amounting at the least to 400000 l. per annum; though in multitude of Vassals and greatness of Territory he come short of some of them. And to make up this Sum, (or perhaps a greater) it is conceived that the profit which ariseth to him out of Silver-mines is no less than 130000 l. yearly; the Impost laid on Beer in Leipzick only, a City but of two Parish-Churches, (by which conjecture at the rest) being farmed at 20000 l. per annum. Then hath he the Tenths of all sorts of Increase, as of Corn, Wine, &c. the Salt-houses at Hall and some other places, very fair Lands belonging unto his Domain; and besides this, a standing & perpetual Tax laid upon the Subject towards the maintenance of the War against the Turk; granted at first in times of Danger and hostility, but gathered ever since in the times of Peace (as to that Enemy,) under colour of being ready and prepared against him. According to the quantity of his Intrado so he keeps his State, well served, and better attended than any other of the Electors: there being at one time in the Court of Christian, the Father of the present Duke, three Dukes, three Earls, and five Barons of other Nations, (besides the Nobility of his own) all Pensioners and Servants to him; one of the Princes of Anhalt and one of the Earls of Mansfield, both Homagers unto the Saxon, being two of the number.

The Arms of Saxony are Barre-wise of six pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowered Vert. Which Bend was added to the Coat by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, when he confirmed Bernard of Anhalt in this Dukedom. For Bernard desiring of the Emperour to have some difference added to the Ducal Coat, (being before only Barry, Sable and Or) to distinguish him and his Successors from those of the former House; the Emperour took a Chaplet of Rue, which he had then upon his head, and threw it cross his Buckler or Escotcheon of Arms, which was presently painted on the same.

19. BRUNSWICK, and 20. LUNENBURG.

THE Dukedoms of BRUNSWICK and LUNENBURG, being both originally taken out of this great Dukedom of Saxony, extracted both from the same Root, and many times united in the person of the same one Prince, shall be joined together in the Story, though severed in the Chorography or description of them; bounded on the East with Magdeburg and Mansfield in the Upper Saxony, on the West with Westphalia, on the North with Denmark, on the South with Hassia. The Air in all parts hereof is very cold and comfortless, but sound and healthful: the Soil towards the old Marches of Brandenburg but meanly fertile, towards Duringen and Hassia mountainous and woody, in other parts very plentiful of Corn, and well provided also of such other Commodities as usually do grow in those colder Climates.

But to take the Chorography of them severally, BRUNSWICK is bounded on the East with the Earldom of Mansfield, on the West with Westphalen, on the North with Lunenburg, on the South with Hassia. So called from Brunswick the chief City, and the Head of this Dukedom.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Goslar, upon the River Gose, whence it had the name; of a poor Village made a City by Henry the first, much beautified and enlarged by Henry the third, who founded here two Churches and a stately Palace; now one of the Imperial Cities. 2. Helmstat, in the middle way betwixt Brunswick and Magdeburg; first fortified by Charles, Son of Charles the Great, for a Bridle to the neighbouring Sclaves; and being after given to the Abbots of Werden, was by them sold to William the Duke of Brunswick. 3. Quedlenburg, built also by Henry the first, much increased since by the neighbourhood of a very rich Nunnery, the Abbess whereof had formerly the Priviledges of a Prince of the Empire. 4. Hildesheim, an ancient City, honoured with an Episcopal See by Charles the Great at the first Conversion of the Saxons. 5. Grubenhagen, which gave Title to a younger Branch of the House of Brunswick; a Principality, and a Member of the Empire. 6. Hannover, on the River Lein, well built, very strongly fortified, and not meanly traded. 7. Brunswick, upon the River Onacra, which passeth through it, passed over by many handsom Bridges; the Metropolis of the ancient Saxony, and at this time the chief of this Dukedom, though of it self Imperial, and one of the Hause. The City is of a quadrangular form, seated in the midst of a Plain very fruitful of Corn, in compass about two Dutch, or eight English miles, somewhat larger than Nurenberg, and less than Erfort; containing in that compass not above twelve Churches, whereof two have Steeples covered with Lead, a third with Brass, all the rest with Tile. It is rich, populous, and strongly fortified, on some sides with a double, on others with a treble Wall; within which Walls are five Cities, distinguished by Priviledges, but united by Laws. The whole first built by Bruno, Son to Ludolphus Duke

Duke of Saxony, and Uncle to the Emperour Henry the first, about the year 861; from whence it had the name of Brunſwick, or Brunonis Vicus, by the more elegant Latiniſts Brunopolis. 8. Hamelen, on the Eaſt-ſide of the Weſer or Viſurgis, encompaſſed with a deep Moat, (occaſioned by a ſtream cut out of the River) round about which are divers Fortifications, and planted with Ordnance. Nigh unto this Town is the Mountain called alſo Hamelen, unto which the Py'd Piper (as they call him) led the Children of Halberſtadt, where they all ſunk, and were never more ſeen. But of this Story more hereafter, when we come to Tranſylvania. 9. Wolfenhaiten, or Wolfenbuttel, where the Duke doth keep his Court. For though Brunſwick giveth him his Title, yet will it not yield him any Obedience, but reputeth it ſelf amongſt the Hanſe-Towns; for which cauſe there have been great Wars between the Dukes and the Citizens. 10. Halberſtadt, a Biſhop's See, the late Biſhop (or Adminiſtrator of the Biſhoprick) being Chriſtian Duke of Brunſwick, that noble young Souldier, who had vowed his life and fortune to the ſervice of Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, his Couſin-german; created by King James one of the Knights of the Garter. A Biſhoprick of great Revenue, and a very large Territory; ſince the alteration of Religion, given with the Title of Adminiſtrator to the Sons of Brunſwick; but now, by the Concluſions at Munſter, aſſigned over to the Elector of Brandenburg, with the Title of Prince of Halberſtadt, the Family of Brunſwick being to be recompenſed with an alternate Succeſſion in the Biſhoprick of Oſnabrugge, and ſome other additionals. 11. Hetfield, the Seat ſometimes of the old Palatines of Saxony, but not elſe obſervable. 12. Amelungsbame, another Town of the ſaid Palatines, by one of which, called Sigefridus, it was beautified with a very fair Abby: the principal Towns (in thoſe days) of this Palatinate, which, bordering on that part of the Thuringians which is now called Haſſia, was taken in by Herman, one of the Lantgraves of that Country, on the Proſcription of Duke Henry ſirnamed the Lion; but on the failure of his Line, recovered for the moſt part by the Dukes of Brunſwick, the right Heirs of Henry.

The Dukedom of LUNENBURG hath on the Eaſt the Dioceſe of Magdeburg, on the Weſt the Dioceſe of Bremen and part of Weſtphalia, on the North the Elb, and on the South the Dukedom of Brunſwick. So called from Lunenburg the chief City, once the Seat of the Dukes.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Lunenburg it ſelf, ſituate on the River Elmenaw, an Imperial City, and one of the principal of the Hanſe; ſo called from the Moon here worſhipped in the times of Idolatry. Of a round form it is, and ſeated in a pleaſant Valley, but with Mountains near it: on one of which, called Calberg, is a very ſtrong Caſtle, of right belonging to the Duke, but in the power of the Citizens, who without this Fort could not be maſters of their Liberties. The walls about it are of Earth, high and broad, and the Ditches deep: the Buildings generally fair, (for the moſt part of Brick) the chief whereof is the Common-Council-Houſe; the Streets broad and long, with two ſpacious Market-places, but of no very pleaſing ſmell: the whole about a mile and an half in length, half a mile in breadth, containing ſix Pariſh-Churches. But the thing moſt conſiderable in it is the Fountain of Salt, the greateſt riches of this City) and the Houſe in which the Salt is boiled, containing 52 Rooms, and in each Room 8 Leaden Pans, in which are boiled daily 8 Tuns of Salt, every Tun being ſold for 8 Flemiſh ſhillings, bought by the Hamburgers, Lubeckers, and other Merchants; ſome part of the profits of it belonging to the Duke, ſome to the City, the reſt to the Adventurers who employ their Stocks on it. 2. Cell, the Seat of the Duke of Lunenburg. 3. Getbern, of no great bigneſs or eſtimation, but for a ſtrong Caſtle of the Dukes. 4. Oldendorp, ſituate betwixt the Venaw and the River Eſca, memorable for the great Battel fought near unto it, Anno 1633, betwixt the Imperialiſts and the Swedes; the honour and benefit whereof fell unto the Swedes, who killed upon the place 5000 of the Enemy, beſides ſuch as were found dead in the fields and high-ways, all covered over with dead bodies, took 1500 of them priſoners, and got into their hands 13 pieces of Ordnance, good ſtore of Ammunition, and three Mules laden with Silver for the pay of the Army: the reputation of this Victory drawing in Hamelen and other places of importance which ſtood out before. 5. Verden, an Epiſcopal See, but made a Lay-fee, as moſt other Biſhopricks amongſt the Lutherans; the Profits thereof being received commonly by a Son of Denmark with the Title of Adminiſtrator, and laſtly, by the Treaty of Munſter appropriated for ever to the Crown of Sweden, the Kings whereof to be entituled Dukes of Verden. 6. Rodenburg, the chief Seat of the Biſhops of Verden.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe Dukedoms were the Dugnblini of Tacitus, with ſome parts of the Chauci and Cheruſci: theſe laſt of moſt fame for the Blow they gave to Quintilius Varus, Lieutenant in Germany after Druſus for Auguſtus Ceſar, who, behaving himſelf with great Inſolency towards the Natives, was ſet upon by theſe Cheruſci and their Confederates, under the Conduct of Arminius, a great Prince amongſt them; himſelf ſlain, and his whole Army, conſiſting of three Legions, miſerably cut off and deſpightfully uſed: which Loſs, and the Shame thereof, ſo diſtracted the Emperour, (not formerly accuſtomed to the like Misfortunes) that he was many times obſerved to tear his Beard, knock his Head againſt the Poſts and cry out in the bitterneſs of his Paſſion, Redde mihi Legiones, Quintili Vare. Having long time after this maintained their Liberty, (for the Romans kept themſelves from that time forwards on the French ſide of the Rhene) they were at laſt ſubdued by the Saxons, continuing part of that great Dukedom till the time of the 3 Otho's, Emperours of the Romans and Dukes of Saxony; who, looking on the Empire as a ſtate of Inheritance, diminiſhed both the Grandeur and Revenue of their ancient Patrimony, partly by the Donation or Endowment of many Biſhopricks, and partly by the erection of many petie Seigniouries to be holden under them as chief Lords of all. Amongſt which that of Lunenburg was none of the leaſt, continuing as a State diſtinct, till ſuch time as Bernard Lord of Lunenburg was by the Emperour Otho the third made Duke of Saxony, and created the firſt Duke-Elector, whereby again it was united to the reſt of that Dukedom, the greateſt part whereof he held in his actual poſſeſſion, together with a Superiority or Juriſdiction over all the reſidue, (the great Biſhopricks excepted only) which had been parcelled out, as before is ſaid: and it continued thus united till the Proſcription of Henry ſirnamed the Lion, ſpoken of before; whoſe Reconciliation being made by means of Henry the ſecond of England, whoſe Daughter Maud he had formerly married, the Emperour Barbaroſſa reſtored to him again the Cities of Brunſwick and Lunenburg, with their ſeveral Territories, of which his two Sons Henry and William were firſt created Earls, then Dukes, the one of Brunſwick, and the other of Lunenburg, by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond. Which Honours and Eſtates do ſtill remain unto their Poſterities. Before I come to the Succeſſions of theſe Princes, I ſhall crave leave to ſpeak of the Original of the Guelphian Family, Dukes at the ſame time of Bavaria and Saxony; of which they are at this time the ſole remainders. A Family derived from one Guelphus, (whence it had the name) the Son of Isenberdus, Earl of Altorff in Schwaben; whose Wife, called Jermintrudis, having accused a poor woman of Adultery, and caused her to be grievously punished for having 12 Children at a Birth, was afterwards delivered of the like number, and all of them Sons. Her Husband being absent at the time of her Delivery, she commanded the Nurse to kill 11 of them; fearing, it seems, the like shame and punishment as by her instigation was inflicted on the other woman. The Nurse going to perform this ungodly command was met by the old Earl then returning homewards; who asked her what she had in her Apron. She made answer, Whelps. He desired to see them: she denied him. Angry at this refusal, he opened her Apron, and there found eleven of his own Sons, pretty sweet Babes, and of most promising Countenances. Examining the matter, he found out the truth, and injoyning the old Trot to be secret in it, he put the Children out to Nurse. Six years expired, the Earl invited to a Feast most of his own and his Ladies Kindred, and attiring the young Boys all alike, presented them unto their Mother; who suspecting, by the number of them, what the matter was, confessed her offence, is pardoned by the good old Earl, and carefully educates her children: whom the Father commanded to be called by the name of Guelps, alluding to the Whelps or Puppies which the Nurse told him she had in her Apron. From the eldest of these Guelphs or Guelps succeeded that Henry-Guelph, Son of Robert Earl of Altorff, whom Conrade the second made Duke of Bavaria; many of whose posterity enjoyed that Dukedom: encreased at last by the addition of the Dukedom of Saxony, in the person of Duke Henry sirnamed the Proud, Father of Henry called the Lion, and Grandfather of Henry and William the first Dukes of Brunswick and Lunenburg, whose Succession followeth in this Order.

But those of Lunenburg have added three Coats more unto it: the whole bearing being quarterly, 1. Gules, two Lions Or, Armed Azure; 2. Azure, Semé of Hearts Gules, a Lion of the first, Armed and Crowned Or; 3. Azure, a Lion Argent, Crowned Gules; and 4 Gules, within a Border Componie Or and Azure, a Lion of the second, Armed of the third.

20. HASSIA.

HASSIA is bounded on the North with Brunswick, on the South with Veteravia or the State of Weteraw, on the East with Thuringia, and on the West with Westphalia. So called from the Hessi, who, having vanquished the Chatti, the old Inhabitants of this Country, possessed themselves of it.

The Christian Faith was first preached here by Boniface, or Winefride, an English-Saxon, (afterwards Archbishop of Mentz) Anno 730, or thereabouts. Of whom I find this memorable Apophthegm, That in old times there were golden Prelates and wooden Chalices, but in his time wooden Prelates and golden Chalices. Not much unlike to which I have read another, but of later date, viz. That once the Christians had blind Churches, and lightsom hearts; but now they have lightsom Churches, and blind hearts.

The Country is very fruitful of Corn, and affordeth good Pasturage for the feeding of Cattel, of which they have great Droves and Herds in many places; with great abundance of Stags and other Deer for the pleasures of Hunting, harboured in the Woods hereof, with which in many parts of it it is very much shaded. It breedeth also on the Downs good store of Sheep, enriched with the finest Fleece of any in Germany; the Staple-Commodity of this Country: and in the mountainous parts hereof there want not rich Mines of Brass, Lead, and other Metals, which yield great profit to the people.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Alendorff, on the Weser, (or Visurgis) of much esteem for the Springs or Fountains of Salt which are thereabouts. 2. Fritzlar, upon upon the Eder, well walled, and ſituate in a fruitful and pleaſant Soil, belonging to the Archbiſhop and Elector of Mentz; but, in regard of the convenient Situation of it, much aimed at, many times attempted, and ſometimes forcibly poſſeſſed, both by the Lantgraves of Haſſia and Dukes of Saxony. 3. Fulda, on a River of that name, remarkable for the Monaſtery there founded by Boniface Archbiſhop of Mentz by the name of Saint Saviours, the Abbat of which is a Prince of the Empire, Chancellour of the Empreſs, and Lord of a goodly Territory in this Country, called from hence Stift Fuld. 4. Frankenberg, on the Eder alſo, ſo called from the French, who incamped there in their Wars againſt the Saxons; firſt founded by Theodorick the French King Anno 520, but much enlarged by Charles the Great about the year 804. 5. Eſchewege, on the brow of an Hill, near the River Wert; of great trading for Woad, of which the Fields adjoyning yield a rich increaſe. Being deſtroyed by the Hungarians, it was re-edified and enlarged by the Emperour Henry the 2. and having ſuffered much miſery in the long War between Adolph Archbiſhop of Mentz and the Lantgraves of Haſſia, it fell at laſt into the poſſeſſion of the Lantgrave, Anno 1387. 6. Melſingen, on the River Fuld. 7. Darmſtadt, lately, if not at the preſent, the Seat and Inheritance of Count Ludowick, of the younger Houſe of the Lantgraves, taken priſoner by Count Mansfield Anno 1622, and his whole Country expoſed unto ſpoil and rapine, becauſe (beſides many other ill offices) he was the chief perſuader of the Princes of the Union to diſband their Forces, provided for defence of themſelves and the Palatinate, and to reconcile themſelves to the Emperour. 8. Marpurg, the Seat of the ſecond Houſe of the Lantgraves, deſcending from that Philip who was Lantgrave in the time of Charles the fifth, whom he ſo valiantly withſtood; pleaſantly ſeated on the Lon, amongſt Viny Downs and ſhady Mountains; honoured with an Univerſity founded here by Lewis Biſhop of Munſter, Anno 1426, and beautified with a magnificent Caſtle (the ordinary dwelling of thoſe Princes) ſituate on an high Hill ſomewhat out of the Town, wich gives it a very gallant Proſpect over the Town and Country. 9. Geiſen, a Town belonging to the Lantgraves of Caſſels, and a ſmall Univerſity alſo. 10. Dietz, upon the River Lon, belonging alſo to the Houſe of Caſſels. 11. Caſſels, the chief Town and ordinary Reſidence of the Lantgraves of the elder Houſe, who are hence ſometimes called the Lantgraves of Caſſels: commodiouſly ſeated in a pleaſant and fruitful Soil, and well fortified with ſtrong earthen Walls and deep Ditches; but the Houſes in it of no great beauty, being compoſed for the moſt part of Wood, Thatch and Clay.

Within the limits of this Province is the County of WALDECK, not ſubject to the Lantgraves of Haſſia, though included within the Bounds of it before laid down, taking up the Weſtern parts thereof, where it meets with Weſtphalia: in figure very near a ſquare, each ſide of which is of the length of ſix ordinary Dutch, or twenty four Engliſh miles. The Soil is much of the ſame nature with the reſt of Haſſia, ſave that it hath ſome veins of Quick-ſilver and inexhauſtible Mines of Coal, which the other wanteth; theſe laſt in greateſt pleanty about Wildung and the ſtrong Caſtle of Eiſenberg, two of the beſt Towns and places of it. Others of chief note are, 3. Waldeck it ſelf, on the River Eder, the firſt Seat of the Earls hereof, who have here an ancient Caſtle, from whence the whole Country takes its name. 4. Mengerickhuſe, in a fair Caſtle wherof live the preſent Earls. 5. Witterberg, in a pleaſant and fruitful Soil, betwixt the Rivers Twitſche and Abra. 6. Corbach, famous in the times of Albertus Magnus for its Golden Mines, yielding great profit to theſe Earls. The Pedigree of which Earls is fetched from one Wittikind Earl of Snalenberg, whom Charles the Great made Advocate or Patron of the Church of Paderborn in Weſtphalia, being an Office in thoſe times of great Juriſdiction. By Wittikind the ſecond, one of his Succeſſors, this Office was ſurrendred into the Hands of the Chapter, for the ſum of 300 marks in Silver: and to cut off all farther Claims, Henry, the Nephew of this Wittikind by his Son Otho, was by the Chapter gratified with the Town of Waldeck, of which he was the firſt Earl; whoſe Nephew Henry, ſirnamed Ferreus, ſubdued Corbach, Anno 1366, and added it to his Eſtate. By a third Henry, Grandchild of this Ferreus, or Man of Iron, this Earldom, formerly held in Fee of the Church of Paderborn, was firſt under the Patronage and Protection of the Lantgraves of Haſſia, Anno 1428, as it continueth to this day. The Earls hereof content with their own Eſtates, and more addicted to the Book than unto the Sword, have acted little in the Wars to improve their Fortunes.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole, both Waldeck and the reſt of Haſſia, and alſo of the County of Naſſau in Veteravia near adjoining, were the Catti, or Chatti, mentioned by the Ancients. It was firſt conquered (after the withdrawing of the Roman Forces) by the Heſſi, and both ſubdued not long after by the Thuringians: ſubject unto the Lantgraves of Duringen, till the death of Henry, the laſt of the Male-iſſue of Lewis of Orleans. In the diviſion of whoſe Eſtate, the Weſtern moiety of Duringen fell to the ſhare of Henry Duke of Brabant, one of the Competitors, who, leaving the Title of Lantgrave of Duringen to the Marqueſs of Miſnia, took to himſelf the Title of the Lantgrave of Heſſen, in memory of the Heſſi ſpoken of before. Of his Succeſſors the moſt puiſſant was that Philip who in the time of Charles the fifth much ſwayed the Affairs of Germany. Anno 1520 he diſcomfitted King Ferdinand, and reſtored Ulrick to the Dukedom of Wirtenberg. Anno 1530 he united all the Proteſtant Princes and Cities of Germany in a common League at Smalcald, for the defence of the Proteſtant Religion. An. 1545 he undertook the Cauſe of Goſlaria againſt the Duke of Brunſwick, whom in a ſet Battel he took priſoner, together with his Son, and poſſeſſed his Country. Anno 1548 he united all the Princes and Cities of Germany in an offenſive and defenſive League againſt Charles the fifth. But that War ſucceeded not proſperouſly. For the Duke of Saxony, his perpetual Confederate, being taken Priſoner, he ſubmitted himſelf to the Emperour at Kala, or Hale, in Duringen; his Sons-in-Law, Duke Maurice, the Marqueſs of Brandenburg, and Wolfang Prince of Deuxponts, having given their Bonds for his return. The Conditions of his Pardon were, firſt, That he ſhould diſmantle all his Towns, except Caſſels. 2. That he ſhould yield up unto the Emperour all his Munition. 3. That he ſhould pay unto the Emperour 150000 Crowns. The ſame night he was by the Duke of Alva invited to Supper, his Sons-in-law of Saxony and Brandenburg accompanying him. After Supper he was, contrary to the Laws of Hoſpitality and the Emperour's exact Promiſe, detained Priſoner. The fallacy ſtood thus: In the Emperour's Compact with the three Princes the words were, that the Lantgrave ſhould be kept, Nicht in einig gefengknes, that is, Not in any priſon; which the Emperour's Secretary, by a ſmall daſh of his Pen, turned into Nicht in ewig gefengknes, that is, Not in everlaſting priſon. Well, in Priſon he ſtaid five years; which being expired, he was again ſet at large by Duke Maurice, the Overthrower and Reſtorer of the German Liberty. The reſidue of theſe Lantgraves in their ſeveral times occur in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Lantgraves of HASSIA.

1263 1. Henry of Brabant, Son of Henry Duke of Brabant, and of Sophia his Wife, Daughter of Lewis the ſixth, Lantgrave of Thuringia, after a nine years War betwixt him and the Marqueſs of Miſnia, divided the Eſtate, and took unto himſelf the Title of Lantgrave of Heſſen.
1308 2. Otho and John, Sons of Henry.
1323 3. Henry II. and Lewis, Sons of Otho.
1376 4. Herman, the Son of Lewis.
1414 5. Lewis II. Son of Herman, ſurnamed the Mild.
1458 6. Lewis III. Son of Lewis the Mild.
7. William, the eldeſt Son of Lewis the third, diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by
8. William II. his youngeſt Brother.
1509 9. Philip, the famous Lantgrave ſpoken of before, Son of William the ſecond.
1567 10. William III. eldeſt Son of Philip, ſucceeded in one moiety of the Eſtate, and reſided at Caſſels, the other moiety being divided betwixt his Brethren, Ludowick of Marpurg, and George of Darmſtadt, Father of Ludowick of Darmſtadt before mentioned.
1590 11. Maurice, eldeſt Son of William the third.
12. William IV. Son of Maurice, now living, 1648.

The Arms of theſe Lantgraves are Azure, a Lion Barry of eight pieces, Argent and Gules, crowned Or. Which, being properly and originally the Arms of the ancient Dukes of Franconia, were given by Conradus Salicus, Duke of Fraconia and Emperour, to Lewis of Orleans, at ſuch time as he inveſted him in the Lantgravedom of Thuringia: on the expiration of whoſe Line they were challenged and born by the Lantgraves of Heſſia, as the direct Heirs of Lewis the 6. and his Brother Henry, the laſt male Princes of that Houſe.

WESTPHALIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Heſſia, Brunſwick, and part of Lunenburg; on the Weſt with the Biſhoprick of Colen, Cleve, Over-Iſſel, Weſt and Eaſt-Frieſland, and the German Ocean; on the North with the Elb, and the Dukedom of Holſtein; and on the South with Weteravia, and ſome part of Heſſia.

It was thus called of the Waſtphali, a Tribe or Diviſion of the Saxons, diſtinguiſhed heretofore into the Tranſalbinos, inhabiting beyond the Elb or Albis, in the County of Holſtein, now a part of Denmark, the Oſtphali, betwixt the Elb, the Ocean, with the River of Sala and the Weſer, taking up the Biſhopricks of Breme, Verden, Hildeſheim, Halberſtadt, and Meydeburg, with the Dukedoms of Lunenburg and Brunſwick; the Angrivarians, taking up the North-weſt part of the modern Weſtphalen, betwixt the Biſhoprick of Breme and the Earldom of Oldenburg; and finally, the Weſtphali, or weſtern Saxons, inhabiting the reſt of the modern Weſtphalen, with the Earldoms of Marck, Berg, Zutphen, the Signiory of Over-Iſſel, and ſome parts of Gelderland and Holland. But the Saxons being ſubjugated by the power of the French, and ſeveral new Eſtates erected out of that old Stock; the remnant of the Weſtphali and Angrivarians the Biſhoprick of Breme being added unto the account,) were comprehended and united in the name of WESTPHALEN.

The Soil, according to the ſeveral parts of it, is of different natures: the parts adjoyning to the Weſer being deſart and barren; thoſe towards the Earldoms of Marck and Bergen mountainous and full of Woods; the Biſhoprick of Bremen, except towards the Elb, full of dry Sands, Heaths and unfruitful Thickets, like the wilde parts of Windſor Foreſt betwixt Staines and Fernham. In other parts it is exceeding plentiful of Corn, and of excellent Paſſurage; ſtored with great plenty of wild Fruits, and (by reaſon of the many Woods) abundance of Acorns; with infinite Herds of Swine (which they breed up with thoſe natural helps) of ſo good a reliſh, that a Gammon of Weſtphalie Bacon is reckoned for a principal Diſh at a great man's Table.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chauci majores about Bremen; the Chamavi, Angrivarii and Bructeri, inhabiting about Munſter, Oſnabrug, and ſo towards the Land of Colen; and part of the Cheruſci (before ſpoken of) taking up thoſe parts which lie neareſt unto Brunſwick and Lunenburg. All of them were vanquiſhed by Druſus the Son-in-law of Auguſtus, but ſoon reſtored to their former Liberty by the great Overthrow given by the Cheruſci and their Aſſociates to Quintilius Varus. Afterwards, uniting into one name with the French, they expulſed the Romans out of Gaul, leaving their forſaken and ill-inhabited Seats to be taken by the Saxons, with whom the remainders of them did incorporate themſelves both in Name and Nation. Of that great Body it continued a conſiderable Member, (both when a Kingdom and a Dukedom,) till the Proſcription & Deprivation of Duke Henry the Lion: at what time the parts beyond the Weſer were uſurped by Bernard Biſhop of Paderborn; thoſe betwixt the Weſer and the Rhene, by Philip Archbiſhop of Colen, whoſe Succeſſors ſtill hold the Title of Dukes of Weſtphalen: the Biſhopricks of Breme, Munſter, Paderborn and Minden, having been formerly endowed with goodly Territories, had ſome Accruments alſo out of this Eſtate, every one catching hold of that which lay neareſt to him. But not to make too many Subdiviſions of it, we will divide it only into theſe two parts, viz. 1. Weſtphalen ſpecially ſo called, and 2. the Biſhoprick of Bremen.

1. In WESTPHALEN ſpecially ſo called, which is that part hereof which lieth next to Cleve, the places of moſt obſervation are, 1. Geſeke, a Town of good repute; 2. Brala, a Village of great Beauty; 3. Arnsberg, and 4. Fredeborch, honoured with the Title of Prefectures. 5. Wadenborch: 6. Homberg, lording it over fair and ſpacious Territories. All which, with two Lordſhips and eight Prefectures more, diſperſed from the Dukedom of Engern and County of Surland, belong unto the Biſhop of Colen, the titulary Duke of Weſtphalen, and really of Angrivaria, (Engern) as he ſtyles himſelf: the Title and poſſeſſion of Duke of Engern being acquired unto this See by Bruno Archbiſhop hereof, Son of Henry the firſt, Emperour and King of Germany, ſirnamed the Fowler, with the conſent of Otho the firſt, his elder Brother. 7. Mountabour, (perhaps Mont-Tabor) ſeated in that part hereof which is called Weſterwald; a Town of conſequence, belonging to the Elector of Triers. 8. Rhenen, 9. Schamlat, and 10. Beckem; reaſonable good Towns, all of the Biſhoprick of Munſter. 11. Munſter it ſelf, famous for the Treaty, and Concluſions made upon that Treaty, for the Peace of Germany; ſeated upon the River Ems, and ſo called from a Monaſtery here founded by Charles the Great, which gave beginning to the Town; ſuppoſed to be that Mediolanum which Ptolomy placeth in this Tract. A beautiful and well-fortified City, and the See of a Biſhop, who is alſo the Temporal Lord of it: famous for the woful Tragedies here acted by a lawleſs crue of Anabaptists, who chose themselves a King (that famous Tailor John of Leyden) whom they called King of Sion, as they named the City New Jerusalem; proclaimed a Community both of Goods and Women, cut off the heads of all that opposed their doings; and, after many fanatick and desperate actions, were by the care and industry of the Bishop and his Confederates brought to condign punishment. The Story is to be seen at large in Sleiden, Mr. Hooker's Preface, and some modern Pamphlets; wherein, as in a Mirrour, we may plainly see the face of the present Times. 12. Osnabrug, first built, as some say, by Julius Cæsar, as others, by the Earls of Engern; but neither so ancient as the one, nor of so late a standing as the others make it. Here is an Episcopal See, founded by Charles the Great, who gave it all the Priviledges of an University; liberally endowed at the first erection of the same, and since so well improved both in Power and Patrimony, that an alternate Succession in it by the Dukes of Brunswick hath been concluded on in the Treaty of Munster, as a fit Compensation for the Bishoprick of Halberstadt, (otherwise disposed of by that Treaty) of late enjoyed wholly by that Family. 13. Quakenburg, on the River Hase. 14. Warendorp, and 15. Wildshusen; Towns of that Bishoprick. 16. Paderborn, an Episcopal See also, founded by Charles the Great at the first Conversion of the Saxons; more ancient than strong, yet more strong than beautiful. 17. Ringelenstein, and 18. Ossendorf; belonging to the Bishop of Paderborn. 19. Minden, upon the Weser, another of the Episcopal Sees founded by Charles the Great, and by him liberally endowed with a goodly Patrimony: converted to Layuses since the Reformation, under colour of Administration of the Goods of the Bishoprick, and now, by the Conclusions at Munster, setled for ever on the Electors of Brandenburg, with the Title of Prince of Minden. 20. Rintelen, a strong Town, conveniently seated on the Weser, not far from Minden, to the Bishop whereof it doth belong.

Hitherto one would think that Westphalen had formerly been a part of S. Peter's Patrimony, belonging wholly to the Clergy: but there are some Free Cities and Secular Princes which have shares therein. As 1. Warborg, a neat Town, but seated on an uneven piece of ground, near the River Dimula; a Town which tradeth much in good Ale, brewed here, and sold in all parts of the Country: heretofore a County of it self under the Earls hereof, now governed in the nature of a Free Estate, and reckoned an Imperial City. 2. Brakel, accounted of as Imperial also. 3. Hervorden, a Town of good strength and note, governed by its own Laws and Magistrates, under the Protection of Colen. 4. Lemgow, belonging heretofore to the Earls of Lippe; but by them so well priviledged and enfranchised, that now it governeth it self as a Free Estate. Here is also 5. the Town and County of Ravensperg, belonging anciently to the Dukes of Cleve, and now in the Right of that House to the Elector of Brandenburg: as also 6. the Town and County of Lippe, lying on the West side of the Weser; the Pedigree of the Earls whereof some fetch from that Sp. Manlius who defended the Roman Capitol against the Gauls, (they might as well derive it from the Geese which preserved that Capitol;) others with greater modesty look no higher for it than to the times of Charles the Great, one of the noble Families of the ancient Saxons. 7. Here also stands the Town and Castle of Aremberg, commanding over a large and goodly Patrimony thereunto adjoyning; which, being much increased by the accession of Sedan in the neighbouring Belgium, was by the Heir-general of this House conveyed in Marriage to Engelbert, the 9. Earl of Marck, whose second Son, called Eberhard, (but the only one he had by this Venter) succeeded in his Mother's Estates and Honour's, which were kept undivided, till Eberhard, the 6. Lord thereof of the House of Marck, contenting himself with the Titles and Estates of Aremberg, left Sedan and the pieces which belonged unto it to his younger brother Robert. The great Grandchild of this Eberhard, called also Robert, created the first Earl of Aremberg, left his Estates and Titles to his Sister Margaret, married to John Lord of Brabanson, a person of great note and power in the Belgick Provinces, and faithful to the last in the Cause and Quarrel of King Philip the 2. in which finally he lost his life, Anno 1568, leaving both his Estates and Title unto Charles his Son, frequently mentioned by the name of Charles Earl of Aremberg in the Stories of the Belgick Wars, in which he was no less considerable for his eminent Valour, than for his singular Fidelity to his Lord and Master. Some other Lords and Earls here are, but these most considerable: all of them Homagers of the Empire, but their Acknowledgments hereof little more than titular; though since in danger of performing more real Services; the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. after the Surprize of Holstein and some part of Denmark, Anno 1627, gaining so far upon this Country, that, had not the King of Sweden come in so seasonably, he had made himself absolute Master of it, and, by the opportunity of the situation of it on the back of the Netherlands, forced the United States to some great Extremities. As for the Title of Duke of Westphalen and Engern, it hath been long used (as before was said) by the Bishops of Colen; as also (but with better Right as to that of Westphalen) by the House of Lawenburg, descended from the ancient Electoral Family, writing themselves in that regard Dukes of Saxony, Westphalen, and Angrivaria or Engern.

2. The Bishoprick of BREME lieth on the other side of the Weser, extending as far as to the Elb and the German Ocean. So called of 1. Breme, the principal City, seated on the Weser, there broad and navigable; the City by that means well traded, populous, and rich, beautified with fair and even Streets, and very strongly fortified against all Invasions both by Art and Nature; the Town being so seated amongst Fens, occasioned by the Over-flowings of the River, that it may be easily drowned on all sides, to keep off an Enemy; adorned also with a spacious Market-place, a fair Council-house, and a large Cathedral, the See of the Archbishop, who is the Temporal Lord of the Town and Territory. Other Towns of special note are 2. Osenbridge, not far from Breme, from whence great quantity of Linen is brought yearly to England and other places. 3. Arusten, on the Weser also. 4. Otterendorp, on the River Bolla, not far from the fall thereof into the Ocean. 5. Boxtebude, on the Elb not far from Hamburg, but on the hither side of the water. 6. Stode, Stade, or Stadium, seated on the River Zwinghe, near the fall thereof into the Elb; accounted the ancientest Town in all Saxony, and one of the first which was enrolled amongst the Hanse, and by special Priviledge had the pre-emption of all the Rhenish Wine that passed by them, and the right also of Coining money. But being over-topped by the Power and Trade of Hamburg, (5 Dutch miles from it) it grew at length so poor and in such decay, that their yearly Revenues came but to 90 l. per annum, so that they were fain to sell their Priviledges to the Town of Hamburg, and put themselves under the Protection of the Bishops of Breme. It revived again upon the coming thither of the English Merchants, who, finding some hard measure from the Hamburgers, fixed their Staple here: by means whereof the Citizens in short time grew exceeding wealthy, the Buildings fair and beautiful, the Town ſtrongly fortified. It is ſituate in a place ſo eaſily overwhelmed with water, that the people, in oſtentation of their Strength and Security, uſed to have Ordnance of Stone planted over their Gates. But the late German Wars have made them ſenſible of their folly; when, notwithſtanding their new Works, and an Engliſh Garriſon under Sir Charles Morgan, they were compelled to ſubmit themſelves to the Earl of Tilly Anno 1627, recovered after by the Swedes, in the courſe of their Victories.

As for the Biſhoprick of Bremen, it was firſt founded by Charl s the Great, in the perſon of Willibrode an Engliſh Saxon, one of the firſt Preachers of the Goſpel in theſe parts of this Country. The Town, before that time a poor Village only, being made an Archiepiſcopal See, and the Metropolitan of all the Churches of the North, quickly grew up into eſteem, as the Biſhop did in Power and Patrimony, till they became Lords of this Tract. It was governed ſince the Reformation of Religion by Lay-Biſhops, or Adminiſtrators of the Rents of the Biſhoprick, which under that Title they inverted to their proper uſe. And now of late, by the Concluſions made at Munſter, is ſetled as an Inheritance on the Crown of Sweden, to be enjoyed; together with the Biſhoprick of Verden, by the Kings thereof, with the Title of Dukes of Breme and Verden: the ancient Liberties of thoſe Cities, formerly granted by their Biſhops, being ſtill preſerved.

22. EAST-FRIESLAND.

EAST-FRIESLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Weſer, by it parted from Weſtphalen; on the Weſt with the River Ems, which parteth it from Groeningen and the reſt of Weſt-Frieſland; on the North with the German Ocean; and on the South with the Earldom of Marck, and part of Cleveland. So called from the Friſii, who, caſting out the old Inhabitants, poſſeſſed themſelves of it, and called it by their own name, Frieſland: divided by the Ems, or Amiſus, into the Weſtern, ſpoken of amongſt the Netherlands, and the Eaſtern or Eaſt-Frieſland, in which now we are.

The nature of the Soil we ſhall ſee anon, when we come to the Subdiviſions of it. The chief Rivers (beſides thoſe of 1. Ems, and 2. Weſer, ſpoken of elſewhere) are 3. Jada, which falleth into a great Bay or Arm of the Ocean, called from hence De Jade. 4. Dollaert, on which ſtandeth the City of Emden. 5. Delm, and 6. Honta, neighboured by Delmenhorſt and Oldenburg, Towns of this Country. The whole is divided into 1. The County of Emden, or Eaſt-Frieſland properly ſo called; and 2. The Earldom of Oldenburg.

1. EASTFRIESLAND ſpecially ſo called hath on the Weſt the River Ems, on the North the Ocean, on the Eaſt and South the Earldom of Oldenburg: called alſo the County of EMDEN, from the fair Town of Emden, the chief City of it. The Soil hereof is very fruitful both in Corn and Paſturage, ſending great ſtore of Oxen, Horſes, Wool, Swine, Butter, Cheeſe, and all ſorts of Grain, into other Countries; all of them excellent in their kind, not eaſily to be bettered (if equalled) in any place whatſoever. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Emden, ſo called from the Ems, on which it is ſituate; Dollaert a ſmall River falling here into it: a noted and well-traded Town, beautified with a Haven ſo deep and large, that the greateſt Ships with full Sail are admitted into it. The people are rich, affirmed to have 60 ſhips of 100 tuns apiece, and 600 leſſer Barks, of their own; beſides 700 Buſſes and Fiſher-boats, maintained for the moſt part by their Herring-fiſhing on the Coaſts of England. The Buildings are generally fair, both private and publick, eſpecially the Church, the Town-Hall, and Earl's Palace. This laſt is a ſtrong and ſtately Caſtle, ſituate at the mouth of the Haven, and on all ſides encompaſſed by the Sea, and yet not ſtrong enough to preſerve the Townſmen in their due Obedience: who in the year 1595, taking advantage of the Abſence of their Earl, kept him out of their Town, becauſe he ſeemed not to approve the Calvinian humour; and have ſince governed in the nature of a Commonwealth, confederate with the States of the United Provinces, for their better Eſtabliſhment and ſupport. So eaſily is Religion made a mask to diſguiſe Rebellion. 2. Aurick, by ſome called Anſeling, ſeated in the Inlands, rich and well walled, of great reſort by reaſon of the pleaſure of Hunting, afforded very liberally in the Foreſts and Woods adjoyning, drawing hither the Nobility and Gentry in great abundance. 3. Eſen, on the Sea-ſhore, which gives the Title of an Earl to the Lord thereof; as doth alſo, 4. Jever, ſituate on the Weſt of the River Jada; but both Earls ſubject to the Earl of Eaſt-Frieſland. 5. Vredeburg, (that is to ſay, the Free Village) ſo called from ſome Immunities granted by the Earls; poſſeſſed a while by thoſe of Brunſwick, who fenced and garriſoned it for themſelves, but in the end recovered by Ezard the 2. Earl. 6. Broeck, the Seat and proper Government of the Anceſtors of theſe Earls; from whence the parts adjoyning are called Broeckmerland. 7. Norden, another Prefecture or Captainſhip of the ſaid Anceſtors. 8. Dunort, a ſtrong Caſtle and Retiring-place of the Earls. 9. Linghen, upon the Ems, a ſtrong Town well fortified, and as well garriſoned; belonging to the King of Spain, as Vicar to the Empire over all Frieſland, even to Ditmarſh and the Confines of Denmark. A Dignity procured by Maximilian, Grandfather to Charles the 5. of the Emperour Frederick the 3. in right whereof the King of Spain, as Heir of the Houſe of Burgundy, hath ſome pre-eminence over Emden, of little uſe to him ſince the falling off of the Belgick Provinces. More Towns of note I find not in it, but of Caſtles, ſtately Dwelling-houſes, and well-built Villages, an incredible number; ſtanding ſo thick, that in many places they join together: ſome of them being withal ſo large, ſo well peopled, and of Streets ſo ſpacious, that they may compare with many Cities in Germany. Of all which the moſt City-like is named Leere.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Chauci minores, deſcribed by Pliny, to be ſo barbarous a people, and ſo deſtitute of all neceſſary Proviſion for the life of man, that they had no drink but Rain water, preſerved in great Troughs before the doors of their Cottages. Theſe were outed or ſubdued by the Friſons, a neighbouring People poſſeſſing North Holland, the Diſtrict of Utrecht, with the Countries of Groening and Weſt-Frieſland, who, having once paſſed over the Ems, extended their Dominions as far as Denmark, governed by Kings, but intermingled with and over-powred by the Saxons, till the time of Charles the Great, by whom the laſt King Roboald overcome in fight was perſwaded to receive the Sacrament of Holy Baptiſm: but being told that his Friends and Kinſfolks were in Hell, becauſe no Chriſtians, Neither will I (ſaith he) be of that Profeſſion, for I love to be amongſt my Kindred. After this, Frieſland was a Member of the French Kingdom, till the erecting of the Earldom of Holland by Charles the Bald, Anno 893, at which time all Frieſland on the Weſt ſide of the Ems was conferred upon him; poſſeſſed, but not without much War and Bloudſhed, by his Succeſſors; the Friſons ever and anon rebelling againſt them, and killing divers of them in the open field. Thoſe parts of it on the other ſide of the Ems remained unto the German Empire: governed by Depuſies, puties, Lieutenants, and Provincial Earls, accomptable to the Emperors for the Administration, till the year 1453, in which Ulrick, Governour hereof for the Emperor Frederick, having got the Town of Embden out of the hands of the Hamburgers, was made Earl of East-Friesland, transmitting the Estate and Title unto his Posterity.

Earls of EAST-FRIESLAND.

1453 1. Ulricus, Son of Enno, the Son of Ezardus, Captains or Governours for the Empire in Broeck and Norden, made the first Earl of East-Friesland by the Emperour Frederick.

1466 2. Ezard, the Son of Ulrick, who got Vredeburg from the Citizens of Brunswick.

1528 3. Enno, the Son of Ezard, who regained Greetzyl, formerly usurped by the Dukes of Geldres.

1540 4. Ezard II. Son of Enno, who married Katharine, Daughter to Gustavus the first of Swedn.

5. Enno II. Son of Ezard the 2. and the Lady Katherine.

1586 6. Rodolphus-Christianus, Son of Enno the 2. who, being well affected to the Lutheran Forms, (first introduced in the time of Enno the first) was by a Calvinian party grown up in Emden, dispossessed of that City, Anno 1595.

1608 7. Enno-Ludovicus, Son of Rodolphus-Christianus, succeeded in this Earldom on the death of his Father, and is still living, for ought I can hear unto the contrary.

The Arms of the Earls of East-Friesland are Argent, four Bendlets Azure, charged with ten Heurts Or, 4, 3, 2, 1.

2. The Earldom of OLDENBURG containeth that part of this Country which lieth on the West-side of the Weser, betwixt the Bishoprick of Munster and East-Friesland specially so called, and so extending Northwards to the German Ocean. So called from Oldenburg, the chief City of it, and the Head of this Earldom.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, but in Pastures specially, which breed them infinite Herds of Cattel, and furnish not this Country only, but some of their German Neighbours, and many of the more Northern Nations, with Horses, Beeves, Sheep, Swine, Butter, Cheese. Here is also good store of Pulse, Barley and Oats; plenty of Fruits, and Trees of all sorts; large Woods, and those well stored with Venison, which yield unto the Gentry the delights of Hunting. But the Air is cold and foggy in some extremity; especially in winter, and nigh the Sea.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Oldenburg, on the River Honta, repaired, if not built, by Otho the Great, who founded the Church of S. John Baptist. A Town of no great state or beauty; the Houses being generally of Clay, but the Castle (the Dwelling-place of the Earls) of well-hewn Stones; of an orbicular form, with deep Ditches of water, the Town and Castle both being strongly fortified. 2. Delmenhorst, on the River Delm, a strong place and of great importance, built in the year 1247 by Otho, Brother of Earl Christian the 2. and having been 65 years in possession of the Bishops of Munster, was suddenly surprized on Palm-Sunday morning by Anthony Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1547, continuing ever since part of this Estate. 3. Beckhusen, on a River which falleth not far off into the great Bay or Arm of the Sea which is called De Jade. 4. Eguarden. 5. Ovelgard; both seated on a long Languet or Demy-Island betwixt the said De Jade and the River Weser, called Butiada: both taken and the last well fortified by John Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1520, belonging formerly to the Prefecture of East-Friesland, but never brought under the command of the Earls thereof. 6. Westerberg, the chief Town, of a spacious Territory. 7. Vriejade, a strong piece on the River Jade, built by Earl Christiern, one of the younger Branches of the House of Oldenburg, about the year 1400. 8. Mellum. 9. Jadelle, places of principal importance; the one on the River Jade, the other near the Ocean. Here is also within this Earldom the Province of Amerlander, supposed by some to have been the Seat of the Ambrones, who accompanied the Cimbri and Teutones in their Expedition towards the Roman Provinces, and were slain by Marius.

As for the Earls of Oldenburg, they derive themselves from Walpert, one of the Nephews of Wittikindus, the last King and first Duke of the Saxons; who having about the year 850, built a strong Castle on the Borders of Bremen, in the honour of his Wife Alteburg, (whom he dearly loved) called it Alteburgum, so called by the Latinists to this day, by the Germans Oldenborch. But his Male-Issue failing in Frederick the 7. Earl, it came to one Elimar, the Son of Haio, a Nobleman of the Frisian bloud, who had married Richsa, the Daughter of John, the fifth Earl of this Family. From him in a direct Line descended Christian or Christiern, eldest Son of Theodorick; who, being fortunately advanced to the Crown of Denmark, An. 1448, left his Estate in this Earldom (but reserving the Title, according to the fashion of Germany) to his Brother Gerrard, the better to take him off from his Pretensions to the Dukedom of Sleswick and the Earldom of Holstein, in which he did pretend a share. The Patrimony of it was much improved by the additions of the Countries of Rustringen, Ostringen, and Wangerland, all lying on the German Sea, bequeathed by the last Will and Testament of the Lady Mary, Countess of Jever in East-Friesland, to John Earl of Oldenburg, the third from Gerrard. The Succession of these Earls, in regard the Royal Line of Denmark, and by consequence of Great Britain, is descended from them, I have here subjoyned in this ensuing Catalogue of

856 2. Theodorick, the Son of Walpert.

3. Theodorick II. the Son of Theodorick the 1.

4. Otho, Son of Theodorick the 2.

5. John, the Son of Otho, accompanied the Emperour Henry the 2. in his Wars against the Greeks and Sarazens, Anno 1007.

6. Huno, sirnamed the Glorious, Son of John.

7. Frederick, Son of Huno, fortunate in his Wars against the Frisians; the last of the Male-line of this House.

8. Elimarus, the Son of Haio, a Nobleman of the Frisian bloud, and of Richsa his Wife, the Daughter of John the fifth Earl.

1120 9. Elimarus II. Son to Elimar the first.

10. Christianus, Son of Elimar the 2. sirnamed the Courageous, or the Warlike; a professed Enemy of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, from whom he took the City of Breme.

11. Maurice, the Son of Christian, an Associate of Arnulph Earl of Holstein in his Wars with Denmark.

12. Christian II. Son of Maurice.

13. John II. Son of Christian the 2.

14. John III. Son of John the 2.

15. Conrade, the Son of John the third.

16. Christian III. Son of Conrade, a Student in Colen, len, where he was initiated into holy Orders, which he relinquished, much against the will of his Brother Maurice, on the death of his Father.

17. Theodorick, Son of Christian the 3. the first Earl of Delmenhorst of this Line; which fell to him at the death of Nicolas Archbishop of Breme, descended from a younger Son of John the second.

1440 18. Christian IV. Son of Theodorick, and of Heduigis, Sister and Heir of Gerrard and Adolphus, Dukes of Selswick and Earls of Holstein; elected on the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus to the Crown of Denmark, Anno 1448.

1448 19. Gerrard, the Brother of Christian the 4. a Prince of an unquiet spirit, always in Wars, and always worsted. He lost the Town of Delmenhorst to the Bishop of Munster.

1500 20. John IV. Son of Gerrard, repaired the Ruines of his Estate, and settled the Distractions of it in the time of his Father, being then in Exile; and after very much enlarged it by the reduction of Butiada.

1526 21. Anthony, the Son of John the 4. by a sudden Surprise recovered Delmenhorst from the Bishop of Munster, Anno 1547, which he strongly fortified.

1573 22. John V. Son of Anthony, enlarged this Earldom with the Provinces of Rustringen, Oostringen, and Wangerland, bequeathed to him by the last Will of the Countess of Jever, in East-Friesland.

23. Anthony II. Brother of John the 5. in whose life-time he was Earl of Delmenhorst, and after his death of Oldenburg also: still living, Anno 1648, for ought I can learn unto the contrary.

And thus we see the present estate of Germany, distracted and divided amongst many Princes, Prelates, and Incorporate Towns, the chief of which are herein mentioned and described. But besides these there are many others of less note and smaller Territories, which yet are absolute and free: insomuch that in one day's riding a Traveller may twice or thrice meet with divers Laws and divers Coins; every Free Prince and Free City (whose Laws the Emperours are sworn to keep inviolable) having power to make what Laws and coin what Money they will. And hence, in the Censure of Kingdoms, the King of Spain is said to be Rex hominum, because of his Subjects reasonable Obedience; the King of France, Rex Asinorum, because of their infinite Taxes and Impositions; the King of England, Rex Diabolorum, because of his Subjects often Insurrection against and Deposition of their Princes: but the Emperour of Germany is called Rex Regum, because there is such a number of Reguli or Free Princes which live under his Command; or rather at their own Command, (for they do even what they list) as the Emperour Maximilian the first well noted.

And, to say truth, the publick Government thereof is nothing less then Monarchical; the Emperour being accompted amongst the Princes but as the chief Officer of the Empire; not reckoned of, by Bodin and others of our great Statists and Civilians, as an absolute Monarch, such as the King of England, France and Spain, are confessed to be. For the Priviledges of the Free Cities being made perpetual, the great Estates Hereditary, and the Empire Eligible; the Emperours were brought at last to such low condition, as to be made accomptable to the States of the Empire; who if they be perswaded in their Consciences, or but think they be so, that he is likely by his Male-administration to destroy the Empire, or that he will not hearken unto good Advice, ab Electorum Collegio Cæsareâ majestate privare potest, (as my Author hath it) he may be deprived by the Electors, and a more fit and able man chosen into the place; and that too, as the Emperour Jodocus Barbatus hath declared in one of his Constitutions, An. 1410, sine Infidelitatis vel Rebellionis crimine, without incurring the crimes of Treason or Disloyalty. So that the supreme Power and Majesty of the Empire seems to reside especially and contractedly in the Electoral Colledge; diffusedly, in the Imperial Diets; by way of Execution, in the chamber of Spires, and other the supreme Courts of the several Circles. But that which makes that Body which they call the Empire, is the Assembly of the Prelates, Princes and Commissioners of the Free Cities in their Diets or Parliaments, the Emperour presiding in them: whom he that saw adorned in his Royal Robes, with the Imperial Crown and Scepter, with the Titles of Cæsar and Augustus given at every word, would think that the whole Action did take life from him; whereas, indeed, he hath not so much Priviledge as a Negative voice, but is to put in execution such Decrees and Sanctions as these Estates assembled have thought fit to make; not able to do any act by his own Authority, which may speak him Emperour. But, on the other side, the Princes take power unto themselves of making Laws for, and imposing Taxes on, their Subjects; of raising War upon one another, or against a third; and doing many other acts of supreme Authority, which in the Emperour would be counted matter of Male-administration. Such Points as these, together with the appointing of Judges and the like chief Magistrates, (as they relate unto the Empire) are not to be concluded of but in general Diets; which may be summoned by or without the Emperor, as occasion serveth. And to this weakning of the Majesty and Power Imperial the neighbouring Princes have afforded their best assistance; jealous of their own Interests and decrease of Power, if that vast Body so well limbed should be strongly jointed, and all the several Members of it united under the command of one supreme Head. Clear proof whereof we have in those solemn Leagues and Confederations made in their several times against Charles the fifth and the late Emperour Ferdinand the 2. as soon as they began to be in some possibility of setling the Imperial Majesty in its proper Splendour, and bringing down the Princes of it to a lower pitch.

As for the means by which the Empire is attained, it is, and hath of long time been, by the way of Election, as before was noted. The business was first projected in the Court of Rome by Gregory the first, then Pope, who, being a Native of this Country, thought it the most expedient course to continue the Imperial Title among those of his Nation. But whatsoever was pretended, the Design of it chiefly was to make the Emperors less powerful, and distract the Germans (whom they feared) into Parts and Factions, that so the Popes might have the better opportunity to grow great in Italy. And that the Emperour might be such as the Pope should like of, the matter was so ordered, that the one half of the Electors should be always of the Ecclesiasticks, who, being obnoxious to the Popes, and for the most part driving on their Interest, were very like to serve him on all occations. The Electors only six in number: that is to say, 1. The Archbishop of Mentz, Chancellour of the Empire. 2. The Archbishop of Colen, Chancellour of Italy. 3. The Archbishop of Triers, Chancellour of France. 4. The Count-Palatine of the Rhene, Arch-Sewer. 5. The Duke of Saxony, Lord Marshal, and 6. the Marquess of Brandenburg, Lord Chamberlain. Upon equality of Voices the Duke of Bohemia (now King) was to come in for a Seventh; who by Office fice is to be chief Cup-bearer in all great Solemnities. For upon days of great Solemnities, as Elections, Inaugurations, the first days of the Imperial Diets, and the like to these, these Offices are performed only; and then performed in this manner following, either in person or by Proxy. Before the Palace-Gate stands an heap of Oats, so high that it reacheth to the breast of the Horse on which the Duke of Saxony rideth, having in his hand a silver Wand and a silver Measure, both which together are to weigh 200 Marks. The Duke, still sitting on his Horse, filleth up the Measure with Oats, then sticks his Wand in the remainder of the heap, delivereth the measure of Oats unto some of his Servants who stand nearest unto him, and so attends the Emperour into the Court. The Emperour being entred and sate down at the Table, the three Spiritual Electors, standing orderly together, say the Grace before him. Then cometh the Marques of Brandenburg on horse-back also, with a Basin of water in his hand, (the Basin being of the weight of 12 Marks of Silver) and a fine clean Towel on his Arm; which, alighting from his Horse, he holds to the Emperour till he wash. Next comes the Palatine of the Rhene mounted on his Horse, with four silver Platters full of Meat, every one of the weight of three Marks of Silver; which, descending from his Horse, after due reverence made, he carrieth and placeth on the Table. And finally the Duke (or King) of Bohemia, entring the great Hall on Horse-back as the others did, with a Napkin on his Arm, and a covered Cup in his Hand of the weight of 12 Marks in Silver, alighteth from his Horse, and presenteth the Cup unto the Emperour. But we must know, that of late times these Offices are seldom or never performed by the Electors in their own persons. It is enough if they send their Ambassadors, or substitute some one or other of the Emperour's Court to do it for them.

The Election is usually celebrated at Francford on the Maine, to which place the Electors or their Deputies are to make repair upon the day appointed by the Archbishop of Mentz, whose Office it is (as being Chancellour of the Empire) to issue out the Summons for this Assembly. In their passage unto Francford they are to be sufficiently guarded by every Prince through whose Territories or Dominions they are to travel; their Attendants not to exceed the number of 200 Horse, of which 50 only to be armed. When they are met, they go into S. Bartholomew's Church, the most capacious of that City) where, after the High-Mass is said, the three Spiritual Electors laying their Hands upon their Breasts, and the Temporal Princes on the Book, make Oath to chuse a fit Temporal Head for the People of Christendom. Upon equality of Voices, as it sometimes happeneth, the Bohemian hath the casting Voice, and concludes the business. If in the space of 30 days they have not agreed upon a man, then must they have no other allowance but of Bread and Water, nor be suffered to go out of the City, till that necessity compelleth them unto some Agreement. Which being at the last resolved on, and declared accordingly, the Prince so elected is presently saluted by the Title of King of the Romans; the Title of Emperour being not properly to be given unto him, until he have received the Imperial Crown at the hands of the Pope: though since the time of Charles the fifth, without any such trouble to themselves or the Popes of Rome, the Title of both Emperour and Imperial Majesty is usually conferred upon them from their first Election. The Election being finished, and signified to the party chosen, the Inauguration was held anciently at three several places: viz. 1. at Aquisgrane, or Aken, in the Land of Gulick, where he received the Silver Crown, for the Kingdom of Germany; 2. at Millain, by the Archbishop whereof he was crowned with the Iron Crown, for Lombardy, or the Realm of Italy; 3. at Rome, where, at the hands of the Pope himself, he was crowned with a Golden Crown, for the Roman Empire. But since, those Journeys unto Rome and Millain have been long laid by; the Emperours holding their Elections to be strong enough to make good their Title to that Dignity, being meerly titular, and their Inauguration at Aken to be as effectual as if they had also visited the two other Cities. The form of which Elections, the Privileges of the Electors, and other fundamental Constitutions of the German Empire, we find summed up together in the Golden Bull of Charles the 4. by him first promulgated An. 1359. But we must know that, since the publishing of that Bull, the business of Election hath received some change as to the number and the persons of the Parties interessed. For, it pleased the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. on the Proscription of Frederick, the first Elector Palatine, to transfer the Electoral Dignity, with the Office of Archidapifer, or Arch-Sewer, from that House to the Duke of Bavaria, the Title of Elector of Bavaria, with all the Powers and Priviledges which belonged unto it, to be inseoffed upon him and his Heirs for ever. Which action of the Emperour being protested against by some of the Electors, in favour of the Palatine Family, and in due care unto themselves, in not admitting such a dangerous precedent for the time to come; it was at last concluded and agreed on by the Pacification made at Munster Anno 1648. That the Duke of Bavaria and his Heirs enjoying the said Electoral Dignity with the Upper Palatinate, according to the Translation of it from the Palatine Family spoken of before; an Eighth Electorate should be added to the former number, to be enjoyed together with the Lower Palatinate by Charles Ludowick, the now Prince Elector Palatine, and his Heirs, who also, on the failure of the Line of Bavaria, are to be repossessed of their ancient Rights, the Title of Arch-Treasurer being given unto them at the present instead of that of Archidapifer, or Arch-Sewer, which they had before.

Now as a step unto the Empire, and for the better assurance of the Imperial Dignity to the Austrian Family, it was cunningly projected by Charles the fifth, (having received the Imperial Crown from Pope Clement the 7.) that his Brother Ferdinand should be chosen King of the Romans whilst himself was living, and by that means be the more certain of the Empire after his decease. Which Policy being followed by all his Successors, the Title of Rex Romanorum, or King of the Romans, is grown to be the Title of the Heir apparent, or designed Successor, in the present Empire of the Germans; as that of Cæsar was, from the time of Adrian, in the Empire of the ancient Romans. Insomuch as Rex Romanorum is now defined to be one who is already so far elated in the Empire, that on the Death, Deprivation, or Resignation of the present Emperour, he is immediately to succeed. And so accordingly it hath happened since this Act of Charles; who though he laboured under-hand to leave the Empire unto Philip his Son and Heir, whom he found capable enough of so high an Honour; yet he could not do it: it being thought by many understanding men, that on notice of this underhand practice, his Brother Ferdinand, who had the like mind to transmit the Empire to his own Posterity, did secretly lend Duke Maurice his helping hand to drive him out of Germany, as in brief he did. As for the reasons, or, to say better, the pretences, upon which Charles did institute this Rex Romanorum, (for questionless the true reason of it was to perpetuate the Empire in the Austrian Family) they were these that follow. 1. Because that, having the command of many Nations, he could not always personally attend the Affairs of Germany. 2. The troubled Estate of Christendom, of the Empire especially, occasioned by the Preachings and Works of Luther. 3. The late rural War raised by the Boors of that Country, on the coming out of these new Doctrines, and not yet throughly extinct. 4. The violent Power of the Turk, who, by his Conquest of a great part of Hungary, was grown too near a neighbour to them. And 5. the imminent Disobedience in all parts of the Empire. All which conjunctly seemed to require some Prince both of Power and Title to assist him in the bearing of so great a Burthen. And by these and the like suggestions he effected his Design herein, though thereby he changed in a manner the Imperial Style. For whereas the first Emperours of the House of Charles the Great were Emperors of the Romans, and Kings of Germany; the later Emperours of the House of Charles the fifth may not improperly be called Emperours of Germany, and Kings of the Romans. It is true indeed, that the wise and understanding Duke of Saxony saw farther through these Pretences than the rest of the Electors either did or would, and that the main Plot was no other, than to make Germany (as Galba said in his Oration unto Piso of the Empire of Rome) unius quasi Familiæ Hæreditatem, hereditary in times following to the House of Austria; and thereupon did openly deny his suffrage to the said Election. But finding that the major part of the Electors were resolved upon it, he moved for an Act to pass, prohibiting the continuance of the Imperial Title in any one Family more than three Successions. In which not able to prevail, (as the Game was plaid) he left the Electors to themselves, by whom Ferdinand was chosen King of the Romans, and not long after crowned at Aken with the usual Rites, Jan. 16. An. 1531. The same course was followed by this Ferdinand, when possessed of the Empire, in causing his Son Maximilian to be elected Rex Romanorum, whilst himself was living; and so by all the rest since then, as before is said.

As for the Forces of the Empire, for by that name we are to measure the Abilities and Power of Germany; we may discern them by those Levies which have been raised upon particular occasions, or by the joint consent of the Free Estates assembled in the Imperial Diets. First, for particular Levies made by private persons, we find 12000 Foot and 8000 Horse raised by the Prince Palatine of Zweibruck, for Aid of the French Hugonots against their King; and, on the other side, no fewer than 7000 Horse, under the Conduct of the Duke of Aumal and the Earl of Mansfield, for the service of that King against the Hugonots. And as for Levies made by consent of the States, we find that Charles the 5. had under his Ensigns at Vienna 90000 Foot, and 35000 Horse; Maximilian the 2. at Javarin in Hungary, 34000 Horse, and full 100000 Foot; and finally, that in the War betwixt Charles the 5. and the Protestant Princes, there were no less than 150000 men on both sides: which numbers no one Country in Europe is able to equal. In a word, it is generally conceived that the Empire is able to raise 200000 Horse and Foot, with Arms, Cannon, and Ammunition of all sorts proportionable; which the instances before brought do most plainly evidence.

Touching the Revenues of the Empire, I find them estimated by Boterus, and some others since, at seven millions of Crowns yearly. Which may be true enough, taking the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia with the hereditary Estates of Austria into the accompt. But since they are not so united unto the Empire but they may at some time or other be disjoined again, no reason they should come into the reckoning, unless it be as the Revenue of the Emperour, though not of the Empire. But as for the Revenue of the Empire it self, taken abstractedly from the personal and Patrimonial Estate of the Emperour, whosoever he be, it can amount to no such sum: the Tribute paid by the Free or Imperial Cities (at least 60 in number) amounting to no more per ann. than 15000 Florens, or 1500 l. English: and what is that, but like a Peppercorn for a Quit-rent, in that mighty Continent? By this we may conjecture what the rest may come to. And though, in the way of saving Charges, (which may be reckoned as a part of his Income also) the Princes and Free Cities be bound to aid him in the time of War against the Turk with 3842 Horse and 16200 Foot, which he may challenge without troubling the Diets for it: yet War is such a great devourer, that if the Diets do not grant him greater helps, he is like to be but a sorry Gainer by the Undertaking; besides the smalness of those Forces considered with the numbers they are able to raise, and the puissance of the enemy whom they are to encounter.

Finally, for the Arms of the Empire, they are Sol, an Eagle displayed with two Heads Saturn, armed & crowned Mars: the two Heads signifying (as some think) the Eastern and the Western Empires. Cuspinian, a learned German, conceives rather that these Arms are two Eagles conjoined, and not one Eagle with two Heads: and that they were taken up by the German Nation, in memory of the three Legions of Quintilius Varus discomfited by them; at what time they seized on two of the Roman Eagles, (the Military Ensign of that People) the third being cast into the Fens by the Standard-bearer. But whether it be one or two, certain it is that the one Head is quite pulled off, and the whole Body quite stripped of all its Feathers; the Imperial Dignity being little more than titular, despoiled and stript of all authority appertaining to it.

DENMARK.

THE Kingdom of DENMARK, or DANEMARK, reckoning in the Additions of the Dukedom of Holstein and the great Continent of Norway, with the Isles thereof, now all united and incorporated into one Estate, is bounded on the East with the Baltick Sea and some part of Sweden, on the West with the main Western Ocean, on the North-East with a part of Sweden, full North with the main Frozen Seas, and on the South with Germany, from which it is divided on the South-west by the River Albis, and on the South-east by the Trave; a little Isthmus or Neck of Land uniting it to that Continent.

It took this name from the Danes, of long time the Inhabitants and Possessors of it; so called quasi Danorum Tractus, sive Regio, (as Mercator hath it,) because the Country of that People: but rather quasi Danorum limes, the Bounds or Marches of the Danes, bordering close upon the Dutch; from whom it hath the name of Danemarch.

As for the Situation of it in regard of the Heavens, it lieth partly in the Northern temperate Zone, and partly within the Artick Circle; extending from the middle Parallel of the tenth Clime, or 55. Degree of Latitude, where it joineth with Germany, as far as the 71. Degree, where it hath no other bound but the Frozen Ocean. By which accompt, the longest Day in the most Southern parts hereof is 17 hours and a quarter: but in the parts extremely North, they have no Night for two whole months, three weeks, one day, and some seven hours over; as on the other side, no Day for the like quantity of time, when the Sun is most remote from them, in the other Tropick. The Air hereof by consequence must be sharp and bitter, even in the very warmest places. Of which, and of the nature of the Soil, we shall speak more punctually in the Description and Survey of the several Parts.

The Inhabitants generally are of good Stature, clear of Complexion, well-colouted, for the most part healthful and long-lived; for though they eat and drink beyond measure, they have good Digestions. In Manners they are very severe, crafty and provident in the managing of their Affairs, but proud withall, and (as the Historian said of another person) Omnium quæ dixerant fecerantve Ostentatores, great Vaunters of whatsoever they do or say, highly opinionated of their own Actions, and peremptory in maintaining their own Opinions: religious observers of their Words and Contracts, and strict in executing Justice; especially in punishing of Thieves and Pirats. Such of them as do follow the Wars prove reasonable good Souldiers, both by Sea and Land; but fitter for the Sea than Field-service. The Magistrate is wise rather by experience than study, though they love Learning, and easily attain all Languages which they give their minds to. The old men are covetous, the young men thrifty, and the Merchant ambitious. The Nobility and Gentry are generally of as ancient Families as most in Christendom; here being some of those Houses still remaining which were present at the Pacification made betwixt Charles the Great and Hemingus King of the Danes: and, which adds much unto their Honour, they keep their Blood unmixt from Marriages with the Vulgar sort; and reckon it for an high disgrace to change their Arms, or make any addition thereunto. The Women are fair, discreet, and courteous, and knew well how to govern their Housholds; exceeding fruitful in bearing of Children, but delivered of them with great difficulty. Both Sexes speak the Dutch or German, common (but with some difference in the pronunciation) to all the Northern Nations in Norway and Swethland.

Of no great note for men of Learning in the former times, it hath been fortunate in these last for 1. Tycho Brahe, that renowned Astrononer; 2. Hemingius, a well-known Divine; 3. Bartholinus, a Physician and Philosopher of good esteem; 4. John Cluverus, the Historian, &c. More famous for great Captains and men of War; especially for 1. Godfrey, or Gotricus, who setled the Government of this Kingdom, and endangered the great Realm of France. 2. Sueno, and 3. Canutus, the fortunate Conquerours of England. 4. Waldemar the 3. a right-valiant Prince; but unsuccessful in his Wars against the Hanse-Towns, then newly entred into League. 5. Christiern the 2. a great Commander in the Wars, but of greater Cruelty. 6. Christiern the 4. little inferiour unto many of his Predecessors. To whom we may subjoin (though of different Sex) Q. Margaret, the Semiramis of these Northern Countries; a Lady of a masculine Spirit, and not more fortunate than daring in all Enterprises, as she declared in the Conquest of Swethland, and Subjection of Norway, by her united to this Crown.

The Christian Faith was first preached to those of Holstein (the next-neighbouring Country unto Germany) by S. Angarius, Bishop of Bremen, the general Apostle of those Northern parts, in the year 826, Lewis the God'y then being Emperour of the West. In whose time Harald King of Denmark, being expulsed his Kingdoms by the Sons of Godfrey or Gotricus, was baptized at Mentz, with a great number of that people which attended on him, by the hands of Ebbo Archbishop of Rhemes, employed by the Emperour in that service; the Conversion of the whole Nation following not long after, by the power and diligence of the Emperour Otho the first, assigned by the Ministry of one Poppo the first Bishop of Arthusen; Sueno, or Swain, then reigning amongst the Danes. The Norwegians came not in till after, converted in the reign of Olaus the third, Anno 1055, or thereabouts: the English assisting in the work, and the good King so zealous in it, that he was canonized a Saint after his decease. Relapsing for the most part to their ancient Gentilism, they were finally regained unto Christianity by the means of Pope Adrian the fourth, an English-man, about the year 1156, before his assuming of the Popedom called Nicolaus Breakspear. But by whomsoever first converted, the Popes of Rome would needs pretend some Power and Jurisdiction over them. Which when they began to exercise with too much Authority, Waldemar the third is said to have returned this Answer, Naturam habemus à Deo, Regnum à Subditis, Divitias à Parentibus, Religionem à Romana Ecclesia; quam, si nobis invides, renunciamus per præsentes: that is to say, We hold our Life from God, our Crown from our Subjects, our Riches from our Ancestors, our Religion from the Church of Rome; which if you envy us, we do here remit it by these presents. But this Renunciation, though then threatned, was not made till afterwards; when the whole mass of Popery was abolished by King Frederick the first, using therein the Ministry of Bugenhage, a Divine of Pomeren, by whom they were reformed according to the Doctrine of the Lutheran Churches.

As for the Government of the Church since that Reformation, it continueth as before it was, by Archbishops and Bishops, in number as before; but much abridged of their Revenues, and a great part of their Power. For Frederick, though he found it necessary to remove the old Bishops, (not one of which would be perswaded to the change of Religion) yet he substituted others in their places, allowing them a convenient Maintenance, with a power of Presidence in all Church-Assemblies, where they are to take the Advice of other Presbyters along with them; and out of such Assemblies to receive Complaints, to provide remedy against Scandals, and to order all matters, as peculiar Inspectors, which concern the Church. So that in all the Kings Dominions there are two Archbishops and thirteen Bishops: that is to say, the Archbishop of Lunden, the Bishops of Roschilt, Odensee, Ripen, Wiborch, Arthusen, Sleswick, and Haderslove, for the Kingdom of Denmark; the Archbishop of Nidrosia, the Bishops of Bergen, Anslo, Staffanger, and Hammar, for the Realm of Norway; and the Bishops of Halar and Schalholt, for the Isle of Iseland: the Churches of Holstein (formerly under the Bishops of Hamburg and Lubeck) being governed by Superintendents, as the rest of the Lutherans.

The whole Body of the Estate (as appears by this) consisteth chiefly of three Members: viz. 1. the Dukedom of Holstein; containing Wagerland, Ditmarsh, Stormaria, and Holstein specially so called: 2. the Kingdom of Denmark; comprehending both Juitlands, part of Scandia, and the Hemodes, or Baltick Islands: and 3. the Kingdom of Norway; consisting of Norway it self, and the Islands of the Northern Ocean. Which parts we shall survey in order, as before laid down; premising first a word or two of the Cimbrick Chersonese, in which the Dukedom of Holstein and the two Juitlands are contained.

The CIMBRICK CHERSONESE.

THE CIMBRICK CHERSONESE hath on the East the Baltick Sea, on the West the main German Ocean, on the North a part of the Ocean bending into the narrow Streight or Fretum which they call the Sundt, on the South-west the great River of Albis, on the South-East the small River of Trave; betwixt which is the Neck or Isthmus which unites it to Germany. I know that some contract it into narrower bounds, and limit it upon the South with the River Eyder: but I have drawn it down to the Elve and the Trave, which give it more resemblance to a Chersonese or Demy-Island than the other doth, dissenting in this point from the common Opinion. It had the name of Chersonesus, ἀπὸ τῆς χέρσου καὶ νήσου, à Terra & Insula, it being the same with a Peninsula in the Latin. Of which name there are 5. most famous: that is to say, 1. Peloponnesus, in Greece, which is now called Morea; 2. Thracia Chersonesus, in Thracia, near the Sea Propontis; 3. Taurica Chersonesus, in the Euxine Sea, now a part of Tartary; 4. Aurea Chersonesus, in India, which we now call Malaca, (of all which we shall speak in their proper places;) and 5. Cimbrica Chersonesus, where now we are. This last was so called from the Cimbri, the first Inhabitants hereof, originally descended from Gomer the son of Japhet; thence called Gomerii and Cimmerii, by contraction Cimbri. Leaving the Plains of Phrygia as too narrow for them they sought out new Dwellings, and are said to have first dwelt on the banks of Palus Maeotis; where they gave name to the Bosphorus Cimmerius there being. Being overcome by the Scythians, they removed their Seats more Northward, into a Country bounded, according to Plutarch, by the great Ocean on the one side, and the Forest of Hercynia on the other: within which Bounds is the Peninsula or Country where we now are. They were a people of extraordinary big Stature, having blew and red Eyes, and lived most upon Theft: so that, for their sakes, Κίμβρους ἑτονομάζουσι Γέρμανοι τὰς λῃστάς, the Germans called all Thieves Cimbers. It happened that the Ocean overflowing a great part of their Country, compelled them to seek new Seats: whereupon in great multitudes abandoning their Dwellings, they petitioned the Romans, then lording over a great part of the World, for some place to settle in. This request being denied, they proceeded in another manner, winning with their Swords what their Petitions could not obtain. Manlius, Sillanus, and Cæpio all Roman Consuls, perished by them, so that now (saith Florus) actum esset de Imperio Romano, nisi illi seculo Marius contigisset: for he, as we have elsewhere told you, utterly overthrew them. The next Inhabitants hereof were the Saxons, Juites, and Angles; upon whose Removal into Britain, the greatest part of it was peopled by the Danes, who still possess it.

It containeth in length about 100 Italian miles, and 80 of the same miles in breadth, and comprehendeth in that tract or extent of ground 30 walled Towns, 6 Episcopal Sees, (besides those of Hamburg and Lubeck, which are under the Archbishop of Bremen) and 20 Royal Castles and Palaces, as well for the reception of the Nobles and great men of the Country, as the private Retirements of the King. The Soil is naturally more fit for Pasturage than Tillage, feeding such multitudes of Oxen, that from hence no fewer than 50000 are sent yearly to Germany. Divided at the present into the Dukedom of Holstein, and the Province of Juitland.

1. The Dukedom of HOLSTEIN.

THE Dukedom of HOLSTEIN taketh up the Southern part of the Cimbrick Chersonese where it joins to Germany, extending as far North as the River Eyder, which divides it from Juitland. So called from the Dutch word Holt, which signifies a Wood or Forest, according to the nature of it; the Country being low, marishy, and full of Woods, as it continueth to this day. It contains in it these four Provinces; 1. Wagerland, 2. Stormaria, 3. Ditmarsh, and 4. Holst or Holstein specially so called.

1. WAGERLAND is that part of Holstein which lies on the South-east of this Chersonese, bounded on the East with Mecklenburg and the Baltick Sea, on the West with Holstein specially so called, on the North with the Sea Baltick also, on the South with some part of Mecklenburg. So called from the Wagrii, a Tribe or Nation of the Sclaves, who possessed this Tract; from whence the name of Wagria in our Latine Writers.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Lubeck, pleasantly seated on the Confluence of the Trave and the Billow, near the fall thereof into the Baltick, from which it is distant five Italian miles. The River is capable of ships of a thousand tun, which commonly they unlade at Travemund, the Port-town to the City, seated upon the very brink of the Sea, where the united Rivers have their fall into it. It was first built by Adolph the second Earl of Holstein, Anno 1143; but so well priviledged by him and his next Successors, that in short time it bid defiance to its Founders, (the cause of many Differences betwixt it and those Princes) and was made a Dukedom of it self. By Frederick the first it was united to the Empire, after whose death they chose themselves another Duke; who, having governed them five years, was subdued by the Danes, and the City made subject to that Kingdom, remaining so till delivered by the Emperour Frederick the second; by whom again once infranchised, it became Imperial; afterwards listed amongst the Hanse-Towns, and the first in estimation of all the company, having above 600 Ships of all sorts (some of a thousand Tun and upwards) which belong unto it. But being their Trade is for the most part on the Baltick Seas, which are generally free from Pirates, they are most of them built for Burthen, and are slow of sail, and little serviceable, if at all, for a Fight at Sea. But to return unto the City: It is built upon all the sides of a rising Hill, on the top whereof standeth the Church of Saint Mary, (once the Cathedral of the City, for it was Episcopal) whence is a Descent to all the Gates of the City, affording to the Eye a most pleasing prospect. The Buildings are very beautiful, and all of Brick; the Streets straight and even; the Churches (ten in number) in good repair, adorned with excellent Imagery, and much admired even by skilful Workmen: and unto every private House a Pipe of water is conveyed from the publick Conduit; according to the Pattern whereof, it hath been observed that the Conduits were first made in London and other places. In a word, there is not any City of Germany or the more Northern Countries which can equallize it, either for the Beauty and Uniformity of the Houses, the pleasant Gardens, fair Streets, delightful Walks without the Walls; or for the Citizens themselves, who are much commended for their Civility to Strangers, and strict execution of Justice without partiality. The whole in compass is about six miles, fortified with a double Wall, deep Ditches, and unfordable Rivers. 2. Segeberg, on the River Trave, four Dutch miles from Lubeck, and near the head of that River. 3. Oldesloe, on the same River, in the midst betwixt both. 4. Gronneberg, and 5. Newkirk, on the Baltick Shore: and 6. Stendorp, more within the Land, near the edge of a Lake, out of which runs the River Suentin.

2. South-west of Wagerland lieth STORMARIA, betwixt the Elb and two less Rivers called the Bille and the Stoer: from which last, and the Marishness of the situation, or from that River and the Marsi, once the Inhabitants hereof, comes the name of Stormarsh. Places of most importance are, 1. Crempe, on a little River so named, which falls not far off into the Stoer, and both together not much farther into the Elb. A Town well fortified by Christiern the fourth, and reckoned one of the Keys of the Kingdom; as well appears by the Resistance which it made to the Duke of Fridland, against whom it held out 13 months, and yielded at the last upon good Conditions, An. 1628. 2. Tychenberg, (Tychapolis my Author calls it) a Dutch mile from Crempe, but on the very Bank of the River Elb, where it receives the Rhin, a small River upon which it is seated: first built, and afterward well fortified, by Christiern the fourth, of purpose to command the Elb, and put a stronger Bridle in the mouths of the Hamburgers, Anno 1603: now held to be the strongest piece of all his Dominions; the only Town of all this Dukedom which yielded not to the prevailing Imperialists in their late Wars against the Danes, Anno 1628. 3. Bredeberch, a strong Town belonging to the Rantzows, one of the best pieces of the Kingdom; remarkable for the stout Resistance which it made to Wallestein (Duke of Fridland) in the War aforesaid: who, at last taking it by Assault, put all the Souldiers to the Sword. 4. Pinnenberg, another strong place and of very great consequence. 5. Jetzeho, or Itzeho, on the River Stoer. 6. Gluckstadt, upon a Creek or Bay of the German Ocean, repaired and fortified by the said Christiern the fourth, (who much delighted in the place) to command the Passage up the Elb. 7. Stoer, 8. Hamburg, upon the Bille, where it falls into the Elb; an ancient City, built in the time of the Saxons, repaired by Charles the Great, and walled by the Emperour Henry the fourth. Accounted since that time an Imperial City, and made one of the Hanse, upon the first incorporating of those Towns. Which notwithstanding, on a Controversie arising about that time betwixt the Earl of Holstein and the people hereof, it was adjudged to belong to the Earls of Holstein; and that Determination ratified by Charles the fourth, Anno 1374. In pursuance whereof the Hamburgers took the Oath of Allegiance to Christiern Earl of Oldenburg, the first King of Denmark of that House, as Earl of Holstein, acknowledging him and his Successors for their lawful Lords: though since they have endeavoured to shake off that Yoak, presuming very much on their power at Sea, and the assistance which they are assured of upon all occasions from the rest of the Hanse-Towns. As for the Town it self, it is seated in a large Plain, with fat and rich Pastures round about it, well fortified by Art and Nature, the Haven being shut up with a strong Iron Chain. The Buildings for the most part are of Brick, but more beautiful than well contrived; and the Streets somewhat of the narrowest. The publick Structures are very fair; especially the Council-house, adorned with the Statues of the Nine Worthies carved with very great Art, the Exchange, or Meeting-place for Merchants, and nine large Churches. The Citizens are generally rich, masters of many as great Ships as sail on the Ocean, some of them 1200 Tun in Burthen, which bring in great profit; besides the great resort of Merchants and their Factors from most places else: sometimes the Staple-Town for the Cloth of England, removed on some Discontents to Stade, and from thence to Holland. It is observed, that there were in this Town at one time 177 Brewers, and but 40 Bakers, nor more than one Lawyer and one Physician. The reason of which disproportion was, that a Cup of Nimis was their only Physick; their Differences sooner ended over a Can than by order of Law; Bread being accounted but a Binder, and so not to be used but in case of neeessity.

3. Betwixt the Rivers Stoer and Eyder, coasting along the German Ocean, lies the Province of DITMARSH, most properly called Tuitchmarsh, from the Marishness of the ground and the Dutch Inhabitants, or from a mixture of those people with the Marsi, spoken of before. The people, being naturally of the Saxon Race, retain much of the stomach and animosity of the ancient Saxons; never brought under the command of the Earls of Holstein (as Wagerland and Stormaria were) till Holstein it self was joined to the Crown of Denmark. And though it was aliened from the Empire by Frederick the third, and given in Fee to Christian Earl of Oldenburg, the first King of that House, Anno 1474; yet would they not submit unto his Authority, but held it out against him and some of his Successors, whom in the year 1500 they vanquished in the open Field; till broken and made subject by the valour and good fortune of King Frederick the second, Anno 1550. Chief places in it are, 1. Meldorp, upon the Ocean, the chief Town of the Province; the Inhabitants of which are so wealthy, that many of them cover their Houses with Copper. 2. Lunden, opposite to a Peninsula or Demi-Island called Eyderstede, on the West side whereof it standeth. 3. Heininckstede, and 4. Tellinckstede; of which nothing memorable.

4. And as for HOLSTEIN it self, the fourth and last member of this Estate, though the first in power and reputation, it taketh up the Inland parts, betwixt Stormaria maris and Juitland, save that it hath an Outlet into the Baltick on the North-west of Wagerland. Chief places in it are, 1. Kiel, (Chilonium in Latine) seated upon a navigable Arm of the Baltick Sea, parting Wagerland from the Dukedom of Sleswick: a Town well traded, and having a capacious Haven, seldom without good store of Shipping from Germany, Livland, Sweden, and the rest of Denmark. 2. Rensborg, the best fortified piece in all this Province. 3. Niemunster, on the North west of the Stoer, not far from the head of it. 4. Wilster, on a small River so called. 5. Bramstede, 6. Borsholm, not much observable, but for a Monastery in which Henry one of the Earls hereof (of a younger House) turned Monk, and died Anno 1241.

The ancient Inhabitants of this and the other three were the Saxons, Sigulons, and Subalingii, placed here by Ptolomy; whom I conceive to be no other than some Tribes of the Cimbri, of whom this Chersonese took name: the two last of which passing into the name of the first, and in the Declination of the Roman Empire marching over the Elb, and spreading all along the Coasts of the German Ocean, molested with their Piracies and Depredations the Shores of Britain, known by that means unto the Britans, they were invited to assist them against the Scots and Picts. Which action, with the Aid of the Juites and Angli, (Inhabitants together with them of the Cimbrick Chersonese) they performed so honestly, as to make themselves Masters of the best part of the Island. Such as remained behind, not being able to defend their own against the Sclaves, were fain to quit the parts lying next to Mecklenburg; which, being peopled by the Vagrii, took the name of Wagerland. But the Saxons being vanquished by Charles the Great, these on the North-side of the Elb became a part of the great Dukedom of Saxony; and so continued till dismembred by Lotharius, both Duke and Emperour, who gave the proper Holst (or Holstein specially so called) with the Province of Stormaria to Adolph Earl of Schaumburg, who had deserved well of him in his Wars, with the Title of Earl of Holstein, Anno 1114. By Adolph the second, his Successor, it was setled in this House; who, having made a full Conquest of it, caused it to be planted with Colonies of Dutch or Germans from Holland, Westphalen, and Friesland; by which means the name of Sclaves was at last worn out. By Gerard the fifth the Dukedom of Sleswick was also added; conferred upon him by the bounty of Margaret Queen of Denmark, in whose Wars he served. Adolph the last Earl of this House dying without Issue, the whole Estate fell on Christiern, Son of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg, and of Hednigis his Wife, Sister and Heir to Adolph before mentioned; who, being called to the Crown of Denmark, compounded with his Brother Gerrard for the sum of 50000 Marks; and having gotten Ditmarsh also of the Emperour Frederick the third, prevailed so far as to have the whole Estate erected into a Dukedom, Anno 1474, to be held by him and his Successors of the Sacred Empire. Which said, we will next add the Catalogue of 1114 1. Adolph of Schaumburg, by Lotharius, Emperour and Duke of Saxony, made the first Earl of Holstein.

The Earls and Dukes of HOLSTEIN.

1137 2. Adolph II. Son of Adolph the first.

1164 3. Adolph III. Son of Adolph the 2. vanquished by Canutus King of the Danes, lost himself and his Country.

1232 4. Adolph IV. in his Fathers life-time recovered his Estate from Waldemar the Successor of Canutus, overcome by him in a well fought Battel Anno 1226, his Father then Prisoner to the Danes.

1261 5. Gerrard, the 2. Son of Adolph the fourth, his elder Brother John making choice of Wagerland, succeeded in Holstein.

1281 6. Henry the Son of Gerrard, the first that set up a Custom-house at Hamburg, for receipt of his Tolls and Taxes.

1310 7. Gerrard II. Son of Henry, slain treacherously by the Danes.

1339 8. Henry II. Son of Gerrard the second.

1381 9 Gerrard III. Son of Henry the second, created the first Duke of Sleswick by Queen Margaret of Denmark.

1404 10. Henry III. Son of Gerrard the third.

1427 11. Adolphus V. commonly called the XII. (those of the younger Houses being reckoned in) the last Earl of this House.

1459 12. Christiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, Son of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg, and of his Wife Heduigis, Sister of Henry and Adolphus the two last Earls, succeeded in the Earldom of Holstein, inlarged with the addition of Ditmarsh, and erected into a Dukedom by the Emperour Frederick the third Anno 1474. But seeing that Otho Earl of Schaumburg pretended a Right unto the whole, as the next Heir-male, according to the Constitutions of the Empire of which it was holden; and Gerrard the Brother of Christiern put in for his Share, according to the ill Custom of Germany, of which it was then counted part: he was fain to buy his peace of both; giving to Otho 43000 Florens in ready money, with the Towns of Pinnenberg, Haltzburg, and Bramstede, the ancient possessions of the Earls of Schaumburg; and 50000 Marks to his Brother Gerrard, besides his whole Interest in the Earldom of Oldenburg, as before was said. By this means Holstein was united to the Crown of Denmark, the Kings thereof, as Dukes of Holstein, being counted Princes of the Empire; but neither send unto the Diets, nor contribute any thing at all to the publick Taxes, nor acknowledge any kind of Subjection to it more than meerly titulary. Only it was ordained at the request of the Subjects, when first they were incorporated into that Kingdom, that in case of any grievance or unjust sentence in the ordinary Courts of Justice, wherein they found no remedy in the supreme Council of the Province, it might be lawful for them to appeal to the Imperial Chamber, as they had done formerly. Which as it was granted to content them at the present time, on sufficient Caution; so hath it seldom or never been put in practice; the very Grant or Priviledge (if such it were) being in a manner worn out of memory. But since this uniting of the two Estates, the Title of Duke of Holstein and a good part of the Country was given unto Adolphus, Brother of Christiern the 3. (created by Queen Elizabeth one of the Knights of the Garter Anno 1560) who governed it interchangeably with the King in their several turns: after whose death, and the death of all his Children dying without Issue-male, the Title of it was conferred on Ulrick, Son of Frederick the second, and Brother of Christiern the fourth, created Knight of the Garter by King James Anno 1605, In whose posterity it remains till this present time.

2. The Kingdom of DENMARK.

IN which, 1. JUITLAND containeth all the rest of the Cimbrick Chersonese, divided from the Dukedom of Holstein by the River Eyder, the ancient Boundary betwixt the Saxons and the Danes; but principally by a long Trench and Wall from one Sea to the other, of such breadth, that a Chariot or two Horse-men a-breast might ride upon it. First built, in imitation of the Picts Wall in England, by Godfrey King of Denmark, in the time of Charles the Great; either to hinder the daily Incursions of the Saxons, as some, or to stop the current of the Victories of the said Charles, as others think. The Tract thereof, still very easie to be seen, is called Dennewerk (or the Danes Work) to this very day.

It was so called from the Juites, who, together with the Angli and neighbouring Saxons, made a Conquest of the best part of Britain. The Country so aboundeth in Cattel, that it sendeth yearly into Germany 50000 Oxen, besides great store of Butter, Cheese, Tallow, Hides, and Horses: divided commonly into North Juitland, and South Juitland, or Juitland specially so called, and the Dukedom of Sleswick.

SOUTH JUITLAND, or the Dukedom of SLESWICK, is that part of the Cimbrian Chersonese which lies next to Holstein; called South-Juitland, from the Southern situation of it; and Sleswick, from the chief Town of it, and the Head of this Dukedom. The Country, for the most part, is plain, little swelled with Mountains; the Fields whereof do interchangeably yield both Fish and Corn. For during one three years they sow it constantly, and reap the Fruits of it, and for the next three let the Pools overflow the Land, to the end the Fish may eat up the Grass, (whom they catch as often as they please) and the Mud which is left behind inrich the Soil. But besides their Pools, they have also on the Baltick Shores many goodly Bays, not only commodious for Merchants, but well stored with Fish, and with Salmons especially.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Flensborch, seated among very high Mountains on the Shore of the Baltick Sea, where there is a Port so deep, so safe, and so commodious, that all the Inhabitants thereof in a manner may lade and unlade their Ships close to their houses. 2. Husem, or Hussum, upon the German Ocean, not far from the mouth of the River Eyder. 3. Haderslevi, a Bishop's See, if not rather some Town or Manor of the Bishops of Sleswick, seated on a navigable In-let of the Baltick Sea, wherewith it is almost encompassed; beautified with the fair Castle of Hansburg, begun by John the eldest Son of King Christiern the first, then Duke of Holstein, but finished by Frederick the second, King of Denmark. 4. Londenberg, in the Peninsula called Eyderstede, over against De Strandt, an Island of the German Ocean. 5. Sternberg, the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the King of Denmark. 6. Gottorp, a strong Fort or Castle of the Duke of Sleswick's, at the end of a large Bay or In-let of the Baltick also: remarkable for the Toll-booth or Custom-house there erected, at which there is Toll paid one year with another for 50000 Oxen sent out of the North-Juitland into Germany. 7. Sleswick, originally by the Danes called Hydebui, built, as they say, by Hethe a Queen of that Nation; but by the Saxons called Sleswick, as the Town upon the River Sley, there running into the Baltick, and giving to the Town a fair and commodious Haven. This of long time hath been accounted the chief Town of this Province, honoured with an Episcopal See, and made the Head of the Dukedom, so giving name unto the whole. A Dukedom first erected by King Henry of Denmark, who gave it to Waldemar, great Grandchild of Abel a former King Anno 1280, to be held by him under the Right and Soveraignty of the Kings thereof. But the Male-issue failing, it returned to the Crown, and was by Margaret Queen of Denmark conferred on Gerrard Earl of Holstein, as before was said, Anno 1386. Repenting afterwards of that Act, she extorted it out of the hands of the Widow of Gerrard; but it was again recovered by the Valour and good fortune of his Son Adolphus. After whose death it fell, together with Holstein, upon Christiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, as before related, by whom it was incorporated with that Crown, never since alienated, but assigned sometimes in Portion for the younger Princes; the Patrimony at this time of the Sons of Alexander, surnamed of Sunderborg, (the place of his Nativity) Son of John, one of the younger Sons of King Christiern the third.

NORTH JUITLAND, the most Northern part of all the Chersonese, hath on the South the Dukedom of Sleswick, but on all other parts the Sea. Divided commonly, according to the number of the Bishopricks, into four Dioceses or Districts; that is to say,

1. The Diocese of RIP or RIPEN, bordering next to Sleswick, containing 30 Prefectures or Herets, (as they use to call them) seven Cities or walled Towns, and ten Castles. The chief of which are, 1. Ripen, the Episcopal See, situate near the German Ocean. 2. Kolding, on a Creek of the Baltick Sea; where Dorothy the Dowager of Christiern the third built a publick School, (one of my Authors calls it an University.)

2. The Diocese of ARHUSEN, lying on the North of Ripen, but more towards the Baltick, containeth 31 Herets or Prefectures, seven Cities or walled Towns, and five Castles. The chief whereof are, 1. Arhusen, the Episcopal See, seated on the Baltick, enjoying a commodious Port and well frequented; the first Bishop hereof being that Poppo who converted this Nation; Christianity and Episcopacy going for the most part hand in hand together. 2. Sohanderborg, on the South of Arhusen. 3. Kallo, a strong Castle of the Kings, seated in the inmost part of a large Bay, occasioned by the Promontory or Cape of Hillenis, extending hence two Dutch miles, to the high Hill of Ellemanberg. Opposite whereunto, and pertaining to this Jurisdiction, lie the Islands of 1. Samsoe, 2. Hiolm, 3. Inen, 4. Hiarnee, (perhaps Gerno) 5. Hilgenes, and others.

3. The Diocese of WIBORCH, on the North of Arhusen, containeth sixteen Herets, the Islands of 1. Jegen, 2. Hansholm, 3. Osholm, 4. Cisland, & Egholm, and 6. Bodum; three Cities or walled Towns, and as many Castles. The principal of which is Wiborch, the Episcopal See, an Inland City, but situate on a Water which runneth into the Bay of Limfort. The ordinary Seat of Judicature for both the Juitlands, for all Causes, as well Criminal as Civil: the Court continually sitting from one day to another, unless perhaps the Judges do sometimes adjourn it for their own Refreshments.

4. The Diocese of BURGLAVE, or Vandalia, lying farther North, is commonly subdivided into four Parts or Members: that is to say, 1. Thyland, lying South of the Bay of Limfort, on the Baltick side, whose chief Town is Alborch, the ordinary Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Vandalia, from hence many times stiled Alburgensis, situate on the Bay aforesaid, which, opening into the Baltick Sea, extendeth through the main Land Westward almost as far as the German Ocean. 2. Morsee, lying on the Ocean, and containing three Prefectures or Herets, the Town of Nieuping, the Castle of Lunsted, and the Isle of Agerse. 3. Hamberer, on the North west of the Bay of Limfort, containing four Herets, the Town of Thystad, where Christiern the third founded a publick School, or such another University as that of Kolding, the Castle of Orum, and the Islands of Oland and Oxholm. There is in this part also the high Rock called Skaringelint, a noted Sea-mark, fitly serving to give notice to the Sailour of the Quick-sands which lye underneath it and about this Coast. 4. Wensyssel, Vendilia, or Wendlie, that is (as Meursius doth expound it) Vandalorum sedes, the Seat of the Vandals, taketh up all the rest of the North-of Juitland, containing six Prefectures, the Islands of 1. Groysholm, 2. Hertzholm, and 3. Tidsholm, three Towns, and one Castle: the most remarkable of which is Schagen, within the most Northerly point of all this Chersonese. In this part is a very high Mountain called Mount Alberg, in which are found some marks and remainders of the ancient Giants, as the Inhabitants believe, and report accordingly.

The Inhabitants of both Juitlands, in the time of Ptolomy and before, were the Cobandi, Chali, Phunduſi, Charudes, and in the most Northern Tracts the Cimbri, of whom the four first were but Tribes or Nations. These moving toward the South in that great Expedition against Spain, made by the neighbouring Vandals on the Roman Empire, occasioned the Juites and Angli to inlarge or shift their Dwellings, each taking up the parts which lay nearest to them. The Juites, or Gutæ, being a People of Scandia, and there placed by Ptolomy, took up the Northern parts thereof, from them named Juitland: the other being a People of the Suevi, dwelling on the South of the Elb, possessed themselves of those parts which lay next the Saxons, their old Friends and Confederates, (their chief Town being Sleswick) where Angelen, now an obscure Village, once of greater note, doth preserve their memory. But these uniting with the Saxons in the Conquest of Britain, and leaving none behind which were fit for action, or not enough to keep possession of the Country against the new Invaders, gave opportunity to the Danes to come in upon them; by whom the Country being conquered as far as to the River Eyder, were planted by Colonies of Danes, and made a part of that Kingdom: of whom we shall say more in the close of all; first taking a survey of the Baltick Islands, and such Provinces on the main Land of Scandia as properly make up the Kingdom of Denmark.

2. THE BALTICK ISLANDS are in number 35, and are so called, because they lie dispersed in the Baltick Ocean. At this day it is called by the Germans De Oost Zee; anciently by some Mare Suevicum, by Pomponius Mela Sinus Codanus, by Strabo Sinus Venedicus; but generally Mare Balticum, because the great Peninsula of Scandia, within which it is, was by some Writers of the middle and darker Times called Balthia. It beginneth at the narrow passage called the Sound; and interlacing the Countries of Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and Poland, extendeth even to Livonia and Lituania. The reasons why this Sea, being so large, doth not ebbe and flow, are, 1. the Narrowness of the Streight by which the Ocean is let into it; and 2. the Northern situation of it, whereby the Celestial Influences have lesser power upon it. The principal of this great shole of Islands are, 1. Seland, 2. Funen, or Fionia, 3. Langland, 4. Lawland, 5. Falstre, 6. Aria, 7. Alsen, 8. Tusing, 9. Ween, 10. Femera, and 11. Bornholm. Some others of less note we shall only name, and so pass them over.

1. SELAND, the greatest Island of the Baltick Seas, is situate near the main Land of Scandia, parted from it by a narrow Streight or Fretum, not above a Dutch mile in breadth, commonly called by the name of the Sundt or Sound. A Streight through which all Ships which have any trading to or from the Baltick must of necessity take their course; all other Passages being barred up with impassable Rocks, or otherwise prohibited by the Kings of Denmark, upon Forfeiture of all their Goods. So that being the only safe Passage which these Seas afford, one may sometimes see two or three hundred Ships in a day pass through it: all which pay a Toll or Imposition to the King, according to their Bills of lading. And to secure this Passage, and command all Passengers, there are two strong Castles, the one in Scandia, called Helsinburg, whereof more anon; the other in this Island, which is called Cronenburg.

But before we come to this Castle, we must view the other parts of the Island, being in length two days journey, and almost as much in breadth: the Soil so fertile, that, without any manuring or charge at all, it yieldeth plenty of all Necessaries for the life of man. It was anciently called Codanonia, and containeth in it fifteen Cities or walled Towns, and twelve Royal Castles. The principal whereof are, 1. Haffen, or Hafnia, the Metropolis of the Islands, by the Dutch called Copenhagen, or the Haven of Merchants; situate near the Sea, with an handsom Port; the Isle of Amager, which lieth on the East-side of the Town, making a very safe Road for all kinds of Shipping. The Town is of an orbicular form, and reasonably well fortified; but the Buildings mean, for the most part of Clay and Timber, only to be commended for a spacious Market-place. Yet herein, as the chief Town of all the Kingdom, and situate in the heart of those Dominions, is the Palace-Royal; built of Free-stone, in form of a Quadrangle, but of no great Beauty or Magnificence. Most memorable for the University here founded by Henry, or Ericus the ninth; but perfected by King Christiern the first, by him and the succeeding Princes liberally endowed. 2. Fredericksburg, amongst Woods of Beech, built for a place of Pleasure by Frederick the second, where the King hath a fine House, and a little Park, in which (amongst other foreign Beasts) are some Fallow-Deer transported hither out of England in the 24. year of Queen Elizabeth. 3. Roschilt, not walled, but counted for a City, as a See Episcopal; the Bishops whereof have anciently had the honour of Crowning and Inaugurating the Kings of Denmark. In the Cathedral Church hereof are to be seen the Tombs of many of the Danish Kings; some of them very fair and sumptuous, the most mean and ordinary. 4. Sora, of old times beautified with a goodly Monastery, the Revenues whereof, at the alteration of Religion, were converted to the maintenance of a Free-School built here by Frederick the first. But in the year 1623, Christiern the fourth, adding hereunto the Revenues of two other dissolved Monasteries, the one in the Isle of Lawland and the other in Juitland, founded here a new University, for the better supply of learned Ministers for the Churches of Denmark and Norway, (which before could not be provided for out of Copenhagen) and furnished it with men of eminence in all Arts and Sciences for its first Professors. 5. Elsenore, or Helsingore, a Village only, but much frequented by Seafaring men as their Ships pass by the Sound, upon which it is. Near unto which is 6. the strong and magnificent Castle of Cronenburg, built with uncredible charge and pains by King Frederick the second; the foundation of it being laid on huge Stones sunk into the Sea, and so fastened together, that no Storm or Tempest, how violent soever, is able to shake it; well fortified as well as founded, and mixt of a Palace and a Fort, being since the first building of it the most constant Residence of the Kings of Denmark, who from hence may easily discern each Ship which sails through the Sundt, each of which addeth more or less unto his Revenues. A profitable and pleasing Prospect. By the Commodity of this and the opposite Castle, the King doth not only secure his Customs, but very much strengthen his Estate: the Castles being so near, and the Streight so narrow, that, by the addition of some few Ships, he may keep the greatest Navy that is from passing by him.

Unto the Government and Jurisdiction of this Island belong many others, the principal whereof are, 1. Amagria, magria, Amager, or Amach, which helps to make up the Port or Road of Copenhagen, spoken of before; planted with Hollanders brought hither by the procurement of Christiern the second. 2. Mund, or Moen-land, the chief Town whereof is called Stekoe. 3. (2) HVENE, or WEEN, a little South of Cronenburg Castle; a Dutch mile in length, but not quite so broad; remarkable only for the Studies of that famous Astronomer Tycho Brahe, to whom Frederick the second gave this Island, that living in a private and solitary place, removed from all company but his own Family only, he might with more convenience attend his Books. At this day most observable for the Castle of Uranopolis, or Urenborg, in which the greatest part of his Mathematical Instruments are preserved in safety.

3. FIONIA, or FVNEN, the second Island of account in all the Baltick, is situate betwixt Seland and Juitland, from which last it is parted by a Streight called Middelfar Sundt, so narrow, and of so small a Sea, that the Island and the Cherſoneſe seem joined together. A Country of a pleasant and delightful Situation, and as fruitful withal; containing 12 Dutch miles in length, and four in breadth; and therein 24 Herets or Pretectures, 16 Towns, and 6 Royal Castles, besides many goodly Villages, and Gentlemens Houses. The chief whereof are, 1. Odenſee, or Othenſche (called in Latine Othonia) an Episcopal See, founded here, at the first conversion of this People, by Otho the Great, whence it had the name. The Town is not large, but beautified with two fair Churches, the one dedicated to Saint Canute, the other to St. Francis: situate in the midst of the Island, from which the residue of the Towns are almost equally distant; and so commodiously seated for Trade and Merchandise, as they do not only traffick in the Baltick Sea, but in Sweden, Norway, Russia, Flanders, and Germany. 2. Nyborch, 3. Foborch, 4. Swynborch, 5. Middelfar, whence the Streight is so named, 6. Bowens, and 7. Kartemunde; all seated on some Haven, or convenient Creek. The principal of the Castles are, 1. Newborg, 2. Hagenſhow, 3. Eſcheborg, 4. Hinſgagel, 5. the Court of Rugard. In this Island, not far from the Castle of Hagenſhow, is the Mountain of Offenberg, where John Ranzovius, An. 1430. discomfited the great Army of Christopher, the Brother of Anthony, Earl of Oldenburg, coming in those unsettled times to invade the Kingdom, under colour of restoring Christiern the second, formerly deposed: in which Fight the Earls of Hoye and Teckleborg were both slain in the place, and the Kingdom after that in quiet from the like Pretenders.

South of Fionia, and under the Government hereof, are about 90 lesser Islands, most of them inhabited: the chief of which are,

4. LANGLAND, seven Dutch miles in length, in which, besides many Villages and Gentlemens Houses, we have the Town of Rudkoping, and the Castle of Franeker.

5. LAWLAND, disjoined from Seland by a little narrow Streight called Grone-ſundt; so plentiful of Corn and Chesnuts, that Ships full fraighted with them are sent yearly hence. An Island which, besides many Castles, Villages and Mansion-houses of the Gentry, hath five good Towns, viz. 1. Nyſtadt, 2. Naſco, 3. Togrop, 4. Richus, and 5. Mariboane; in which last anciently was a very rich Monastery, the Revenues whereof are now imployed for the endowment of the new University of Sora, founded by Christiern the fourth, as before was noted.

6. FALSTRE, four German miles in length, affording plenty of Corn yearly to some neighbouring Islands. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Nicopen, which for the Elegancy of the place and Pleasantness of the Situation is called the Naples of Denmark, 2. Stubcopen, from whence there is the ordinary passage into Germany, seven Dutch miles hence.

7. TUSING, not far from Swynborch, or Swineburg, a Town of Fionia; a Dutch mile in length, situate in a dangerous and troublesom Sea, from whence is no safe passage either to Seland, Funen, or Juitland, though much distant from neither. Chief places in it are, 1. Aſſens, towards Juitland; 2. Niburg, towards Seland, and 3. the Court of Keltorp, belonging to the noble Family of Roſencrantz.

8. FEMERA, or FEMEREN, a fruitful and well-peopled Island, having in it the Towns of 1. Derborch, 2. Stabul, and 3. Pietterſdorp. A place of great importance to the Crown of Denmark, not so much in danger of being made subject to the Imperialists by the taking of Holstein and both Juitlands, as by planting a strong Garrison in this small Island: and therefore with all diligence recovered by the King again, and better fortified than before, against all Invasions, Anno 1628. Of the remaining Islands which pertain unto Fionia, we find the names of 1. Aroe, 2. Romſo, 3. Endelo, 4. Ebelo, 5. Boko, 6. Brando, 7. Zoroe, 8. Agernis, 9. Hellenis, 10. Jerdo, 11. Birkholm; of which nothing memorable.

Amongst these Islands, but not subordinate to Fionia, are,

9. ARIA, belonging to the Dukedom of Sleſwick, consisting of 3. Parishes, some Gentlemens Houses, and the Town and Castle of Koping: supposed to be the habitation of the Arii, spoken of by Tacitus; but a Colony rather of them, as I suppose. And not far off,

10. ALSEN, another little Island, but of more repute, callled in Latine Elyſia, opposite to the Gulf or Bay of Flensborg in the Dukedom of Sleſwyck, to which it also appertaineth. Well stored it is with Beasts for profit, and Game for pleasure; so populous, that some thousands of men may be easily and suddenly raised in it; consisting of 13 Parishes and 4 Towns: that is to say, 1. Gammelgard, 2. Oſterholm, 3. Norderborg, and 4. the good Town and Castle of Sunderborg, one of the ordinary Residences of the Dukes of Sleſwick, and honoured with the Birth of many of their Princes of the Royal Family. Some think it was the Habitation anciently of the Elyſii, spoken of by Tacitus, and by him placed next unto the Angli: But being the Angli in those times dwelt about the Elb, I rather think, that when some Colonies of the Angli seated themselves in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, as before was said, some of the Arii and Elyſii might go along for company, and plant themselves near them and these Islands.

11. BORNHOLM, the last of all the Baltick which belong to Denmark, is situate more Eastward, opposite to that part of Scandia which is called Bleking, betwixt it and Pomeren. An Isle of excellent Pasturage, breeding plenty of Cattel, wherewith, as also with Butter, Cheese, Wool, Hides, and some store of Fruits, they supply the wants of some of their neighbours; besides good quantities of powdered Beef & Mutton, which they barrel up and sell to Mariners. It containeth many good Towns and wealthy Villages; the chief whereof is Bornholm, which gives name to the Island. Both Town and Island were pawned by some former Kings unto those of Lubeck; from them redeemed by King Frederick the second for a great sum of money, after it had been in their possession about 50 years.

These Islands in the time of Pomponius Mela were by one general name called the Hemodes, in number reckoned to be seven; the residue either not inhabited, or not taken notice of, are no-where mentioned in the Ancients. Of these seven, the greatest and best peopled was called Codanonia, (supposed to be Seland,) in which the said Authour placeth the Teutoni. By Ptolemy it is called Scandia dia Minor, with reference to the great Peninſula of Scandia, ſuppoſed by him to be an Iſland. From this, or from the Sea adjoining, called Sinus Codanus, the people of theſe Iſlands and the next Eaſtern Continent took the name of Danes; ſpreading the name afterwards, as they did their Conqueſts; of which more anon. In the mean time we muſt croſs over the Sound, and take notice of ſuch other parts of this Kingdom as lie on the other ſide thereof, in the vaſt Continent or Demy-Iſland (which you will) of Scandia: of which ſomewhat muſt be firſt premiſed, in regard that not only ſome parts of Denmark, but the whole Country of Norway (the Northern Iſlands excepted) are contained in it.

3. SCANDIA, by Pliny and Solinus called Scandinavia, by Jornandes Scanzia, hath on the Eaſt that Bay or Branch of the Baltick which is called the Finniſch and Bodner Seas, on the North and Weſt the main Ocean, on the South, where it points towards Germany, the Baltick or Ooſt Zee, as the Dutch call it; joined to the main Continent of Sarmatia by an Iſthmus, or Neck of Land, at the bottom of the Bodner Zee, not far from Wardhuys. In regard of ſo great Seas on all parts thereof, it was generally by the Ancients thought to be an Iſland, but incompertæ magnitudinis, of an unknown greatneſs, as both Pytheas and Xenophon Lampſacenus do affirm in Pliny: by one of which it is called Baſilia, by the other Baltia; from whence the name of Baltick to the Sea adjoining. But later Navigations and Experience have confuted that opinion, by which it is found to be no Iſland, but a part of the Continent, and a great one too; containing the whole Kingdom of Norway, the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Sweden, and ſome part of Denmark. That part hereof which belongs to Denmark is ſituate in the South of this great Peninſula, and divided into the three Provinces of Hallandia, Scania, and Bleking: and in them are 23 Herets or Prefectures, and 15 Cities.

1. HALLANDIA, or HALLAND, hath on the Eaſt the wild Woods which part it from Gothland, on the Weſt the intervening Sea betwixt it and Juitland, on the North Sweden properly and ſpecially ſo called, on the South Scandia or Schonen. A Country which for the healthfulneſs of the Air, plainneſs of the Soil, commodiouſneſs of Havens, plenty of Fiſh, pleaſure of Hunting, for inexhauſtible Mines of Braſs and Lead, (with ſome veins of Silver) frequency of well-peopled Towns and Villages, and Civility of the Inhabitants, is not inferiour to any. Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Laholm, 2. Halmſtad, 3. Falkenborch; all of them on the Sea, at the mouth of navigable Streams, whoſe names I find not. 4. Warsberg, upon the Sea-ſide alſo, but fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle on the top of an Hill; taken and garriſoned by the Swedes Anno 1569, and not without great difficulty recovered by the Danes again Anno 1569.

2. SCANIA, or SCHONEN, hath on the Eaſt Bleſcida or Bleking, on the Weſt the Sound, running along the ſhore hereof for the ſpace of twenty German miles, on the North Halland, on the South the Baltick or Ooſt Zee. The Country is of the ſame nature with Halland, as before deſcribed; the Character of that pertaining to all the three; this having over and above, as peculiar to it, that the Sea-ſhores are ſtored with ſuch Sholes of Herrings, that ſometimes Ships are ſcarce able with wind and oar to break through them, and row off the Harbour. It is in length 72 miles, 48 in breadth. Chief Towns in which are, 1. Linden, an Archbiſhop's See, the Metropolitan of Denmark and Norway; advanced unto that honour by the means and mediation of Ericus the firſt, who purpoſely made a journy to Rome to effect that buſineſs; the Church of Denmark being before that time ſubject to the Archbiſhops of Breme. This was about the year 1100. It is ſituate ſomewhat within the Land; but the Cathedral eaſily diſcernible by Mariners as they ſail along. The City is but mean, and, were it not for the Cathedral, of no beauty at all. But that indeed is affirmed to be a work of much Magnificence and Art; eſpecially for the Clock, the Dial, and ſome outward adjuncts. For in the Dial curiouſly ſet out with divers Colours are to be ſeen diſtinctly the Year, Month, Week-day, and Hour of every day throughout the year; with the Feaſts, both moveable and fixed; together with the Motion of the Sun and Moon, and their paſſage through each Degree of the Zodiack. Then for the Clock, it is ſo framed by artificial Engines, that whenſoever it is to ſtrike, two horſemen encounter one another, giving as many blows apiece as the Bell ſounds hours: and on the opening of a door there appears a Theatre, the Virgin Mary on a Throne with Chriſt in her Arms, and the three Kings or Magi (with their ſeveral Trains) marching in order, doing humble reverence, and preſenting ſeverally their Gifts; two Trumpeters ſounding all the while, to adorn the Pomp of that Proceſſion. 2. Malmoge, or Elbogen, (called by both names) at the very Southern point hereof, juſt oppoſite to Copenhagen in Seland, a well-traded Port; the Birth-place of Gaſpar Bartholinus, otherwiſe called Malmogius Danus, that great Mathematician, ſuppoſed to be the Authour of the Clock and Dial before deſcribed. 3. Trelleborg, on the North of Elbogen, 4. Landſcron, on the Sea-ſide, of great ſtrength and conſequence. 5. Helſenborg, a mean Town, but fortified with an impregnable Caſtle, juſt oppoſite to Helſinore and Cronenburg in Seland; the other of the two Keys which openeth into the Sound. 6. Rottenby, a Frontier-town bordering on Verendia, a Province of Swethland. 7. Chriſtiana, or Chriſtiernſtorp, a ſtrong piece built by Chriſtiern the fourth, An. 1604, compaſſed by the Sea, and fortified by Fens and Marſhes, thought to be impregnable.

3. BLESCIDA, or BLEKING, is bounded on the Eaſt and South with the Baltick Sea, on the North with Verendia, a Province of Swethland, on the Weſt with Scania or Schonen; more mountainous and barren than either, but yet partaking ſomewhat of the former Character which we had of Holland. Chief Towns hereof are 1. Uſted, on the mouth of a River falling into the Baltick. 2. Chriſtiernburg, in Latine Chriſtianapolis, on the borders of Swethland; raiſed out of the ground by Chriſtiern the fourth, to defend his Kingdom on that ſide, Anno 1604, but not long after by a warlike ſtratagem ſurpriſed by the Swedes, in the late War betwixt thoſe Kingdoms in the year 1611; deſtroyed and diſpeopled by that Nation, who looked upon it as a dangerous and unpleaſant Object, but ſince repaired and repleniſhed. 3. Ahuys, upon the River which divides the Kingdoms not far from Chriſtiernburg.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Guta and Dauciones, taking up the South-parts of this great Peninſula. Meridionalia tenent Gutæ & Dauciones, as we find in Ptolemy, Geogr. l. 2. c. 11. which in all probability muſt be meant of theſe Provinces. Of theſe the Gutes, paſſing over into the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, poſſeſſed themſelves of the North parts of it, ſince from them called Juitland. The reſt, uniting with the people of thoſe many Iſlands which lye together in the Bay or Gulf called Sinus Codanus, (now the Baltick Sea) took the name of Danes; and not from Dan, I know not what King thereof above 1000 years before the Birth of our Saviour. Firſt taken notice of by that name in Jornandes de rebus Geticis, who lived about the time of Juſtinian the firſt; about which time, or not long after, it is conceived that they made them-themselves Masters of so much of the Cimbrick Chersonese as had been formerly possessed by the Juites and Angli, whose forsaken or ill-peopled Seats they possessed themselves of. After this we hear little of them till the time of Charles the Great, living in a confused estate, sometimes made subject to the Norwegians, sometimes to the Swedes, but always without Law and Order; till by the King Godfrey or Gotricus they were regulated by Laws, and reduced to an orderly kind of life, Anno 797. About this time they first began to infest the Coasts of England, invaded Friesland with a Fleet of 200 Sail; and had much weakened and endangered the great Empire of France, if the unseasonable death of Godfrey, and the Quarrels which arose about the Succession after his decease, had not kept them off. Their Affairs at home being again well settled, they imployed their whole Forces against England, as the weaker Enemy: over which they tyrannized 250 years, and reigned 26, under three Kings of that Nation. Outed of that, and the terrour of their name being over, they have been most busied with their Neighbours of Sweden and Germany; improving their Estate, but rather by Marriages and civil Contracts, than by force of Arms, with the addition of the Kingdom of Norway and the Dukedom of Holstein: their Pretensions to, and for a time the possession of, the Crown of Sweden getting them nothing in conclusion but Blows and Losses. So that we have no more to do then to sum up a Catalogue of the Kings hereof, till the uniting of the two Crowns of Denmark and Norway, leaving the rest that follow to another place.

The Kings of DENMARK.

3. NORWAY.

NORWAY is bounded on the East with Swethland, from which it is parted by a perpetual Ridge of rough and wild Mountains, called the Dofrine Hills; on all other parts by the Sea: that is to say, by the Frozen Sea upon the North; the German or Norwegian Ocean upon the West; and on the South with the Danish

Sea, interposing betwixt it and the Cimbrick Chersonese, being in breadth from Schagen, the most Northern point of Juitland, to Congel, the most Southerly Town of Norway, no less then 250 miles.

It is called Norway quasi Tractus seu Via Septentrionalis, from the Northern situation of it; containing in length 1300 miles, in breadth not above half so much, inhabited by a People given to Hospitality, Plain-dealing, and abhorring Theft. Anciently they were great Warriers, & became terrible to all the more Southern Nations; by whom they were called Normans, (that is to say, Homines Boreales, or North-men, as Willielmus Gemiticensis rightly hath it) being at that time a Mixture of all the Northern Nations together, or of the Norwegians and Swethlanders, apart from the Danes, whose steps they followed in their frequent, or rather continual, Piracies on the Coasts of England, France and Ireland. By Helmoldus in the same sense they are called Nordluidi, a name made into Latine out of the Dutch word Nord, and the French word Lieu, signifying men of a Northern Place or Nation.

Of the Position of it in regard of the Heavens we have spoke already; but more particularly it reacheth from the first Parallel of the twelfth Clime, where the Pole is elevated 58 Degrees, 26 Minutes, as far as to the 71. Degree of Latitude. By which accompt the longest Day in the Southern point is but 18 hours; whereas at Wardhuys, being situate farthest North of all this Country, they have no Night for almost three whole months together.

The Country is for the most part rocky, mountainous and barren, full of vast Woods, extream cold, and but ill inhabited. In the best parts thereof it affords little Corn, and in the most Northern none at all: insomuch that the common sort of people are fain to use dried Fish (that which we commonly call Stock-fish) in stead of Bread. but the better (that is, the richer) sort buy Corn of such Merchants as come to traffick with them. Their chief Commodities are Stock-fish, rich Furrs, Train-oyl, Pitch, and Tackling for Ships, as Masts, Cables, Deal-boards, and the like; which the Inhabitants exchange for Corn, Wine, Fruits, Beer, and other necessaries for man's life. The Country is exceedingly troubled with certain little Beasts which they call Lemmers. They are about the bigness of a Field-Mouse, and are by the Inhabitants said to drop out of the Clouds in tempestuous weather. They devour, like the Locusts, every green thing on the earth; and at a certain time die all in heaps (as it were) together; and with their stench so poison the Air, that the poor people are long after troubled with the Jaundies and with a Giddiness in the Head. But these Beasts come not so often to infect the Land, as the Whales do to terrifie and molest the shores; the Western Seas being very deep, and therefore a fit habitation for those great Leviathans: against whose violence and fury the Mariners and people of the Sea-coast have found a Remedy, which is by casting out some water intermixed with the Oyl of Castor; the smell whereof doth force them to retire immediately. Without this help there were no Fishing on these Coasts, which is the greatest Staple-commodity (besides materials for Shipping) which the Country yieldeth.

The Towns here are exceeding thin, and in them the Houses for the most part very poor and miserable; commonly patched up of Dirt and Hurdles, not much unlike our ordinary Cottage-houses in the Fen-Countries. It is distributed into five Prefectures or Governments, according to the number of the Castles which command the same. Of these,

1. The first most towards the South is the Castle of BAHUYS: to which are subject the Towns of 1. Marstrand, seated in a Demi-Island begirt with Rocks; of most note for the infinite quantity of Herrings caught hereabouts. 2. Congel, upon the Sea, a Town of Merchandise, opposite to Schagen in Denmark. 3. Oddewald.

2. AGGERHUYS, the second of the five Royal Castles, hath under its Command the Towns of 1. Anslo, or Asloia, on a Bay or Gullet opposite to Juitland, an Episcopal See, and of most esteem of all the Country, by reason of the Courts of Judicature which are therein held. 2. Tonsberg, or Koningsberg, that is to say, the King's or the Kingly Mountain, formerly a Retiring-place of the Kings of Norway. 3. Frederickstadt, built by one of the Fredericks, Kings of Denmark; 4. Schin or Schon, remarkable for its Mines of Iron and Copper. 5. Saltzburg; 6. Hammar the greater, and 7. Hammar the less, divided by the interposing of the Bay called Sinus Mæsianus in former times the See of a Bishop, since removed to Asloia, or rather thereunto united in these latter times, as many poor Bishopricks be in Ireland.

3. BERGERHUYS is the third Castle of Command herein. Subordinate whereunto are, 1. Bergen, the principal Town of the Country, an Episcopal See, and the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark, situate amongst high Mountains, at the bottom of a deep Creek or Arm of the Ocean called Carmesund. A noted Port, and much resorted to by Merchants of most forein Nations, bringing in Corn, Meal, Bread, Beer, Wine, and Aqua-vitæ, to supply the natural wants and defects hereof; and in exchange transporting hence Fish, Furrs, Cordage, and other materials for Shipping. In which regard it was accounted formerly one of the four chief Staple-Towns of the Dutch Merchants of the Hanse: the other three being London in England, Novogrod in Muscovie, and Bruges in Flanders. But of late time this Bergen hath lost most of its Trade, removed hence to Wardhuys, nearer unto Muscovie: as the great Town of Novogrod, by reason of the change of Navigation from the Baltick into that of the Northern passage, hath given way to S. Nicolas; and Bruges was deprived of her Traffick by Antwerp, from whence it is removed to Amsterdam. For the Hollanders, by blocking up the Haven, but especially by keeping Bergen op Zoon, have such a command over the River, that no Vessel can pass or repass without their licence. 2. Staffanger, an Episcopal See also, but not else observable.

4. The Castle of TRONDHEIM is the fourth, situate in the Town of Trondheim, or Dromheim, formerly called Tronden, and in Latine Nidrosia; the See of an Archbishop, who is the Metropolitan of Norway. A beautiful City heretofore, but since the Subjection of this Country unto the Danes reduced to a Burrough. So called of the River Nider, upon which it is seated, and Rosa, the name then of the principal Church; which in time gave place to the Cathedral for greatness and neatness of the Fabrick, all of polished Stone, not giving place to any in Europe, about the year 1530 much defaced with Fire, which began at the Altar, the damage done by it being estimated at 7000 Crowns; a great sum of money in those times, and so poor a Country. So that, by casting up our reckoning, we find in Norway one Archbishop and four Bishops; that is to say, the Archbishop of Trondheim or Nidrosia, the Bishops of Bergen, Anslo, Staffangor, and Hammar: of the same Power, Jurisdiction and Revenue, since the Reformation, as those of Denmark; whereof, and of the first Conversion of this People to the Christian Faith, we have spoke already.

5. The fifth and last Castle which commands this Country is that of WARDHUYS, so called of the Town

Town of Wardhuys, as that is from the Isle Ward, in which it is seated. A small Castle, and the Town in former times but mean and poor, situate in the extreme North-point of all this Kingdom; but in those times accounted (as easily it might) for the chief of this Prefecture, and honoured in the Summer time with the Seat and Residence of the Governour, retiring more Southwards in the Winter, at what time, by reason of the extremity of the Cold, and long absence of the Sun for some months together (the Town lying within the Arctick Circle) it is hardly habitable. But of late time it is much improved both in Wealth and Building, by reason of the removal of the English Trading from Novogrod, near the Baltick Sea, to the Town of S. Nicolas, not far from hence; drawing by that means the Trade of Muscovie and Norway more near together. So that now it is not only useful unto the Danes, in regard that it somewhat aweth the neighbouring Lappians, and commandeth the Natives, for that cause fortified very strongly by King Frederick the second; but made very profitable to him also, by the resort of Dutch and English, who must of necessity touch at it (if they make no stay there) in their way to Muscovie. Other Towns in these two last Prefectures are not worth looking after.

And so much for the Continent or Main-land of Norway: let us next look upon the Islands in the Northern Ocean which belong unto it.

The ISLANDS in the Northern Ocean.

THE Northern Sea, so named from its Northern situation, is by some called Mare Scythicum, because it coasted along the Shores of Scythia; by Juvenal Oceanus Glacialis, because often frozen; by Pliny, in the same sense, Mare Amalchium, the word in the Scythick Language signifying frozen, or congealed; by the Russes or Muscovites Myrmanskoy More; by the Cimbrians, in their Tongue, Marimorusa, that is to say, the Dead Sea, because of the slowness of its motion, often clogged with Ice; and, in the same sense, Mare pigrum, by Tacitus. This Tacitus doth best describe, from whom take it thus. "Trans Sueones Mare aliud pi- "grum & prope immotum, &c. Beyond the Swedes there "is another Sea, so slow and almost immoveable, that "many think it to be the Bounds which compass the "whole World. Some are perswaded that the Sound of "the Sun is heard as he ariseth out of this Sea; and that "many shapes of Gods are seen, and the Beams of his "Head. Illuc usque (& fama vera) tantùm Natura; At "this Sea (the Report is credible) is the end of Nature
"and the World. The English were the first of all civil people who adventured to open and discover the Passages of it, under the conduct of Richard Chancellour, arriving by this way in Russia, An. 1553, and tracing out the way; which others of that Nation, together with the Flemmings, Hollanders, and some Towns of the Hanse, have since followed. Of which more in Muscovie. The principal Islands dispersed in it are, 1. Groenland. 2. Iseland. 3. Freezland, belonging to the Crown of Norway, to be surveyed at the present: Nova Zemla and Sir Hugh Willoughbie's Island, appertaining (if to any) to the Knez, or great Duke of Muscovie; of which more hereafter.

1. ISELAND is situate under the Arctick Circle; in length 144 German miles, 65 in breadth. So called from the abundance of Ice in it and about it; frozen continually for the space of 8 months, and so vehemently chilled with the Northern Winds, that it yieldeth neither Corn nor Trees, except Juniper only: yet there is Grass in such abundance, that the people are of opinion, that if they do not sometimes keep their Cattel from feeding, they are in danger to surfeit and die with fulness. Beasts for Labour here are both Horses and Oxen; the Oxen and Kine without Horns, but the Sheep not so: and they have also here a fine breed of little Dogs, known amongst us by the name of Iseland Dogs, the delight of Ladies; as also white Falcons and white Ravens, Eagles with white Tails, with Hares and Bears of the same colour. By reason of their want of Corn, the people eat Stock-fish (as in Norway) in stead of Bread: yet notwithstanding, by reason of the benefit of the Sea and access of Strangers, they have all things necessary brought unto them, (even to Wood and Timber) of which the richer sort make use, giving the Merchant in return sometimes the flesh of Beeves and Mutton, but ordinarily Butter, Skins, Horses, Hawks, Brimstone, and Fish especially, the Staple Commodity of the Country; of which they have such plenty, and of so good condition, that a piece of Iseland Ling is counted with us as a fit Dish for a Nobleman's Table.

The people for the most part are of a plain and simple nature, living (as in the Golden Age) on that which Nature gives them, without help of Art, more than that of making Cheese and Butter: the Mountains serving them for Towns, and the Rivers for Drink, and their lodging is all under one roof with their Horses and Oxen. They use neither physick nor Physicians, yet live so long (and probably the longer for it) that many of them attain to the age of 150 years and more. The Women are exceeding fair, but they know not how to attire themselves; nor is there any difference in Apparel betwixt the Sexes, so that it not easie to know one from another. Few of them but have some familiar Spirit to do them service: and not withstanding the endeavour of the Ministers to purge them from this Impiety, yet it is so grafted in them that they cannot leave it.

It is observable, that notwithstanding the cold condition of this Island, yet in many places it is full of Heats and Fire under the ground: which, by the Antiperistasis of the cold Air stopping the Pores of the Earth, and taking from it the liberty of Evaporation, doth burn more vehemently: insomuch that there are three high Mountains whose Tops are always covered with Snow, and yet continually burning. The names of them are Hecla, Helga, and La-Croix, but the first the principal, by some called Heclefort; which sometimes casts out Fire, sometimes flaming Water, then Black Ashes and Pumice-stones in so great abundance that it darkneth the Sun, and makes the Country for six miles round about it to be uninhabited. Stranger things are not spoken of Ætna than of these three Mountains: and here the Superstitious people have the same opinion which they have in Sicily, viz. That underneath must needs be Hell, and the habitations of the Damned. But to judicious men the natural reason of these Flames is plain and obvious; occasioned by those veins of Brimstone (great quantity whereof they send into forein parts) on which the foundation of the Hills is laid: here being many Bathes and Fountains of hot water, which have Sulphur swimming at the top.

At the first planting of this Island, the people did not trouble themselves with building Towns, but every one seated himself where he thought convenient, dwelling in Cells and Caverns digged in the bottom of the Rocks. By means whereof the Inland parts have not many Houses: but the Sea-coasts, since the coming of so many Strangers to them, begin to be built in many places, the Buildings for the most part being of Timber, roofed with Flags with an Hole on the sides of the roof to let in the Light. So that we are not to expect many fine Towns or Cities: the principal of them which are being, 1. Holar, in the North,

North, and 2. Schalholt, in the Southern part; both Bishops Sees, having petty Schools, consisting of 24 Scholars apiece, to whom the Latine Tongue is taught at the charge of the Bishops. 3. Haffensfordt, an Haven Town, where under Tents the Dutch Merchants barter their Commodities. And 4. Bestede, a Castle, the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark.

It hath been generally conceived that this Island is that Thule which the Poets so often speak of: as Tibi serviat ultima Thule, in Virgil; Nec sit terris ultima Thule, in Seneca the Tragedian. Nor did there want some reason to perswade them to this opinion; this being indeed the farthest part of the old known World. But greater reasons are against it. For when Solinus saith, Multæ sunt circa Britannicum Insulæ, è quibus Thule ultima; I hope Thule must be one of the British Isles. And when Tacitus saith of Agricola, Insulas quas Orcadas vocant domuit, despecta est & Thule; I am sure that Iseland is so far from being kenned by any one of the Orcades, that it is at least eight Degrees distant. So that Thule must be sought for in another place, and where that is hath been shewed already. As for Iseland, it was so far from being known unto the Ancients, that it was hardly known unto those of Norway till the year 874, when some of the Norwegians were driven out of their Country by Harald the first, who first suppressing the many petit Kings of the Norwegians, made many of them seek new Dwellings; of which some few arrived here; where finding room enough to plant in, and no great loss (if any) by change of their Dwelling, they invited many of their Friends and Countrymen to come unto them. An. 1070, they were converted to the Gospel by some Preachers sent hither from Adelbert the Archbishop of Breme. By whose perswasion and procurement they founded two Episcopal Sees; adding thereto in tract of time eight Religious Houses: that is to say, the Monasteries of Pingore, Remestede, Modur, and Monkeniere, under the Government and Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Halar; and those of Videy, Pernebar, Kirckebur, and Skiade, under the Bishop of Schalholt. In the year 1260, it was first brought under the Crown of Norway, following since that the Fortunes of it in all Changes both of Church and State; made subject with it to the Kings of Denmark, together with it reformed in matters of Religion according to the Confession of Augsburg, retaining still their Bishops, with a limited power, and turning the Revenues of their Monasteries unto other uses, as there they did according to the will and pleasure of their Lords of Denmark.

2. South-west of Iseland lies another, and as cold an Isle, commonly called by the name of FREEZLAND, from the continual Frosts unto which it is subject. By the Latines it is called Frizlandia, to distinguish it from Frisia or Friesland in Germany. It is situate under the North Frigid Zone; but not so much within the Arctick as Iseland is; the longest Day here in the height of Summer not exceeding 20 hours: and yet the Soil is so cold and barren, that it beareth neither Corn nor Fruit, the Inhabitants living most on Fish; which as it is their only Food, so is it also their chief Commodity wherewith to entertain or invite the Merchant. And hereof there is such abundance caught upon their Coasts, that they are never without the company of Hanse men, Scots, Hollanders, Danes, and English; by which last it hath been so frequented in these later times, that it hath been called by some the Western England. For quantity it is somewhat bigger than Iseland; but by reason of the bitter Air, and the Defects above mentioned, very thinly inhabited. The chief Town of it is called Freezland, by the name of the Island; situate on the Eastern Shore of it. Besides which, there are some others set down in the Maps; as 2. Samescot. 3. Andefort. 4. Sorand, but not much observable. Westward whereof, as Zieglerus (and out of him Magnus) telleth us, is a less Island called Icaria, giving the name of Mare Icarium to the Sea adjoyning: so called (by his mistake or translation of the Fable) from Icarus the Son of Dædalus, a King of Scotland, who did once (but no body knows when) Lord it over these Islands.

III. GROENLAND, so called, as some say, from the Greenness of it in the Summer; as others say, by Antiphrasis, because never green, by reason of the sharpness of Winter. But the former Etymology is more agreeable to the state of the Country. For though it be continually covered with Snow, except in June, July and August, (insomuch that though the people be always clad with Furs and Skins, yet they feel no heat) yet in those months it is exceeding fresh and green, and affords good Pasturage. It is situate for the greatest part within the Arctick, between the 65. and 77. Degrees of Northern Latitude: so that the longest Day in the Southern part is 21 hours and a half; and in the most Northern they have no Night for three months and two weeks. The known length of it is affirmed to be 600 miles, and may be much longer than so for ought that any body knows: there being no perfect discovery made of it hitherto, though much frequented by the English and Hollanders, (two great Seafaring Nations) for the benefit of the Whale-fishing, much there in use. Their chief Commodities are Fish, white Bears, wild Deer, and some store of Cattel there bred upon their Pastures, but housed for the most part all the Winter. The greatest part of the people dwell in the Caves, and delight in Necromancy, to which they are more wilfully addicted than those in Iseland, because less acquainted with the Gospel.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Saint Thomas, (in which there is a Monastery of Dominican Frjers) seated in the North-East part of the Island; concerning which Mercator speaks of one thing which is very observable, relating that it is not far from a flaming or burning Mountain, seated upon hot scalding springs, conveyed by Pipes of stone into the Monastery, and serving both as a Stove to warm them, and for a Fire to boil their Victuals. The Walls of the Monastery are built of Pumice-stones cast out of that Mountain; which, being tempered with the water of those burning Springs, doth make a glutinous substance, serving instead of Lime, and as long durable. The Gardens of the Convent, in regard of this heat, flourish all the year with Herbs and sweet smelling Flowers; and the adjoyning Sea, for the same reason being never frozen, affords good plenty of Fish and Fowl the whole year about, not only for the Monks, but the neighbouring Islanders. So far and to this purpose he. The second Town of note is Ilva, not far from this Monastery: and 3. Munderpre, on the South East point. Others, as in a Country not well discovered, we have little notice of: though it be near 300 years since Nicolas Zeni, a Venetian, cast by Tempest on the Coast of Freezland, and by the King thereof imployed upon new Discoveries, An. 1380, first made it known to us of Europe; it being immediately on that discovery possessed by the Norwegians, and made a Member and portion of that Crown.

As for the Norwegians themselves, now their Fellow-subjects, they were first known in the time of Ptolemy by the name of Chedini, possessing then the Western parts of Scandia. Uniting with their Neighbours, both Danes and Swithlanders, they became better known in the flourishing times of the French Empire by the name of Normans; first called so by Eginhartus in his History of the Life of Charles the Great, infesting then the Sea-coasts of France and Belgium. Under this name they fell so heavily heavily on the French, especially in the times of Charles the Simple, that they extorted from him that goodly Country, since of them called Normandy, conferred on Rollo, first Duke thereof, Anno 912, whose Successors much increased their glory by the Conquest of England; as some private Adventurers of them did by the Conquest of the Kingdoms of Naples, Sicily, and Antioch. Afterwards setling on their own bottom, every one of these Northern Nations acting by it self, they were called Norwegians: sometimes, as formerly, commanding over all three Kingdoms, subject successively to each; but most an end governed by their own Kings, till their final Subjugation by the Danes. And as a Nation acting solely and by it self, they subdued Ireland under the conduct of Turgesius, who tyrannized there for a time; as also all the Orcades and the Isle of Man, sold or surrendred by them upon good conditions to the English and Scots, who by those Titles still possess them. The Catalogue of their Kings, leaving out all those of the darker times (parallel to our Brute and the first Scotish Fergus) as meerly fabulous, we will begin with King Snibdagerus, who was King of all the three Kingdoms, and at his death divided them again amongst his three Sons; whose Successors Munster thus reckoneth.

The Kings of NORWAY.

1. Snibdagerus.
2. Haddingus.
3. Hetharius.
4. Collerus.
5. Frogerus.
6. Gotarus.
7. Rotherus.
8. Helga.
9. Hasmunus,
10. Reginaldus.
11. Gumaraus.
12. Osmundus.
13. Olaus.
14. Osmundus II. not long after whose time, Anno scil. 800, the Normans began their Irruptions.
15. Aquinus.
16. Haraldus.
17. Olaus.
18. Sueno, King of Denmark by Birth, and of Norway by Conquest.
19. Olaus III. Son of Swain or Sueno, succeeded in the Realms of Denmark and Norway, Canutus his younger Brother being King of England. In this King's time the Norwegians first received the Gospel.
20. Canutus, King of England, succeeded his Brother Olaus in the Kingdoms of Denmark and Norway, to which he also added the Crown of Sweden.
21. Sueno II. by whom the Kingdom was restored to the Norwegians.
22. Canutus II.
23. Magnus.
24. Harald II.
25. Magnus II. King of Sweden and Norway.

1326 26. Magnus III. King of Sweden and Norway, intending the Crown of Sweden for Ericus his eldest Son, conferred that of Norway on Haquin, or Aquinus, his second Son.

1359 27. Aquinus, King of Norway, younger Son of Magnus the third, married with Margaret, eldest Daughter of Waldemar the third, King of Denmark; so uniting the Kingdom. And though Olaus, the only Son of his Bed, died young without any Issue; yet the Danes, having once got footing in Norway, so assured themselves of it, that they have ever since possessed it as a subject Kingdom, keeping the Natives so poor and low, that they are not able to assert their former Liberties, and not permitting them to use any Shipping, so much as for transporting their own Commodities, for fear they should grow wealthy and strong at Sea. Besides, the strong Garrisons maintained in most parts of the Country keep it in such an absolute Awe, that they dare not stir against the Danes, if their stomachs served them. So that now Norway being made subject to the Crown of Denmark, or both made Fellow-subjects to the same King; we must next look upon these Kings, not as Kings of each distinct and separate from the other, but as they are in Fact and Title.

The Kings of DENMARK and NORWAY.

1376 1. Haquin, or Aquinus, King of Denmark and Norway: of this last by Descent, of the other by Marriage.

1380 2. Olaus, Son of Aquinus and Margaret.

1383 3. Margaret, Wife of Aquinus, Mother of Olaus, and Daughter of Waldemar the third, after the death of her Son, (in whose time she governed as his Guardian) took upon her the Kingdom in her own Right; not only keeping Norway in the state she found it, but adding unto Denmark the Crown of Sweden, won by the Vanquishment of Albert Duke of Mecklenburg, then King thereof. A gallant and magnanimous Lady, the Semiramis of Germany.

1411 4. Ericus, Duke of Pomeren, and Knight of the Garter, Son of the Lady Mary, Dutchess of Pomeren, Daughter of Ingelburgis, the Sister of Margaret, by whom he was adopted for her Heir, succeeded after her decease in all the three Kingdoms: outed of all before his death by a strong Faction made against him, and his Estates conferred on 1439 5. Christopher, Count Palatine of the Rhene, and Duke of Bavaria, (but in Title only) the Son of Margaret, Sister of Ericus; chosen by the joynt consent of all the States of these Kingdoms. After whose death (without Issue) the Danes, considering the great advantage they had gotten by the addition of Norway, pitched upon Adolphus, Duke of Sleswick and Earl of Holstein, for the next Successor; that they might get in those Estates to their Kingdom also. Who, excusing himself by reason of his Age and want of Children, commended to them Christiern Earl of Oldenburg, his Kinsman and next Heir, who was chosen accordingly.

1448 6. Christiern, Earl of Oldenburg, upon the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus, chosen King of Denmark and Norway, succeeded his said Uncle in the Estates of Holstein and Sleswick, continuing since united unto that Crown, and added also thereunto by Conquest the Kingdom of Sweden.

1482 7. John, Son of Chriſtiern, ſucceeded in all three Kingdoms; Knight of the Order of the Garter.

1514 8. Chriſtiern II. Son of John, King of Denmark, Norway and Sweden, which laſt he held under with great cruelty; hated, by reaſon of his Tyranny toward all ſorts of people, and outed of his Kingdoms by his Uncle Frederick, Anno 1522. by whom at laſt he was taken, and kept in priſon till he died, Anno 1559.

1523 9. Frederick, Brother of John, and Uncle of Chriſtiern the ſecond, choſen King of Denmark and Norway on the Abdication of his Nephew, Reformed Religion in both Kingdoms according to the Confeſſion of Augsburg.

1535 10. Chriſtiern III. ſuppreſſed with great trouble the Party formed againſt him in behalf of Chriſtiern the ſecond, perfected the Reformation begun in the time of his Father, and was a great Benefactor to the Univerſity of Copenhagen.

1559 11. Frederick II. Son of Chriſtiern the third, ſubdued Ditmarſh, before unconquered by the Danes or Earls of Holſtein, and added it unto that Dukedom, (both being united to that Crown, though held of the Empire;) Knight of the Garter.

1588 12. Chriſtiern IV. Son of Frederick the ſecond, Brother of Anne Queen of Great Britain, and Knight of the Garter; who, engaging in a War againſt the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond for the Liberty of Germany, was ſuddenly beat out of all the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe by the prevailing Imperialiſts, but compounded the buſineſs upon very good terms, and was reſtored to all his own.

1648 13. Frederick III. the youngeſt Son of Chriſtiern the fourth, his eldeſt Brethren being all dead without Iſſue, ſucceeded in the Crowns of Denmark and Norway.

Having thus muſtered up the Kings of theſe ſeveral Kingdoms, taken diſtinctly and conjunct; we muſt next look upon the way of their coming to their Regal Throne, their form of Government together with their Powerableneſs and Revenues incident unto it. As for the manner of their coming to the Regal Throne, the Danes pretend the Kingdom to be Elective, and not Hereditary; yet ſo as they have always ſet the eldeſt Son on the Throne of his Father, unleſs ſome extraordinary occaſion have diſpoſed it otherwiſe. But they that look upon their Stories in the former times can ſee no ſuch matter, the Kingdom going generally in the way of Succeſſion, unleſs by Faction or Uſurpation ſome popular and powerful Pretender hath interloped; as oftentimes hath happned in ſuch other Eſtates as are Hereditary meerly, without claim or colour of Election. 'Tis true, that the Male-iſſue failing in Olaus the Son of Margaret, and the Princes which pretended by the Females after her deceaſe not being of ſufficient power to aſſert their Titles; the Kingdom was transferred to the houſe of Oldenburg, who held it on no other ground than by that of Election. Which, being an extraordinary caſe, is to make no Precedent, though ſeconded by the outing of King Chriſtiern the ſecond, and the advancement of Frederick unto that Eſtate: theſe being acts of Violence and Force, and juſtified only by the falſe Topick of Succeſs. But whoſoever loſt by the hand, the Danes got well by it; King Frederick taking up the Crown upon ſuch Conditions as have made him and his Succeſſors little more than Titulary. For he was fain to ſwear at his Coronation, that he would put none of the Nobility to death or Baniſhment but by the judgment of the Senate, that the Great men ſhould have power of Life and Death over their Tenants or Vaſſals; that no Appeal ſhould lie from them to the King's Tribunal, nor the King be partaker of the Confiſcations, nor, finally, advance any to Commands and Honours but by conſent of his great Council. Which Oath being alſo taken by his Succeſſors, made Bodinus ſay, Non tam re ipsâ quàm appellatione Reges eſſe; that they were only Kings in Title, but not Kings indeed. Yet in regard that the Nobility (ſo they call their Gentry) have but ſmall Eſtates, none of them above the degree of Knights, (except only the Princes of the Bloud) and that Degree conferred by the King alone; it is not often found that they have dared to croſs or oppoſe their King, but when ſome of the Royal Family (out of private ends) have concurred with them in it: as in the caſe of Chriſtiern the 2. depoſed by the People, but thoſe people headed and ſet on by his Uncle Frederick, who had an eye upon the Crown.

As for the Senate or great Council, ſpoken of before, it conſiſts wholly of men choſen out of the Nobility, (who are to prove their Gentry by a long Deſcent) ſeldom exceeding the number of 28; to each of which there is allowed a convenient Salary, with ſome fair Caſtle in the Country for his Retirements, during his being of that Body: his whole Eſtate being freed alſo for that time from all publick Payments. Without their counſel and advice the King is neither to determine of Peace or War, or to enter into any new Leagues or Confederacies, nor impoſe any Tax upon the Subject; and unto them and the King jointly is the laſt Appeal: ſuch being the Conſtitution of this Eſtate, that all Cauſes and Controverſies are firſt decided in the Prefecture or Heret (184 in number) where they firſt ariſe; from whence it is lawful to appeal to the Judge of the Province, from him to the Chancellor of the Kingdom, and finally to the King and Council. By the Laws of Waldemar the firſt, who firſt reduced the Laws into ſet form and writing, the Biſhops were to ſit with his Council in all Cauſes of moment: but were diſcharged from that employment by King Chriſtiern the third, by whom it was alſo ordained, that the Clergy ſhould not ſell any of the Church-lands without leave of the King.

The Forces which this King or Kingdom are able to raiſe may beſt be ſeen by ſome of their particular Undertakings: thoſe ſpecially of Chriſtiern the ſecond, who, at the requeſt of Henry the ſecond of France, ſent a Navy of an hundred Sail into Scotland againſt the Engliſh, and therein no fewer than 10000 Souldiers; and of Frederick then Duke of Holſtein, who in his War againſt this Chriſtiern, (whoſe removal from the Crown he had then projected) brought 80000 men into the field to make good his Quarrel. And queſtionleſs, conſidering the many Ports and Illands that this Crown is Maſter of, both within the Baltick and without, it cannot be but he may ſuddenly raiſe a ſtrong power at Sea. And then conſidering that each of the Nobility, which are here numerous enough, is bound to find a certain number of Horſe upon all occaſions; as are thoſe alſo who hold Lands of the King, which the Danes call Verlehninge: it will accordingly be concluded, that they are able to make good Levies for a ſudden Service, eſpecially in defence of their own Dominions.

The Revenue of this King conſiſteth principally in the great Impoſt laid upon all Ships which paſs through the Sound: the greatneſs whereof may eaſily be conjectured at by the multitude of Ships which of neceſſity muſt paſs paſs by it in the Trade of the Baltick; though of late ſomewhat leſſened of what it was, ſince the Engliſh found out and frequented the Northern paſſage into Moſcovia. There are alſo ſome Crown-lands, and a great yearly Toll made of the Cattel which paſs into Germany; as alſo of the Fiſh tranſported into other Countries. And yet it is conceived that the Treaſures of this King are not very great: partly becauſe there is no other important Commodity but Fiſh to draw Merchants thither; and partly that there is not any one Town of any great Traffick in all his Realms for the entertaining of Commerce.

The chief order of Knighthood in it is that of the Elephant, inſtituted by Frederick the ſecond. Their Badge, a Collar powdred with Elephants towred, ſupporting the Kings Arms, and having at the end the picture of the Virgin Mary.

The Arms hereof are Quarterly, 1. Or, three Lions paſſant Vert, crowned of the firſt, for the Kingdom of Denmark; and ſecondly, Gules, a Lion Rampant Or, crowned and armed of the firſt, in his Paws a Danſk Hatchet Argent, for the Kingdom of Norway. What Arms belong to him as Duke of Holſtein and Sleſwick I am yet to ſeek.

SWETHLAND.

SWETHLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with Moſcovie, on the Weſt with the Dofrine Hills, which divide it from Norway, on the North with the great Frozen Ocean, ſpoken of before; on the South with Denmark, Lieſland, and the Baltick Sea. So called from the Sueci, Suethans, or Sucthidi, and the word Land added for a termination; of which more hereafter.

It is in length, from Stockholm unto the borders of Lapland, above 1000 Italian miles; and in breadth from Stockholm, lying on the Bodner Sea, to the Borders of Denmark, about twenty good days journey on horſeback: inſomuch as they which have travelled the length and breadth of it, on this ſide of Lapland and the Gulf or Bay of Bodner, account it little leſs than all Italy and France together; but taking in Lapland, and the Provinces on the other ſide of the Gulf, bigger than both by the quantity of 900 miles.

The ſituation of it in regard of the Heavenly bodies is the ſame with Norway, under the ſame Parallels and Degrees; but of ſo different a temper, both for Soil and Air, as if diſpoſed of under ſeveral and long-diſtant Climes. For the Air here is very pure, but not ſo ſharp and inſupportable as it is in Norway: though in ſome places, where the Moors and Waters ſettle, for want of care to open and cleanſe the Water-courſes, they have great Foggs and Miſts, which do ſomewhat putrifie it. And for the Soil, it is more fertile than any of the other Northern Provinces: ſo that beſides thoſe Neceſſaries which they keep for themſelves, they uſually tranſport into other Countries ſtore of Malt and Barley; together with great quantities of Braſs, Lead, Steel, Copper, Iron, the Hides of Goats, Bucks, Oxen, and coſtly Furs. They have alſo ſome Mines of Silver, not mixt with any other Metal; plenty of Fiſh in their Lakes and Rivers; abundance of Pine-trees, Firre, Oaks, both for Ships and Houſes; yielding beſides, among the Woods, good ſtore of Tar and Honey, and ſome other Neceſſaries. But hereof we ſhall ſpeak more punctually in the ſeveral Provinces.

The principal Mountains of this Country are the Dofrine Hills, a vaſt and continual Ridge of Mountains which divide it from Norway. And though they want not Rivers fit for common uſes, yet partly by reaſon of their great Froſts and flakes of Ice, partly by reaſon of the falling of Trees which lye croſs their Chanels, they have not many navigable, or any of great fame. The principal of ſuch as be are, 1. Meler, at the mouth whereof ſtands the City of Stockholm, 2. Luſen, 3. Dalacarlie, giving name to the Province ſo called, or denominated from it. And of the Lakes, whereof here are exceeding many, that of moſt note is the Lake of Weret, which, receiving into it 24 Rivers, disburtheneth it ſelf at one mouth into the Baltick, with ſuch noiſe and fury, that they call it commonly the Devil's head.

The people are naturally ſtrong and active, provident, patient and induſtrious; hoſpitable towards Strangers, whom they entertain with great humanity; ſo healthy, that, if they do not ſhorten their days by Exceſs and Riot, they live commonly to 140 years of age; and ſo laborious, that a Beggar is not ſeen amongſt them. Of no great note for Arts or Arms in the times foregoing: not much addicted to the one; and ſo kept under by the Danes, that they could not grow eminent in the other: but much improved in both reſpects in theſe later days: Ericus, the firſt King of the preſent Race, who cleared his Country of the Danes, and Guſtavus Adolphus, the laſt King, who freed the Germans from the Yoke of the Houſe of Auſtria, not being eaſily to be matched in the Arts of War. And ſince they began to give themſelves to the ſweets of Learning, this Country hath produced (amongſt ſome other learned men) Olaus Magnus, Archbiſhop of Upſal, of great note for his Hiſtory of the Goths and Vandals; the First-fruits of this Nation in the liberal Sciences. And it is probable, by reason of their late Commerce with the German Nations, they will give better testimony to the World hereafter of their proficiency in this kind, as being generally exceeding apt to learn the Arts Mechanical, every man in a manner being his own Artificer, without employing Smith, Mason, Carpenter, or any other manual Trades. Very valiant they are both on foot and horseback, which their long Wars against the Danes, and their late Wars in Germany, have given good proof of. Their Women are discreet and modest, free from that Intemperance which these Northern parts are subject to. Both Sexes use a corrupt Dutch, common to all three Northern Kingdoms; except in Finland, and the Provinces on the other side of the Bodner Sea, where they partake somewhat of the Moscovite or Russian Language.

The Christian Religion was first planted amongst them by the care and diligence of Ansgarius Archbishop of Breme, the Apostle-general of the North. Corrupt with Popish Superstitions, it was reformed, according to the Augustine Confession, in the time of Gustavus Ericus, the first of the present Royal Family, solicited thereunto by one Peter Nevicius a Lutheran Divine, and Laurence the Archdeacon of Strengnes; but chiefly moved (as others say) by a desire to appropriate to himself the Goods of the Church. And this appears to have had some strong influence upon him in it, in that he presently seised upon what he pleased; and made a Law, that Bishops should enjoy no more than the King thought fit: yet having pretty well lessened their Revenues, he was content they should remain as formerly both in power and number; reserving to himself and his Successors the Nomination of the persons; but so as the Approbation of the Clergy (in a kind of Election) doth usually go along with the Kings appointment.

The Bishops are in number seven: that is to say, 1. of Lincopen, containing in his Diocese 226 Parishes. 2. Of Vexime, under whom are 210. 3. Of Scara, ruling over the same number of Churches. 4. Of Strengnes, under whom are a hundred only. 5. Of Abo, the greatest for extent of all, as comprehending under it 500 Parishes. 6. Of Wyborg, and 7. of Habsay; whose Dioceses for the most part lie out of the bounds of Sweden, in Moscovie, Livonia, and some other of the out-parts of the Realm of Poland. All of them are under the Archbishop of Upsal, as their Metropolitan, whose Diocese, extending into Lapland and Finmarck, containeth 171 Parish-Churches. By which accompt there are in all the Kingdom of Swethland but 1417 Parishes; but many of them of a thousand or eight hundred Families: the people being dispersed in Forests and other places, where they have store of Timber to build them houses, and store of Pasturage for their Cattel; which is the reason why they have not so many great Towns, nor so well inhabited, as is usual in far lesser Countries. As for the Authority of these Bishops, they still retain their Voice in Parliament, and with them so many of the inferiour Clergy as are from every Socken (a certain number of Parishes, like our Rural Deanries) deputed to appear there in the name of the Church: the Affairs whereof the Bishops do direct and order, as well in as out of publick Meetings, according to the Ecclesiastical Constitutions formerly established; and if any great occasion be, they may either advise with their Consistorials, or call a Diocesan Synod, (as they think most fit) and therein make such Laws and Canons as they conceive to be most proper for their own Edification.

The whole Kingdom is divided into two parts, the one lying on the East, the other on the West-side of the Bay or Gulf of Bodner, called Sinus Bodicus in Latine, being a large and spacious Branch of the Baltick Sea, extending from the most Southernly Point of Gothland, as far as to Lapland on the North. According to which division, we have the Provinces of 1. Gothland, and 2. Sweden, lying on the West-side of the Gulf; 3. Lapland, shutting it up upon the North; 4. Bodia or Bodden, and 5. Finland, on the East-side thereof; and 6. the Swedish Islands, where it mingleth with the rest of the Baltick.

1. GOTHLAND.

GOTHLAND is bounded on the East with the Bodner Sea, on the West with the Mountains which divide it from Norway, and so much of Denmark as lies in the same Continent with it, on the North with Sweden, on the South with the Sea Baltick. So called either from the Goths, whose original Country it is commonly affirmed to be; or quasi goot Landt, from the goodness and fertility of the Soil, (Gootlandia, quæ Germanicè Terra bona sonat, as Maginus out of Munster hath it) the Soil being very fruitful for Corn and Cattel, affording plenty of Mines, with great store of Fish, and generally a better-conditioned Country than any of the rest of these Northern Regions.

It is divided commonly into Oostrogoth, or East-Gothland; Wester-goth, divided from the former by the great Lake of Weret, spoken of before; and South-Gothland, subdivided into Smalandia, Tuiscia, and Verendia. Chief Towns in Oostrogoth are, 1. Lincopen, a Bishops See. 2. Loduse, adorned with a very fair Haven. In Wester-goth, 3. Scara, on the Lake Weret, a Bishops See also. 4. Elseborg, on the Western Sea, betwixt Denmark and Norway; a place of consequence, and flanker'd with two very strong Castles in the parts adjoining, the one called Croneberg, and the other Goldberg. 5. Tragualle, remarkable for Iron works, occasioned by the Mines adjoining. And finally in South-Gothland there is 6. Vexime, or Vexio, another of the Episcopal Sees. 7. Walburg, a reasonable fair Town, with a strong Castle. 8. Elcholm, in that part hereof which is called Verendia, near the Confines of Denmark. 9. Calmar, a noted and well traded Port on the Baltick Sea, beautified with a Castle not inferiour to that of Millain, and so well fortified throughout, that at the taking of it by Christiern the fourth of Denmark, Anno 1611, there were found mounted on the works 108 brass pieces of Ordnance, six Men of War to guard the Haven, with all manner of Ammunition in proportion to them. 10. Gottenburg, (or Gothorum Burgus) the chief Town of the Goths or Gothland, as the name importeth, enjoying a commodious Haven, on the Baltick also, and very much frequented for the Trade of Germany, to which it serves exceeding fitly; the principal Town of all this Province, and for that cause the ordinary Seat or Residence of the Governour for the King of Sweden.

The first Inhabitants of these South parts of Scandia are commonly affirmed to have been the GOTHS, whom Jornandes in his Book de Rebus Geticis makes to have issued out of this Country, and to plant themselves on the North Banks of the Ister, near the Euxine Sea, some time before the Trojan War: ascribing to them whatsoever is reported in old Writers of the ancient Scythians, as their Encounter with Vexoris or Sesostris the King of Ægypt, the Acts and Atchievements of the Amazons, their Congress with Alexander the Great in his Persian War, and the like to these. In which Jornandes, being himself a Goth, is no more to be credited than Geofry of Monmouth, a Welch man, in the Story of Brute and his Successors, to whom he doth ascribe the taking and sacking of Rome under the conduct of Brennus, whom he makes to be the Brother of Belinus a King of Britain. Most probable it is, that they were originally a Dutch or German people, part of the great Nation of the Suevi, called by Tacitus the Gothones, inhabiting in his time (as it is conceived) in the Land of Prussia; who, finding their own Country too narrow for them, might pass over the Baltick into the next adjoining Regions; and not well liking that cold Clime, might afterwards in some good numbers go to seek new Dwellings, and at last seat themselves on the Banks of the Ister, where Jornandes found them. That they were Dutch originally, besides the general name of the Gothones or Goths, and those of Oostro goths and Wisigoths, into which they were afterwards divided; the particular names of Alaric, Theodoric, Riccared, (the names of their Kings and Captains) seem to me to evidence. That they were once seated in this Country doth appear as plainly, 1. by the name of Gothland here still remaining, 2. by the Title of Rex Gothorum, which the Kings of Swetbland keep in the Royal Style; 3. by some Inscriptions in ancient unknown Characters engraven on the Rocks near Scara in the Continent, and in Wisby in the Isle of Gothland, supposed by learned men to be some monument of that People. And finally, that their fixt Dwelling, when first known by this name amongst the Romans, was on the North-side of the Ister, is evident by the testimony of all ancient Writers, from the time of Antoninus Caracalla, with whom they had some tumultuary Skirmishes in his way towards Persia, till their violent Irruption into Italy and the Western Provinces: most famous in this Interval for a great Fight with Decius the Roman Emperour, whom they overcame and slew in a Battel Anno 253. In the time of Valens and Valentinian, the Roman Emperours, a Quarrel being grown amongst them, managed by Phritigernes and Athanaricus, the Leaders of the opposite Factions; Phritigernes, overthrown in fight, had recourse to Valens, from whom he received such Succours, that giving his Adversary another day for it, he obtained the Victory. Whereupon Phritigernes and his Party received the Gospel, but intermixt and corrupt with the Leven of Arianism, by the practice of Valens, who sent them none but Arian Teachers, to whom and their Factions in the Church he was wholly addicted. Afterwards the whole Nation being driven over the Ister by the barbarous Huns, they obtained of Valens the out-parts of Thrace for an Habitation, on condition they should serve under the pay of the Emperour, and become Christians: the cause that Arianism over-spread the whole Nation generally, which had before infected but one part only. Ulphilas, a devout and learned man, was their first Bishop; who, for their better Edification in the way of Godliness, invented a new Gothick Character, and translated the Scriptures into that Language: in the study whereof they so well profited, that many of them in the time of their first Conversion suffered death for it at the hands of Athanaricus, and were counted Martyrs. Burthened by Valens, and denyed their accustomed Pay, they harass and depopulate the rest of Thrace, marching towards Constantinople; encountred in the way by Valens, whom they overcame and killed, after all his Favours. Vanquished by Theodosius the succeeding Emperour in many Battels, they became good neighbours, inlarging their Bounds with his leave and licence as far as Pannonia, and grown into such estimation with him, that Ricimer and Franita, two of that Nation, did obtain the Consulship: not to say any thing of that exorbitant power and favour which Gainas had attained unto in the Court it self. Made insolent by so great Honours, and apt to pick Quarrels with their Patrons, they invaded Italy in two great Bodies, consisting of no fewer than 200000 fighting men. The first whereof, under the Conduct of Rhadaguisus, was discomfited and cut in pieces by Stilico, Lieutenant to Honorius the Western Emperour, at Fesulæ in the Streights of the Apennine. The other, by his Treachery permitted to pass, sacked Rome, and subdued the most part of Italy, under the leading of Alaricus. He, dying immediately after this great Victory, left the fruits of it to his Son Athaulfus; who, marrying with Galla Placidia, the Emperour's Sister, relinquished Italy, and had all Gallia Narbonensis, and a great part of Hispania Tarraconensis, assigned unto him, where he erected the Kingdom of the Wisi Goths or Western Goths, possessed of Spain and Tingitana for the space of 300 years and upward, when they lost that Kingdom to the Moors, as hath there been said. In the mean time the Goths which were left in their own Countries, distinguished from these by the name of Oostro-Goths, by reason of their more Eastern situation, kept themselves in quiet: being first subdued by the Huns, and, when by Wilamir freed from that subjection, not intermeddling or attempting any thing against the Empire, till called by Zeno Emperor of Constantinople into Italy against Odoacer and the Heruli, who had then subdued it. Which action they managed with so much prudence and good fortune by their King Theodorick, that they vanquished Odoacer, possessed Italy, and held it above 60 years, when, broken in many set Battels by Belisarius and Narses, Lieutenants for the Emperour Justinian, their Kingdom and Name there came unto an end.

As for the Kings of the Goths, we have a succession of them in Jornandes from Berig, who first conducted them out of Scandia towards the East, till the going of Theodorick into Italy; but made up with so little probability, that I dare give no more credit to it than the Stories of Brute, Dan, Fergus, or the Lady Scota, Pharaoh's Daughter. Such of whom there is any certain knowledge and succession are these few that follow.

The Kings of the GOTHS.

344 1. Athanaricus, King of the Goths in the time of Constantius and Constans, the Sons of Constantine the Great.

357 2. Alaricus, the first of that name, in the time of Constantius.

3. Phritigernes, King of the Goths in the time of Valens, the first Christian Prince among that People.

370 4. Athanaricus II. in the time of the Emperours Valens, Gratian, and Valentinian the second; under whom the Goths were first setled on this side of the Ister.

379 5. Rhadaguisus, who in the time of Honorius first led the Goths into Italy; slain at the Battel of Fesulæ.

410 6. Alaricus II. who, pursuing the War of Italy, sacked Rome, subdued Naples, and the most of Italy.

412 7. Athaulfus, the Son of Alarick the second, who first erected the Kingdom of the Wisi-Goths in Gaul and Spain, continuing there for the space of 300 years and upwards; the present Kings of Spain coming from this Stock.

417 8. Athalaricus, King of the Goths remaining in the East at the departure of Rhadaguise and Alaricus, distinguished from their Plantations by the name of Oostro-Goths: vanquished by Attila, they became Subjects to the Huns, in the time of Theodosius the second and Valentinian the third, Emperours of the East and West.

9. Wilamir, one of the Bloud-Royal of the Goths, Vassal to Attila at the first, whom he assisted, or served rather, in the great Battel near Tholouse against the Romans: but, taking advantage of some Quarrel amongst the Sons of Attila, shook off that Yoke, and recovered the Kingdom of the Goths, in the time of the Emperour Marcianus.

10. Theodomir, Son of Winithar, and Brother of Wilamir, in the time of Leo Emperour of Constantinople.

11. Theodorick, Son of Theodomir, kept at Constantinople in his youth as a Pledge or Hostage for his Father, where he was instructed in all the Greek and Roman Learning, and made the adopted Son (as is said by Scaliger) of the Emperour Zeno; by whom he was sent into Italy against Odoacer and the Heruli, and erected there the Kingdom of the Ostrogoths; which continued till the Reign of Justinian, when it was destroyed by Belisarius and Narses, as before is said: the name of Goths in Italy being thus extinct, but their Bloud intermixt with the best Italian. The sum of their whole Story, for varieties sake, take thus out of Du Bartas.

The warlike Goth, which whilom issued forth
From the cold frozen Islands of the North, Incamp'd by Vistula: but the Air almost B'ing there as cold as in the Baltick Coast,
He with victorious Arms Sclavonia gains,
The Transylvanian and Valachian Plains;
Then flies to Thracia, and then leaving Greeks, Greedy of Spoil, four times he bravely seeks To pluck from Rome (then Mars his Minion)
The Plumes which she from all the World had won,
Guided by Rhadaguise and Alarick,
Bold Vindimarus and Theodorick, (Legions Thence flies to France; from whence expulst, his Rest ever since upon the Spanish Regions.

The Arms of these Kings are said to have been Or, three Ravens with displayed wings Purple, membred Gules. And let this suffice for the Original, Successes, and final Period of the Goths; reserved by me unto this place, because most commonly conceived to be their original Country, at least the place out of which they issued when they first moved towards the East to seek new Dwellings.

2. SWEDEN.

SWEDEN is bounded on the East with the Bodner Sea, on the West with the Dofrine Hills, which part it from Norway, on the North with Lapland, on the South with Gothland. So called from the Suethans, or Suethidi, the old Inhabitans hereof; of whom more anon. A Country sufficiently fruitful, but for the goodness of the Soil inferiour to Gothland; and not so well planted or inhabited as that is, by reason of the vast Woods which they will not suffer to be destroyed, and the greatness of some Marishes hitherto undrained: but might be made as rich and fertile, if the people would; as appeareth by that plenty of Corn growing amongst the Woods, though much hindred by their shade and thickness both from Sun and Rain. But for the Character of this Country, we had it formerly, when we spake of Swethland in the general; relating specially to this, as the principal part.

And as the largest and principal part of this great Body, it contains in it many Provinces and Subdivisions: as namely, 1. Upland, 2. Sudermannia, 3. Nericia, 4. Westmannia, 5. Dalecarlie, 6. Vermland, 7. Coperdale, 8. Gestricia, 9. Helsingia, 10. Middelsar, 11. Angermannia, bordering on Lapland, the fartherest of these Provinces towards the North. Many of these have no Towns or Cities of any greatness or beauty, the people living thin and scattered, where they have Wood for Building, Pasturage for their Beasts, and elbow-room enough for themselves and their Cattel. Of these the principal are, 1. Upsal, an Archbishops See, and an University, situate not far from the Bay of Bodner, beautified with a large Cathedral, wherein many of the ancient Kings of Swethland are interred. From this City the Country hereabouts is stiled Archiepiscopatus Upsalensis. 2. Holm, by the Inhabitants called Stockholm, by the Russians Stecolne; the Royal Seat of the Kings, a noted and well traded Port, and the chief of the Kingdom; exceeding strong both by Art and Nature, as being situate in the Marishes, like Venice, at the mouth of the Lake or River of Meler, the passage to it out of the Bay being very narrow, and by consequence easily defended, and yet so deep withall, that the greatest Ships of Burthen may sail up to the City: the Port within the Streight being so safe and capacious, that it is able to receive at one time 300 Sail, which usually ride there without any Anchor. The Castle of this City is conceived to be one of the strongest holds in the world, fortified for the more assurance of it with 400 brass Pieces, many of which are double Cannon. 3. Nicopen, a Seatown on the same Bay also. These three are in that part hereof which is called Upland. Then there is 4. Strengnes, an Episcopal See, and 5. Telga, on the Lake of Meler, in the Province of Sudermannia; the Title and Estate of Charles, Father of Gustavus Adolphus late King of Sweden, before his getting of the Crown called Duke of Suderman. Next, in the Province of Westmannia, there are 6. Arboga, on the West-side of the said Lake of Meler; and 7. Arosia, rich in Silver-mines, out of which are made the best Dollars of Sweden: the Mines here being so rich and profitable, that out of every fifteen pound weight of Silver the workmen draw a pound weight of Gold. 8. Helsinge, upon the Bay of Bodner, in the Province of Helsingia, taking name from hence. 9. Orebo or Orubo, a strong piece in Nericia. And 10. Lesinger, on the Bay of Bodner, one of the fartherest North of Sweden distinctly and specially so called.

3. LAPLAND.

LAPLAND, the most Northern part of all Scandia, hath on the East Russia, on the West the Province or Prefecture of Wardhuys in the Kingdom of Norway, on the North the main Frozen Ocean, and on the South Bodia or Bodden, on both sides of the Bay so called.

It is named thus originally from the Lappi or Lappones, the Inhabitants of it, as they are from their blockish behaviour; the word Lappon signifying the same with ineptus or insulsus in Latine; for such they are, rude, barbarous, and without the knowledge of Arts or Letters, as also without Corn and Houses, or any certain Habitations, (except only in Finmarck;) feeding for the most part on Fish and the flesh of wild Beasts, with the Skins whereof sowed together they hide their nakedness. Generally they are meer Idolaters, giving Divine honour all the day following to that living Creature, whatsoever it be, which they see at their first setting out in the morning; great Sorcerers, and abhorring the sight of Strangers, whom till of late they used to flee from at their first approach, but within few years past beginning to be more sociable and familiar. In a word, they are the true descendents of the ancient Finni, (possessed in old times of all that Tract which lieth between the Bay of Finland and the Frozen Ocean) whose natural rudeness and barbarity, unmixt with the condition of more civil people, they do still retain.

It is divided into the Eastern and the Western Lapland. The former appertaining to the Knez or Great Duke of Moscovy, by which people the Inhabitants are called Dikiloppi, or the wild Lappians, is subdivided into Biarmia and Corelia; of which, if there be any thing in them worth taking notice of, we shall there speak more. The latter doth belong to the Crown of Sweden, subdivided into two parts also, that is to say, 1. Finmarck, and 2. Scricfinnia.

1. FINMARCK, being that part hereof which lieth next unto Norway, is the more populous of the two. The people are for the most part idolatrous, but by the neighbourhood of the Norwegians, and resort of Strangers unto Wardhuys and the parts adjoining, somewhat civilized, and in the Borders of both Kingdoms savouring of Religion, possessed of Sheds or sorry Houses, and those Houses reduced to Parishes under the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Upsal; the chief of which (if there be any chief amongst them) are named, 1. Samman, and 2. Hielso. Called Finmarck, as the ancient Bounds and Marches of the Finni, (of whom more anon) and therefore erroneously by Maginus made a part of the Kingdom of Norway.

2. SCRICFINNIA lieth between Finmarck and Russia. The name is derived from the Finni, a great People of Scandia, and Sckriken, a Dutch word signifying leaping, sliding, or bounding, for such is their gate. An Etymologie not much improbable, in that the Wooden-soled-shoes with sharp bottoms, which they used for their more speedy sliding over the Ice, of which this Country is full, are by the Germans (who also use them) called Scrik-shoenen, or Sliding-shoes. The ancient Writers call this people Scricfinni.

These are indeed the natural and proper Laplanders, and unto these the former Character doth of right belong. Of stature very low, little more than Pygmies, but strong and active; well skill'd in Archery, and patient of Cold and Labour; much given to hunting of wild Beasts, whom they kill with their Bows, devour the Flesh, and cloath themselves with their Skins, which they tye at the top of their Heads, and leave no place open but for the Sight; giving thereby occasion unto some to write that they are hairy all over, like Kine or Horses. Such Deer (whereof they have great plenty) as they take unkilled, they make to draw in little Carts, as they shift their Quarters. But having served them for a while, they are killed at last, though perhaps for nothing but their Skins: a certain number of which they pay yearly to the King of Sweden in the way of Tribute. Three Companies of these Laplanders, so clad and armed as aforesaid, came into Germany in the year 1630, to serve Gustavus Adolphus in those Wars: looked on with admiration by all Spectators.

Towns we must look for none here, where no Houses be: and yet there are some Sheds and Cabbins on the Sea-shore, which Mariners having made for their refreshment when they came on Land, have bestowed some names on, and possibly in time may become good Towns, now not worth the naming.

BODIA, BODDEN, or BODNER, is situate on the South of Scricfinnia, betwixt it and the Bay or Gulf hence named; extending Southwards on the West side of it, till it joins to Sweden, and on the East-side, till it meets with the Province of Finland. Hence is the division of this Country into the Eastern, Northern, and Western Bodden, with reference to the Situation of it on the Bay aforesaid. The Country is not very plentiful of Grain or Fruits, but full of great variety of wild Beasts, whose rich Skins yield great profit unto the Inhabitants; and by reason of the commodious Situation on all sides of the Bay, it is well stored with Fish. Anciently it was part of the possessions of the Finni; but how or whence it had the name of Bodia, or Bodden, or Bodner, I am yet to learn. But whence soever it had the name, certain I am, that from hence the Gulf adjoining is called Sinus Bodicus, the Bodner Zee by the Dutch or Germans.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Birkara, in West Bodden, betwixt the Bay and a great navigable Lake. 2. Toronia, a well-traded Empory at the very bottom of the Bay, in North Bodden. 3. Helsingeliac, more North than that, towards the Borders of Lapland. And 4. Kerlabi, in East-Bodden, on the Bank of the Gulf, conveniently seated for a Town of Trade.

5. FINLAND.

FINLAND hath on the North Bodia, on the South the Baltick Sea or Mare Suevicum, on the East Sinus Finnicus, on the West Sinus Bodicus. It is by Munster thought to be called Finland, quasi fine land; quòd pulchrior & amœnior sit Sueciâ, because it is a more fine and pleasing Country than Sweden it self. But indeed it is so called from the Finni or Fenni, a potent Nation who have here dwelt, whose Character is thus framed by Tacitus; Finnis mira Feritas, fœda Paupertas, non Arma, non Equi, non Penates, Victui Herba, Vestitui Pelles, Cubili Humus, sola in Sagittis spes. The Finns, saith he, are wonderfully barbarous, miserably poor, without Arms, Horse, or Houshold-gods; Herbs their Food, the Ground their Bed, and the Skins of Beasts their best Apparel, armed only with their Arrows, and in them their hopes. A Character which agreeth every way with our present Finlanders, especially those of Scricfinnia and some parts of Finmarchia; who are not so well reclaimed to Civility as the other are: but very different from that which Jornandes gives them, who, living within 400 years after Tacitus, before they had much (if any) entercourse with foreign Nations, telleth us of them, that they were Scanziæ Cultoribus omnibus mitiores, more tractable and civil than any of the Inhabitants of Scandia, not excepting the Suethidi themselves. If so, they did deserve to live in so good a Country, more plentiful and plain than Sweden, and neither so hilly nor so mooriſh.

The principal places in it are, 1. Abo, an Archbishop's See, situate on the most Southern Point of it, shooting into the Baltick. 2. Wyborg, a Bishops See also, whose Jurisdiction for the most part is without this Province, on some part of Russia, all Finland being in the Diocese of the Bishop of Abo. A Town conveniently seated at the bottom of the Bay or Gulf of Finland, (called Sinus Finnicus in Latine) which divides this Country from Livonia; well fortified, as the chief Bulwark of this Kingdom against the Moscovite; and so well garrisoned withall, that the keeping of this Town, and Rivallia or Revel in the Borders of Liefland, do cost the King of Sweden 100000 Dollars yearly. 3. Udden, on a Point or Promontory of the same Gulf, opposite to Narva, another Garrison of this King in Liefland. 4. Verma, upon the Bodner Zee. 5. Cronaburg, more within the Land, at the efflux of a River out of the Lake called Piente. 6. Deckala, on the Banks of the great Lake called Holela. 7. Varta, more Northwards towards Lapland. Of which last four I find not any thing observable in the way of Story.

6. The SWEDISH Islands.

AND now at last I come to the Swedish Islands, here and there interspersed in the Baltick Seas, betwixt the Isle of Bornholm, which belongs to Denmark, and Liefland or Livonia, appertaining to the King of Poland: the principal of which are, 1. Gothia, or the Isle of Gothland; and 2. Insulæ Vlandæ, or the Isles of Oeland.

1. GOTHIA, or the Isle of GOTHLAND, is situate over against Calmar, a strong Town in the Continent of Gothland; in length 18 Dutch miles, and five in breadth, of a rich Soil, but more fit for Pasturage than Tillage, yielding great Herds of Cattel, store of Game for Hunting, plenty of Fish, excellent Marble, and abundance of Pitch, which it sends forth to other Countries. There are in it 18 large and wealthy Villages, besides the Haven Town of Wisby, heretofore rich and of very great Trading, as much frequented by the Merchant as most in Europe; but now much decayed, and neither so well peopled nor so rich as formerly. The Trade removed hither from Wollin in Pomerania (destroyed by Waldemar the first of Denmark, Anno 1170) made it flourish mightily; the greatest Traffick of the Baltick being managed here: but after that, by reason of the long and continual Wars betwixt Denmark and Swethland for the possession of this Isle, it became unsafe, the Factory was transferred unto other places. For being conveniently seated to annoy the Swedes, the Danes have much contended for it, and sometimes possessed it; but at the present it is in the hand of the Swethlander. By some conceived to be the Eningia spoken of by Pliny.

2. OELAND, or the Isles of Vlandt, so called in the plural number, because there are many of them, of which this the principal is situate over against Abo, the chief City of Finland. Of no great note, but that it is commodiously seated to invade or annoy this Kingdom; and therefore very well fortified and strongly garrisoned: here being the good Towns of 1. Vibo, 2. Vames, and 3. the strong Castle of Castrolm.

Besides which Countries here described, the King of Sweden is possessed of the strong Towns of Narva, and Rivallia or Revel, and Pernaw, in Liefland; of Kexholm, or Hexholm, in Corelia, a Province of Russia; with very fair and ample Territories appertaining to them: subdued and added to this Crown by John the second, Anno 1581; except Rivallia, which voluntarily submitted to Ericus the second King of this present Race An. 1561. But being these Towns and Territories are not within the Bounds of Swethland, we shall defer all farther discourse thereof to a place more proper.

The first Inhabitants of this Kingdom, besides the Gothi and Finni spoken of already, were the Sitones and Suiones, mentioned in Tacitus; together with the Phasonæ, the Phiræsi, and the Levoni, whom we find in Ptolomy, placed by him in the East and middle of this great Peninsula. Which, being the general names of some mighty Nations, are by Jornandes branched into lesser Tribes, of the Suethans, Theustad, Vagoth, Bergio, Hallin, Liothida, Athelnil, Gaurigoth, Raumaricæ, Rauragnicii, Grannii, Aganzie, Vnixie, Arochitamii, Enageræ, Othingi, and divers others by him named. But from what root the name of Sweden, Swedes, or Swethland, by which the chief Province of it, the people generally, and the whole Kingdom is now called, is not yet agreed on; nor spoken of at all by Munster, or Crantzius, which two (but specially the last) have written purposely of this people. Gasper Peucerus derivers them from the Suevi, who anciently inhabited in the North parts of Germany, beyond the Albis; from whom the Baltick Sea was called Mare Suevicum: which people he conceiveth to have been driven by the Gothi and Daci into this Country, and by the change of one letter only to be called Sueci. But this hath no good ground to stand on, though I meet with many others which are more improbable. For when they left those colder Countries, they fell into these parts which are still called Suevia, (the Schwaben of the Modern Dutch) where we find them in the time of Cæsar. And after, in fatali illa Gentium commigratione, when almost all the Northern Nations did shift their Seats, we find such of them as had staid behind to have accompanied the Vandals in their On-falls into Gaul and Spain. Of any Expedition of theirs cross the Baltick Seas, né gry quidem, nothing to be found in more ancient Authours. We must therefore refer the original of this People either to the Suiones, or the Suethidi, or perhaps to both; both being anciently setled in these Northern Regions. Of the Suiones we read in the Book of Tacitus inscribed De Moribus Germanorum; by whom they are reported to be strong in Men, Armour, and Shipping. And that they were Inhabitants of Scandia, appears by two Circumstances in that Author. 1. That the people were not permitted to wear Weapons, quia subitos Hostium Incursus prohibet Oceanus, because the Ocean was to them a sufficient Rampart; which could not be affirmed of the ancient Suevians, but agreeth very well with the situation of this present Country, defended by the Baltick and vast Northern Ocean from the sudden Assaults of any Enemy. 2. Because the Sea which hemmed in that people was conceived to be the utmost bounds of the World; Trans Suiones Mare aliud, quo cingi claudique. Terrarum orbis fines, as his words there are: which we know to hold good of this Country. 3. Add unto these this passage of the old Annals of the Emperour Lewis the second, where it is told us of the Danes, relicta patria apud Suiones exsulabant, that they were banished into the Country of the Suiones; which cannot so well be understood of any place as of this Sweden, being next neighbour unto Denmark. And 4. that this People, both by Munster and Crantzius, are as well called Suiones, as Sueci or Suedi; which sheweth what they conceived of their true Original. Then for the Suethans or the Suethidi, whom Jornandes speaks of in his Book De rebus Geticis, they are by him placed in the Isle of Scandia, (for such this great Peninsula was esteemed to be by most ancient Writers.) Now that these Suethidi are no other than the present Swethlanders, appeareth 1. by the propinquity of the Names. 2. In that he maketh the Finni and Finniathæ the next neighbours to them. And 3. in that they are affirmed by the same Authour to have furnished the Romans with rich Furs, and the Skins of wild Beasts, with which Commodities this Country is abundantly well stored. Now to which of these two Nations, either the Suiones or the Suethidi, those of Sweden are most indebted for their Original, will (I conceive) be no great controversie: the Suethans and Suethidi of Jornandes being no other than a Tribe of the Suiones, though the greatest and most powerful of all those Tribes; placed therefore in the Front to command the rest, and so most like to give the name unto the whole.

Their Government was anciently under Kings, affirmed so to be by Tacitus, who telleth us also that they were absolute and free, nullis exceptionibus, non precario jure regnandi; not bound in Covenant with their people, nor holding their Estates at the will of the Subject. But their Historians have gone for Antiquity hereof beyond the story of Brute or the Trojan War, (beyond which very few of that strain have dared to pretend) as high as unto Magog the Son of Japhet, reigning here within 90 years after the Floud. But letting pass these Dreams and Dotages ges of the Monkish times, certain it is that sometimes they were under the Danes, sometimes under the Norwegians, sometimes had distinct Kings of their own; and finally sometimes were comprehended with the Danes and Norwegians under the general name of Normans, conducted by one King or Captain upon foreign Actions. Omitting therefore the Succession of their former Kings, of whose very being there is cause to make great question; we will begin our Catalogue of them with Jermanicus, who entertained Harald King of Denmark and his Brother Regenfride, driven out of that Kingdom by Gotricus or Godfrey, the Contemporary of Charlemaign; of whose Successors Munster giveth us more certainty.

1387 29. Margaret, Queen of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, the Semiramis of Germany, having united the three Kingdoms under her Command, caused an Act of State to be passed in Calmar, a chief Town of Swethland, for the perpetuation of this Union unto her Successors; the Laws and Priviledges of each Kingdom continuing as before they were.
1411 30. Ericus IV. Duke of Pomeren, adopted by Margaret, of whose Sister Ingelburgis he was descended, was in her life-time chosen King of the three Kingdoms, into which he succeeded actually after her decease: but outed of them all by a strong Faction raised against him Anno 1439, he died in a private estate in Pomeren, Anno 1459.
1439 31. Christopher, Count Palatine, and Duke of Bavier, (in Title only) Son of the Lady Margaret, Sister of Ericus, succeeded in all three Kingdoms. After whose death the Swethlanders, being weary of the Danish Government broke the Agreement made at Calmar, for the uniting of the three Kingdoms under one Prince, and chose one Carolus Canutus to be their King, Anno 1448.
1448 32. Carolus Canutus, one of the meanest of the Nobility, and not long pleasing to the Great ones: whose Displeasure when he had incurred, and feared the consequents thereof, he gathered together all the Treasure he could, fled unto Dantzick, and there ended his days.
1455 33. Christiern, King of Denmark and Norway, called in by a party of the Swedes, and crowned King of Swethland; but outed again under colour that he had not kept Conditions with them: the Kingdom being governed after that (for a time) by Marshals.
1458 34. John, King of Denmark and Norway, the Son of Christiern, received King by the Swedes then overpowered by the Moscovite: but their turn being served, they expelled him again, returning to their former Government under Marshals. Of which Marshals (descended from Steno Stur, the Uncle of Carolus Canutus by his Mother's side) there were three in number; viz. 1. Steno, 2. Suanto, and 3. Steno Stur the second: of which the two first died natural deaths, and the last being by Christiern the second slain in Battel, this Kingdom was again possessed by the Danes.
1519 35. Christiern II. King of all three Kingdoms, used his Victory so cruelly here, and his Subjects so insolently at home, that here he was outed by Gustavus Ericus, and driven out of Denmark by his Uncle Frederick.
1523 36. Gustavus Ericus, descended from the ancient Race of the Kings of Sweden, having vanquished and expelled the Danes, was on the merit of that action chosen King of Swethland, which still continueth in his House.
1561 37. Ericus V. Son to Gustavus 8.
1569 38. John II. Brother of Ericus, married Catharine the Sister of Sigismund the second, King of Poland.
1593 39. Sigismund, the Son of John the second, in the life-time of his Father chosen King of Poland Anno 1586, but was dispossessed of the Crown of Sweden (after a long War) by his Uncle Charles.
1607 40. Charles II. Duke of Suderman, the youngest Son of Gustavus Ericus, and Brother of John and Erick the two former Kings, first governed here as Viceroy for his Nephew Sigismund. But having an aim upon the Crown (to which he found the Lutherans not very favourable) he raised up a Calvinian party within that Realm; according to whose Principles he began first to withdraw his Obedience from his natural Prince, and afterwards to assume the Government to himself: speeding so well in his Design, that after a long War he forced his Nephew to desist from all farther

Enter-

Enterprises, and made himself King, An. 1607.

1611 41. Gustavus Adolphus, Son of Charles, having setled his Affairs in Sweden, and made Peace with the King of Denmark, with whom his Father was in War at the time of his death, fell first upon his Cousin Sigismund, the King of Poland, from whom he took many places of importance in Prussia and Livonia; and in pursuance of that War was made Knight of the Garter. Afterwards, having setled a Truce with him, he passed into Germany, then in great danger of being absolutely inthralled to the House of Austria. In which he prospered so beyond all expectation, that in one year he passed over the Elb, the Rhene, and the Danow, (which no Conquerour ever did before:) and having twice vanquished the Imperialists led by Tilly, and restored many of the German Princes unto their Estates, was in the current of his Victories slain in the Battel of Lutzen, Novemb. 1632; his body royally conveyed to Swethland, and there interred.

1632 42. Christina, sole Daughter of Gustavus, of the age of seven years, acknowledged Queen of Sweden; the Estate being governed by the Counsels of the Nobility. After a long War, with variable success, in Germany, they came at last to this Accord in the Treaty of Munster, That she and her Successours, Kings and Queens of Swethland, should peaceably enjoy all the higher Pomeren, with the Isles of Rugia, Wollen, and the Town of Stetin, in Lower Pomerland; the Town and Port of Wismar in the Dukedom of Mecklenburg; and the whole Bishoprick of Bremen and Verden, and the Prefecture of the Town of Wilchusen; with the Title of Dukes of Bremen, Pomeren, and Verden, Princes of Rugia, and Lords of Wismar; and by those Titles to have place, as Princes of the Empire, in all Diets and Assemblies which concern the publick. By which Agreement (if it hold) the Swedes have not only got a good footing in Germany, a strong Influence upon all the Councils of the Empire, a Door open for more Forces, (if occasion be) and a free passage into the Western Ocean, which before they wanted; but may in time prove absolute Masters of the Baltick Sea, and make the Hamburgers, those of Lubeck, and possibly the Kings of Denmark and the Empire it self, be at their devotion.

But leaving these things to the doubtful issue of Contingency, let us next look upon the Forces and Revenues of the Crown of Sweden before the time of Gustavus Adolphus, or as he found them at his Succession to that Crown. For though the Swedes pretend their Kingdom to be Elective, especially since the failing of the Royal Line in Magnus the fourth and Albert of Mecklenburg: yet still the eldest Son or next Heir succeedeth; unless put by by Faction and strong hand, as in the case of Sigismund and his Uncle Charles. Which Charles so ordered his affairs, that having engaged the Kingdom in a War against his Nephew, he was solicited at the last to accept of the Crown: to which he would by no means yield, till a law was made for the entailing of the same for ever unto his Posterity, whether male or female, as an Hereditary Crown. But whether Hereditary or Elective, the King once setled in the Throne is an absolute Monarch; having not only a power to levie Taxes on his Subjects, as he seeth occasion, as five, six, seven, eight Dollars, or more, yearly upon every Housholder, according to the proportion of his Estate, but also to grant a certain number of Peasants unto such as he means to favour, to be as Subjects and Vassals to him, according to his well-deserving. And whereas in the Constitution of this Government every Parish hath a Landsman or Consul to decide the Controversies of the same, as every Territory hath its Vicount, and each Province his Lamen; there lieth an Appeal from the Landsman unto the Vicount, and from the Vicount to the Lamen; who if they be supposed not to judge uprightly, then the Appeal lies unto the Council, and from the Council of Estate to the King himself, (in whom is fixed the Soveraignty and Dernier Resort) and not unto the King and Council, as before in Denmark.

The Forces of this King are either by Sea or Land. By Sea he is Commander wholly of the Bay of Bodner, and hath a great Power in all the rest of the Baltick; being able to set out 70 good men of War, as John the second did in the year 1578; seven of which were good Gallions, and all the rest did carry above 50 cast Pieces of all sorts, besides many other good Vessels fit for Service. And if a Navy of this size will not serve the turn, he is not only furnished with Timber, Cordage, and all other necessaries for the building of Ships, and with good store of Ordnance and Ammunition for present use, but is able to raise upon a sudden 6000 Mariners, and upon little warning as many more; all which he entertaineth at no other charges in a manner than to find Victuals: insomuch as John the second, before mentioned, did use to say, that that which cost the King of Spain a million of Crowns, cost not him 100000 Dollars.

For his Land-Forces, they may best be estimated by the Trained Bands (as we may call them) in every Province; there being in all 32 Vexilles (or Ensigns) of Foot constantly trained and mustered in the several Provinces, each Vexille comprehending 600 or 700 men, amounting in the total to 20000 Foot; all in a manner Musketiers, ready to march whensoever the Kings occasion shall so require. And then for Horse, there are eleven Cornets in continual readiness for Sweden and Gothland, and two for Finland, maintained at the charges of those Countries: to which the King may add at his own charges as many more as he pleaseth. And for an instance of what this King is able to do, without putting his Estates in hazard by draining them too dry of men to make good his Kingdom, we find that John the second, in his Navy of 70 Ships spoken of before, had above 18000 Land-Souldiers, besides Mariners. And in the Army which Gustavus Adolphus, the late King, brought into Germany, there were mustered no fewer at one time than 12000 Horse, and 34000 Foot, all Finns and Swethlanders. For the accommodating of which Armies with Artillery and the like Engines of War, it is thought that the Kings hereof are Masters of 8000 great Pieces, for the most part Brass, with Mortar-pieces and Granado's in proportion to them.

But that which makes his Land-Forces most considerable is their Hardiness in enduring the extremities of Wind and Weather, (insomuch that it is usual with them to stand Centinel a whole Winters night of 18 hours long without being relieved) their exact Discipline, and Obedience to their Commanders, and finally their indefatigable Industry in making their own Shoes, Apparel, Stocks for Muskets, and all other necessaries. Which doth not only make them fit to endure any labour which is put upon them in the Wars, but keeps them from Idleness and the pride of Mutinies; the ordinary effect, in great Armies, of Sloth and Ease. Nor do they want incouragement on the Kings part neither; who, 1. gives to every Souldier Victuals, which he accompts not in their pay, and that according to his Obedience and desert. 2. If a Souldier dier be taken Prisoner, him the King doth usually redeem at his own charges. And 3. if a Souldier's Horse be slain under him, the King supplieth him with another. Which make the Souldiers (very sensible of such Obligations) exceedingly conformable unto his Commands, how dangerous soever they seem to be.

Finally, as for his Revenues, they must needs be great, there being four ways allowed him to amass his Treasures. First the Revenues of the Church, consisting before the Reformation of seven Bishopricks and sixty Monasteries, which enjoyed very great Possessions; all seized on by Gustavus Ericus, and by him incorporate to the Crown, excepting only what is given back to maintain the Bishops. Secondly, Mines, which are here of all Metals in very great plenty, except of Gold and Silver, which they have more sparingly; the Tenth whereof in all places belongs to the King, and yields him such a fair Introdo, that in the year 1578 the King's part out of two or three Mines of Copper only amounted to 30000 Dollars. Thirdly, Tenths out of all Increase, as Rie, Wheat, Barley, Fish, Oxen, Skins, and the like Commodities; the sum whereof though not certainly known, (because the increase is so uncertain) yet it was once computed, that the Tenth of the Oxen only came in one year to 18000 Dollars, besides Provision for his Houshold. Fourthly and lastly, Customs imposed on Merchandise, and paid in all his Haven-Towns for all Commodities imported or exported, of what sort soever. Besides all which, he hath his Contributions in all times of War, power of imposing Taxes, (though moderately used) as his Necessities require; and on the Marriage of a Daughter, the Kingdom is to provide her Portion, which of late times hath been fixed at the certain sum of 100000 Dollars, besides Plate and Movables. Out of which several Items to sum up the Total: It was observed, that in the year 1578 King John the second (all Charges, ordinary and extraordinary, being first deducted) did lay up into his Treasury no less then 700000 Dollars; which was a vast sum for those times, considering especially the great Charge which the King had been at that year, in furnishing a Navy of 70 Sail, and raising 18000 Land-Souldiers, (besides Horse) for defence of his Realm against the Danes. And yet it is conceived by some knowing men, that his Revenues would be much greater then they are, if he did employ Strangers to work the Mines, which the Natives do not husband to the best advantage; and yet are fearful to discover them to other Nations upon some Jealousies, which they are naturally addicted to: or if he would turn Merchant, and in his own Ships send out Corn and Cordage, with Masts and Timber fit for Building, and in them bring back Salt and other Necessaries which his Kingdom wants, setting them at a far less price than now they go at, and yet gaining very greatly by it too.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, three Crowns Or.

OF RUSSIA.

RUSSIA is bounded on the East by Tartary on the West with Livonia and Finland, from which it is divided by great Mountains and the River Poln; on the North by the Frozen Ocean, and some part of Lapland; and on the South by Lituania, a Province of the Kingdom of Poland, and the Crim-Tartars, inhabiting on the Banks of Palus Mæotis and the Euxine Sea. It standeth partly in Europe, and partly in Asia, the River Tanais or Don running through it, the common Boundary of those great and noted parts of the World.

It was thus called from the Rossi or Russi, a People of Mount Taurus, or Taurica Chersonesus, (if not both) who in the declining times of the Greek Empire possessed themselves of some parts of it, and, being the prevailing People, imposed their Name on all the rest. Called also Russia Alba, to distinguish it from Russia Nigra, a Province of Poland; quòd Incolæ omnium Gentium ipsius imperio subjectarum (as one observes, discoursing of the Affairs hereof) Vestibus albis & Pileis plerunque utantur, because the Inhabitants use to wear white Caps and Vestments. And why not thus? sithence the People of Margiana and Sogdiana in Asia have the name of Jeselbas only because they wear green Turbants, as the word importeth. Finally, it is called Moscovie, from Moscovie the chief Province of it; as that is denominated from the Moschi, of whom more anon.

In reference to the Heavenly bodies it is said by some to be situate betwixt the 8. and 20. Climates; the longest Day in the Southern parts being but 16 hours and an half, and almost 22 hours and an half in the Northern parts. But this is to be understood only of the Province of Moscovie properly and specially so called, and not of the whole Empire of the Moscovite according to the Bounds before laid down. For taking in the Northern Provinces belonging to it, as East-Lapland, Condora & Petzora, lying within the Arctick Circle, the longest Day in Summer will be full 6 months, (for so long do those Countries see no Night at all;) which is a mighty disproportion from the length of the longest Day in the most Southern parts, being but 16 hours and a half, as before is said. And by this Rule we are to take the Dimensions also. For though some make the length hereof from North to South, that is to say, from Cala in the North to Astracan near the Caspian Sea, to be no more than 2260 Versts, or 3690 Italian miles; yet they confess that, reckoning forwards from Tromschna, the farthest point of Petzora, the full length thereof will be nigh so much more. And for the breadth, reckoning from Narva on the Bay of Finland, (now in possession of the Swedes) to the Province of Severia in the East, it amounteth to 4400 Versts, or 6300 Italian miles; each Verst being estimated at three quarters of an English mile. Which mighty Territory, if it were peopled answerable to some other parts of the World, would either make it too great for one Prince to hold, or make that Prince too great and puissant for all his neighbours.

The people, as is commonly reported of them, are very perfidious, crafty and deceitful in all their Bargains, False-dealers with all they have to do with, making no reckoning of their Promises, and studying nothing more than ways to evade their Contracts. Vices so generally known and noted in them, that when they are to deal with Strangers, they dissemble their Country, and pretend to be of other Nations, for fear lest no body should trust them. Destitute they are of humane Affections, and so unnatural, that the Father insults on his Son, and he again over his Father and Mother: so malicious one towards another, that you shall have a man hide some of his own Goods in the house of some man whom he hateth, and then accuse him for the stealth of them. They are exceedingly given to drink, in somuch that all heady and intoxicating Drinks are by Law prohibited, and two or three days only in a year allowed them to be drunk in. For the most part they are strong of Body, swift of Foot, of a square Proportion, broad, short, and thick; gray-eyed, broad-bearded, and generally furnished with prominent Panches. The Commons live in miserable subjection to the Nobles, and they again in as great Slavery to the Duke or Emperour; to whom no man of all the vulgar dares immediately exhibit a Petition, or make known his Grievances: nay the mean Lords and Officers are squeamish in this kind, and, but on great submission, will not commend unto the Duke a poor man's Cause. They are altogether unlearned, even the Priests meanly indoctrinated; it being cautionated by the Great Duke, that there be no Schools, lest there should be any Scholars but himself: so that the people use to work commonly on the Lord's day, holding it fit to be kept by none but Gentlemen; and to say in a difficult question, God and our Great Duke know all this; and in other talk, All we enjoy, Health and Life, is all from our Great Duke; according to whose pleasure every man is prescribed what Habit he shall wear, both for matter and fashion, suitable unto their Condition. In the time of my Authour their Habit was a long Garment without Plaits, which hung down to their heels, commonly of white or blew, with very straight Sleeves; on their Legs wearing Buskins up as high as the calf, for the most part red, high at the heels, and beset with nails of Iron. The stuff and trimming of the Dress is the only difference betwixt the Noble and the Peasant.

The Women are attired also much after this manner; but if great and noble, suffered to set forth themselves with store of Pearls and Precious Sones, which hang so thick about their ears, that they do almost pull their ears from their heads. A second Marriage is conceived no blemish in point of Chastity, but the third condemns them of Incontinence. They are naturally subject enough to the Lusts of the flesh, but private, and fearful to offend; if once lascivious, then most intolerably wanton. It is the fashion of these Women to love that Husband best which beateth them most; and to think themselves neither loved nor regarded, unless they be two or three times a-day well-favouredly swaddled. The Authour of the Treasury of Times telleth a Story of a German Shoemaker, who, travelling into this Country, and here marrying a Widow, used her with all kindness that a woman could (as he thought) desire; yet did not she seem contented. At last learning where the fault was, and that his not beating her was the cause of her Pensiveness, he took such a vein in cudgelling her sides, that in the end the Hangman was fain to break his Neck for his labour.

They use the Sclavonian Language, but so corrupt and mixt with other Languages, that they and the Sclavonians understand not one another's meaning but by circumstance only: yet in Jugria (out of which the Hungarians are thought to have issued) they speak a corrupt Hungarian; and in Petzora and the Country of the Czeremissians they have a Language to themselves, distinct from others.

They first received the Christian Faith in the year 987, or, as some say, Anno 942, by the preaching and ministery of the Greeks sent hither by the Patriarch of Constaminople; of which Church they are constant followers, both for Rites and Doctrine: but not without some Superstitions of their own superadded to them; viz. not coming near a Cross, Church or Monastery, but they kneel down, and make the sign of the Cross, saying, Miloy Hispodi, i. e. Lord, have mercy upon us; nor entring into any Church, untill washed and bathed. They bear a deadly hatred to the Jews, whom they suffer not to live amongst them; and so great friendship unto a Calf, that they hold it a great offence to kill one, or to eat his flesh. Their Church is governed by 18 Bishops, and 2 Metropolitans, all of them subordinate to their Archbishop or Patriarch; as he in former times to the Constantinopolitan, by whom he used to be confirmed. But about an hundred years ago they withdrew themselves from that subjection; the Patriarch being nominated by the Great Duke, and consecrated by two or three of his own Suffragans. Without the counsel and advice of this Patriarch, the Emperour or Great Duke doth nothing of any moment. The Bishops are all chosen out of the Monastick or Regular Clergy; which makes the Monks (being all of the order of S. Basil) to live very religiously, in hope to be advanced to the Episcopal Dignity. And for the Secular Clergy, or Parochial Priests, there is not much required of them, but to say their Masses, (which being in their own Language they may easily do) and to read now and then one of S. Chrysostom's Homilies, translated heretofore for the use of those Churches. After the death of their first Wives they are not permitted to marry; in other things little differing from the rest of the people. Once in the year it is lawful and usual with them to hold a Synod, at which the Patriarch hath his Crosier or Pastoral-staff carried before him, as the Pope's Legate hath the Cross; where they make Constitutions for the publick Government, and the regulating of Divine matters; which are punctually and carefully observed by the Prince himself.

As followers of the Greek Church, (but so as to be counted a Church distinct) they differ much both from the Romish and reformed. 1. Denying the Holy Ghost to proceed from the Father and the Son. 2. Denying Purgatory, but praying for the Dead. 3. Believing that holy men enjoy not the presence of God before the Resurrection. 4. Communicating in both kinds but using Leavened bread, and mingling warm Water with the Wine, which both together they distribute with a Spoon. 5. Receiving Children of 7 years old to the Sacrament of the Eucharist, because then they begin to sin. 6. Forbidding extreme Unction, Confirmation, and fourth Marriages. 7. Admitting none to Orders but such as are married, and yet prohibiting Marriage to them that are actually in Orders. 8. Rejecting Carved Images, but admitting the Painted. 9. Observing 4 Lents in the year. 10. Reputing it unlawful to fast on Saturday; or to eat Blood, or any thing that hath been strangled, according to the first Council holden at Hierusalem. 11. And finally, dissolving Marriage by Divorcement upon every slight occasion, or conceived displeasure. Which diversity betwixt the Romanists & this people in point of Religion hath bred such a difference betwixt them in point of Affection, and made them so ill-conceited of one another, that if a Moscovite be known, or but suspected, to have conversed with any of the Church of Rome, he is accounted to be a polluted person, and must be solemnly purged and purified, before before he be admitted to partake of the bleſſed Sacrament.

In matters of War the people are indifferent able, as being almoſt in continual Broils with their Neighbours, and have a Cuſtom, that when they go to the Wars, every Souldier giveth to the Emperour or Great Duke a piece of money, which at the end of the War he receiveth again: and by that means the number of the ſlain is exactly known. At their Funerals they uſe to put a Peny into the Mouth of the party deceaſed, a pair of Shoes on his Feet, and a Letter in his Hand, directed (ſuch is their Superſtition) to S. Nicolas, whom they deem to be the Porter of Heaven: an opinion doubtleſs very prejudicial to the Pope's and S. Peter's Prerogatives.

This Country is not ſo populous as ſpacious. The Eaſtern parts are vexed with the Tartars, who, like Æſop's Dog, will neither dwell there themſelves, nor ſuffer the Moſcovites to plant Colonies in them: the Weſtern parts almoſt as much moleſted by the Swediſh and Polonian Kings; the Southern by the Turks and Precopenſes; and the Northern by the coldneſs of the Air, which is of ſuch vehemency, that Water thrown up into the air will turn to Ice before it fall to the ground. The better to reſiſt the extremity of this Cold, not only the Clothes of this people, but their very Houſes, are lined with thick Furs. Every Gentleman or man of note hath in his Dwelling-houſe, a Stove or Hot-houſe, in which they keep as it were, to thaw themſelves. Such as travel on the way uſe often to rub their Noſe or Ears with Snow or Ice, to ſettle and recal the motive Spirits into thoſe parts, which otherwiſe they would be in danger to loſe; the ignorance of which preventing Chirurgery was not the leaſt cauſe that, in the year 1598, of 70000 Turks which made an Inrode into Moſcovie, 40000 were frozen to death. By reaſon of theſe extremities of Froſts and Cold, it is the Cuſtom of this people to lay the Bodies of their dead all the Winter long on heaps in the Belfrees of their Churches, where they lie without putrefying or any ill ſavour to the end of March; at what time the Air beginning to wax warm, and the earth to be fit for digging, each Family looks out their dead bodies, and takes care to bury them. This exceſs of Cold in the Air gave occaſion to Caſtalian in his Aulicus wittily, and not incongruouſly, to feign that if two men being ſomewhat diſtant talk together in the Winter, their words will be ſo frozen that they cannot be heard; but if the parties in the Spring return to the ſame place, their words will melt into the ſame order that they were frozen and ſpoken, and be plainly underſtood. Such is their Winter: neither is their Summer leſs miraculous. For the huge Seas of Ice which in a manner covered the whole ſurface of the Country, are at the firſt approach of the Sun ſuddenly diſſolved, the Water quickly dried up, and the Earth dreſſed in her holy-day Apparel: ſuch a mature growth of Fruits, ſuch flouriſhing of Herbs, ſuch chirping of Birds, as if here were a perpetual Spring. The reaſon of which ſtrange and ſudden alteration is conceived to be the long lying of the Snow on the face of the Earth, keeping it from the rigour of the Winter Froſts; which being diſſolved by the Sun in the beginning of the Spring, doth ſo throughly drench and ſoke the Ground, (being of a light and Sandy mold) and conſequently make it the more penetrable by the beams of the Sun ſhining hotly on it, that it forceth in a manner the Herbs and Plants to ſhoot forth in great plenty, and that too in a ſhorter time then can be imagined.

The whole Country generally is very much over-ſpred with Woods, parts of the great Hercynian Foreſt, heretofore over-running all the North, and ſtill more viſible here than in other places: either by reaſon of the Idleneſs of the people, naturally given to Sloth and Eaſe; or for that the Country is not populous enough to overcome them; or that there is already Ground enough for Tillage to ſupply their neceſſary uſes. For here do grow the goodlieſt and talleſt Trees of the World, through which, by reaſon of their thickneſs, the brightneſs of the Sun-beams can hardly pierce; affording ſhelter to great multitudes of Cattel, but of wild Beaſts eſpecially, whoſe Skins are better than their Bodies; as Bears, Marterns, Zibellines, Wolves, Black-Foxes, whoſe skins are of very great eſtimation. Of the Timber of theſe Trees are ſquared all neceſſaries both for Forts and Houſes; the Fortifications in this Country being made of huge Beams fatined together, (the Chinks filled with Earth) not eaſily ſhaken by Battery, though much ſubject to Fire. And out of them iſſueth an unſpeakable quantity of Pitch and Roſin, which are hence diſtilled: beſides an everlaſting Fountain of Wax and Honey; the Bees, without the Midwifery of the Art of Man, building their Hives or Houſes in the hollow Trees. Concerning this there goeth a Story (reported and believed for a certain truth) of a Countryman who accidentally had ſlipped down into a great hollow Tree, where he ſtood up to the breaſt in Honey, continuing there two days without other Suſtenance: at the end whereof a Bear coming to partake of the Booty, he laid hold of his Legs, and ſo terrified him with his Cries, that he made him leap out with the man at his heels. The Country yieldeth alſo great ſtore of Flax and Hemp, which is tranſported yearly into other Countries, (and would make them very excellent Cordage, if the people had any skill in Manufactures or Mechanical Arts) and in ſome places rich Paſtures, and ſuch ſtore of Corn, that therewith they do furniſh Lapland and the North parts of Sweden. Fiſh they have alſo in good plenty, which they ſalt and dry, and either vent it to the Merchant, or lay it up in ſtore for their Forts and Families. By which account it will appear that the principal Commodities which they ſend abroad are rich Furs, Flax, Hemp, Whales-greace, Honey, Wax, Pitch, Roſin, Nuts, Filberds and the like: which either the Dutch and Engliſh buy of them at the Port of S. Nicholas, or the Armenians at Aſtracan near the Caſpian Sea; giving them in return Cloth, Silks, Tapeſtry, and ſome other Merchandiſe, tranſported to the value of 500000 Rubbles yearly. Particularly of Wax 50000 Poad, (every Poad containing 40 Engliſh Pounds) of Tallow 100000 Poad, 100000 Hides, 100 Ships laden with Flax and Hemp, the reſt of their Commodities proportionably in the time of my Author; ſince whoſe time the Trade hereof hath been much increaſed.

This Country not improperly may be called (as by ſome it is) the Mother of Rivers. The chief of which are, 1. The Don, called Tanais by the old Geographers, and by them thought to be the only Boundary betwixt Europe and Aſia; the Northern parts of this Country being then unknown. It diſburtheneth it ſelf into Palus Mæotis; and hath its Fountain not out of the Riphæan Mountains, as was thought of old, but out of a great Lake called Iwanoweſero, in the Foreſt of Okonieskilies or Jephapinolies, ſome 20 Engliſh miles from the City of Tulla; and having run a great way Eaſtward, turneth back again, and then proceedeth Southwards towards the Mæotis, as was ſaid before. 2. Boryſthenes, now called Nieper, whoſe ſpring was unknown unto Herodotus, but now diſcovered to be near Dniperck, a Village of Moſcovy ſpecially ſo called, in the Foreſt of Wolkoniskie. Whence paſſing South, and running by the Town of Smolensko, it receiveth many other Rivers, and amongſt them that of Deſna (by the ancient Writers called Hypanis) notwithſtanding, whoſe muddy waters it ſtill retains its natural Clearneſs and ſo falls into the Euxine Sea. 3. Turuntus, (ſo called by Ptolemie) or Duina the leſs, (to difference it from Duina the greater) which riſing not far from the Head of Boryſthenes, out of the Lake of Duina, and waſhing the Walls of Riga, the chief Town of Livonia, loſeth it ſelf in the Baltick Sea. 4. Duna, or Dwine, (commonly called Duina the greater) ſo called from the meeting of two Rivers, the Juga and the Sachan, (whereof more hereafter) of which that of the longeſt courſe, not known unto the Ancients, hath its Head in the Province of Permia, and it falls into the Frozen or Northern Ocean at the Port of S. Nicolas. 5. Occa, or Ocyne, riſing in the Territory of Miſceneck, and making all the Country fruitful through which it paſſeth, emptieth it ſelf into the Volga. 6. Volga, by Ptolemie called Rha, by the Tartars Edill; which riſeth 25 Dutch miles from Moſco, towards Lituania, and fetching a great compaſs in and out, after it hath ſwallowed up many leſſer Rivers, diſchargeth it ſelf with 70 Mouths into the Caſpian Sea, now called Mar di Bachu. Here are beſides theſe Rivers many notable Lakes, as thoſe of Duina and Volga, out of which the ſaid two Rivers iſſue; that called Ilmen, not far from Novogrod the great, 80 Italian miles in compaſs; that of Ladoga, 100 Dutch miles in length and 60 in breadth, in which are many pleaſant Iſlands; and that called Bieloyeſero, (Lacus Albus in Latine) about 12 German miles long and as many broad, into which 360 Rivers are ſaid to diſcharge their Streams; in the midſt whereof is a ſtrong Caſtle, ſaid to be impregnable, in which the Great Duke keeps the moſt part of his Treaſure, and into which he doth withdraw in the times of Danger and Sedition.

As for the Mountains of this Country, here are the Montes Amadoci, Riphæi, and Hyperborei, ſo much talked of and ſo little known amongſt the Ancients: a continual and craggy Chain of Hills running croſs Sarmatia Europæa, South and North, and thence Eaſtwards into Aſiatica. Beginning not far from the fall of Boryſthenes into the Euxine, they extend directly towards the North, and are there called Montes Amadoci; afterwards bending for a long ſpace towards the North-eaſt, they are called Riphæi; and then paſſing on directly Eaſt, by reaſon of their Northernly ſituation, called Hyperborei. And though Sir Walter Raleigh ſays, I know not on what authority, that there are no Riphæan Mountains in rerum natura: yet Mercator placeth them in this Tract, and telleth us, that in regard of their being always covered with Ice and Snow they are hardly paſſible: calling theſe and the ſaid Hyperborei (in his Europa) by the name of Cingulum terræ, or the Girdle of the Earth, a great part whereof (though known in divers places by different names) they do ſeem to compaſs.

It is divided, for the better Government hereof, into four parts, (by them termed Chetfords) and thoſe governed by four Lieutenants, not reſident upon their Charges, but attending on the Emperour's perſon whereſoever he goeth, and there holding their Courts, but eſpecially at Moſco, the prime Seat of the Empire, where from their Under-Deputies they receive the Complaints of their Provinces, and inform the Emperour's Council of the buſineſs, and from them again receive inſtruction for Reformation. But as to the Corography of it, it is divided into the Province of 1. Muſcovie, eſpecially ſo called. 2. Smolensko. 3. Muſaiski. 4. Pleſcow. 5. Novogrod the great, 6. Corelia. 7. Biarmia. 8. Petzora. 9. Condora. 10. Obdora. 11. Jugria. 12. Severia. 13. Permia. 14. Rezan. 15. Wiatbka. 16. Caſan. 17. Aſtracan. 18. Novogordia inferior. 19. The Mordwits, or Mordua. 20. Worotine. 21. Tuver. 22. Wolodomir. 23. Dwina, and 24 the Ruſſian Iſlands. Others of leſs note (of which there is no want) are reduced to theſe. In my Deſcription whereof I ſhall not be ſo exact and punctual as I have been hitherto; the Country not being much travelled by Strangers, nor any of the Natives ſuffered to go into Foreign Nations, or permitted (out of Jealouſies of State) to hold diſcourſe with the Embaſſadors of Neighbouring Princes, but only in the Emperour's hearing. By means whereof the Corography of this vaſt Empire is come but lamely to our hands; though the Power, Policy and Revenues of it, being Points diſcernible by the Miniſters of other Princes, and by the courſe and conduct of their Affairs, are as well known as thoſe of leſs diſtance. Which ſaid, we will firſt begin with Moſcovie, the prevailing Province, that which gives name to this whole Empire; with reference to which the Situation and Poſition of the reſt of the Provinces is ſet forth unto us in our Authors.

MOSCOVIE ſpecially ſo called is ſeated in the very Center of this Eſtate, and ſo more fit to order the Affairs thereof. It is the largeſt Province of the whole, extending from Eaſt to Weſt 600 Dutch, or 2400 Engliſh miles: ſo populous withal, that beſides 30000 Boiares or Gentlemen, bound to ſerve on horſe back at their own charges, (like the Turks Timariots) the Great Duke is able to raiſe 70000 Foot, (which is a great matter for a Country ſo little cultivated.)

The Soil hereof is ſtiff and clammy, but might be made more profitable than it is, were it well manured, or ploughed and ordered, as it is in all other Countries. For here, and in moſt parts elſe of this large Dominion, the people are accuſtomed to ſow no more of their Land than what they dig with the Spade, or can break up with a Stick very ſharply pointed; whereof they carry great numbers into the Field, that when one breaks they may uſe another.

Chief places in this Province are, 1. Moſco, the Imperial Seat, and the See of the Patriarch, ſo called of the River Moſco upon which it is ſituate. Exceedingly improved both in ſtate and beauty ſince the time that Daniel the fourth Lord of Muſcovie, removed the Seat-Royal hither from Wolodomir, where before it was; inſomuch that it was once grown to nine miles in compaſs, containing then 41500 Families: but being fired by the Tartar Anno 1571, (at what time there were burnt 80000 perſons) it is reduced to five miles only. The Houſes for the moſt part are of Wood and Dirt, the Streets very miry; without either Ditch, Wall, or Rampart, to defend it againſt an Enemy. Inſtead whereof there are two Caſtles in the outward parts of it, the one called Kitagorod, the other Balſigorod. It is environed with the River Moſco, and another Water called Neglinna, which here falls into it. It contains 16 Churches, moſt of them of the ſame materials as the Houſes are; and the Palace of the Great Duke, ſituate in the midſt hereof, (which for the greatneſs of it may be thought a little City:) fortified with 17 Towers, 3 Bulwarks, and a continual Garriſon (if the Great Duke be there) of 25000 men for the Guard of his perſon. 2. Sloboda, aa Biſhop's See, North-eaſt to Moſco, on the Banks of one of the greateſt Rivers which fall into the Volga. 3. Ruſchow, the Title of a Dukedom, fortified with a Caſtle of Wood, (of which ſtuff moſt of the Fortreſſes of this Country are made) ſituate 23 leagues from Moſco towards the Weſt, on the Banks of the Volga, which hath its fountain in the Territory and Precincts hereof. 4. Jaroſlaw, on the Volga alſo, a Town and Caſtle diſtant about 46 Dutch miles from Moſco; formerly the Eſtate and Patrimony of the ſecond Sons of the Great Duke, but united to the Royal Domain by John Waſiliwich, and by him added alſo to the Style Imperial. It is alſo one of the Sees Epiſcopal. 5. Ruſtow, the See of one of the two Metropolitans, ſituate in a fruitful Soil, well ſtored with Fiſh, and yielding good plenty of Salt. One of the ancienteſt Principalities of all this Empire, and held accuſtomably by the ſecond Son of the Great Duke as a State diſtinct; but conquered by John Waſiliwich, Anno 1565, and added to the Style and Patrimony of the Great Duke himſelf, the younger Sons being from thenceforth put off with Penſions. 6. Vologda, a Biſhop's See, ſituate in a fenny and woody Country; very ſtrong by nature, and beautified with one of the ſtrongeſt Caſtles of all this Eſtate, where the Great Duke doth ſometime lay a part of his Treaſure; that part eſpecially which is raiſed of the Engliſh and Dutch Merchandiſe, which, being landed at the Port of S. Nicolas, is firſt brought hither, where having paid a new Toll or Cuſtom, it goeth on to Moſco. Betwixt this City and that of Jaroſlaw before mentioned, for the ſpace of an hundred Engliſh miles, where ſtood in former times 50 goodly Villages, (ſome of them of a mile in length) the Country in a manner is left wholly deſolate and without Inhabitant; abandoned by the people by reaſon of the inſupportable Preſſures which were laid upon them.

2. SMOLENSKO. 3. MOSAISKI. 4. PLESCOW.

THE Dukedom of SMOLENSKO is ſituate on the courſe of the River Nieper or Boryſthenes, full of many thick Foreſts, from whence they carry a great number of rich Skins yearly. Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Smolensko, ſituate on the Nieper, a Biſhop's See, about 80 Polonian miles from Moſco, begirt on every ſide with Mountains and ſpacious Woods. A large Town, and of great eſteem in theſe parts of the Empire, and giving name unto this Province; which hitherto was governed in a free condition under the Patronage and Protection of the King of Poland, in the time of Alexander a late King thereof; but by Baſilius the Great Duke conquered and added unto this Eſtate: taken by the Polanders in the year 1610, after a long ſiege of two years, with the ſlaughter of 200000 Muſcovites, and the loſs of many of the Beſiegers; but reſtored again to Michael Fedovitius the Great Duke, on the making of the Peace between them. 2. Biela, a Principality of it ſelf, having the honour of a Caſtle, and reckoned in the uſual Style of the Knez or Emperour.

MOSAISKI hath in length 350 Italian miles, and as much in breadth; ſo called from Moſaiski, the chief Town hereof, and a Biſhop's See; taken, together with the Territory or Province appertaining to it, from Alexander King of Poland, by John the Great Duke, Father of Baſilius before mentioned.

PLESCOW, or PSKOW, contains in length 350 Italian miles, in breadth 230 or thereabouts, ſo called from Pleſcow, or Pskow, the chief City of it, and a Biſhop's See, great, powerful, and well walled about, the only walled City of all this Empire: ſo large within the Walls, that when it was beſieged by Stephen King of Poland, there were in it for defence thereof 70000 Foot and 7000 Horſe, beſides the natural Inhabitants of it, which in all ordinary computation muſt be many more. It belonged formerly to the Poles, in the right of the Dukedom of Lituania; taken from them by Baſilius the Great Duke of Muſcovie, Anno 1509, by whom and his Succeſſors it is uſed in the Royal Style.

5. NOVOGORD.

NOVOGORD, or NOVOGROD, is one of the largeſt Provinces or Dukedoms in all Ruſſia, bordering on Livonia, towards Sinus Finnicus or the Gulf of Finland. A colder Country and leſs fruitful than that of Muſcovy, becauſe ſituate ſomewhat farther North: the longeſt Summer day in Moſco not being above 18 hours; whereas in Novogrod, the chief City hereof, it is very near 20. By conſequence, the Winter-nights being of that length muſt make the Air exceeding cold, and the Soil as comfortleſs. Here is in this Province the great lake Ilmen, ſpoken of before, 80 Italian miles in compaſs; as alſo that called Ladoga, before alſo mentioned.

Towns of moſt eſtimation in it are, 1. Novogrod it ſelf, the wealthieſt and goodlieſt City of all the North, affirmed to be in greatneſs not inferiour to Rome; called therefore Novogrod the great, (to difference it from another of the ſame name near unto Wolodomir:) an Archbiſhop's See, and one of the four Mart-Towns of the Hanſe-Merchants, reſorted to from all parts for the Trade of Muſcovie, brought thither by Land, and thence tranſported through the Baltick to moſt parts of Chriſtendom. So confident were they in thoſe times of their power and ſtrength, that they uſed to ſay, that Men could do nothing againſt God and them: but they found the contrary, when taken from the Crown of Poland by the Great Duke of Muſcovie. The Trade hereof is ſince much decayed, by the finding out of the North-eaſt paſſage to the Port of S. Nicolas, where the Engliſh and Dutch Merchants barter with the Muſcovite. Yet ſtill it keeps the reputation of the principal City; ſituate on the River Naf, which the Dutch call Ny. The Buildings are for the moſt part of Wood and Clay. It is diſtant from Moſco 120 Dutch miles, and about 200 from the main body of the Baltick; betwixt which and this City lieth the whole Bay of Finland, the Entrances whereof upon the Duina (which leads towards Novogrod) are fortified which the ſtrong Towns and Garriſons of Narva and Revel, both in the hands of the K. of Sweden; which is another great hinderance to the Trade of this Town. 2. Narva, on the North-Bank of Duina, where it falls into the Bay of Finland or Sinus Finnicus, in the Province or Territory of Wichidaw: heretofore reckoned of as a part of Livonia; but being taken by Baſilius the Great Duke, with the reſt of this Country, and the Town of Novogrod it ſelf, Anno 1477, it was impregnably fortified by the care of his Son Waſiliwich, who for a reward unto the Architect, being a Polonian, put out both his Eyes, to diſable him from building the like again. But having left all the Natives in their own Habitations, without abating either their ſtrength or number, the Town and Caſtle not long after was betrayed to the King of Sweden, who ſtill holds it. 3. Pozow, or Pozovia, and 4. Volocolue; two ſtrong Pieces, ſituate in the Borders againſt the Polanders. 5. Vobſco, beſieged by Stephen King of Poland with an Army of 100000 men; who was forced to retire without taking it, with the loſs of many of his beſt Captains and common Souldiers. It is diſtant from Novogrod 28 Dutch miles: the Country about it is called Volki; where they ſay for certain, that all Cattel which are brought thither, of what hair or colour ſoever they be, upon a little ſtay there become all white. The People of this Tract have a Language (or ſome Dialect rather) peculiar only to themſelves. 6. Juanogorod, a ſtrong Caſtle not far from Vobſco, 40 miles from Novogrod, a Frontier-Caſtle againſt the Swedes garriſoned in Narva, to repulſe whoſe Inrodes it was built.

In this Country, and not far from the Town of Novogrod, was fought that memorable Battel betwixt the the Sarmatians and their Slaves. For when the Asiatick Scythians went to plant themſelves in Media, and the parts adjoyning, ſome of the Sarmatians, then Inhabitants of this Tract, went along for company. Their long ſtay cauſed their Wives, deſpairing of their return, to comfort themſelves with their Slaves both at bed and board; to whom they brought a luſty increaſe of Youths: who being well grown, and hearing that the Sarmatians were upon their coming back, joyned together againſt them; the Slaves, to retain their Wealth and Freedom which they were poſſeſſed of, the Women, for fear of the diſpleaſure of their Husbands, and the Young men, for defence of their Fathers and Mothers. With joynt Forces they go out to meet them before their entry into the Country; neither are the Maſters ſlow in their advance, hoping to take them unprovided. At Novogrod they have the firſt ſight of each other. The Maſters, ſcorning to defile their Swords on ſo ignoble an Enemy, aſſault them with Whips; and by the terrour thereof got a ſignal Victory. In memory of which Battel, the people of that City have ever ſince ſtamped their money with the figure of an Horſeman ſhaking a Whip in his hands: And it is the Cuſtom of all Muſcovie, that the Maids in the time of wooing ſend ſuch a Whip, curiouſly wrought by her own hands, to that Suitor whom ſhe reſolves on for her Husband, in token of her future Subjection to him. But of this more hereafter in another place.

6. GORELIA. 7. BIARMIA.

SIxty Dutch miles from Novogrod lieth the Province called CORELIA, extending Northwards as far as to a Branch of the Frozen Sea, where the longeſt Day is 20 hours and a half; the Nights proportionable in the Winter make it cold and barren. It bordereth on the Eaſt of Finland, from which it is parted by a long and rough ridge of Mountains. By reaſon of which Situation betwixt two great Princes, the people are enforced to pay Tribute to both, though properly the Subjects of the Great Duke of Muſcovie. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Kexholm, or Hexholm, in the hands of the Swedes, and 2. Corelnburg; the chief Towns of the Province, belonging with the reſt of the Country unto the Moſcovite. By ſome this Province is made a part of the Eaſtern Lapland; but, I think, erroneouſly: the people having ſome good Towns, and ſavouring of ſome Humanity, neither of which are known or heard of amongſt the Laplanders. 3. Nodenburg, on the mouth of a Lake, which by the River called Warfuga emptieth it ſelf into the Bay of S. Nicolas.

On the North-ſide of that Branch or Arm of the Frozen Ocean which bounds Corelia lieth the Weſtern part of Lapland, which by a proper name is called BIARMIA: the Country of the Dikiloppi, or wild Lappians, as the Moſcovites call them, to whoſe Duke or Emperour they are ſubject. We had their Character before when we were in Swethland, nor ſhall we need to repeat it here: as Barbarous and as rude as the worſt ſort of thoſe mentioned in Scricfinnia, and as Idolatrous as they; but more (if more may be) inclined to Luſtfulneſs than the others. In the Winter Solſtice, when the Sun entreth into Capricorn, they have Night for three whole months together: during which time, lurking in their Caves, they have leiſure to conſult with the Prince of Darkneſs; being very great Sorcerers, able (as ſome affirm) to raiſe Winds, Clouds, Tempeſts, and do many ſtrange things. Towns there are none. Some Sheds and Cabbins on the Sea-coaſts, patched up by the Sailors of their reception and refreſhment as they come on Land, and named according to their fancies, but not here conſiderable.

8. PETZORA. 9. CONDORA. 10. OBDORA. 11. JUGRIA.

OPpoſite to Biarmia, or Weſt-Lapland, on the other ſide of the Bay, leading towards the Port of S. Nicolas, lieth a large Promontory or Head-land, ſtretching out far into the North, beyond the Arctick, comprehending in it 4 Provinces of the Ruſſian Empire; that is to ſay, Petzora, Condora, Obdora, and Jugria: belonging formerly to the Tartars, but won from them of late years by the Ruſſian Emperours; extending by that means their Territories to the River Ob, but not a whit improving them in Power or Patrimony. Howſoever ſomewhat muſt be ſaid of them, becauſe parts of this great Body which we are to diſſect.

PETZORA, ſo called from a River of that name, is fenced on every ſide by Mountains and unpaſſable Rocks, extending Northwards to the Sea, and croſſed with a vaſt Chain of Hills, part of the Hyperborei, ſpoken of before: ſo high, that a certain man, having travelled in the aſcent of them 17 days together, is ſaid to have returned back again, deſpairing to attain the top of them: covered in the Winter-time with perpetual Snows, in the Summer with as ſcorching Heats, by the continual lying of the Sun on all parts thereof. The people are of a plain and ſimple nature, and received the Ruſſian Faith and Empire at one time together, Anno 1518. The chief Town of it is Petzora, or Pechora, at the fall of that River into the Sea; a ſmall Town, but having three Churches in it: the people whereof, though otherwiſe ſufficiently ſimple, as before is ſaid, do in the Summer-time catch Partridge, Ducks, Swans, Geeſe, and other Fowl, which they ſalt and lay by till the Winter, and then live upon them. So good a Tutor is the Belly, that the Poet did not unfitly give it the titles of Artis Magiſter and Ingenii largitor Venter: whereof this may ſerve for one example.

CONDORA lieth on the North of Petzora, more near the Pole; by conſequence is a colder Country, and of worſe condition; one half of the Year being continual Day, and the other half as long a Night. The people are univerſally Idolaters, worſhipping ſome Images (or Idols) in the ſhape of a Man, others in that of Bears, Wolves, &c. which they adorn with the richeſt Furs they can get, and hide them in their Caves for fear of the Ruſſes; who, if they chance to light upon them, as they hunt thoſe parts for Sables, Foxes and Bevers, take away their Furs, and beſtow a greater heat upon them in Fires. The chief Town hereof is Puſtozera, over againſt Nova Zemla; on or near the great Lake called Ozera, whence it hath the name; ſituate in the 68. Degree of Northern Latitude, 50 minutes over.

OBDORA, ſo called from the River Ob, on both ſides of whoſe Banks it lieth, is the moſt North-eaſtern Province of all theſe Dominions; won to the Obedience of the Ruſſes in the Reign of Theodore the Son of John, Great Duke of Moſcovie. At what time the people had no Cities, lived in Hoords or Companies, ate the Beaſts they took, knew no Corn nor Bread. They were then very good Archers, ſharpning their Arrows with Fiſh-bones; with which bones and the Sinews of the Beaſts they ſowed Furs together for their Clothing; which they wear inward in the Winter, outward in the Summer, covering their Houſes with Elk-skins. By this Theodore were ſome Caſtles built on the River-ſide, to which he ſent condemned perſons, and brought it into the form of a petit Kingdom. But his Succeſſor Boris built Tooma, the chief Town hereof, with divers other Towns on both ſides of the Water, not worth naming here. But notwithſtanding this Subjection to the Moſcovite, they continue ſtill in their old Idolatry, worshipping an ancient Idol in form of an old Woman, holding in each Arm a Child, and a third at her feet, called by them Zlata Baba, or the Golden old Wife; to which they offer precious Furs, sacrifice Harts, and therewith do consult touching things to come. But some account this for a Fable, or a meer mistake.

JUGRIA, or JUHAR, lieth also on the Northern Seas, but more South than either of the other, betwixt Petzora or Pechora, and the Province of Dwina: the longest Day in Summer being not above 21 hours, or not fully that. The people are for the most part Idolaters, and worship the same Images as do those of Obdora: affirmed by some to be the Progenitors of the present Hungarians, who, Comming out of this Country, over ran all Pannonia, and there fixed their Dwellings. For proof of which it is affirmed that they spake the old Hungarian Language, not used but in this Country and the North parts of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus: which more learned men affirm to be the Jazygian, the Language of the Jazyges, who anciently possessed that Country in the times of the Romans. But leaving this dispute to another place, certain it is that they are subject to the Moscovite, but so poor and miserable a people, that they have few Towns, and not many Houses; and so bare of money, that in stead thereof they pay Furs for Tribute to their Emperour.

12. SEVERIA. 13. PERMIA.

SEVERIA, or SIBIOR, as the Moscovites call it, lieth in a long Tract on the Banks of the River Ob or Oby, South of Obdora and the rest of the four last Provinces. The Country is very fruitful, and abounding with all things necessary, notwithstanding that there be great Desarts, and some Forests also; but those Forests well stored with black Foxes, Ermines, Sables, and the like wild Beasts, which yield more profit by their rich Furs, than any more fertile Country doth by its Corn and Fruits. Insomuch that in the year 1589 there were collected out of this Province only, in the way of Tribute for the Emperour, 466 Timber of Sables, (every Timber containing 40 Skins) five Timber of Marterns, 180 Cases of black Foxes, (every Case containing 40 Skins) besides other Commodities. The Woods also do offer good plenty of Honey, and the Plains of Herbage, well watered with the River Sem, which falleth into the Desna, and both together into that of the Nieper, or Borysthenes. There are in it many Towns and Castles, the principal whereof are, 1. Sibier, on the West side of the River Ob, which gives name to the Province. 2. Branki, not far from the great Forest from hence named. 3. Starodus, 4. Potuvolo, and 5. Czernigo. [Here by mistake the two Provinces of Siberia and Severia (which differ as the farthest North-east and South-west points of Muscovia, betwixt which there is a vast Tract of ground) are confounded, part of the Towns belonging to one, part to the other; as do the two Rivers, the Ob, and the Nieper.]

The people hereof, by reason of their continual Skirmishes with the neighbouring Tartars, are the most Warlike Nation of all the Russes: heretofore governed by a Duke or Prince of their own, who at the first acknowledged no Superiour; but afterwards was severally and successively tributary to the Lituanians, the Polanders, and the Moscovites; and finally, the last Duke, being falsly accused of Treason, was outed of his Estate by Basilius the Great Duke, who added it to the rest of his Dominions, as it hath continued ever since.

PERMIA is situate on the South-west of Sibior, or Severia, a large Province, distant 250 Dutch miles from Mosco; so called from Perm, or Permia, the chief Town hereof, situate on the River Vischore, or Vistorna. The second Town of note is called Siewiarskey. The people (as also those of Sibior) are of the Moscovite Religion, and live most by hunting wild Beasts, whose Flesh they eat, and make good Merchandise of their Skins, many of which they pay yearly to the Great Duke in way of Tribute, who makes a good Commodity of them, selling them to the Merchant at excessive rates. They have no Corn of their own growth, nor will they buy any elsewhere; but, in stead of Bread, eat the flesh of Stags dried and prepared in the Sun; speaking a Language of their own, different from the rest of the Russes; and in stead of Horses and Oxen, make use of great Dogs and Stags, whom they train up to draw their Sleds from one place to another. There is good store of Woods amongst them; but they want Cedars, and they have paid dearly for that want. For John Vasiliwich, meaning to pick a Quarrel with them, sent to them for certain loads of Cedar-wood, whereof he knew there grew none in their Country; and upon word returned that they had no such Wood, he fined them at 12060 Rubbles.

REZAN, a great and goodly Province, is situate betwixt the River Tanais and that of Occa; the most fruitful Country of all Russia, and (if report be true) of the whole World also: it being credibly affirmed that one grain of Corn doth bring forth six Ears; the Stalks hereof growing so thick, that an Horse can hardly pass through them, or a Quail flie out of them, but with very much difficulty. Here is also great plenty of Fruits, better than are to be found elsewhere in Russia; together with good store of Honey, Fish, Fowl, and other Commodities; besides Ermins, Bevers, and the like, common in these Countries. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Tulla, famous for the Fountain or Spring-head of the River Tanais, which ariseth near it. 2. Colluga, well garrisoned for fear of the Crim-Tartar. 3. Cossira, a Bishop's See; as is also 4. Rezan, the principal of the Province, which it giveth name to; seated upon the Banks of the River Occa. A Country populous and well-planted, affording to the Great Duke 15000 Boiarei, or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back, and betwixt 30 and 40000 Foot.

15. WIATHKA. 16. CASAN.
17. ASTRACAN.

South-east of Rezan, beyond the banks of the River Kamme, and about 150 Dutch miles from Mosco, lieth the Province called WIATHKA; fenny and barren, but well stored with Fish and Honey, and wild Beasts good plenty. Heretofore subject to the Tartars, and then the receptacle or retreat of all fugitive Servants, here very gladly entertained: but the Tartarians being expulsed, it was made subject by Basilius to the Dukes of Moscovie. I do not read of any Towns which should be here, which makes me think that they do still retain so much of the Tartar with them as to live in Hoords and Companies, without any fixt Dwellings, or at the best in scattered Houses, not hitherto united into Towns and Villages; except it be the Town of Wiatbka it self, built since the subjection of it to the Moscovite, and made a Garrison, to defend these out-parts of this Empire against the Incursions of the Tartars.

CASAN, a Kingdom formerly of Tartaria deserta, hath on the South-east of Wiatbka, the most civil people of the Tartars, but owing much of that Civility to their conversation with the Muscovites, (though none of the civillest themselves,) tilling their Lands and building Houses where they may with safety. For although the Soil hereof be tolerably fruitful and fit for Habitation, yet the Country for the most part is desolate and ill inhabited; partly by reason of some vast Desarts, lying betwixt the Cities of Casan and Astracan; but principally in regard of the Crim-Tartar, who will not suffer the Moscovite to plant it with Colonies of his own people, nor the Natives to live there in quiet, except only in the Western parts, where they are protected by Garrisons. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Casan, upon the River Volga, which gives name to the Kingdom; since the Subjection of this People to the great Duke, and their Conversion to the Faith, made a Bishop's See. 2. Surick, upon the River Sure, in the middle of the vast Desarts betwixt Casan and Astracan; built by Basilius the Great Duke, for a Stage or Resting-place for Merchants and Travellers, that there they might repose themselves without fear of the Tartars. The people hereof had once a King of their own, as before was said; the last of which named Chelealcesk, submitted himself unto Basilius the Great Duke, and became tributary; but afterward revolting, he was vanquished John Vasiliwich, An. 1553, and this Kingdom thereupon united to the Empire of Russia: the Emperours since that time writing themselves Czar Casanski, or King of Casan. And possible enough it is that Basilius, who first made it tributary, might from hence take the name of Basilius Casan, according to the custom of the ancient Romans.

Under the Government hereof are the Czeremissi, a People that live in great Forests without any Houses, living for the most part of Honey and the flesh of wild Beasts, with the Skins of which they are apparelled. Their Language is different from the rest. They are swift of foot, and very good Archers, carrying their Bows in their hands continually, and practising their Children so timely in it, that they give them nothing to eat (after such an age) until they can hit a White which is set before them.

ASTRACAN lieth also South-east of Casan, more near unto the Caspian Sea; parted from Casan by those Desarts spoken of before, but situate on the same Branch of the River Volga; which, having run a course of 2000 Italian miles, dischargeth it self into this Sea with no less then 70 Mouths or Chanels. It took this name from Astracan the chief Town hereof, situate about 20 Italian miles from the fall of one of those 70 Mouths or Chanels into the Caspian: by the commodiousness whereof it is one of the best Towns of Trade in all these Dominions, the Armenian Merchants coming hither, and bartering their Silks and Manufactures for the Furs and other natural Commodities of the Russes or Moscovites. A Kingdom formerly, but a Kingom of less esteem than that of Casan; conquered (together with it) by Basilius the Great Duke Anno 1494, and by him made Christian. But afterwards revolting, they were more absolutely subdued by John Vasiliwich, who brought into the field against them no fewer then 120000 Horse and 200000 Foot, (enough to over-run a far greater Country) and yet had hardly got the better, but for the terrour of his great Ordnance, which the others wanted. Upon that Victory it was made a Member of the Empire of Russia, the Emperour whereof hath since styled himself the King of Astracan.

BUT it is now time we return toward Europe, out of which we have wandred up and down in the skirts of Asia, in tracing out the several Provinces of this Empire, since our first crossing over the Bay of Grandvic, or Saint Nicolas, into the Country of Petzora. But in our way we must first take a view of the Dukedom of Novogrod the Lower, so called to difference it from Novogrod (surnamed the Great) spoken of before; situate almost in the midst betwixt Casan and Mosco, distant from the last 100 Polonian miles, and 60 miles from the Borders of the other; every Polonian mile being reckoned at four Italian. The Country is generally very rich both for Tillage and Pasturage, inferiour unto none in all this Estate but Rezan and Wolodomir only. So called from Novogrod, the chief Town situate at the Confluence of the Occa and Volga; besides which it hath the neighbourhood of a very great Lake, which storeth it plentifully with Fish. A City of great esteem in all this Empire, partly for the great number of Houses, in that not easily equalled by any other; partly for an impregnable Castle, cut out of the main Rock with incredible charges in the time of Basilius the Great Duke; but principally for a stately and magnificent Temple, built above 600 years ago, in imitation (or emulation, as some say) of the famous Church of S. Sophia in Constantinople. To this Town the Story of the Scythian or Sarmatian Slaves ought, in my mind, to be ascribed; though commonly reported of the other Novogrod, in the West parts of this Empire. My reason is, because it is not likely that the Sarmatians dwelling on the Borders of the Baltick Sea should cross all this Country, to join with the Asiatick Scythians, so remote from them, in a needless War, which those of this Tract might well do, as near Neighbours to them, if not of the same Nation or Extraction with them: nor is it probable that the Slaves would suffer their Masters to waste all the Country as far as to the Baltick Sea, and to increase their strength by the Spoil thereof, before they met them in the Field to give them Battel.

Subject to the Estate hereof are the MORDWIT Tartars, lying on the South, betwixt the Volga and the Don or Tanais, where it beginneth to return Westwards towards the Euxine. A people much of the same nature with the Czeremissois, but that they have some Villages and scattered Houses, which the other either want, or else care not for. They are Idolaters for the most part (and the rest Mahometans) carrying their Idols in their Carts whersoever they go; worshipping that Beast all day which they first see in the morning, and swearing by it for that day, as their chiefest Deity.

AND now again we are in Europe, where the Great Duke hath almost as many Titles as Towns with Territories. Four of them (besides some before) are either situate in the Province of Moscovy, or else so intermingled with the Towns thereof, that they may easily be taken (or mistaken) for Members of it. The principal are,

WOROTINE, seated on the West side of the River Occa, a distinct Dukedom of it self; so called from Worotin the chief City of it, built upon that River, about 3 Dutch miles from Colluga in the Province of Rezen, lying on the farther Bank thereof; beautified with a strong Castle, and a pleasant Soil. The 2. Miscenecck, the next Town of note, remarkable for the Head of the River Occa, which ariseth in the fields adjoyning.

TUVER, or OTUVER, as some call it, is a large and goodly Country lying along the Banks of the River Volga: so populous, that it is said to contain 40000 Boiares or Gentlemen fit to serve on horseback, and double that number of the common or inferiour sort. It gives the Title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and is so called from Tuver the chief Town thereof, and a Bishop's See; affirmed to be a fairer and more stately City than Mosco it self, from which it is distant 36 Dutch miles.

WOLO-

WOLODOMIR is one of the most fruitful Countries in all Russia, not parallel'd by many Countries in the World; the Soil here (if all be true which is said of it) yielding such an Increase, that many times the Husbandman hath twenty, and sometimes twenty five, for one. It gives the title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and hath precedency before Moscovy in the Style Imperial. So called from Wolodomir, the chief City of it, and a Bishop's See, and that so named from the Founder, who probably was the same Valadomir (one of the first Kings of the Russes) who married Helena the Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, Emperour of Constantinople. The City is situate 36 Polonian miles on the East of Mosco, anciently the chief Seat and Residence of the Great Duke, and so continued till the time of John, the Son of Daniel, who first translated it to Mosco, that from thence he might more easily confront and oppose the Tartars, with whose Irruptions and Invasions both he and his Predecessors had long been troubled. Under the Government hereof is the City of Susdali, of great esteem, and very well peopled as long as the Royal Seat remained at Wolodomir, betwixt which and Mosco it is seated. After it fell into decay, and being once destroyed by the Tartars, could never since recover its ancient Lustre; having now little to uphold its reputation but a Bishop's See.

DWINA, so called from the chief Town, is situate on the Confluence of two Rivers, Juch and Sachona, whence it hath the name; Dwine in the Language of that Country signifying two, as twain doth with us amongst Country-people. A Country of great extent, but exceeding barren, which makes the Villages hereof to stand very thin, the Towns (considering the great compass of it) to be very few, and the Inhabitants for the most part to live upon dried Fish and the Flesh of wild Beasts, which they have no want of. The chief Commodity is Salt, with which they use to furnish the neighbouring Provinces, and provide such Necessaries for themselves as they stand in need of. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Dwine, spoken of before, situate in the midst of the Province, on the meeting of the said two Rivers, which here united into one Stream take the name of Dwine, or Dwina, the greater; known by that name until its fall into the Northern Ocean in the Bay of Granvic. 2. Sagan, so called of the River (one of the two which makes the Dwine) upon which it is seated. 3. Colmagro. 4. Pinnegue, two strong Castles.

Unto this Province (because I know not else how to dispose of them) I must reduce these four Towns following: that is to say, 1. Usting, a Bishop's See, situate on the Western side of the River, over against the Town of Dwine, and in a Country so ill furnished with Necessaries, that the people eat dried Fish instead of Bread, but have Salt enough to season it from those of Dwine. 2. Cargapol, a Bishop's See also, on the same side of the River that Dwina is of. 3. S. Nicolas, a well-known Port, and a Bishop's See; situate at the influx of Dwina into the Gulf of Granvicus, or the Bay of S. Nicolas, from hence denominated. A Town much traded since the discovery of the North-east passage by the English, and the removal of theirs and the Dutch Traffick from Novogrod hither; from hence dispersed with more ease and speed into all the parts of this vast Empire. 4. S. Michael, on the Sea side, commonly called Archangel, a Town of great Trade, by the English especially, who have of late here fixed their Staple, to the great enriching of the place; by reason whereof the English Merchants have not only great Privileges and Immunities (as the Authors of so great a benefit unto this Estate) not granted to others, but the whole Nation have found better and more noble entertainment from them than any others have received. The cause of which was primarily the great opinion which their Emperours had of Q. Elizabeth, who held very good correspondence with them, continued ever since by mutual Embassies on both sides; and secondly, the conformable Behaviour of the English themselves, so acceptable to those Barbarians (both Prince and People) that when John Vasilivich nailed the Hat of another foreign Embassador to his Head, for his too much perverseness, he used our Sir Thomas Smith with all kindness imaginable. Another time, when the Jesuite Possevine began to perswade with him to approve of the Religion of the Church of Rome; upon the information of the English Embassador, that the Pope was a proud Prelate, and would make Princes kiss his feet, he grew into such a rage, that the Jesuite was afraid he would have beat out his Brains. But to return again to the Port of S. Nicolas; it is so called from an Abbey there built unto that Saint, the Tutelary Saint and local Patron of the Nation. Which said, I will set sail from this Port to the Russian Islands, and see what may be said of them to our present purpose.

24. The RUSSIAN Islands.

THE RUSSIAN Islands are but two, both of them in the Northern or Frozen Ocean, on the Coasts of this Country; that is to say, 1. Sir Hugh Willoughbie's Island, and Nova Zemla; both subject (if to any) to the Knez, or Great Duke of Moscovie.

1. WILLOUGHBIE'S ISLAND was so called from Sir Hugh Willoughby, because he first discovered it, Anno 1553, and was hereabouts found frozen to death the next year following. For being employed by the Merchants of London in the time of King Edward the sixth, to find out a new way to Moscovy, Cathaie and China, he proceeded so far as to this Island, (situate almost opposite to the Bay of S. Nicolas) where the Weather proved so extreme, and the Frosts so vehement, that his Ship was set fast in the Ice, and all his people with himself frozen to death, in which condition they were found the next year after, with an exact description of their Voyage and Fortunes. Notwithstanding which disastrous beginning, the Enterprise was pursued by some noble Adventurers, as Jenkinson, Burroughs, Pet. Jackman, and others of the English Nation, who opened the way as far as to the River Ob, (the East Bounder of Russia;) but by reason of the length of the way, the vast floating Islands of Ice, and perpetual Nights for many months together in Winter, could advance no farther.

2. NOVA ZEMLA, situate on the East of Willoughbie's Island, opposite to Pustozera in Condora before mentioned, was first discovered by such Adventurers as followed Willoughbie's Design. Famous for nothing but a race of short-statured men, not above four foot high, a degree above the height of Pygmies: not yet so far discovered as to know any thing thereof, but by the relation of the Russes, who affirm the Inhabitants to have neither Religion, nor Civility, nor the Prescripts of any Law; but that they worshipped the Sun, Moon, and Northern Star, to which they offer a yearly Sacrifice of their Deer; that the Island is woody, desart, and not easie for travel, having in it neither green Bough nor Grass, yet harbouring great store of Bears, and such ravenous and dangerous Beasts. Found experimentally true by William Barrentson and his Associates, employed by the Hollanders for this Discovery, Anno 1594, and 1596, in which last year, after many dreadful Combats with huge flakes of Ice, they were forced to winter in this Island, where they built an House, as well to preserve themselves from being buried in Snow, as from being devoured by the Bears, (some of them 13 foot in length) which, with the loss of two of their company devoured by those savage creatures, they at last effected; some of them coming home in safety the October following. And though they seemed to give some hope that a way might be found unto Cathaie on the North of this Island, (themselves having gone as far North as the 81. Degree of Latitude, within 9 of the Pole) yet it is generally conceived that the undertaking is unprofitable, the success impossible.

And so I leave it, to return to the Story of Russia, called anciently by the name of Sarmatia Europæa, but known no farther Northwards than the Head of Tanais. And for Sarmatia Europæa, it was bounded in the time of Ptolemy by the Baltick Sea and some Terra Incognita on the North, the Jazyges Metanastæ (now Transylvania and the Upper Hungary) upon the South, the River Vistula, or Wessel, which divided it from Germany, upon the West, and the Tanais upon the East. Beyond that, all along the Banks of the Euxine Sea to the Mare Caspium, and as far North as any Conquerour had gone, it was called Sarmatia Asiatica: the Countries farther Eastward being then called Scythia. By which accompt, as Russia, containeth not all Sarmatia Europæa, of which Prussia and the rest of the incorporate Provinces of Poland pass for a part; so neither is it totally comprehended in it, extending beyond Tanais into Asiatica. The ancient Inhabitants, called by a general name Sarmatæ, by the Greeks Sauromatæ, were subdivided, for so much of this part of it as was then made known, into the Agathyrsi, Rutheni, Pagiritæ, dwelling in the North; the Osyli, Alauni, Roxolani, &c. dwelling in the South. Amongst many other barbarous Nations, these were some of the principal. And from these Roxolani, as the principal of all the rest, Matthias à Michou, a learned Polander, doth derive the Original of the Rosses, (which we now call the Russians;) seconded herein by the more learned Bochartus, who proveth out of ancient Authors, that the Inhabitants of Taurica Chersonesus (from which the passage into this Country is both short and easie) have been formerly called Rhos. Ταύρους τοὺς Ῥῶς καλουμένους, Tauros vocari gentes Rhos, as he saith from Tzetzes. Which Ros, or Rhoses, first mingling with the Alani, a Sarmatian People, might get the name of Roxolani; and afterwards possessing the more Northern Countries, or mingling with the Rossi, of Mount Taurus (from whom those of Taurica descended) in their enterprizes on Constantinople and the parts adjoyning, return to their old name of Rossi. The Rossi, or Russians, were then the first Lords of this Country generally, the Moscovites possessors of a Province only; so called from the Moschi, spoken of by Lucan in his Pharsalia, and placed by Pliny near the head of the River Phasis, which, rising from the Armenian Mountains, falls into the Euxine. Derived no doubt from Mesech, (or Mosoch, as the Ancients called him) the Son of Japhet, placed originally in the North and North-east of Syria, on the Confines of Colchis and Armenia; where Pliny, as before is said, hath fixed the Moschi, and where there is a long Chain of Hills, which most of the old Writers call Montes Mischici. But to return unto the Rossi, we hear not of them by this name till the time of Michael the third, Emperour of Constantinople; in whose Reign they infested the Euxine Sea, and had the boldness to attempt the Imperial City, Anno 864; said by Cedrenus and some other of the Eastern Writers to be a People of Mount Taurus, (next neighbours to Mesech or the Moschi.) Failing in their attempt upon Constantinople, and not willing to go home again, they spread themselves, with their Confederates and Associates in this Expedition, upon the North-west Banks of the Euxine Sea; enlarging their bounds Northwards with less opposition than they were likely to have done on the Southern parts: Constantinople being once again in vain attempted in the Reigns of Constantine the 7. and Henricus Auceps. Converted to the Christian Faith, or growing into better terms with the Eastern Emperours, Helena, Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, is married to Valodomirus one of their Kings. From that time forwards they turned their Forces on the Polanders and their weaker neighbours; save that, provoked by the death of one of their Country, slain accidentally at Constantinople in a private Quarrel, they made another fruitless Journey against that City, in the time of Michael Calaphates. Enlarging their Estate to the West and South, they became Masters of a great part of Sarmatia Europæa, Lituania, Podolia, Nigra, Russia, and other Provinces, now subject to the Crown of Poland, being then parts of their Estate. Anno 1240 the Tartars, under the Conduct of Bathu, or Baydo, Son of Occata Chan, broke in upon them and subdued them: the Country before this entire, under one sole King, being broken afterwards into divers petit and inferiour Governments, according to the will and pleasure of the insolent Victors. The principal of these (descended from the former Kings) were Lords of Volodomir, Mosco, and some other Cities; held by them with no other Title than that of Lords of Moscovy, and for that Tributary to the Tartars, as were all the rest. Their Seat was originally at Volodomir, till the time that John, the Son of Daniel, the fifth Lord of the Russes, descended of the old Regal Line, taking a good liking of the River and Town of Mosco, repaired the Town, being before but mean and ordinary, and made it the chief Seat of his Principality. From whence the residue of the Russes, united in succeeding times unto this Estate by Marriages, Fraud and Conquest, had the name of Moscovites. But notwithstanding this increase of their Power and Empire, the Tartars held them for their Vassals, and tyrannized upon the Country with a barbarous Insolency. Under which Thraldom they long groaned, till the Tartarians, being divided amongst themselves, and grown less terrible to their Neighbours, were outed of their Power and Command here by the valour of John, son of Basilius the second, who thereupon changed the Title of Lord into that of Duke, and after into that of Great Duke, as his Fortunes thrived. Yet not so great, but that he was contented to be an Homager of the Tartars: it being finally agreed on at the end of their Wars, that the Tartars should relinquish all their Holds in the Country; and on the other side, that once every year, within the Castle of Mosco, the Great Duke, standing on foot, should feed the Horse of the Crim-Tartar with Oats out of his own Cap. This Homage was by Basilius changed into a Tribute of Furs; which being also denied by his Successors, (as they grow in power) occasioned the long Wars betwixt the Nations; the Tartars always pressing on them by sudden Inroads, sometimes by Armies of no less than 200000 fighting men. But notwithstanding all their Power, and the Friendship of the Turk to boot, the Moscovite is not only able to assert his Soveraignty, but hath also wrested from them many goodly Provinces.

As for the Princes of this Country, I shall not trouble my self (as I see some do) in tracing a Succession of them as far as from the times of Augustus Cæsar; when neither the Rossi nor the Moschi had here any footing. We will therefore go no higher than the time of George, whose Daughter Anne I find to have been married married to Henry the first of France. From whom in a direct Line descended another George, with whom we do intend to begin our Catalogue, as being the last King of the Russes before the coming of the Tartars. He, wisely yielding to the Storm, waved the Title of King, contented only with the Title of Lord, as more safe for him, and less invidious to the Tartars. The fifth from whom, called John, (as before is said) having removed his Seat to Mosco, took to himself the Title of Lord of Mosco, the chief seat of that Power and Soveraignty, which he transmitted afterwards to his Posterity; affecting for that cause the Title of Duke of Moscovie (though all the conquered Towns and Territories have their place also in his Style) as much as that of Emperour of Russia; which some of them have assumed also since the time of Basilius, who stiled himself Basilius, by the Grace of God, Emperour and Lord of Russia, Great Duke of Volodomir, Moscovie, Novogrod the great, Plescow, Smolensko, Tuver, Jugar, Wiatbka, Bulgar, &c. Lord and Great Prince of the lower Novogrod, Czernigow, Rezan, Wologda, Pscow, Biele, Rostow, Jarossane, Poloskie, Biellozicre, Udore, Obdora, Condora, &c. King of Casan and Astracan. But leaving them to their swelling and voluminous Title, (little inferiour unto that of the Kings of Spain) let us next look on the Succession from the time aforesaid of

The Lords of MOSCOVIE of the old Royal RUSSIAN Line

A. Ch.

1. George, the last King of the Russes, and first Lord of the Russes of the Royal Line.
2. Jaceslaus.
3. Alexander.
4. Daniel.
5. John, who transferred the Seat to Mosco.
6. John II.
7. Basilius.
8. Demetrius.
9. Georgius II.
10. Basilius II.

The Great Dukes of MOSCOVIE.

1. John, the first Great Duke, who shook off the Tartarian Bondage.
2. Basilius Casan, won the Provinces of Severia, Roscovia, and Smolensko, with the Realms of Astracan and Casan.
3. John Basilius, conquered Livonia and Lituania. Both which his Successor

1548 4. Joannes Basilides, or Wasiliwich, lost in his age; though in his youth he had subdued the Noybacensian Tartars to his Empire, and vanquished Selim Emperour of the Turks, Anno 1569. With this King the English first began to confederate.

1583 5. Theodorus Johannides, the last of the old Royal Line of Moscovie.

1591 6. Boris Theodorus, Brother to the Wife of the last Great Duke, partly by the last Will of his Predecessor, partly by practising with the people, obtained the Empire; but being an unmerciful Tyrant, was dispossessed by the Polanders coming in favour of one.

1605 7. Demetrius, pretending himself to be the Son of John Wasiliwich, (and generally believed to be so) preserved in a Monastery from the Tyranny of Boris, in hatred of whom he was brought in by the Polander; by whose aid he overcame the Tyrant, and rooted out his Family, and was with great joy crowned Emperour in the City of Mosco. But the Russian Lords disdaining to have a Prince imposed on them from Poland, rose in Arms against him, and at last vanquished and slew him in open Field: his Wife, a noble Polonian Lady, being sent poorly home, and the Polanders beaten out of the Country.

1606 8. Basil Juanniwich, surnamed Sniskius, the chief of the Conspirators, was by the rest of his Faction chosen Knez or Emperour, and held the State with great Trouble till the year 1610, when 1610 9. Demetrius II. another pretender to the State as the Son of John Wasiliwich also, in opposition unto Sniskius, set up by a stronger Faction, gave occasion to the Polander to work upon this Distemper; by whom Suiskius was taken Prisoner, Demetrius slain, Smolensko and other great Towns subdued, and Vladislaus, Prince of Poland, recommended to the Russians to be chosen Emperour. But the Russes, loth to fall under the power of the Polander; and weary of their own Confusions, made choice at last of 1615 10. Michael Fedrovitz, Son of Theodore the Patriarch of Mosco, who at last setled this vast Empire, and managed it in a more constant way of Peace with the Turk, Tartar, Polonian and Swethlander, than any of his Predecessors had done before him.

1646 11. Alexius Michaeliwitz (or the Son of Michael) succeeded his Father in the Empire, troubled at first with some Distempers in the State, (as in all other Countries about that time) but now quietly setled, Anno 1648.

The Formalities with which these great Emperors are invested or setled in the Throne are not many nor stately; such as they be, I here afford you out of the History of the Life of Johannes Basilides, written in Latine by Paulus Oderbornius. On the 2. of June, Anno 1583, Theodorus Johannides went towards the Temple of S. Michael, being the principal Church in all Mosco; the Streets all covered with Flowers, the Doors of the Citizens crowned with Garlands, the Air echoing with the noise of Flutes and Trumpets, and the people so crowding to behold their Prince, that had not the Guard with naked Swords forced a passage through them, it had been impossible for him to have gone on. Being now come to the Church-door, the Lords of the Country (Knezes they there call them) went out to meet him; and the Archbishop of Mosco, clad in his Pontificalibus, when he was come into the Church, imbraced him. The Pavement of the Church was hidden with Tapestry, and the Stalls adorned with costly Hangings. The Great Duke sate down in his Throne, being attired in a garment of Silk, buttoned down with Golden Buttons: on his Head he wore a Purple Cap spangled with rich Jewels, and on his Fingers abundance of Rings. Being thus seated, the Patriarch made a Prayer to God to bless him, his People, and his Government: which was seconded by the joyful Shouts and Acclamations of his Subjects; amongst whom no small store of Silver-money was flung by the Treasurer, and so they returned to the Palace.

The Government of this Country is meerly Tyrannical, the Emperour being absolute Lord of the Lives, Lands and Goods of all his Subjects: all of them, the noble as well as the base, subscribing themselves in their Petitions to him by the name of Keloptery, that is, Slaves. Whereupon Mahomet, a Turkish Bashaw, was used to say, that his Master and the Muscovite were the two most absolute Princes in all the World. First for their Goods; when any Embassadour returns home, the Great Duke takes from him all the Presents which he hath received, giving him perhaps some small Reward, perhaps none at all: and as for Lands, they pass not from Father to Son, but as he confirms it. But more particularly, (besides the case of Permia spoken of before) John Vasiliwich sent a Command to Mosco, to provide a Coal-pack of live Fleas for a Medicine: and when the Citizens returned answer that it was impossible, he fined them at 700 Rubbles for their Disobedience. Another time he laid a Mulct of 300000 Rubbles upon his Nobility, because he had no good Sport in his Hunting: which they again extorted from the common people; and under colour of want, commanded from some Bishops and Monasteries the sum of 100000 Rubbles, from some 50000, more or less from others, according unto their Revenues. And it is usual with the best of them to cause the Boiares (or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back) to pretend themselves robbed, that he may send unto the City to find out the Felon, and, on a Non est inventus, fine them at discretion, sometimes 8000, sometimes 10000, and sometimes 20000 Rubbles. Then for their Lives, there is a Story, that Vasiliwich having found that one of his Secretaries had received a Goose stuffed full of Silver for a Bribe, caused him to be brought into the Market-place of Mosco; where without any legal Trial, he commanded the Executioner first to cut off his Legs about the Shins, and then his Arms about the Elbows, (still asking the miserable man how he liked Goose-flesh) and in the end to cut off his Head; in similitude of a Goose ready for the Spit. And that they may the better preserve this Power, the Great Dukes seldom shew themselves unto the people but in Apparel of inestimable value, joyning the Ornaments of a Bishop unto the Majesty of a King, by wearing a Mitre on their Heads shining with Diamonds and rich Stones: and when they wear it not on their Heads, they place it before the Chair of State, (over which are the Images of Christ and the Blessed Virgin) holding in their hands a most rich Crosier-Staff, and all their Fingers full of Rings. And upon solemn Festivals and Entertainments the great Chamber is beset with Cupboards of Plate of infinite value, and filled with men cloathed with Cloth of Gold to the very foot; all of them seeming to be men of the chief Nobility, but many times being no other than the gravest and portliest Citizens of Mosco, richly apparelled for the time out of the Emperour's Wardrope; which, to such as do not understand the Fraud, look like so many Princes, and cause no small wonder at his Magnificence. So that the people seeing him in such Royal state, and knowing no more than what they are taught at home, reverence him as Slaves, not Subjects, and look upon him rather as a God than a King.

Having so absolute a Command on their Lives and Goods, it will be easily supposed that he may raise what Forces and amass what Treasures he hath a mind to. First, for his Forces, it is said that he is able to raise 300000 Horse, if occasion be: and that he may come near that number it is more than probable, in that John Vasiliwich, in his War against those of Astracan, had actually 120000 Horse; and that a great part of the Country is in the hands of the Boiares, bound by their Tenure to serve with Horse whensoever he pleaseth; and that there are 110 men chosen by the Emperour, and by him enfeoffed with Lands, (during pleasure only) who for these Lands are to find 65000 Horse with all things necessary for the Wars, and those in a continual readiness fit for present Action. Then for such Horse as he himself doth keep in perpetual pay, there are no fewer than 25000 which attend him as a Guard to his person, all of them well-experienced men and fit for service: which, added to the 65000 spoken of before, make up a standing Body of 90000. Had he Foot answerable unto this proportion of Horse, there were no dealing with him; but therein his Militia is defective: Vasiliwich to his great Army of 120000 Horse having but 20000 Foot; the Foot-men which he hath in continual pay amounting to 12000 only, far short of such a standing Body of Horse as before we spake of. And this defect hath been the reason why the Polanders with far less Armies have prevailed against them: the Great Duke not being able with all his power to hinder King Stephen of Poland from taking Villocolne, or besieging Plescow (though his Army was not above 60000 in both Horse and Foot) for want of standing Bands of Foot to make good his ground. Generally both Horse and Foot are very obedient to their Captains and Superiour Officers: patiently enduring all Discommodities of Cold, Rain, and Hunger; (in that regard fitter to keep a Fortress than serve in Field) and so regardless of their Lives in the day of Battel, that they will rather lose themselves than yield themselves Prisoners or demand Quarter.

For his Revenues, they may be what he will himself, considering (besides his extraordinary power of oppressing his Subjects before mentioned) the many ordinary ways he hath of amassing Treasure: viz. the Forestalling of home-bred Commodities, and ingrossing the foreign; selling them at what price he list, and hindering all men else from Trade till his own be sold; provision of Rent-corn and Victual, raised in some years to 200000 Rubbles, Rent-wood and Hay to 30000, Poll-money to 400000, Customs on Merchandise to 800000. By which and other means of collecting Monies, and the Domain of his Crown, though he raise vast Sums: yet it is thought that, his Houshold-charges being deducted, there remain not towards all other Expences three millions of Rubbles; every Rubble being as much as an English Mark.

The Arms are Sable, a Portal open of two Leaves and as many Degrees Or.

There are in RUSSIA

And so much for RUSSIA.

POLAND.

POLAND is bounded on the East with Russia and the Crim-Tartar, from whom it is parted by the River Borysthenes; on the West with Germany, on the North with the Baltick Sea and some part of Russia, on the South with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary, Transylvania and Moldavia.

It is an aggregate Body, consisting of many distinct Provinces united into one Estate, of which Poland, being the predominant, hath given name to the rest, called all together the Realm of Poland: and that so named from Pole, which in the Sclavonian Language (the common Language of the Country) signifieth plain; because it is but little swelled with Hills. It is of Figure round, in compass 2600 miles, situate under the eighth and twelfth Climates; so that the longest Day in the Southern part is but 16 hours, and about 18 hours in the parts most North.

This Country is plain, but full of Woods, which serve to rectifie the Air, being naturally so cold that they have neither Wine nor Grapes; instead whereof they use that kind of Drink called Ale, in former times the usual Beverage of England and this Country only. Barley they have, and Pulse in such abundant measure, that no small quantities of each are transported yearly: nor yield they any thing at all to Denmark or Hungary for their plenty of Cattel. But of this more in our description of the several Provinces.

The People are very industrious, and studious of all Languages, especially of the Latine; to which they are so devoted, that there is scarce a mean man who is not able in some measure to express himself in it. According to their abilities, they are rather prodigal than truly liberal; and good Souldiers generally. The Peasants live in miserable Servitude unto their Lords; the Lords in such Equality of estate amongst themselves, that none of them (excepting the greater Princes) exceedeth 25000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Proud in their Garb, costly in their Apparel, impatient in their Humours, and delicate in Diet. These last Conditions are common to the Women also, who are for the most part indifferently fair, and rather witty than well spoken. But this, being the peculiar Character of the Polander properly so called, is not perhaps communicable to the people of the rest of the Provinces, whom we shall speak of severally in their proper places.

The Christian Faith was first planted in this Kingdom at several times and by several persons, according to the different parts of which it consisteth: in Poland specially so called in the time of their Prince Miecislaus, Son of Nemomyslaus, Anno 963; in Livonia, by the Preaching of one Meinardus, Anno 1200, or thereabouts; in Lituania, not until the year 1386, at the admission of Jagello to the Crown of Poland, and then done (as some say) by Thomas of Walden, (or Waldensis) an English Frier; in Samogitia and Volhinia at the same time with Lituania; in the rest at other times and on other occasions: yet so that in many places of it Idolatry was never totally rooted out, the seeds and practice whereof in many Points still remain amongst them. Corrupted by the Superstitions of the Church of Rome, a Reformation was endeavoured at such a time as John Hus flourished in Bohemia, the next neighbouring Kingdom: but by the rigour of Vladislaus the sixth, then King thereof, assisted by his Bishops and Noblemen, it was at that time hindred. Afterwards in the time of Luther, some who had studied at Leipzick and Wittenberg (Universities of Saxony) brought his Opinions home with them into the Province of Poland; as some Dutch Merchants) with the rest of their Commodities) did into Dantzick, the chief Town of Pomerellia, Anno 1525: from whence it spread it self over most part of that Country. According as it was favoured or disliked by the Palatines, Chastellans and other great men of the Realm, so was its entertainment either good or bad: the Græcians in the mean time taking opportunity to win some parts of it to their side, and confirm others in it, who, being originally Members of the Church of Greece, because originally converted by the Bishops thereof, did still continue in Conformity and Obedience to it. In the end, by reason of the over-great Liberty of the Nobility and People, and want of Power in the King to controle their doings, every man took up what Religion he best liked, some following the Augustane Confession, others the Helvetian, others adhering as tenaciously to the Church of Rome; and some inclining to new Sects, or rather to old Heresies under new Disguises, have brought in such a Miscellanie or Babel of Religions into this Estate, (Jesuites, Lutherans, Calvinists, Socinians, Arians, Anabaptists, and indeed what not? being here all tolerated) that at last it grew into a By-word, that If any man had lost his Religion, he might find it in Poland, or else believe it to be vanished. A by-ward afterwards applied unto Amsterdam, communicable since unto other places, Libertas prophetandi, or the Liberty of Prophesying, being now as much allowed of in some parts of Christendom, as Libertas opinandi was in Rome under Nerva's Government, ubi & sentire quæ velis, & quæ sentias loqui liceat, when as a man might think as he listed of the publick, and speak what he thought. But whether this be such a rara temporum Felicitas, such a Felicity of these our Times, as Tacitus conceived the other to be of those, future times will shew.

But to return again to Poland: notwithstanding this mixture of Religions, yet that most publickly allowed and countenanced is the Religion authorized by the Church of Rome, asserted here by the Zeal of the Kings unto that Cause, and the great Power of the Bishop's, who seeing how those of their Order have sped in Germany and other places, under colour of Reformation of some things amiss, have hitherto upheld the Ecclesiastical Estate in the same form they found it. The Government of the Church is as formerly by 3 Archbishops and 19 Bishops, who challenge a Jurisdiction over all the Kingdom, but exercise it upon those only who submit unto them: those who embrace the Doctrines of Luther or Calvin following the Forms of Government by them established; as others do some new ones of their own devising. And for those Provinces and people which lie towards Greece, or were parts heretofore of the Ruſſian Empire, and ſtill hold a Communion with thoſe Churches, they have Archbiſhops and Biſhops of their own Religion; that is to ſay, the Archbiſhops of Vilne and Lemburg, the Biſhops of Poloczo, Luzko, Pinsko, Volodomir, Preſmil, and Kiovia. Yet amongſt all theſe different Churches and forms of Government there is this Conformity, that whenſoever the Goſpel is read openly in the Congregation, the Nobility and Gentry uſe to draw their Swords, (according to an ancient Cuſtom which they had among them) ſignifying their readineſs to defend it againſt all Oppoſers. Which reaſon doubtleſs gave beginning to the ſtanding up at the Creed and Goſpel in the Primitive times, retained ſtill in the Church of England, whereby we do declare how prepared and reſolute we are to defend the ſame: though ſome of late, holding it for a Relique of Popery, with greater nicety than wiſdom have refuſed to do it.

Principal Commanders of this Country in the Art of War were. 1. Caſimir the third, the great Eſtabliſher of this Kingdom after long Diſſenſions. 2. Jagello, or Vladiſlaus the firſt, who firſt brought down the Pride of the Dutch Knights in a famous Victory. 3. Caſimir the 4. the fortunate Conqueror of the Knights of Pruſſia, brought by him under the Command of the Kings of Poland, 4. Sigiſmund the firſt, by whoſe Valour and good fortune the Dutch Knights were totally ſuppreſſed, and the greateſt part of Pruſſia for ever added to that Crown. 5. Sigiſmund the ſecond, ſurnamed Auguſtus, fortunate in his Wars againſt moſt of them of Livonia, by him united to this Kingdom. Of moſt ſpecial note for learning, Hoſius, a Divine of the Papal party, whoſe great Abilities advanced him to the ſtate of a Cardinal. 2. Crellius, and 3. Volckelius, of the contrary party in Religion, men of great parts, but Heterodox and unſound Opinions. 4. Cromerus, the Hiſtorian. 5. Keckerman, the Profeſſor at Dansk or Dantzick; a man of univerſal Studies, but of greater induſtry than exactneſs.

Chief Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1. Viſtula or the Weyſſel, the ancient Boundary betwixt Germany and Sarmatia Europæa, which, riſing, in the Carpathian Mountains, paſſeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and, dividing Pruſſia from Pomerellia, falleth into the Baltick Sea not far from Dantzick, and is navigable for the ſpace of 400 miles of old called Vandalis. 2. Warta, which runneth through the leſſer Poland. 3. Duina the leſs, watering Livonia; and 4. Boryſthenes, or the Nieper, paſſing through Podolia: both ſpoken of before, when we were in Ruſſia. 5. Nieſter, by Ptolomy called Tyras, which falleth into the Euxine Sea, having firſt parted Podolia from Moldavia. 6. Jugra, by ſome called the leſſer Tanais, ariſing in Lituania, and falling into the more noted Tanais, which is now called Don. Of leſs note there are, 1. Reuben, or Reuhon. 2. Chronus, now called Pregel. 3. Bog, ſaid by ſome to be the Hypanis of the Ancients. 4. Memel. 5. Niemen, the Mæander of theſe Northern parts. 6. Windaw, a Livonian River falling into the Baltick. Mountains of note here are not many, the Countries for the moſt part being plain and champain: and thoſe which be are rather Boundaries betwixt this and ſome other Kingdom, than proper unto this alone. The chief of which are thoſe called Sarmatici, dividing Germany from Sarmatia Europæa, by Solinus named Sevo, by Ptolemy the Carpathian Mountains; the Boundary at this time betwixt Poland and Hungary, of which more anon.

The common Metes and Land-marks being thus laid down, we will next take a view of thoſe ſeveral Provinces of which this Kingdom doth conſiſt, being eleven in number; that is to ſay, 1. Livonia, 2. Samegitia, 3. Lituania, 4. Volhinia, 5. Podolia, 6. Ruſſia nigra, 7. Maſſovia. 8. Podlaſſia. 9. Pruſſia. 10. Pomerellia; and 11. Poland ſpecially ſo called: all of them (except the proper Poland) within Sarmatia Europæa.

1. LIVONIA.

LIVONIA, or LIEFLAND, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Empire of Ruſſia, on the Weſt with the Baltick Sea, on the North with the Gulf or Bay of Finland, on the South with Samogitia and Lituania: extended in length along the Shore of the Baltick for the ſpace of 125 Dutch, or 500 Italian, miles, and 40 Dutch, or 160 Italian, miles in breadth: and called thus perhaps from the Levoni, a People of Germany, inhabiting not far from the River Viſtula.

The Country is for the moſt part plain, without any Mountains; furniſhed with Corn and Fruits in ſo great abundance, that they ſend part thereof into other Countries: and yet there is much Ground untilled in it, by reaſon of the Bogs and Mariſhes; which are very frequent. Here is alſo ſtore of Wax, Honey and Pitch, but they have neither Oyl nor Wine: the want of which laſt is ſupplied by Meth. Of tame Beaſts fit for man's ſervice they are well provided; as alſo of ſuch whoſe Skins are of more value with the Merchant than their Fleſh at the Market; as Ermins, Sables, Caſtors, and others of that kind; beſides good ſtore of Game for Hunting, the Country having in it many large Woods, parts of the Hercynian. And as for Rivers, there are few Countries which have more; it being watered by the Windaw, the Beck, the Dwine, the Reuhon, all of them falling into the Baltick; many great Lakes, whereof the chief is that of Beybas, 45 miles long, and full of Fiſh.

The people are much given to Gluttony and Drunkenneſs, eſpecially in rich mens houſes, where it is to be had: for the Peaſants live in want enough, meer Slaves to their Tyrannical Landlords, who ſpend in Riot and exceſs what theſe get by Drudgery: and when at any time the poor Wretch leaves his Landlord to mend his condition with ſome other, the Lord, if he can overtake him, will cut off his Foot, to make him ſure for the future. They are a mixture of many Nations: as the Eſtones, which are the natural Inhabitants, (derived from the Eſtii, a Dutch people, ſpoken of by Ptolemy) of which Nation are almoſt all the Peaſants; the Moſcovites, Swedes, Danes, Dutch and Polanders, intermingled with them, coming in upon ſeveral Conqueſts, and planting themſelves in the beſt parts of it, in which they ſtill Lord it over the Native, but the Dutch eſpecially, for long time Maſters of the whole.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted by Meinardus of Lubeck, imployed herein (in the time of Frederick the firſt) at the perſwaſion of ſome Dutch Merchants who traded hither, by the Archbiſhop of Breme; by whom he was made the firſt Biſhop of the Livonians. The Church hereof at this time is governed by the Archbiſhop of Riga, the Biſhops of Derpt, Aſilia, Oſel, Curland, and Rivallia. In thoſe parts which remain ſubject to the Polander, the Religion of the Church of Rome is only countenanced. Such parts of it as are under the Swedes or Danes are for the moſt part of the Lutheran Profeſſion, planted with Colonies of that People. But the Eſtones, or original Inhabitants, as they have a Language, ſo they have a Religion by themſelves alſo, mixt of the Chriſtian and the Pagan. Extremely well affected unto their Prieſts, to whom they preſent Salt, Candles and Fruits, when they come to them for their Bleſſings; great lovers of Confeſſion, eſteemers of Holy water, and diligent frequenters of their Churches; but ſo extremely ignorant in all Points of Religion, that there is hardly one in a Village that can say his Pater-noster. When they bury any of their dead, every one drinketh an Health to him, and poureth his part upon him when his turn comes to drink; putting into the Grave with him an Hatchet, Wine, Meat, and a little Money for his Voyage. And in some places they are wholly Idolatrous, (if not converted very lately by the care of the Jesuites) some of them worshipping the Sun, others Stocks and Stones, and some Serpents also. The Language of the Country is for the most part the High Dutch, being the Language of those Nations who first Lorded over them; the Estones having generally a peculiar Language, which none of the others understand.

It was divided formerly into the Provinces of Curland, Estland, Semigal, Virland, Harland and Lettenland; but these six, since the Conquest of it by the Polanders, are reduced to three, Harland and Virland being united unto Estland, and Semigallia unto Curland.

Chief places in Estland are, 1. Rivallia, or Revel, a Bishop's See, and a well-traded Port, situate on the Gulf of Finland; a Town belonging to the Swede, the keeping whereof, and of Wiborg on the Borders of Moscovy, stand him yearly in 100000 Dollars. 2. Habsey, or Habsel, (Asilia in Latine) a Bishop's See; and 3. Pernaw, a well-fortified place, belonging to the Swethlander also, ever since the Conquest of these parts of the Country by John the second. Places of great importance to the Crown of Sweden, as all other pieces of this nature are, which, standing in an Enemie's Country, not only do defend our own, but offend our Adversaries. For they are not only Doors, to open a farther passage into their Territories, whensoever we shall see occasion; but whilst the Enemy is besieging thereof, or otherwise busied in recovering them into his power, our own State is preserved in quiet, and time may yield fit opportunity to relieve them, if they be distressed, without wasting of any part of our proper Countries. Of which nature was Calais when it was in the hands of the English; the Garrisons which the Spaniards and Portugueze have in Africk and India: the Charge of keeping them being sufficiently defrayed (if the Charge prove greater than the Income, as sometimes it doth) by the advantages they give unto him which hath them. 4. Velin, a strong Town, and fortified with an impregnable Castle; betrayed by the Dutch Garrison at that time in it, together with William of Furstenburg, the Great Master, into the hands of John Basilius the Great Duke of Moscovy, who still holds it. 5. Derpt, or Derbern, (in Latine Tupatum) a Bishop's See, situate on the Beck, or Embeck, betwixt two Lakes, in the midst of the Province, and taken at the same time by the Moscovite, who, transporting the Livonians into other places, planted these parts with Colonies of his own people. 6. Terveſt, a Castle of great strength, taken then also by the Russes; but being recovered by the Polander, was blown up with Gunpowder, that it might no more come into the hands of the Enemy. Hitherto nothing of this Country which belongs to the Polanders; these that follow do: that is to say, 7. Borcholm, the Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Rivallia, since the taking of that Town by the Swedes. 8. Weisenburg, incommodiously seated betwixt two ill neighbors, Narva and Rivallia; but serving very well to prohibit the Incursions of those Garrisons farther into the Country. 9. Wernebeck, in that part of Estland, which is called Odinpo; and 10. Weissenstein, in that part thereof which is named Jervia.

In LETTENLAND, lying in the midst betwixt Estland, and Curland, the places of most note are, 1. Riga, (the people call it Rig) seated on the Mouth of the River Dwina, falling there into the Baltick: first built & planted at the charges of the Merchants of Breme; after that the Archbishop's See, the ordinary Residence of the Great Master, and the chief City of the whole Province of Livonia. A Town well fortified, according to the modern Rules of Fortification, with a strong Wall, large Bulwarks, double Ditches, Palisadoes, and well provided of all manner of Ammunition: a famous Emporie, of great resort for foreign Merchants, who carry hence, Pitch, Wax, Hemp, Flax, and such other Commodities. They are governed (notwithstanding their Subjection to the King of Poland) by their own Laws, and such stout defenders of their Liberties, that they will by no means admit of any Foreigner to have Command of the City; obedient in all other things to the will of that King. 2. Dunamund, an impregnable Fortress, two Dutch miles from Riga, well garrisoned by the Polanders, who here take Toll of all foreign Merchants. 3. Blokaws, a Garrison of the King's betwixt Riga and Dunamund, where the Merchants are tolled over again. 4. Wenden, more within the Land, on the River Treider. 5. Wolmar, upon the same River. 6. Kakenhause, a strong Town on the Banks of the Dwina. This Country belongs wholly to the King of Poland, and stood firm for him in the War made by Charles Duke of Suderman against his Nephew Sigismund King of Poland and Sweden, when almost all Estland had submitted to him.

CURLAND, the third and last Member of this Division, containing Semigallia also, lieth South of Leitenland, and North of Samogitia and Lituania: an entire Dukedom of it self, but holden under the Soveraignty and Homage of the Kings of Poland. Places of most importance in it are, 1. Candow. 2. Goldingen. 3. Kies, (the Dutch call it Windaw) the Seat of the Great Master of the Teutonick Order in times past; now most frequented as the place of Parliament or general Assembly for Affairs which concern the publick. 4. Dubin. 5. Grubin, on the Sea-side, but of no Trade at all. 6. Hasenpot. And then in Semigal. 7. Mittaw, the Court and Residence of the Dukes of Curland. 8. Selburg. 9. Bessenburg, 10. Dobelin. There is no Town in all this Dukedom of any Trading, though lying for a great space all along the Baltick; because none of them are furnished with commodious Havens. A Dukedom first begun in the person of Gothardus Ketler, (of one of the Noble Families of Denmark) the last Great Master of the Dutch Knights in this Country, who in the year 1562 surrendring his Order, and the whole possession of Livonia, to Sigismund-Augustus K. of Poland, received back again for him, and his Heirs for ever the Dukedom of Curland and Semigal, to be held by them of that Crown; the Nobility of these Countries doing then presently their Homage and Allegiance to him as their Hereditary Prince. Since which time the Princes of this House have continued Feudataries unto Poland, but not reckoned as parts or members of the Body thereof; not coming to the Diets, not liable to the publick Charges, nor having any thing to do in the King's Election; in a word, rather honourable Neighbours of the King's of Poland, than Subjects to them. The present Duke is like to be much increased in Estate and Power, if the now Marquess of Brandenburg (whose Sister is his Mother) should depart without Issue. For by that means there will be added to this House the great Dukedom of Prussia, those of Cleve and Gulick, together with such other Countries possessed now by that Marquess as he holds by descent from the Heirs-general of those Dukedoms: which makes him cast an eye already upon those Estates.

There belong also to Livonia some few Islands situate in the Baltick Sea: that is to say, 1. Osilia. 2. Dachden. 3. Mona. 4. Wormse. 5. Wrangen. and 6. Keyn. Of which the four last do belong to the King of Poland, Dachden to the King of Swethland, and Osilia, or Osel, to the Danes. This last is the chief of all the six, distant distant from the main Land of Livonia 12 Dutch miles; 14 of the same miles in length, half as much in breadth: the chief Towns hereof being 1 Osel, a Bishop's See, which gives name to the Island. 2. Sunneburg. The Island was made subject to the Danes by Magnus, Brother of Frederick the second, King of Denmark; who, being chosen Administrator of the Bishoprick of Derpt in Estland, made himself Master of this Island and some other pieces, which, dying without Issue, he bequeathed to the King his Brother, Anno 1580.

As for Livonia it self, it was first under the Levoni and Estii, two German Nations, from whom the Country had the name of Livonia, the People of Estlanders or Estones. Distracted into many petit Principalities, it was made acquainted with the Christian Faith by the care of the Merchants of Bremen, as before was said. Meinard their first Bishop being dead, and Bertold his Successor slain by such of the people as had not yet received the Gospel; the Knights of the Port-glaive, or the Sword, were sent hither, to defend the Preachers and the Doctrine by the force of Arms. Finding themselves too weak to effect the business, they united with the Order of Dutch Knights in Prussia, to whom from that time forwards they became subordinate; the great Master of Livonia acknowledging him of Prussia for his Superiour. These Knights continued Masters of it without contradiction till the year 1557, (embracing in the mean time the Opinions of Luther, Anno 1528) then quarelling with the Archbishop of Riga, of the House of Brandenburg, because he would not adhere unto their Opinions; who, to secure his own Estate was forced to put Riga into the hands of the Polanders. Afterward being overlaid by the Moscovite, who had taken from them almost all their Country, they were fain to put themselves under the Protection of Sigismund-Augustus King of Poland, Anno 1559. But William of Furstenburg, the Great Master, being betrayed by his own Mercenaries into the hands of the Moscovite, Gothardus his Successour (following the example of Albert the Great Master of Prussia) transacted with the said Sigismund for the whole Estate, which he surrendred to his use in the Castle of Riga, March 5. 1562, together with his Cross, the Seal of the Order, the Charters and Grants of many of the Popes and Emperours which concerned the same, as also the Keys of the City and Castle of Riga, the Office of Great Master, the Rights of Coinage, and all the Powers and Priviledges appertaining to it: receiving back again from Ratzivil, the King's Commissioner, the Dukedom of Curland to him and his Heirs for ever, as before is said. By this Transaction the Kings of Pole became Masters of Liefland, and were more absolutely setled in it after a long War betwixt Stephen King of Poland and John Vasilowich the Great Duke of Moscovie, who in the end surrendred all his Claim therein to the said Stephen and his Successors, Anno 1582, reserving only some few Towns on the Eastern Borders: the Danes and Swethlanders taking occasion by their Troubles to impatronize themselves of Narva, Rivallia, Osel, and some other pieces.

2. SAMOGITIA.

SAMOGITIA is a small Province wedged in betwixt Livonia and Lituania, having Livonia on the North, Lituania on the East and South, and the Baltick Sea upon the West: in length extending 50 miles from East to West, but not of an answerable breadth. It is so called from the lowlines of the situation, (the word Samogits in the Language of the Inhabitants signifying terram inferiorem, or the Low-lands) by the Moscovite in the same tense called Samotzkaselma. This lowness of situation makes it very watery, and almost continually frozen: but withal it hath many Forests, which yield unto the people abundance of Honey, better, more pleasing to the taste, and less mixt with Wax, than in other places.

The people are supposed to be of the Saxon Race, of a good Stature, well set, bold, and apt for War; but withall boisterous, rude and barbarous: Christians in general, but many of them do still retain their old Idolatries; nourishing amongst them a kind of four-footed Serpents, about three handfulls in length, which they worship as their Household-gods, attending them with fear and reverence when they call them out to their repast: and if any Mischance do happen to any of the Family, it is imputed presently to some want of due observance of these ugly Creatures. They are naturally inclined to Divinations, Charms and Sorceries, and frequently abused (as for the most part such people are) by Diabolical Illusions. Nay, they which profess the name of Christ are so ill instructed, that they use to marry many Wives, without consideration of Bloud or Parentage: it being ordinary for a man to marry with his Brother's Widow, and not unusual to marry the Relict of their Fathers, (a Fornication not so much as heard of in S. Paul's time amongst the Gentiles.) They have some Customs also as unprofitable as these are heathenish; breaking up their Land, as they do in Moscovie, with Spades or Sticks. And when one of their Governours, observing the Husbandry of other Nations, had brought them the use of the Plough; it fortuned that for two or three years, either by the indisposition of the Weather, or some other Accident, they had not so much Corn as they used to have. Which Want the people attributing to the use of the Plough, nec quicquam aliud in causa esse putantes, and not believing that there was any other cause of it, grew so much incensed, that the Governour, fearing some Sedition like to follow on it, was forced to leave them to the old way which before they went. An humour like that of the present Irish, in ploughing with their Horses tails, spoken of before. So pertinacious for the most part are ignorant and superstitious people, in standing to their ancient Customs, though absurd and hurtful.

Towns they have few, their Houses for the generality being poor and low, covered with Straw or Dirt, with an Hole open in the Roof to let in the light. The principal of those they have (but rather Villages than Towns) are 1. Bigla, near the head of the River Swiote; 2. Linkaw, of which nothing memorable.

This Province hath always followed the fortunes of Lituania: subject, when that was so, to the Kings of Russia, converted when that was to the Christian Faith, and finally united with it to the Crown of Poland.

3. LITUANIA.

LITUANIA hath on the East the Empire of Russia, on the West Prussia, Massovia and Poland, on the North Livonia and Samogitia, and on the South Volhinia and Podolia. So called from Lituus the Ceremonial Staff, used anciently by the Augurs in their Divinations; to which the Inhabitants hereof being very much addicted before their receiving of the Gospel, were called Lituani. but this is but conjectural only. Yet rather thus, than that it should be peopled by some banished Italians, first named Italia, then Litalia, and after, by a most unlikely Corruption; come to Lituania, as Matthias a Michou would fain have it.

The Country for the most part is full of Moors, Forests, some great Lakes like a Sea for bigness, and many navigable Rivers; which frozen over in the Winter make the the ways more travellable at that time of the year than they are in Summer. The Air in most places is exceeding cold, which makes their Wheat (whereof they have some abundance) to be seldom ripe, and other Fruits of the Earth to come slowly forward. Their Forests yield them Bugles, Ermines, Sables, Deer, wild Horses, plenty of Honey, Wax, and Pitch; but their breed of Cattel is less here, and of smaller stature, than it is in Germany. These Forests also are the Store-house out of which the English and Hollanders furnish themselves with Timber, both for Ships and Building; returning to them in exchange Salt, Wine, and other Necessaries which are wanting here.

The people anciently had Fire and Serpents for their Gods, nourishing the last in their houses, and keeping the other continually burning; the Priests and Ministers of the Temple always adding Fewel, that it might not fail. The Vestal Fire was not kept more carefully at Rome, nor with greater Ceremony. To this God, whom they called Dishpan, or the Lord of the Smoak, they used to sacrifice young Pullets; to the other, their Cocks. The seed of this Idolatry is so implanted in them, that it is said, that in a Village of the King's called Lovaniski, not four miles from Vilna, their chief City, they do to this day worship Serpents. Converted with their Prince Jagello to the Christian Faith, Anno 1386, they yet retained such Customs as are inconsistent with Christianity; marrying, unmarrying, when and as often as they please; no Bond being so soon cancelled as that of Matrimony. For a married man to use the body of an Harlot is accounted (as indeed it is) an opprobious Crime: but for the Wife to have her Stallions and Adulterers is a thing so ordinary and unblameable, that the Husbands call them their Coadjutors, and prize them far above the rest of their Acquaintance. The common people are in a miserable Servitude unto their Lords, pillaged and beaten by them upon any occasion; yet must not come before them with an empty hand. And if any of them have committed a Crime deserving death, he must hang himself as soon as the Sentence is signified to him, or else is beaten and tormented in so cruel a manner, that Death at last is looked on as a better Life.

The Country is divided into ten parts or Provinces, subject unto the Jurisdiction of so many Palatines, that is to say, the Palatine of 1. Vilna. 2. Trock. 3. Minsko. 4. Novogrod. 5. Brestia. 6. Volhinia. 7. Kiovia. 8. Miestaw. 9. Vitebsco. 10. Polotzkie. But Novogrod and Polotzkie being conquered by the Great Duke of Moscovie, and added unto that Estate, and Volhinia reckoned (of late times) for a distinct Province of it self, not depending of it; the remaining number is but seven, most of them taking names from their principal Towns. The chief of those, and others which deserve place here, are, 1. Vilna, a Bishop's See, equal in bigness to Cracow, the chief City of Poland; so called of the River Vil, or Viln, upon which it is seated; built there in the year 1305 by one Godemin, a great Prince of these parts; well walled, but the Gates thereof open night and day; large, rich, and well frequented by foreign Merchants, especially by those that drive the Trade of Moscovie, who have here their Hall, one of the chief Ornaments of the City. They have in it also some Churches built of Stone, (but the most of Wood) the principal whereof is the Monastery of S. Bernard, which is a very comely Structure. The Natives call this Town Vilenski, the Dutch Die Wilde. It is situate in the very heart of the Country, the longest Day in Summer being here 16 hours and half a quarter; whereas in the most Southern parts of the Country it is but 16, and in the most Northern not fully 18. 2. Kiovia, or Kiof, situate on the Nieper, or Borysthenes, where the River Desna falls into it: heretofore a beautiful and most stately City, having in it above 300 fair Churches, of which some remain unto this day, the Ruines of the rest to be traced out amongst Shrubs and Bushes, the receptacles of wild Beasts. The Seat at that time of the Metropolitan of the Russian Empire, containing also under his Jurisdiction the Countries of Walachia in Dacia, and Nigra Russia in Poland. But being destroyed by Bathu or Baydo the Tartarian, in the Conquest of these parts by that People, it never could come near its former Lustre: yet still it holds the reputation of a Bishop's See, acknowledging the Patriarch of Mosco for his Metropolitan, and consequently is of the Communion of the Greek Churches, not of that of Rome. 3. Grodno, on the River Chronus, the chief Town of the Palatinate of Trock, memorable for the death of Stephen King of Poland. 4. Grunwald, more memorable for the great Defeat given near it, by Jagello Duke of Lituania and King of Poland, to the numerous Army of the Dutch Knights invading this Province; so confident of their Success in the undertaking, that they brought with them abundance of Chains and Torches; with the one to lead captive the Nobles of Poland, and with the other to fire their Cities. But Jagello, then newly made a Christian, putting his confidence in God, with an Army of untrained Souldiers so tamed their Pride, that he slew 40000 of them; so that they never recovered of that Blow whilst their Order stood. 5. Pinsko, in the Palatinate of Brzest. 6. Klow, reckoned a Country of it self, and 7. Strissin, fortified with a Castle; both under the Palatine of Miestaw. The rest of the chief Towns may be known by the Palatinates which they give their names to, but not else observable.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Aorsi, Pagarini, Savari, Tribes of the Sarmatæ Europæi. United into this name of Lituanians, they became subject to the Kings of Russia, till the breaking of that Kingdom by the Tartars. At what time Erdizvil, then their Prince, (but an Homager and Tributary to the Russians) withdrew himself from their Command; as did also many other of the conquered Provinces. Afterwards Mindoch, one of the Dukes or Princes of it, being made a Christian, was by Pope Innocent the third honoured with the Title of a King; but returning again unto his Vomit, he lost that Title. In the end, Anno 1386, Jagello Duke of Lituania, marrying with Hedwigis Queen of Poland, was upon three Conditions chosen King of that Realm. 1. That he should immediately receive the Christian Faith. 2. That he should draw all his Subjects to the same Belief. And 3. that he should unite this Dukedom to the Crown of Poland. Of these the two first were performed without any delay; though the second not without some difficulty, the people being obstinate in their old Idolatry, especially in the Religious conceit they had of high Trees, which to cut down was held both unsafe and impious. They could not be weaned from this conceit, till by the authority of the King their loftiest Trees were felled, and their Woods grubbed up: which when they saw done without any danger to the Prince, or any of those whom he employed in that service, Regis mandato & autoritati cedere coperunt, they then began to hearken unto his Commands, and generally received the Gospel, and were baptized. In the last point there was a longer time of deliberation: For the Princes of the House of Jagello, loth to deprive themselves of their Patrimonial Estate, which was hereditary unto their Posterity, and to subject it to the Election of the Polanders, in which it was possible the Princes of their Family might be pretermitted, deferred the accomplishment hereof from one day to another, under colour that the Lituanians would revolt if they went about it. But Sigismund Augustus, in whose person the Male-issue of Jagello failed, foreseeing what Divisions might ensue after his decease, and fearing that the Muscovites would renew their old Pretensions, united it unto the Crown: ordaining that the Bishops, Palatines, and a certain number of the Chastellans by him established, should have their place and Suffrage in the great Council of Poland, power in the chusing of the King, and all other Privileges which the natural Polonians have. Since that it is accounted a chief Member of that Body politick, subject to those Corruptions, Changes and Innovations in matters of Religion, which have been predominant in the other; excepting those parts only which relate to the Church of Greece, or Mosco, adhering pertinaciously to the Rites thereof.

4. VOLHINIA

VOLHINIA, by some accounted one of the Palatinates of Lituania, (as once it was) but by others a distinct Province of it self, is bounded on the North and East with Lituania, on the South with Podolia, and on the West with Russia Nigra and Podlassia. So called, as Maginus is of opinion, from the Volgari, who, dwelling on the Banks of the River Volga, came afterwards into this Country, calling it Volgaria, whence by degrees it came unto Volhonia, and at last unto Volhinia. But this conjecture is improbable, and of no good grounds.

The Country yields good plenty both of Grain and Fruits, Pools which abound with very good Fish, Forests which do afford them store of Game and Honey, and much good Pasturage for their Cattel. That people are of the same nature with the Lituanians, but more strong and warlike, & better weaned from their old Superstitions and heathenish customs than the others are. They are of the same Language and Religion with those of Russia, to which, together with the rest of Lituania, it did once belong. It is divided commonly into three parts or Provinces, all taking name from the three principal Cities of it; that is to say, 1. Luzke, in Latine called Lucoria a Town of above 1000 Families, where 127 only (in the time of my Author) were of the Romish Religion; the residue being Russians, Grecians, and some Armenians. The Seat and Residence of two Bishops, of which one, being of the Communion of the Church of Rome, is of the Province of the Archbishop of Lemburg in Russia Nigra; but they which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece have also a Bishop of their own, who acknowledgeth the Patriarch of Mosco for his Metropolitan. 2. Volodomir, a Bishop's See also, of the same condition. 3. Keromenze, which (as the rest) hath under it many fair Towns and Castles, besides large Villages. The whole was once part of Lituania, as before was said; but of late dismembred from it, and united to the Crown of Poland, as a State distinct: but so, that the greatest part of it is immediatly subject to the Duke of Ostrogoye, who is said to have 4000 Feudataries in this Country; the greatest Prince of those who hold Communion with the Church of Greece in the whole Realm of Poland.

5. PODOLIA.

PODOLIA hath on the North Volhinia, part of Lituania, and the great Empire of Russia; on the South Moldavia, from which it is parted by the River Tyras, now called Niester; on the West Russia Nigra; extending Eastward through vast uninhabited Countries as far as to the Euxine Sea. The reason of the name I find no-where guessed at. The people are for the most part of the same nature and original with the Russians, to whose Empire it formerly belonged also, till gained (if such a Subjection as they give the King may be called a gaining) to the Crown of Poland, at such time as the Russes were inthralled to the power of the Tartars.

The Country is generally so fertile, that the Husbandman is accustomed to reap an hundred for one, in regard it bears at one Ploughing for three years together; the Countryman being put to no farther trouble, than at the end of the first and second years to shake the Corn a little, as he reaps or loads it; that which so falls serving as Seed for the next year following. The Meadow-ground is so strangely rich and luxuriant, and the Grass so high, that a man can hardly see the Heads or Horns of his Cattel; of so swift a growth, that in three days it will cover a Rod which is thrown into it, and in few more so hide a Plough, that it is not an easie work to find it. If these things seem beyond belief, let Maginus, who reporteth them, bear the blame thereof; though better take it on his word, than go so far to disprove him. And yet, which adds much unto the Miracle, the ground is in most places so hard and stony, that there need six yoke of Oxen to break it up; to the great toil both of the Cattel and the men. It is also said that in this Country there are great Flocks of Sheep, many Herds of Oxen, abundance of wild Beasts, and great store of Honey. And yet for all this Plenty and abundance of all things necessary, the Country for the most part, especially towards the East, is but meanly inhabited, by reason of the frequent Incursions of the Tartars bordering next unto it, who have so wasted it in times past, and thereby so discouraged the people from Building, Planting, and all other works of Peace and Husbandry, that in so large and rich a Country there is nothing to be seen but some scattered Houses, few Villages, and not above five Towns of note, viz. 1. Orza above at the Influx of the Borysthenes or Nieper into the Euxine Sea. 2. Vaszow, at the fall of the River Bog into that of Nieper. 3. Bracław more high upon the Bog. 4. Camieniecz, on the Borders of Russia Nigra, built by some divine hand, as it were, amongst the Precipices of high and inaccessible Rocks, and so well fortified withal, that it is impregnable; as is apparent by the many and great Repulses which the Turks, Tartarians and Valachians have received before it, with much shame and loss. 5. Lemburg, remarkable for the Sawces or Salt-meats which they send thence into other Countries. The former fortunes of this Province, and how it was brought under the Crown of Poland, (with which it was incorporated long since) we shall see anon.

6. RUSSIA NIGRA.

RUSSIA NIGRA hath on the East Volhinia, Podolia, and Moldavia; on the West Massovia, and Poland specially so called; on the North Lituania and Podlassia; and on the South the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains. It is called also Roxolania, from the Roxolani, a chief People of Sarmatia Europæa, and by some Ruthenia: but generally Russia, from the Rossi spoken of before in the Empire of Russia, who spread themselves over all these parts. Some hold that it was first called Rossia, which signifieth in the Sclavonian Language a scattered Nation, or a Nation disseminated and dispersed into many parts; and that this was the name generally of all that spake the Sclavonian Tongue, and followed the Religion and the Rites of the Church of Greece, extended from the Frozen Sea to the Adriatick, and from the Euxine to the Baltick. This and a greater Tract of ground I grant to have been heretofore possessed by divers Nations under the name of Sclavonians; a very considerable part of Germany and Poland being conquered by them. But for the name of Russia, given at first to all the Russian Empire, Empire, diſtinguiſhed now into Ruſſia Alba and Ruſſia Nigra, I adhere unto my former Vote, conceiving that it came from the Roſſi, an Armenian People, inhabiting about Mount Taurus, who in the year 864, or thereabouts, attempted the taking of Conſtantinople, and after placed themſelves on the Northern Banks of the Euxine, getting ground of the Sclavonians to the North and Eaſt, till they had made themſelves Maſters of all Ruſſia Alba, Lituania, Volhinia, Podolia, and this Ruſſia Nigra. Diſtinguiſhed from the former by the adjunct of Nigra, after the deſtruction of that great Empire by the coming in of the Tartars, either from the colour of their Garments, or their black and more Southernly Complexion. In which regard it is called alſo Ruſſia Meridionalis, or the Southern Ruſſia.

The Country is generally fruitful, abounding in Horſes, Oxen, Sheep, Sables, and Foxes: ſuch ſtore of Bees, that they breed not only in Hives and hollow Trees, but in Rocks and Caves. Well watered both with Pools and Rivers, affording them great plenty of Fiſh, more naturally ſpawning here than in other places, inſomuch that if a Pond be digged, and ſpring accordingly, the Fiſh will breed therein of their own accord, without being brought from other waters. The greateſt want hereof is Wine, either ſupplyed with Mede, or from other places. And it is ſaid that in the Territory of Chelm the Branches of the Pine-trees, left upon the ground for three years together, will be converted into Stone.

The people are generally valiant, and ſo ſtrong of body, that they uſe Bows of 12 foot long. Being formerly governed by Dukes, they do but ill brook the name of King; which much induced the Kings of Poland to ſend Colonies of natural Polonians into moſt parts of the Country, inſomuch as moſt of the Knights and Gentry of it are of that Extraction, and follow the Religion of the Church of Rome; the Peaſants and original Inhabitants of it being more generally affected to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

Places of moſt importance in it are. 1. Chelm, in the Territory whereof it is affirmed that the Branches of Pine-trees, left upon the ground for three years together, are converted to Stone. 2. Premiſlen. 3. Halitz. 4. Belzo. 5. Grodeck, and 6. Leopolis, by the Natives called Lemburg, built by one Leo a Moſcovite; a Town of great Traffick, and an Archbiſhop's See, who is of the Religion of the Church of Rome. But the Patriarch of Moſco hath here alſo an Archbiſhop of his own ordaining, there being Churches both in the City it ſelf, and all Ruſſia generally, (as before was ſaid) which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece. There are alſo in this City ſome Armenian Merchants, who have a Church, a Biſhop, and ſome Prieſts of their own Religion.

Of the Affairs of this Province, and how it was a part once of the Ruſſian Empire, hath been ſaid already. Diſmembred from it by the Tartars, it had a while Dukes or Provincial Governours, ſubject and tributary unto thoſe Barbarians: as had alſo Podolia, its next neighbour. Both, conquered by the Polander, were for a time kept under by ſtrong hand and the power of Garriſons. But being upon all occaſions apt to revolt, by reaſon of the hard hand which the Kings held over them, (by whom they were treated rather like Slaves than Subjects) they were aſſured unto the State, by giving the ſame Liberties and Immunities, both for the Nobility and the Commons, which the natural Polonians had; and by that means made Fellow-members of that Commonwealth. The Act of Ladiſlaus the 6. the Son of Jagello, imitating therein the ancient Romans, who much augmented their Forces, and aſſured their Eſtates, by communicating the Freedom of Rome and the Priviledges of Latium to many of the conquered Provinces: and was imitated by Sigiſmund the firſt, Sigiſmund-Auguſtus and Stephen, his Succeſſors in their incorporating of Pruſſia, Lituania, and Livonia, to the Crown of Poland.

MASSOVIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Lituania, on the Weſt with Poland ſpecially ſo called, on the North with Pruſſia and Podlaſſia, on the South with Ruſſia Nigra or Meridionalis. So called from Maſſo, one of the Dukes hereof, who in the year 1045, being vanquiſhed by Caſimire Duke of Poland, fled into Pruſſia, and there unfortunately died.

The Country is large, and for the moſt part full of Woods, where they find ſtore of Bugles and wild Bulls. The people are ſtrong, valiant, and couragious in War; differing little from the Polonians in Speech, Manners, or Apparel, ſave that they uſe a kind of Whiſtling, which the others do not. The principal Towns of it are, 1. Warſaw, the chief of the Province, and heretofore the Reſidence of the Duke or Prince; remarkable for the beſt Mede or Metheglin. 2. Czirsko. 3. Poltowskie. 4. Gadziek. 5. Lozara. 6. Droic, the Seat of a Palatine, but not elſe obſervable.

This Province was once ſubject to Princes of its own, not ſubject or ſubordinate unto any Superiour. Of which number that Maſſo was one, from whom it was named Maſſovia. In the years 1246 and 1260, being ſtrangely waſted and diſtreſſed by Mindoy Duke of Lituania, they were fain to put themſelves under the power of the Polander; by whom they were made the Portion of the ſecond Son of that Kingdom. But John and Staniſlaus, the two laſt Dukes hereof, dying without Iſſue, it returned unto the Kings of Poland, and became incorporate to that Crown, and priviledged in the Election of the King, and all matters which concern the publick, as all others of the Polonians are, Anno 1526.

8. PODLASSIA.

PODLASSIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Volhinia, on the Weſt with Pruſſia, on the North with Lituania, and on the South with Maſſovia and Ruſſia Nigra. The reaſon of the name I know not. The Country differs not much from thoſe before: the people being a mixt generation of Ruſſes, Moſcovites, and Polonians, partake a little of the Manners and Garb of thoſe ſeveral Nations from which they lineally are deſcended.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Bielsko. 2. Bransko. 3. Suras; all of them having fair and ample Territories. 4. Tycockzyn, ſtrongly fortified and well garriſoned, as being the place where the King's Treaſures are kept. 5. Knyſſin, beautified with a Royal Palace, and a pleaſant Park, wherein are ſtore of wild Beaſts for Hunting, and Fiſh-ponds very well repleniſhed. 6. Narew. 7. Vaſilkow, and 8. Auguſtow, a very ſtrong Town, built and well fortified by Sigiſmund Auguſtus, and by him thus named, Anno 1569, at what time he diſmembred this Province from Lituania, to which before it appertained, uniting it for ever to the Crown of Poland.

9. PRUSSIA.

PRUSSIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Lituania and Podlaſſia, on the Weſt with Pomerania, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with Poland and Maſſovia. Called firſt Boruſſia, from the Boruſſi, who ſubdued it, (of whom more anon) which by an eaſie alteration was changed into Pruſſia, by which name it is ſtill called.

The Country is extended all along the Baltick Sea, from the City of Dantzick in the Weſt, to Labiaw on the Mouth of the Maillank, Eaſt, for the ſpace of 50 Poliſh miles; and from Torne, bordering on Maſſovia, to Memel in the Confines of Lituania, 58 miles of the ſame meaſure. The Air thereof is very mild and temperate, the Soil both profitable and pleaſant; full of Lakes and Rivers ſtored with Fiſh, plentiful of Corn and other Neceſſaries, and well clad with Foreſts, which yield them Game for Hunting, rich Skins for profit, and abundance of Honey; of which laſt they make Mede for their own uſe, (their ordinary Drink where there is no Wine) and ſell the reſt unto the Merchant. But the Commodity wherein they do excel their neighbours is their plenty of Amber, which is the juice of a Stone which groweth like a Coral in a Mountain of theſe Baltick Seas, covered quite with water, and ſhunned by Marriners three leagues off, for fear of Shipwrack: the Mountain is reaſonable large, about 50 yards high of Engliſh meaſure. And when any Tempeſt riſeth in theſe Northern Seas, eſpecially in September and December, the Liquor by violence thereof is rent from the Rock, and caſt into divers Havens, and on divers Coaſts of this Country, and ſometimes upon thoſe of Sweden and Pomerania: the people leaping into the Sea when it rageth moſt, whence they take up firſt ſome ſtore of Weeds, after that this Liquor, which being taken out of the water hardeneth like to Coral. Beſides the beauty hereof, and the quality it hath of attracting Straws and Iron, as the Adamant doth, burning like Pitch, and others of this nature; it is excellent good for ſtoping Bloud, all kind of Agues, Falling-ſickneſs, Dropſies, Stone, Cholick, weakneſs of Stomach, Head-ach, and the Yellow-jaundice.

The people, eſpecially the Gentry, deſcend from the Germans, and retain much of their nature; having more Art and Induſtry than the other Polonians, and being more tenacious of their ancient Cuſtoms. They were Idolaters for long time together, converted firſt unto the Faith in the time of the Emperour Frederick the 2. by whoſe ſetting on they were ſubdued by the Order of the Dutch Knights, An. 1215, and either won or forced to the Chriſtian Faith. As Chriſtians, governed ſince the plantation of the Goſpel by the Biſhops of Culm, Warmia, Sambia, and Pomeſan, Suffragans to the Archbiſhop of Gneſna; under whom thoſe parts do ſtill continue which have not yet forſaken the Church of Rome: the Lutherans, Calvinians, and other ſeparate Congregations diſtinct from them, having their own Forms both of Doctrine and Diſcipline.

Few Provinces of the North are better watered than this is, both for Lakes and Rivers: ſome of the Lakes being ſeven Dutch miles in compaſs, and well ſtored with Fiſh. The Rivers are 12 in number; that is to ſay, 1. the Viſtula. 2. Chronus. 3. Nogat. 4. Elbing. 5. Vaſera. 6. Paſſaria. 7. Alla. 8. Pregel. 9. Oſſa. 10. Drebnicz. 11. Lica, and 12. Lavia, all plentifully ſtored with Fiſh; beſides a large Sea-coaſt both for Trade and Fiſhing, no ſmall commodity to the Natives.

The Country, formerly divided into twelve Dukedoms, (ſo they called the parts and fractions of it) was by the induſtry of the Dutch Knights ſo adorned and beautified, (after they had once brought it under their Obedience) that there were no fewer than 72 Caſtles and 62 good Towns of their foundation. Which number being much increaſed in theſe later times, hath made it the moſt flouriſhing part of the whole Kingdom of Poland. But the Order of theſe Knights being ſuppreſſed in this Country by an Agreement betwixt Sigiſmund the firſt, King of Poland, and Albert of Brandenburg, the laſt Great Maſter of the Order; both Town and Country are divided between the Succeſſors of the ſaid Albert, as Dukes of Pruſſia, and of the ſaid Sigiſmund, as Kings of Pole: the Dukedoms or Diviſions of Hogerland, Warmia, Galindia, Michelow, Culmigeria, with the City of Marienburg, the Soveraignty of Dantzick and Melving, with the whole Country of Pomerellia, lying on the Weſt-ſide of the Viſtula, being allotted to the King; the reſidue, containing the Diviſions of Schalavonia, Sambia, Natangia, Nadravia, Bartonia, Sudavia, and Pomeſania (except the City and Territory of Marienburg) to the Dukes of Pruſſia.

Chief Towns belonging to the Duke are, 1. Memel, a well-frequented Port, the Mart-Town for the Commodities of Lituania, which are brought hither, and here bought by the foreign Merchant: part of this Province interpoſing betwixt Lituania and the Baltick. 2. Koningsberg, as the Dutch, Regimont, as the French, and Mons Regius, as the Latines call it; ſituate in the Province of Sambia, at the bottom of a Gulf or Bay, where the Pregel falleth into the Baltick Sea: built by the Dutch Knights in the year 1260, and made an Univerſity by Albert the firſt Duke hereof 1225, the Seat and principal Reſidence of his Succeſſors; as alſo of the Biſhop of Sambia, in Latine called Sambienſis, by the name of the Province. 3. Mulmeburg, founded by the Dutch Knights, Anno 1279. 4. Brandenburg, on the South-ſide of that Bay, but more near the Sea; built, as I gueſs, by ſome of the Great Maſters of that Family. 5. Ragnitz, the fartheſt Town of note towards Lituania. 6. Angersburg, in Schalavonia; as was alſo Ragnitz. 7. Nordenburg, in Bartonia. 8. Ortelsburg, in Galindia: of which little memorable. 9. Marienwerder, the fartheſt of the Duke's Eſtate towards the Viſtula, and the ordinary Reſidence of the Biſhop of Pomeſan. Beſides which there are reckoned in this Diviſion 80 good Towns more, and about 54 Caſtles, though not of much obſervation in the courſe of Story.

Chief Towns pertaining to the King are, 1. Braunsberg, upon a Bay of the Baltick Sea which they call Friſch-Haffe; a Town of good Trade by reaſon of the commodious Haven, and the ordinary Reſidence of the Biſhop of Warmia. 2. Frawenberg, on the ſame Bay, not far from Braunsberg. 3. Reſel, the chief Town of the Dioceſe and Dukedom of Warmia. 4. Strasburg, in Michelow, confining on Poland ſpecially ſo called; at the Siege whereof by Guſtavus Adolphus King of Sweden, Anno 1628, Elias Trype, one of the Engineers of that King, found out the uſe of Leathern Ordnance, which afterwards did that King great ſervice in the Wars of Germany. 5. Culm, on the River Viſtula, a Biſhop's See. 6. Marienburg, on the Nogat, built by the Dutch Knights, Anno 1302, and made the Seat of the Great Maſters of their Order, tranſlated firſt from Ptolemais or Acon in Syria to the City of Venice, from thence to Marpurg, and at laſt to this place by Sifride the twelfth Great Maſter of it, whoſe conſtant Reſidence in this Town occaſioned the Biſhop of Culm to remove thither alſo. A very fair and well-built City, the chief of thoſe which do belong to the King of Poland: by him ſo well garriſoned, and furniſhed with ſuch ſtore of Victuals, Ammunition, and other Neceſſaries, that it was thought able to hold out for a ſix years Siege. But it proved otherwiſe when beſieged by the King of Sweden, who took it in leſs ſpace than ſo many months, being on the ſetling of a Peace betwixt the Crowns rendred again unto the King of Poland. Beneath this Town, down towards the Baltick, is a pleaſant Iſland made by the Nogat and the Weyſſel, for the fertility of the Soil, and the great number of Houſes, Villages, and People, not equalled (for the muchneſs of it) in all this Country.

To

To this part alſo belongeth the fair Port of Elbing, (or Melving, as Maginus calls it) ſituate on the Bay of the Baltick called Friſch Haſſe; ſpoken of before, not far from a Fiſhful Lake; well traded, rich, and full of very wealthy Merchants; of great reſort from other Nations, and much frequented by the Engliſh Merchants, who have here their Staple for the Baltick: a ſmall, but neat and well-built City, and fortified with a very good Wall, governed after the manner of a free Eſtate or Commonwealth, under the Patronage and Protection of the Kings of Poland, in like ſort as Dantzick alſo is, of which more anon.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Venedi, the moſt potent Nation of this Tract, extended all along the Coaſt of the Baltick, from them by Ptolemy called Sinas Venedicus: containing under them the Gythones, Phini, Sulanes, Phrungundiones, Avarini; and more within the Land the Sodini and Galindæ, whoſe name the Dukedom or Province of Galindia doth ſtill retain. But great and potent though they were, they were ſubdued by the Boruſſi, inhabiting at the foot of the Riphæan Mountains, who, weary of their own cold and barren Dwellings, removed into the Weſtern parts, and, vanquiſhing the Venedi, and thoſe other Nations, poſſeſſed themſelves of this Country, which they called Boruſſia, now by us named Pruſſia. By Venedus one of their Princes, having twelve Sons in all, it was divided into 12 Provinces or Dukedoms, one for every Son; continuing by that means diſtracted into divers petit Principalities, till the coming of the Marian or Dutch Knights, ſent hither by Frederick the ſecond, Anno 1215, by whom the Provinces or Dukedoms of Sudavia, Michelow, and the greateſt part of Nadravia, were laid waſte and deſolate: the reſt ſubmitted to their power, and received the Goſpel. After this it continued ſubject to this Order of Knights till the year 1419, when, weary of their Extortion and the continual change of Maſters, they revolted to the King of Poland, to whom they offered their Obedience: ſeconded by the yielding up of Marienburg, with many other Towns and Caſtles, ſold to King Caſimir by the Garriſon-Souldiers, Anno 1457, for 476000 Florens. But the Knights diſdaining to be ſo dealt withall, and refuſing to ſwear Allegiance to the Kings of Poland, they brake out into open War, which was managed with variable Succeſs on both ſides; Ludovicus, the then Great Maſter, being ſo ſucceſsful at the firſt, that he once beat the King out of the Field, routed his whole Army, ſlew 30000 of his men upon the place, and took 136 of his chief Nobility: nor was he vanquiſhed at laſt, but by the Treachery and Rebellion of his own people. In the end, wearied and worn out on both ſides by continual Wars, Albert of Brandenburg, then Great Maſter, having for 14 years together couragiouſly maintained the Honour of his Order, and for the four laſt years importuned in vain the Aſſiſtance of the Emperour and Princes of Germany, began to think of ſome Expedient to compound the buſineſs. Being inclined to Luther's Doctrines, and willing to advance himſelf unto this Eſtate, he ſecretly practiſed with Sigiſmund the firſt of Poland, to end the War to the advantage of both parties. By whom at laſt it was agreed, That Albert ſhould relinquiſh his Order, and ſurrender all Pruſſia into the hands of the King: That the King, poſſeſſing the Weſtern parts, with the Town of Marienburg, and the Soveraignty of Dansk and Melving, ſhould inveſt Albert with the Title of Duke of Pruſſia, eſtating on him and the Heirs of his body the whole Eaſtern Moiety, containing the Provinces or Dukedoms before ſpecified: and finally, That Albert and his Heirs ſhould hold the ſaid Eſtate as Homagers to the Crown of Poland, taking place in all Aſſemblies at the King's right hand. According to this Agreement, Anno 1525, Albert, attired in the compleat habit of Maſter of the Dutch Order, preſents himſelf humbly on his knees before Sigiſmund at Cracow, the King then ſitting on his Throne. The King, raiſing him from the ground, cauſed him to put off thoſe Robes, and attire himſelf in a Ducal Habit: which done, an Inſtrument was read and publiſhed, whereby the King conferred upon him and the Heirs of his body the Dukedom of Pruſſia, to be held of him and his Succeſſors Kings of Poland. An Act at which the whole Order were extremely incenſed; but they could not help it, and thereupon retired into Germany, where there were ſome good Lands left, to maintain ſuch of them as had no mind to quit that Military honour; leaving their old Eſtates in Pruſſia to the King, and the Duke, whoſe Succeſſors have hitherto enjoyed their part of it, with the Title of Dukes of PRUSSIA.

1525 1. Albert of Brandenburg, Son of Frederick Marqueſs of Onoldsbech, or Onsbach, created Maſter of the Order by the Emperour Maximilian, Anno 1511, and the firſt Duke of Pruſſia by Sigiſmund the firſt of Poland, Anno 1525, founded the Univerſity of Koningsberg, Anno 1544.

1568 2. Albert-Frederick, Son of Albert the firſt Duke, married Mary-Eleanor, Daughter of William Duke of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c.

3. Anne, Eldeſt Daughter of Duke Albert-Frederick, Ducheſs of Pruſſia, brought the Eſtate in Marriage to

4. John-Sigiſmund, Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg, who was confirmed therein by Sigiſmund the 3. of Poland, pretending an Eſcheat thereof for want of Heirs-males of the body of Albert the firſt Duke.

5. George-William, Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg in right of his Father, Duke of Pruſſia in right of the Lady Anne his Mother, and of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c. by Deſcent from Mary-Eleanor his Grandmother.

6. Frederick-William, Son of George-William Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg, Duke of Pruſſia, Cleve, Gulick, and Berg; of whoſe Inveſtiture in the Dukedom of Pomeren and other large and goodly Seigniouries we have ſpoken elſewhere.

As for the Government of this Province ſtanding thus divided, that of the Duke is more Monarchical than that of the King; the one being abſolute and uncontrollable in his Eſtates, the other ſubject to the great Council of Poland. If any difference grow between them, Delegates appointed by the King, but taking a new Oath to do equal Juſtice, either at Marienburg or Elbing, do compound the buſineſs: who, together with ſome other of the Duke's nomination, receive all Appeals in which the Duke is intereſſed as one of the parties.

The Revenues of this Dukedom are thought to be 120000 Ducats yearly.

The Arms thereof are Argent, an Eagle Vert, membred and crowned Or, langued Gules.

10. POMERELLIA.

POMERELLIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Viſtula, by it parted from Pruſſia, on the South with Poland ſpecially ſo called, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the Weſt with the Dukedom of Pomerania, meranie, of which it was anciently a part, till ſeparated from it, and united to the Crown of Poland under this new name.

The Territory is ſmall, and conſequently not capable of many Towns and Cities of conſideration. Thoſe of moſt note are, 1. Newenburg, on the Banks of the Viſtula, or Weſſel. 2. Dirſchaw, or Darſaw, (in Latine Darſovia) a well-fortified Town and of great importance, at the Siege whereof, Anno 1627 Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, received the Order of the Garter. 3. Dantzick, in Latine called Dantiſcum, and ſometimes Gedanum, ſituate at the Mouth of the ſame River alſo; a fair and well-built City, the Houſes for the moſt part of Brick, and the reſt of Stone raiſed with great beauty and magnificence ſix or ſeven floors high; beautified with a fair Council-houſe for affairs of State, and many publick Gardens for diſport and exerciſe. It conſiſteth of three Cities, governed by as many Senates; the one called Voorſtat, or the fore-City; the ſecond Altſtat, or the old City, and the third Reichſtat, or the Emperour's City: but all incompaſſed with one Wall, and governed by one chief Senate or Common-Council choſen out of all three. A Biſhop's See, and the ſecond in eſteem and rank of all the Hanſe-Towns; of ſo great Trade, ſuch a noted Granary of all ſorts of Corn, iſſued from hence to ſupply the wants of other Countries, that 1000 Meaſures of Wheat (beſides other Commodities in proportion) are here daily ſold. Heretofore it was reckoned as Imperial, but now as a Free State, acknowledging the Kings of Poland for their Protectors, to whom they allow many Cuſtoms upon their Merchandiſe, and permit their Officers to remain there for receiving them. The firſt Town in the Kingdom of Poland which gave entrance to the Doctrines of Luther, An. 1525, but in ſo tumultuous a manner, that they that favoured his Opinions depoſed the old Common-Council-men, and created new ones of their own, prophaned the Churches, robbed them of their Ornaments, and ſhamefully abuſed the Prieſts and Religious perſons, aboliſhed the Maſs, and altered all things at their pleaſure. But by the coming of the King they grew ſomewhat quieter, leaving one Convent of Black Friers and two of Nuns, who ſtill enjoy the exerciſe of their Religion.

This Country, once a part of the Dukedom of Pomeren, was given by Suantibore, once Duke thereof, Anno 1107, to Bugiſlaus his ſecond Son; whoſe Poſterity enjoyed it till the year 1295, when Meſtevin 2. dying without Iſſue-male, gave it to Primiſlaus Duke of the Polonians, whoſe Succeſſors have ever ſince enjoyed it by that Donation. It is called Pomerellia, for diſtinction ſake, from the firſt ſeparating of it from the Dukedom of Pomeren.

II. POLAND.

POLAND properly and ſpecially ſo called is bounded on the Eaſt with Maſſovia and Podlaſſia, on the Weſt with Sileſia and the Marquiſate of Brandenburg, on the North with Pruſſia and Pomerellia, and on the South with the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary. It is in length 480 Italian miles, 300 of the ſame miles in breadth; and took this name (as afore is ſaid) from the word Pole, ſignifying as much as plain, the Country being plain and level, little ſwelled with Hills.

The Air hereof is pure and healthy, but ſharp and cold; the Country plain, ſhaded with thick dark Woods, parts of the Hercynian, full of wild Beaſts for Hunting, and of Bees for Honey, which they have here in great abundance, together with ſuch plenty of Grain, but of Rie eſpecially, by reaſon of the continual breaking up of new Grounds gained out of the Foreſts, that it may be called the Granary or Store-houſe of the Weſtern parts of Europe: the Grain is ſent down the Weyſſel unto Dantzick, and thence tranſported by the Merchant into other Countries, according to their ſeveral wants.

The Character of the People we have had before; adding now only, that in matters of War they are ſtout and reſolute; ſo forwards in giving the Charge and Purſuit of the Enemy, that John Vaſiliwich, the Great Duke of Moſcovie, comparing them with the Souldiers of his own Dominions, was wont to ſay, that the Moſcovites wanted a Spur to drive them forwards, and the Polander had need of a Bridle to hold them back. Their Language is the Sclavonian Tongue; moſt generally ſpoken alſo in the reſt of the Provinces, but with ſome difference in the Dialect or Pronunciation.

It is divided commonly into two parts, the Greater and the leſſer Poland. The GREATER, lying wholly on the Weſtern ſide of the Weyſſel, and ſo accounted anciently as a part of Germany, contains 9 Diviſions, under the Juriſdiction of the 9 Palatines of 1. Poſna. 2. Kaliſch. 3. Siradia. 4. Lancicia. 5. Vladiſlaw. 6. Brzeſtye. 7. Rava. 8. Ploczko, and 9. Dobrzin; each of them ſo called from ſome Town of note. The chief whereof, and of the reſt contained in them, are, 1. Poſna, a Biſhop's See, and the principal of the Greater Poland, ſeated amongſt the Hills on the River Warta, built of Free-ſtone, with very large Suburbs beyond the River, but much ſubject unto Inundations, which adde much ſtrength unto the place; of great reſort by reaſon of the Marts or Fairs holden twice a year. 2. Koſcien, ſituate amongſt Mariſhes, and fortified with a double Wall. 3. Oſtrezow, bordering on Sileſia, begirt with Woods. 4. Gneſna, the ancienteſt Town of Poland, founded by Lechus their firſt Prince, the Seat of him and his Succeſſors; till removed to Cracow; ſituate in Kaliſch, and by old preſcription the firſt place for Inauguration of the Kings of Pole, in regard that here Prince Boleſlaus, the firſt King of this Country, received the Regal Diadem at the hands of Otho the third. The Town is well walled, and the See of an Archbiſhop, who is the Primate of the Kingdom, by ancient Priviledge the Pope's Legat for all Sarmatia Europæa, and in the abſence of the King or Interregnum, the Vicar-general of the Kingdom, having power to ſummon the Diets, to conclude and publiſh their Decrees. 5. Pietrokow, a walled Town in the Palatinate or Diviſion of Siradia, ſituate on a mooriſh ſoil; the place in former times of the general Diets, ſince removed to Warſaw. 6. Vladiſlaw, on the Weyſſel or Viſtula, a Biſhop's See. 7. Bedgoſt, a walled Town on the Bard, a navigable River, conveying the Merchandiſe of theſe parts into the Viſtula. 8. Kruſwick, in Brzeſtye, built of Wood, ſtanding on a great Lake named Gopla, in the Caſtle whereof Popielus the 2. Duke of Poland, was after a ſtrange manner devoured with Rats ſwarming out of the Lake. 9. Ploczko, upon the Viſtula, a walled Town, and a Biſhop's See, with a Caſtle to it. 10. Warſaw, upon the Banks of the ſame River; of no great note in former times, but of late grown the beſt frequented and moſt traded Town in all the Province: honoured for the moſt part with the Court of the King, the holding of all publick Diets, (removed from Pietrokow to this place) & the Tranſaction of all buſineſſes both of Peace and War, which muſt needs draw to it great reſort of all ſorts of people; the fruitfulneſs of the Soil and commodiouſneſs of the ſituation rendring it very capable of thoſe publick Meetings. 11. Mlawa, bordering on the Dukedom of Pruſſia.

The LESSER Poland, lying on the South of the Greater, and divided by the River Weyſſel, comprehendeth only three Diviſions, under the Government of the Palatines of 1. Cracow. 2. Sandomir. and 3. Lublin. Principal Cities of of the which are, 1. Cracow, upon the Weyſſel, (called in Latine Cracovia) a Biſhop's See, the chief of all the Kingdom, the Seat of the Prince, and the Sepulture of the former Kings; by Ptolemy called Carodunum; fortified with a double Wall (of the old faſhion) a deep Ditch, the Caſtle of Vanel ſituate on the top of an high Rock, and beautified with an Univerſity, or general Study of good Arts and Sciences. The Buildings are more fair than elſewhere in Poland, of Free-ſtone, and four Stories high; but for the moſt part covered with Shingles, or Tiles of wood: in the midſt is a large Market-place, in form quadrangular; and in the middle of that the Common-Council-houſe, about which are many Shops of Merchants. On one ſide of it ſtandeth the Cathedral Church: and on the Eaſt-ſide of the City the Palace Royal, high ſeated on an Hill overlooking both the Town and Country, fair and well built, of form ſomewhat near a Quadrangle, but lying open to the South without any Buildings above the Wall, affording thereby to the Gallery, being on the North-ſide of the Caſtle, the more excellent Proſpect. 2. Lelow, a walled Town with a Caſtle, on the River Bialo. 3. Sandomir, a walled Town with a Caſtle alſo, ſeated on a Hill, under which runs the Viſtula or Weſſel. 4. Wiſliczca, a walled Town amongſt Mariſhes, encompaſſed with the River Nid. 5. Luhlin, a walled Town, but more ſtrongly fortified by the Mariſhes and waters with which it is environed; remarkable for three yearly Marts, drawing hither Merchants from moſt parts adjoyning, as alſo Moſcovites, Armenians, Turks and Graecians. The Jews, inhabiting the greateſt part of the Suburbs, have here their Synagogue; making the Town, eſpecially at the time of thoſe Marts, a Medley of all Nations and Religions. 6. Caſimiria, on the Weyſſel, ſo named from the Founder of it, a King of Poland.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Arii, Helveronæ, Elyſii, and the Naharvali, parts of the Suevi Lygii ſpoken of by Tacitus, all of them lying on the Dutch ſide of the Weyſſel, by conſequence within the Bounds of the ancient Germany: the people of all the reſt of the Provinces before deſcribed being of the Sarmatian Race, next neighbours to the Germans, and not much unlike them in Perſons, Cuſtoms, or Conditions. But theſe diſperſed and ſcattered Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, being united in the common name of Sclaves, part of them ſetled in that part which we now call Poland, at that time reckoned and accounted of as a part of Germany. The time of their firſt coming hither, and the manner of their Government when firſt ſetled here, is not very well known. But for the firſt it is moſt certain, that it was ſome time, and that not long, after the death of Mauritius the Eaſtern Emperour: and for the next it is as certain, that on the coming of Lechus, a Croatian who fled his Country for a Murther, with his Brother Zechius, they ſetled into a more conſtant form of Government than before they did. For Lechus, ſeeing his Brother's good Succeſs in Bohemia, where the Sclaves received him for their Prince, paſſed into Poland, the next Province, and was as chearfully received by the Sclaves thereof, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own Extraction, and without quarrel or competition ſubmitted themſelves to his Commands, Anno 650, or thereabouts. Of this there is good conſtat amongſt our Authors. But neither the names or number of his Succeſſors do occur in Story till the time of Crocus, the Founder of Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and the Legiſlator of this People. After this, the Succeſſion of their Princes and the ſucceſs of their Affairs becomes more certain: the Eſtate hereof being much improved by the Conqueſt of many Sarmatian Countries, all which together conſtitute and make up the Kingdom of Poland, ſo called from this predominating and prevailing Province. The ſum of their Affairs is this. The Poſterity of Crocus failing in Popielus the ſecond, Piaſtus is elected Duke; the Princes from that time forwards becoming Elective, but always with reſpect to the next of bloud. In the time of Mieciſlaus, Son of Nemomyſlaus, they received the Goſpel, Anno 963. Boleſlaus the Son of Mieciſlaus was the firſt who had the Title of a King, conferred upon him by the Emperor Otho the third about the year 1001, relinquiſhed by Vladiſlaus the firſt, and not reſumed again till the time of Primiſlaus Duke of Poſna, Anno 1300, after which it became perpetual. In the perſon of this Primiſlaus Pomerellia is united to the State of Poland, Anno 1295; in that of Jagello, or Vladiſlaus the fifth, the great Dukedom of Lituania, incorporated into this Body as a Member of it in the time of Sigiſmund-Auguſtus. By Vladiſlaus the ſixth, Son of Jagello, Podolia, and Ruſſia Nigra were alſo added; by Sigiſmund the firſt, Pruſſia and Maſſovia; Podlaſſia by Sigiſmund-Auguſtus, who alſo took Volhinia out of Lituania; by Stephen, the actual poſſeſſion of the greateſt part of Livonia; by Sigiſmund the third, a Title to the Crown of Sweden. The Princes follow in this order.

On the death of his Brother Charles the ninth, he departed secretly into France, where he succeeded by the name of Henry the third.

1579 42. Stephen Bathor, Vaivod of Transylvania, by the recommendation of Amurath the third, Emperour of the Turks, having first married Anne, Sister of Sigismund the second, is elected King. He united Livonia to the Crown, and had a great hand upon the Moscovite.

1633 44. Vladislaus VII. eldest Son of Sigismund the third. After whose death the Kingdom was extremely embroiled by Factions, especially by the mutinous and seditious Cosacks, not fully setled by the Election of 1648 45. Casimir V. Brother of Vladislaus the seventh, now King of Poland, Anno 1648.

The Government of this Kingdom is nothing less than Monarchical. For though the first Dukes hereof were absolute Princes, and ruled after a Despotical manner, having power not only of the Estates of their Subjects, but of Life and Death, without Formalities of Law; yet when they once became Elective, they lost much of that power: which decayed so by little and little, that at the last the King is counted little better than a Royal Shadow; Stat magni nominis umbra, in the Poet's language. A Diminution which began first in the times of Lewis of Hungary and Jagello of Lituania; who, to gain the Succession to the Kingdom, contrary to Law, the one for his Daughter, the other for his Son, departed with many of their Royalties and Prerogatives, to buy the Voices of the Nobility. Since which time, the Nobility in all their Elections have so limited and restrained the King's Authority, and enlarged their own, that without their consent in Council he may neither make a War, nor treat of Peace, nor impose Taxes, nor alienate any of his Demeans, nor do any thing of importance which concerns the Publick: insomuch as Botérus, a great Statesman, doth expresly say, That the Government of Poland doth rather seem an Aristocracy than a Monarchy, a Commonwealth rather than a Kingdom. Besides, the King not only takes a solemn Oath at his Coronation to confirm all the Rights and Priviledges which have been granted to the Subject by his Predecessors, but adds this Clause, Quòd si Sacramentum meum violavero, incolæ Regni nullam nobis obedientiam præstare tenebuntur, that if he violate this Oath, his Subjects shall not be obliged to yield him any Obedience. Which, as Bodinus well observeth, doth rather savour of the condition of a Prince of the Senate, than of the Majesty of a King. He is respected accordingly by the Great ones, who look not on him as their King, but their elder Brother, (or perhaps not that) and reckon his Decrees but of three days lasting. Which notwithstanding, the King, once chosen and inthroned, hath sole power in many things without consulting with the Senate; as viz. in assembling Diets, chusing the Secular Counsellers, disposing absolutely of his Vassals and the Revenues of the Crown to what use he pleaseth; being sole Judge of the Nobility in Criminal Causes, which is a strong Bridle to rein them in with. By which, and either uniting himself unto the Clergy, or the well-forming of his party amongst the Nobility, he may do many things not allowable in strictness of Law: the power and influence which he hath in the publick Government being proportionable to the strength of his Wit and Brain.

And here it is to be observed, that none but the Clergy and Nobility have any Suffrage in the Election of the King: that is to say, the 26 Palatines, and 60 Chastellans, with the four Marshals, and some others of the principal Officers of State, in behalf of the Nobility; and the Archbishops and Bishops in the name of the Clergy; but of the Commons none at all. Which is the reason why there is so much care taken to preserve the Priviledges of the two first Orders, without obtaining any Immunities for relief of the third; who are most miserably oppressed on all sides, rather as Bondmen than Tenants in respect of their Lords, and not so much Subjects as plain Slaves in regard of the King; whereof somewhat hath before been noted. Nor are the Common people excluded only out of these Elections, but have no place nor Vote in the Council of State, or in any of the general Diets: the first consisting only of the Prelates, Palatines, Chastel-

Chaſtellans, and principal Officers ſpoken of before, the nominating of which pertaineth to the King alone; the other aggregated of all perſons of thoſe ſeveral Orders, and the Delegates of each Province and principal City, ſent thither for the reſt of the Nobility, whom they repreſent. Yet notwithſtanding this excluſion of the Commons from this Common Council, they there conclude of all matters of publick Intereſt not properly determinable by the great Council or Council of State: in which perhaps (eſpecially in the caſe of Taxes) the Commons may be more concerned than any other.

The Forces of this Kingdom or Commonwealth relate unto Land-Service only. For though they have a large Sea-coaſt upon the Baltick, yet the Danes, Swedes and Hanſe-Towns, having got the ſtart of them, keep them from doing much at Sea. And for Land-Forces, they conſiſt of Horſe eſpecially, whereof they are able to raiſe 80000, (that is to ſay, 10000 out of Poland, and 60 or 70000 out of Lituania and the Eaſtern Provinces) of which one half at leaſt are thought to be for action. And this ſeems probable enough, in regard of thoſe great Bodies of Horſe which Stephen and Sigiſmund the third had againſt the Moſcovite; whereof the one had 40000, and the other 30000, (beſides Draught-horſes) very well appointed. But for their Foot, they are not at ſo good a paſs, their Infantry being for the moſt part Germans or Hungarians, whom they hire for money; of which two Nations King Stephen, in his Enterpriſe upon Livonia, had no leſs than 16000 to convey his Ordnance. Upon confidence of this great number of Horſe, and their readineſs to ſerve upon all occaſions, the Polanders bear themſelves ſo high, that they neither fear the power of a foreign Eneny, nor regard the fortifying of their Towns, or the building of Fortreſſes on their Frontiers; boaſting that they are able to defend their Country without ſuch Helps againſt any Nation whatſoever, and truſting more to a Caſtle of Bones (as was couragiouſly ſaid by Savage an Engliſh Gentleman) than to a Caſtle of Stones. And for the raiſing of theſe Horſe, the Gentlemen of the Country are bound by their Tenure, (like the Turks Timariots) not only to ſerve in perſon for defence of the Realm, but to maintain a certain number of Horſe in continual readineſs; eſpecially in thoſe parts which lye next the Tartar, where their numbers are exceeding great, and with whom many times they join to afflict and harraſs their own Country, though in pay againſt them. Of theſe ſome ſerve in the manner of our Men at Arms, ſome like unto our Light-horſe, others like the Tartars. And theſe they call commonly by the name of Coſſacks, (or Adventurers:) a race of men trained up to ſteal, waſte, and depopulate, whereſoever they come, having little but their Swords to live by; a murtherous and wicked people, chiefly in their Drunkenneſs, and that not only towards Strangers, but their natural Countrymen. The cauſe of that Sedition which, for ſome years paſt, hath more depopulated and diſtracted that flouriſhing Kingdom than all the Armies of the Turks.

As for the Revenues of this King, they are computed at 600000 Crowns per annum, drawn chiefly out of Salt and ſome Mines of Silver: the Profits ariſing from the Demeans of the Crown being for the moſt part given away in Penſions and Gratuities to the Palatines, Chaſtellans, and other great men of the Realm, to make them the more pliant to his deſires. Moſt of which Sum is put up yearly in his Coffers, or expended in the purchaſe of Eſtates for his younger Sons: his Daughters being married at the publick Charge, and the expence of his Houſhold defrayed by the Lituanians and moſt part of Poland, for the time that he remains amongſt them. Nor do the Wars at any time exhauſt his Treaſure, in which caſe, by Decree of the Diets, he is inabled to lay Impoſitions and Taxes upon the people, levied in the way of Exciſe, or upon their Lands: which do amount to ſuch a Sum, that by means hereof King Stephen maintained War three years againſt the Moſcovite, without expending any thing of his own Revenue.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom are,

1. The Marian or Dutch Knights, inſtituted under the Walls of Acon or Ptolemais in the Holy Land; in a Church whereof, dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin, their Order was firſt allowed, from whence they are called Equites Mariani. The Inſtitution was in the year 1190. The firſt Great Maſter was Henry Walpot. The Chriſtians being beaten out of Syria, they firſt removed to Venice, and from thence to Marpurg in Haſſia; where, and in ſome other parts of Germany, they were endowed with fair Revenues: hence they were named Equites Teutonici, or the Dutch Knights. Sent into Pruſſia by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond Anno 1239, or called in, as ſome ſay, by the Moſcovite againſt the Pruſſians, they fixed their Seat at Marienburg, under Sigifride the ſecond Great Maſter, Anno 1340, or thereabouts. In the time of Ludovicus, the 18. Great Maſter, they were forced to ſubmit to Caſimir the fourth of Poland, Anno 1450; which was the occaſion of the long War betwixt them and the Polanders, continuing till the time of Albert of Brandenburg, the 24. and laſt Great Maſter in this Country; who ſurrendred his Order (as before is ſaid) to Sigiſmund the firſt, by whom he was created the firſt Duke of Pruſſia. Such of the Knights as diſreliſhed this action retired into Germany, where they choſe one Walter Croneberg Maſter of the Order: the Title being afterwards conferred upon Maximilian, one of the younger Sons of Maximilian the ſecond; but the Order ſenſibly decaying, and at this time of little eſtimation in the World.

2. Of the Port glaive, or Sword-bearers, (Enſiferi in Latine) confirmed by Pope Innocent the third, by whom they were ſent into Livonia, to defend the Preachers of the Goſpel againſt the Infidels, at the firſt Converſion of that Country. Being too weak to effect that buſineſs, they united themſelves with the Dutch Knights by the Popes authority, and, inſtead of Knights of the Sword, were called Knights of the Croſs. Separated therefrom in the time of Vnivus their Great Maſter, Anno 1541, the Dutch Knights being then diſpoſſeſſed of Pruſſia, and theſe inclining wholly to the Opinions of Luther, they a while ſubſiſted of themſelves. What became of them afterwards, and how the Order was extinguiſhed, hath been ſhewn already in Livonia.

The Arms of this Kingdom are quarterly, 1. Gules, an Eagle Argent, crowned and armed Or, for the Realm of Poland; and 2. Gules, a Chevalier armed Cap-a-pee, advancing his Sword, Argent, mounted on a barbed Courſer of the ſecond, for the Dukedom of Lituania.

There are in the whole Realm of Poland

Of the Romiſh Church, Archbiſhops 3.	Biſhops 19.
Of the Greek Church, Archbiſhops 2.	Biſhops 6.

Carpathian Mountains.

IN our way from Poland unto Hungary (whither now we go) we muſt of neceſſity paſs over the CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS, the ancient Boundary of Sarmatia Europæa from the reſt of Europe. A long and craggy Ledge of Hills, which beginning near the City of Presburg, and the Borders of Auſtria, paſs on in a continual courſe till they come to the very Euxine Sea; and by that means not only divide Hungary from Poland ſpecially ſo called, but part Tranſylvania and Moldavia, two Dacian Regions, from Ruſſia Nigra and Podolia, Provinces of the Polonian Kingdom. By Ptolomy, in his ſecond Book, they are called Montes Sarmatici, (Sarmaticæ Rupes by Solinus) becauſe diſterminating the Sarmatian Nation (who poſſeſſed the moſt part of it) from Germany and the more Southern parts of Europe: and in his third Book by one name Carpates, or Mons Carpatus, ſo called (as ſome think) from the Greek word Καρπὸς, ſignifying Fruit, from the Fruitfulneſs of it, compared with the other Mountains in thoſe Northern Countries. At the preſent it is known by divers names, according to the Provinces and People which it paſſeth by. By the Dutch generally called Wurtzgarten, (or a Garden of Herbs) which alludeth to the name of Carpatus; by the Hungars, Tarchzal. Betwixt Moravia and Hungaria, where it is at the higheſt, it is called in the Sclavonian Tongue by the name of Tatri, in the German Schneberg: where it parteth Tranſylvania from Ruſſia Nigra, the Ruſſes call it Bieſcid, and the Dutch-men Crapack. A Chain of Hills of more length than fame; not much obſervable in Story, but for the ſhutting up the Hungary Sclaves, and others of thoſe Northern Nations which afterward invaded the Roman Provinces: nor of much notice at the preſent, but for giving an Original to many of the principal Rivers which water the Countries lying on both ſides of it. And therefore having nothing more to detain us here, we will paſs them over, and deſcend into the Plains of Hungary; where we ſhall meet again with the Roman Empire, the Territories and Affairs whereof we ſhall take along without interruption until we come unto the Banks of the great River Tigris and the Caſpian Sea. And ſo far alſo from this place we ſhall ſurvey the Fortunes and Eſtates of the Turkiſh Empire, of which the Realm of Hungary is the moſt Weſtern part or Province; not meeting either of them again till we come to Ægypt.

HUNGARY.

HUNGARY is bounded on the Eaſt with Tranſylvania and Walachia, on the Weſt with Stiria, Auſtria, and Moravia; on the North with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Poland, and on the South with Sclavonia, and ſome part of Dacia. It extendeth in length, from Presburg, along the Danow, to the Borders of Tranſylvania, for the ſpace of 300 Engliſh miles; and 190 of the ſame miles in breadth. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

It lieth in the Northern Temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the 7. and 9. Climates, ſo that the longeſt Summers Day in the Southern parts is but 15 hours and a half, and not above 16 hours in the parts moſt North: taking up all that Tract of ground on the North-ſide of Danubius poſſeſſed by the Jazyges Metanaſtæ, a Sarmatian People, and part alſo of Pannonia Superior and Pannonia Inferior, both on the South of that River.

But being it paſſeth generally under the name of Pannonia, we are to know that the Romans, having made themſelves Maſters of all Pannonia, divided it into four Provinces, part of the Dioceſe of Illyricum Occidentale: that is to ſay, 1. Pannonia Superior, bordering on Noricum, and containing part of the Higher Auſtria, and the moſt Weſtern parts of the preſent Hungary, on the South-ſide of the Danow. 2. Pannonia Inferior, containing the Eaſtern parts of Hungary, on the ſame ſide of the River. 3. Valeria, anciently part of Pannonia Superior, comprehending Stiria or Stiermark, in the Archdukedom of Auſtria. And 4. Savia, ſo called of the Rivers Savus, anciently part of Pannonia Inferior, now called Windiſchland, one of the Provinces or Subdiviſions of Sclavonia. But the name of Pannonia falling with the Roman Empire, and this Country being fallen into the hands of other Maſters, it took a new name from the Nations who poſſeſſed themſelves of it, and was called Hungaria, quaſi Hunn-Avaria, by a mixt name made of the Hunni and Avares, two Scythian Nations, who either ſucceſſively or conjunctly were poſſeſſed thereof; or from the Hungari, another race of Scythians, mentioned by Jornandes in his Book De Rebus Geticis, drawn into this Country by the the Emperour Arnulph, to aid him in his War againſt Suantibogius, King of the Moravians. This laſt I look on as moſt probable: the firſt as more probable than that of Aventine, and others of our later Writers, who finding a poor Province in the moſt North-eaſt point of the Ruſſian Empire called Jugria, (and by them Jugaria) would have the name of Hungary to be thence derived.

The people are ſtrong of Body, and rude of Behaviour, reſpecting neither the liberal Arts nor Mechanick Trades. The greateſt Aſperſion is the name of a Coward, which cannot be wiped off without the killing of a Turk: after which they are priviledged to wear a Feather, and by the number of their Feathers to ſhew how many Turks they have ſlain in Battel. They deſire Wars, and like no Trade better, being naturally ſlothful, (like the Iriſh) and therefore beſt approve of that courſe of Life, whereby they may rather live upon other mens Labour than take pains for their living. Extremely covetous they are, yet having rather deſire than art to enrich themſelves, permitting the Dutch to ingroſs all their Trading, and manage ſuch Commodities as the Country yieldeth: Which is the cauſe (ſeconded by the Oppreſſions of the Turk and the Auſtrian Princes, under whom they are) that none of them riſe to any conſiderable Wealth. And for ſuch as have Eſtates in Land, they grow every day more poor than other. For though the Females be excluded from inheriting their Father's Poſſeſſions, (to whom they give no Portion, but new Cloaths on the Wedding-day:) Yet being the Sons do equally inherit the Eſtate, (as ſuch who hold in Gavelkind do here in England) it muſt needs be that by ſo many Diviſions and Subdiviſions the greateſt Patrimony that is will be brought to nothing. Both Sexes in the way of their Education are inured to Hardneſs, not ſuffered to lie in Beds till the night of their Marriage.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt planted here in the time of Stephen, ſurnamed the Saint, the firſt King of this Country; who was invited thereunto by the ſpecial means and procurement of the Emperour Henry the ſecond, giving him upon that condition his Siſter Giſela in Marriage; and through the preaching and induſtry of Albert Archbiſhop of Prague, Anno 1016, or thereabouts. Since which time Chriſtianity hath continued here without interruption, (defended gallantly and couragiouſly againſt the Turks) but broken into Fractions and Subdiviſions among themſelves: Some pertinaciouſly adhering to the Church of Rome, ſome following the Doctrine of Luther, others that of Calvin and ſome new Fancies and Opinions, diſavowed by all the reſt. Free exerciſe of Religion was firſt granted by Maximilian the ſecond, and re-obtained in the time of Rodolphus, his Son and Succeſſor, by the Pacification at Vienna, procured by the power of Botſcai Prince of Tranſylvania, Anno 1606. The violating of which Pacification by Ferdinand the ſecond, in the beginning of his Reign occaſioned great Wars and Troubles betwixt him and this People, not quieted in a long time after. Yet all theſe different parties do agree in this, to puniſh Adultery and Fornication with no leſs a puniſhment than death; the Father forcing his Daughter, the Husband his Wife, and the Brother his Siſters, to the place of their Execution.

The Language generally here ſpoken is a kind of Sclavonian, differing in Dialect from the Poles: but in the parts adjoyning to Germany the Dutch is ſpoken; as the old Jazygian is betwixt Danubius and Tibiſcus, the ancient Seat of the Jazyges Metanaſtæ.

The Soil is wonderful fruitful, yielding Corn and Fruits in great abundance; the Graſs in ſome places, (as in the Iſle of Komara) if it be ſuffered to grow to its full length before the cutting of it down, being ſaid to exceed the height of a Man: Which doth breed ſuch a number of Cattel, that this Country alone is thought to be able to feed all Europe with fleſh. They yearly ſend into Germany and Sclavonia 80000 Oxen: they have Deer, Partridge, Pheaſants, in ſuch ſuperfluity, that any man that will may kill them; which in other places is utterly prohibited, theſe creatures being preſerved as Game for Gentlemen. For at that great Inſurrection of the Boors in Germany, (before the end of which 50000 of them were ſlain in fight) their chief Demands were, 1. That they might chuſe their own Miniſters. 2. That they might pay no Tithes but of Corn. 3. That they might be free from the power of Magiſtrates. 4. That Wood, Timber and Fewel might be common. 5. And eſpecially, that they might hunt and hawk in all times and places. The other Commodities of the Country are Gold and Silver, whereof they have ſome very rich Veins; as alſo of Tin, Lead, Iron; good ſtore of Fiſh, Copper, Wine: this laſt as good as that of Candia.

The worthieſt Scholar that ever this Kingdom produced was St. Hierom, a worthy Father of the Latine Church, born in Stridon. The moſt worthy of all their Souldiers were 1. Johannes Huniades, who ſo valiantly reſiſted the Incurſions of the Turks, and ſlew of them 50000 at the Battel of Maron. And 2. Matthias Corvinus, his Son, afterward King of Hungary; of whom thus Adrian out of a Poet,

——— Patriæ decus, unica Stirpis
Gloria, Pannonicæ Cædis fortiſſimus ultor.
His Countries Pride, the Glory of his Race,
Revenger of th' Hungarians late Diſgrace.

The principal Rivers are, 1. Danubius, ſpoken of before, when we were in Germany. 2. Savus, which riſing in Carniola, 3. Dravus, which riſing in Carinthia, and 4. Tibiſcus, which riſing in the Carpathian Mountains, pay their Tribute to Danubius: Of which Tibiſcus the Hungarians uſe to ſay, that two parts are Water, and the third Fiſh. Beſides which, and ſome others of inferiour note, there is the famous Lake called Balaton, (by the Dutch Platſee) forty Italian miles in length, but of breadth unequal, in ſome places being ten miles broad, and in ſome but three. There be alſo many Medicinal waters, and more hot Baths than any one Country hath in Europe: ſome Waters alſo of a ſtrange nature; whereof ſome falling on the ground is turned to Stone; others (about the Town of Smalnice) which falling into Ditches make a kind of Mud, out of which tried and melted they make very good Copper; and ſome again which flow in Winter, and freeze in Summer; and near unto Liſtrice, or Menſol, a Spring or Fountain, out of which cometh a green Water, whereof they make Solder for their Gold.

Principal Mountains of this Country are, 1. Carpatus, the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, ſpoken of before. 2. Matzan, near the City of Agria, covered with rich Vines. 3. Erdol, omnium ampliſſimus, the largeſt of the three, ſaith the Atlas minor. Which words, if true, muſt needs be underſtood of the height of this Mountain, but neither of the length or breadth; in both which without queſtion it comes ſhort of Carpatus.

The Country is commonly divided into the Upper Hungary, and the Lower: the Upper lying on the North of the River Danow, out of the Bounds and Territories of the Roman Empire; the Lower lying on the South of that River, and comprehending all Pannonia Inferior, and part of Superior, two Roman Provinces. The Upper again was ſubdivided (before the coming in of the Turks) into 32 Counties or Juridical Reſorts; that is to ſay, 24 on the Weſt-ſide of Tibiſcus (or the Tieſs,) and 8 on the Eaſt-ſide of it. The Lower (at the ſame time) into 16 only; of which ten were betwixt the Danow and the River Dravus, and the other ſix betwixt the Dravus and the Savus.

But this Diviſion and the Subdivions depending on it being ſince the coming in of the Turks almoſt out of uſe, we will now look upon it as it ſtands divided at the preſent, betwixt the Emperour, as King of Hungary, by a mixt Title of Deſcent and Election; and the Great Turk, as Lord of the moſt part of it by Arms and Conqueſt, two parts of three at leaſt being forced into his poſſeſſion. But here we are to underſtand, that by reaſon of the great Jealouſies and Diſtruſts betwixt theſe great Princes, every ordinary Town is fortified and garriſoned like a Town of War, and ſo are almoſt all the Houſes of the Nobility and Gentry throughout this Country: ſo that it were an infinite labour to ſpecifie in this place all thoſe Towns and Fortreſſes which do occur in reading the Hungarian Hiſtories of theſe later times. Some of the principal for Strength, Antiquity, or other mark of Eſtimation which is ſet upon them, we ſhall here ſubjoyn.

And firſt in the Emperour's part of the Lower Hungary we have. 1. Rab, on the meeting of the Danow with the River Rab, coming out of the Lower Hungary, whence the modern Dutch name; by Antonine called Arabo, by the French Javarine, by our preſent Latiniſts Javarinum. Memorable heretofore for being the Boundary of the two Pannonia's, Inferiour and Superiour, hereabouts divided: of late moſt principally for a ſtrong Fortreſs againſt the Turks, by whom it was once taken Anno 1594, but within four years after again recovered by the Induſtry of Monſieur de Vaudrecourt, a French Gentleman, as the French-men ſay; but as the Germans write, of the Earl of Swartzenburg, at that time Governour of Komara. 2. Alteuburg, in the Road leading towards Auſtria; a ſtrong Town, and the beſt Out-work of Vienna, for which cauſe much aimed at by the Turks, but without ſucceſs. 3. Caſtle-Novo, a new-erected Fortreſs, as the name importeth, but of ſpecial ſtrength, erected purpoſely, in the time of the Emperour Rodolph, to confront the Turks. 4. Sabaria, anciently the Metropolis of Pannonia Superior, the Birth-place of S. Martin Biſhop of Tours; now of leſs accompt; by the Hungarians called Kimarorubath. Others conceive it to be that which the Dutch call Leibnits. 5. Stridon, the Sidrona of Ptolemy, in the Confines of of Hungaria and Dalmatia, by the common people called Strigman. A Town of good repute, till deſtroyed by the Goths; but after made of more eſteem by the Birth of St. Hierom, one of the four chief Fathers of the Latine Church, and for all parts af Humane Learning nothing inferiour to the beſt of the Græcian Sages. 6. Sopron, (Sopronium in Latine) on the Borders of Auſtria. 7. Komara, a ſtrong piece, in an Iſland of the ſame name made by the Circling of the Danow; oft-times attempted by the Turk, but in vain at all times. Then in the Upper Hungary we have 8. Presburg, on the edge of Auſtria alſo, but on the North-ſide of the River, the Carnuntum of Antoninus, but by the modern Latines called Poſonium; ſeated in a pleaſant healthful Country on the River Lyet, whoſe waters the Danow there receiveth: in the Suburbs whereof, on the top of an high Mountain, ſtandeth a goodly Caſtle, the ordinary Reſidence of the Emperours as Kings of Hungary. For though it be a little City, and not very beautiful; yet being ſafe by the Neighbourhood of Auſtria, it hath been made the Metropolis of this Kingdom, ſince the loſs of Buda. Before the Walls hereof died Count Dampierre, one of the chief Commanders of Ferdinand the ſecond in the Wars of Hungary and Bohemia. 9. Filleck, a place of great ſtrength and conſequence, taken by Solyman the Magnificent in his firſt Attempts upon this Kingdom, and loſt by Amurath the third, the Turks in vain attempting the recovery of it. 10. Nitria, a Biſhop's See, on the River Boch. 11. Vacia, a Biſhops See alſo, on the River Danubius; once in poſſeſſion of the Turks, but reſtored again unto the Chriſtians at the making of the Peace between the Emperour Rodolphus and Sultan Achmet. 12. Caſſovia, a ſtrong piece towards Tranſylvania. 13. Lippe, in the Borders of that Country alſo, commanding the Entrances thereof, and therefore much affected by the Princes or Vaivods of that Province; poſſeſſed by whom in the latter times of the Emperour Rodolph, it was by them incorporated into Tranſylvania; but how long it continued ſo, I am not able to ſay. 14. Tokay, a place of great ſtrength, and as great Fidelity, the people and Garriſon hereof holding out for the Emperour Rodolphus, Anno 1605. againſt ſome of his rebellious Subjects, in the time of ſo extreme a Famine, that the Souldiers did not only eat two Boys, but many times caſt lots who ſhould eat one another. 15. Eperies, a place of no leſs conſequence, and exemplary Loyalty. 16. Newſol, or Newheuſel, a ſtrong Town, and as ſtrongly fortified, not far from the Spring-head of the River Gran, which in the year 1621 proved fatal to that great Commander the Count of Bucquoy, who at the Siege hereof (the Town being then in Rebellion againſt Ferdinand the ſecond, Emperour and King of Hungary) loſt his life. For going privately to view ſome places of advantage for a general Aſſault, he fell into an Ambuſh of Hungarians, who ſuddenly ſet upon him, diſcomfited his ſmall Party, killed firſt his Horſe under him, and at laſt himſelf, having in that Skirmiſh received 16 wounds. There were ſlain with him at the ſame time alſo Torquato, an Italian Prince, Count Verdugo, a Spaniſh Earl, and one of the Gonzagues of the Houſe of Mantua.

Places of moſt importance in the Turks poſſeſſion are, 1. Buda, by the Dutch called Offen, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Curia of Ptolemy, by others the Abrincum of Antoninus; and to have took the name of Buda, either from Buda the Brother of Attila, ſaid to be the Re-founder of it; or from the Budini, a Scythian People, mentioned in Herodotus. It is unevenly ſeated amongſt Hills on the Southern Shore of the Danow, but in the moſt fruitfull part of all the Country; exceedingly well fortified, eſpecially by a ſtrong Caſtle, thought to be impregnable, and therefore very carefully guarded by the jealous Turk; adorned with many Buildings, both private and publick, and furniſhed with ſome Medicinal Bathes, which owe much of their pomp and ſumptuouſneſs to their new Maſters the Turks, who took it from the Chriſtians Auguſt 20. 1591, Solyman the Magnificent then being preſent at the taking of it. Before that time the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Hungary, and the chief City of the Kingdom; as now the Seat of the chief Baſſa or Lord-Lieutenant for the Grand Seignior. 2. Alba Regalis, by the Dutch called Stul-Weiſſenburg, betwixt the Danow and the Dravus; ſtrongly, but unwholſomly, ſeated, in the midſt of an inacceſſible Mariſh, joyned to the firm Land by three broad Cauſeys, blockt up at the ends with three great Bulwarks; but for all the Situation of it taken by the Turks Anno 1543; before that time the uſual place both for the Coronation and Interrment of the Kings of Hungary; recovered from the Turks Anno 1601, and loſt again unto them in the next year after. 3. Walpo, or Valpo, on the River Dravus, taken by Solyman marching towards Alba Regalis, to leave no enemies behind him at the Siege of that City. 4. Gran, in Latine called Strigonium, ſeated upon the Danow, but oppoſite to the Mouth of Gran, which ariſing in the Upper Hugary doth there end its courſe, whence this Town hath the name of Gran; honoured of a long time with the See of an Arch-biſhop, who is the Primate of the Kingdom, and of great power in all buſineſs which concerns the State; taken by the Turks Anno 1534, Solyman the Magnificent being in perſon at the Siege, and loſt again Anno 1595. at what time Sir

Thomas

Thomas Arundel of Wardor Caſtle in Wiltſhire carried himſelf ſo gallantly, that forcing the Water-Tower, and taking thence with his own hands the Turkiſh Banner, the Emperour Rodolphus created him a Count of the Empire, and King James afterwards made him Lord Arundel of Wardor; but the Chriſtians were not ſuffered to keep it long; for being many times after beſieged by the Turks, who were reſolved not to end the War without it, it was finally recovered by them Anno 1605. 5. Funfkirchen, in Latin called Quinque Eccleſiæ, from five Churches in it, a Biſhop's See, conceived to be the Teutoburgium of Antoninus; taken by the Turks Anno 1566. and giving them a great Command on the River Dravus, upon which it is ſeated. 6. Sirmiſch, betwixt the Danow and the Saw, or Savus, now noted for a Vein of the beſt Wines, but otherwiſe of no eſtimation at the preſent, though heretofore of moſt account in all this Province; the Metropolis (as I conceive) of Pannonia Inferior, the Seat of the Præfectus Prætorio Illyrici before the Diviſion of the Empire, honoured with the perſonal Reſidence of many of the Emperours, and made in thoſe reſpects the Stage of many great and memorable Actions. For here Vetranio, or Bretanio, as others call him, took on himſelf the Purple Robe, and was declared Emperour by the Illyrian Souldiers lying here in Garriſon: here, being deſerted by his own Souldiers, he ſubmitted himſelf unto Conſtantius, the Son of Conſtantine the Great: here Gratian the Emperour, Son of Valentinian the firſt, was born: and, finally, here was held a Council againſt Photinus, Biſhop of this City, who held that Chriſt had no exiſtence of God the Father till he was conceived and born of the Virgin; which Tenet, being contrary as well to that of the Arian as the Orthodox Prelates, was here condemned by both parties in the time of the ſaid Conſtantius, (who was there in perſon) Anno 356. 7. Zigeth, a ſtrong Town, ſituate in a Mariſh-ground on the North-ſide of the Dra, taken by Solyman the Magnificent Anno 1566. who there ended his days. 8. Murſa, upon the Confluence of the Dra and the Danow, once a Roman Colony, and as remarkable in the Stories of elder times as 9. Belgrade, on the Confluence of the Saw and the Danow, hath been in the later. This laſt being a Town of divers names: Firſt called Taurunum, or Taurunum; after Alba Græca, by the Dutch accordingly Greichs Weiſſenburg; by the French and modern Latiniſts Belgrade and Belgradum, from the beautiful ſituation of it, hemmed in upon the North with the Danow, on the Eaſt with the Saw, on the other ſides defended with ſtrong Walls, deep Ditches, and impregnable Rampiers. It belonged anciently to the Deſpots of Servia, by whom it was conſigned over to Sigiſmund King of Hungary, as beſt able to keep it; the Deſpots being ſatisfied with Lands and Territories of a better value. It was the Bulwark heretofore of Chriſtendom againſt the Turks, who received before it many great and notable Repulſes, (of which the moſt memorable were thoſe of Amurath the ſecond, and Mahomet ſurnamed the Great:) but taken at laſt, to the great loſs and ſhame of the Chriſtian World, not ſuccouring the Defendants in convenient time, by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1520. Then on the North-ſide of the River, in the Upper Hungary, there is 10. Peſth, over againſt Buda, on the River Danow. 11. Colocza, an Archbiſhop's See, on the ſame River alſo. 12. Zegedin, on the Weſt-ſide of the River Tibiſcus. 13. Agria, an old Biſhop's See, and ſtrongly fortified, having a great Command over all thoſe parts of the Country; in vain beſieged by Haly the Baſſa of Buda with an Army of 36000 Turks in the time of Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1552; but taken by Mahomet the third, himſelf lying at the Siege in perſon, Anno 1578: not far from which, immediately after the taking of Agria, Mahomet gave the Chriſtians ſo great an Overthrow, that, if he had purſued his Victory, it is thought that he had finiſhed the Conqueſt of Hungary; as on the other ſide the Turks were ſo worſted and diſordered at firſt, (Mahomet himſelf and moſt of his Commanders flying out of the Field) that, had the Chriſtians followed the chaſe, and not betook themſelves to the Spoil of the Camp, they had in probability for ever freed that Kingdom from the Turkiſh Tyranny. This Battel, from a Village near unto which it was fought, was called the Battel of Kereſture; a Battel of ſo ſtrange a Fortune, that the Conquerours were driven out of the Field, and the vanquiſhed Army ran away with the Victory. 14. Hatroan, a very ſtrong Town, and as ſtrongly garriſoned, recovered by the Chriſtians after two long Sieges, and many ſharp Aſſaults, Anno 1558, and preſently again abandoned, upon the noiſe of Mahomet's coming into Hungary with a dreadful Army. 15. Temeſwar, on the Eaſt of that River towards Tranſylvania, the ordinary Reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſſa. 16. Gyula, a ſtrong Town on the Borders of Tranſylvania, betrayed by Nicholas Keresken, Governour hereof, in the laſt year of Solyman, on a promiſe of ſome great Reward. But Selimus the Son of Solyman cauſed him to be put into a Barrel ſtuck full of Nails, with the points turned inwards, and ſo to be tumbled up and down till he (moſt miſerably) died: there being on the Barrel this Inſcription written, viz. Here receive the reward of thy Avarice and Treaſon; Gyula thou ſouldeſt for Gold: if thou be not faithful to Maximilian thy natural Lord, neither wilt thou be true to me. 17. Singidun, on the South of Gyula, betwixt which and Belgrade are the Fields of Maron, memorable for the ſlaughter of 50000 Turks, ſlain here in Battel under the fortunate Conduct of John Huniades.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country on the North-ſide of the Danow, and the Weſt of the Tieſs, or Tibiſcus, were the Jazyges Metanaſtæ, and on the Eaſt-ſide of the Tieſs the Daci, known, but not conquered, by the Romans; on the South of the Danow the Pannones, (by ſome called the Pæones) ſubdivided into the Azuli, Latovici, Werciani, Jaſſii, Oſeriates, and ſome others inhabiting the Weſt parts thereof, or Pannonia Superior, and the Ercuneales, Brouci, Araviſci, and Scordiſci, dwelling in the Eaſtern parts, or Pannonia Inferior. Firſt conquered by the Romans Anno U. C. 719, L. Cornificius and Sextus Pompeius being Conſuls; but many times rebelling, and not fully ſubdued till forty years after the Inſurrection of Bato, being then cruſhed by Auguſtus Cæſar, and thereby the whole Province ſettled in Obedience. Divided firſt into two parts or Provinces, Superior and Inferior; out of which Savia and Valeria were after taken, as before is noted. Under the Romans it continued, till ſubdued by the Huns, a People not heard of in the time of the Roman Greatneſs, unleſs we take them, as ſome do, for the Chuni of Ptolemy. But being thoſe Chuni are placed by him betwixt the Baſtarnæ and the Roxolani, on the South-weſt of Boryſthenes, I ſee not how to fit that Dwelling unto the Huns, who were ſhut up within the Fens of Palus Mæotis, and by all the Writers of thoſe times accounted for a Nation not ſo much as heard of when they firſt ſet footing in Europe. Letting that therefore paſs as an improbable and ill-grounded Conjecture, certain it is that from the Fen-Countries of Aſia, on the other ſide of the Tanais, they came firſt into Europe; living in their own Country a poor and miſerable life, till God thought fit to make uſe of them as a Scourge to chaſtiſe the Chriſtians of the Weſt, then grown luxurious, and almoſt incorrigible, by too much Felicity; and to that end miraculouſly opened them a Paſſage never found before. For having neither mind nor meaning to invade the Roman Empire, which possibly they had not heard of, nor knowing how to clear themselves of that uncomfortable Country in which they dwelt; it pleased the great Disposer of all things, by following an Hart or Stag which they had in chase, to shew them a safe passage into Europe through the Fens of Mæotis, which before they thought to be unpassable. The report made by those Hunters at their coming back, of the rich and pleasant Land which they had so fortunately discovered, invited the chiefe Heads of their Clans, with all the several Rascalities depending on them, to flock into Europe: into which they fell so suddenly and unexpectedly, that they forced the Goths, then dwelling on the North-side of the Ister, to fly over that River, and supplicate to the Emperour Valens for new Habitations. This happened in the year 373, Athanaricus the second, or Ermanaricus, (as Jornandes calls him) being then King of the Goths, and Balamir Captain of the Hunns. Fleshed with this Victory, Balamir, or Balhember, (as Sigebert calls him) takes the name of King, Anno 386, or thereabout; and following the course of the Ister towards this Pannonia, which he had an aim at, found a great Army raised on the other side of the River, of purpose to encounter with him, commanded by Detricus General for the Roman Army, and Macrinus (or Matrinus) Commander in chief of the Pannonians. Both Generals presuming too much on the depth and wideness of the River, and knowing well that the Hunns had neither Boat nor Ship to pass them over, betook themselves unto their Rest with too much security. But the Hunns, to the number of 100000, having crossed the River upon Bladders, fell on the Quarters of the Romans, whom they slew like Sheep. Macrinus after this fought two Battels with them, in the first whereof he was victorious, there being lost on both sides about 30000 men: but in the second being slain, and his Army routed, the Hunns possessed themselves of both Pannonia's, buying this Victory with the loss of 40000 men, in the year 401. Balamir being dead, Bleda and Attila his Sons succeeded Anno 436; and Bleda, dying also in the year 450, left Attila sole King of the Hunns, that great Scourge of the Christian World; who, having first wasted Illyricum and Thrace, compelled the Emperour Theodosius the second to buy his Peace of him at the price of 6000 pound weight of Gold, and an yearly Tribute. Invited afterwards by Gensericus King of the Vandals in Africk to war upon the Goths of Spain, (out of which Country they had driven him) he forced his way through all the Nations betwixt him and Gaul, and beating down all the Towns and Fortresses on the River Rhene on that side of the Roman Empire, entered that Province in the Reign of the 3. Valentinian, divided at that time betwixt the Romans, French, Burgundians, and the Goths of Spain. Discomfited by Aetius and the Kings of those Nations then in League against him, in that famous Battel near Tholouse, spoken of before, (with the loss of 180000 of his men) he went back by the way of Italy, where he sacked Aquileia, Millain, Vincentia, Pavia; and not without much difficulty was diverted from the Spoil of Rome, by the intercession of Pope Leo: committing in all places such unspeakable Cruelties, that he was always after called (as he styled himself) Malleus orbis, and Flagellum Dei. Returning home he picked a Quarrel with Martianus the Eastern Emperour, as if the Tribute promised him by Theodosius had not been well paid. But being pacified for the present, and mindful of his former project upon the Goths, he resolved once again to try his Fortune with that People; and was again defeated by them under the Conduct of Thorismund, the third King of the Visigoths, or Goths of Spain, and so returned ingloriously to his Country. Choaked after with his own bloud, violently breaking out at his Nostrils on his Wedding-night, he left Pannonia to his Sons, named Hernac, Aladurius and Chaba; who, disagreeing amongst themselves about the Kingdhm, gave an advantage to the Goths, then possessed of Dacia, to make themselves Masters of this also, who were scarce through-warm in their new Estates, when sent by Zeno the Emperour into Italy against Odoacer, where they finally settled. After this time we hear no more of the Goths in Pannonia, or any-where of the Hunns at all; unless acting under the Avares, or joyning with them in the name of Hun-Avari, as some think they did.

The Country, being thus left to the next Invader, was presently possessed by the Longobards, said to be originally of Scandia, and there called Winnili, (and of the Winniloth in Scandia Jornandes speaketh) afterwards, ob longas barbas, Longobardi. But concerning this last name, take along with you this old Wives Tale, recited, but not approved of, by Paulus Diaconus. The Vandals, warring upon the Winnili, went unto Goddan, (he should rather have said Woden) to sue for the Victory: which the Winnili hearing, wrought by countermine, and sent Gambata, the Mother of their King Aujou, on the like business to Frea, Goddan's Wife. So it was that Goddan had promised the Vandals, that they should be victorious whom he saw first in the morning: Whereupon Frea, willing to please Gambata, and not loving, as it seemeth, the sight of Men, gave order that all the Women of the Winnili, parting their Hair, bringing one half over one Cheek, the other over the other, and tying both under their Chin, should appear betimes before the Window the next morning. This they did, and she shewing them to her Husband, he demanded of her, Qui sunt isti Longobardi? Hence the occasion of the name. And like enough they might be called so from the length of their Beards, though otherwise the whole Tale be vain and foolish. Compelled by scarcity of Victuals to seek new Habitations, they seised first on the Island Rugia and the adjacent Countries; and settled about the time of Cornelius Tacitus in those parts of Germany which now make up the Bishopricks of Meydburg and Halberstadt. Afterwards, finding that Country too narrow for them, they left their Dwellings there, and fell next upon some parts of Poland; next on this Pannonia: and at last, having tarried in Pannonia 42 years, or thereabouts, at the solicitation of Narses, (provoked by many Indignities from the Empress Sophia, the Wife of Justinus the second) Anno 568, under the leading of their King Alboinus, they went into Italy, and there fixt their Kingdom; being at the end of 206 years overthrown by the power of Charles the Great, the most mighty Monarch of the West. Of their Kings, before their coming into this Country, I shall only make mention of Lamissus, their third King, and of him this Story. Agilmond, the second King of the Lombards, one morning went a-hunting. As he was riding by a Fish-pond, he espied seven Children sprawling for life, which one, as saith Paulus Diaconus, (it may be many Harlots) had been delivered of, and most barbarously thrown into the water. The King, amazed at this spectacle, put his Boar-spear or Hunting-pole among them. One of the Children hand-fasted the Spear, and the King, softly drawing back his hand, wafted the Child to the shore. This Boy he named Lamissus, from Lama, which in their Language signifieth a Fish-pond. He was in the King's Court carefully brought up; where there appeared in him such tokens of Vertue and Courage, that, after the death of Agilmond, he was by the Lombards chosen to succeed him. This Lamissus, together with his Predecessors and Successors, we find thus recorded.

The Hiſtory of this people epitomized by Du Bartas (but with far more of the Poet than the true Hiſtorian) is ſummed up thus.

The Lombard ſtrong, who was in Scowland nurſt,
On Rugeland and Livonia ſeiſed firſt.
Then having well reveng'd on the Bulgarian
The death of Agilmond, the bold Barbarian
Surprized Poland: thence anon he preſſes
In Danow's Streams to rinſe his Amber Treſſes.
When he ſtraight after had ſurrendred
The double-named Iſter's flowzy bed
To ſcar-fac'd Hunns; he hunteth furiouſly
The reſt of Gauls from wealthy Inſubrie.
There reigns 200 years, triumphing ſo,
That Royal Teſin might compare with Po.
Which after fell in French mens hands again,
Won by the Sword of worthy Charlemaign.

The Longobards having thus left the Stage, the Avares entred. Some ſay they were the Avarini of Ptolemy, a Sarmatian People; but moſt probably (as Nicetas) a People of Scythia, inhabiting about Palus Mæotis. They firſt began to ſtir in the reign of Tiberius the 2. (forced by the Turks, their next neighbours, to paſs farther Weſtward) and gave that Emperour's Forces a great Overthrow at the Mouth of Danubius. Tiberius notwithſtanding did ſomewhat quiet them; but he being dead, they took heart again, and with great Courage warred upon Mauritius, his next Succeſſor. Their King at that time was called Caganus, we may Engliſh it Cham, as not being the proper name of any one, but the common Attribute of all their Chiefs. This Caganus made his firſt Wars upon the Turks, which People were about that time firſt made known to the Inhabitants of Europe; and, with the help of the remainder of the Hunns, invaded and poſſeſſed Pannonia, vanquiſhing both the Emperour's Forces, and the Goths and Gepidæ, who had ſtill kept ſome footing in it, and on the departure of the Lombards were of no ſmall power; the name of Goths being ſwallowed up in that of the Gepidæ, though not quite extinct. After this Blow Mauritius raiſed a ſecond War, but more with an intent to revenge himſelf on his own Souldiers, which had formerly offended him, than with hope of prevailing againſt the Enemy. Comentiolus, according to the Emperour's directions, betrayeth his Army; 12000 of them were ſlain, and the reſt taken. Caganus, an heroick and merciful Conquerour, offers to ranſom them for 8 s. 6 d. apiece, (for ſo much was that Nummus or νόμισμα which he demanded for them.) When the Emperour, as much loving his Gold as hating his Souldiers, had denied that Condition; he offered them all for one Nummus, and after for half a one: but being alſo here unſatisfied, he put them alſo to the Sword. For this cauſe the reſt of the Souldiers not long after made Phocas, one of the Centurions, Emperour; and he moſt barbarouſly ſlewed the Emperor in his own Broath, putting him, his Wife, Friends, and Children to the Sword. After this we find mention of them in the time of Phocas and Heraclius, foraging Thrace to the very Walls of Conſtantinople, afterwards ſetled in Pannonia and part of Noricum, containing now the Upper Hungary and ſome part of Auſtria, divided from the Boiarians by the River Ems. They continued poſſeſſed hereof till the time of Charles the Great, by whom, after a War of eight years, they were utterly ſubdued, and driven out of theſe parts, their Country being peopled with new Dutch Colonies: the remainders of them were forced to betake themſelves into Tranſylvania, or that part of Hungaria which lieth beyond the River Tibiſcus, there ſubject for a time to Suantibogius, King of the Moravians; in whoſe Overthrow by the Hungarians they were ſo broken, that their Name was never heard of.

And ſo we come to the Hungarians, the laſt and principal Actors on the Stage of this Kingdom, the givers of the preſent Name: before whoſe coming into this Country it had no other name than that of Pannonia, for ought I can find, in any Authors of thoſe Times. A Scythian People, as the Hunns and Avares were, by Jornandes called the Hunugari; firſt known in Europe by their acts in the time of the Emperour Arnulphus, when, wandring in Sarmatia Europæa without any certain Aboad, they were by him called into this Country againſt Suantibogius King of the Moravians before mentioned; from whom they took Tranſylvania, and ſo much of the modern Hungary as lieth on both ſides of Tibiſcus, inhabited at that time by the Sclaves and ſome ſcattered remnants of the Avares, whom they killed up, or forced to ſeek new Habitations, planting themſelves in thoſe places which they took from them, now the Upper Hungary. In the right of Lewis the 4. Succeſſour to Arnulphus, they paſſed over the Danow, and ſubdued Pannonia, diſmembring it from the Empire and name of Germany: after that they ranged with unmerciful Cruelty over all Germany, Italy, Greece, Sclavonia, Dacia, till, broken by the Forces of the Dutch Emperours, and mollified by the ſoftneſs of the Chriſtian Religion, they became more quiet. Their Government at the firſt was under Dukes: Stephen the 4. Duke, on his receiving of the Goſpel, being honoured with the Title of King; enjoyed by his Succeſſours to this very day. In the time of Ladiſlaus ſurnamed the Saint Dalmatia and Croatia were added to the Crown of Hungary, bequeathed to him by his Siſter Zelomira, the Widow of the laſt King. In that of Bela the 4. the Tartarians, to the number of 500000 fighting men, brake into this Country, and like a violent Whirlwind carried all before them, Anno 1248, tyrannizing here for 3 years ſpace, committing mercileſs Maſſacres, and making horrible Spoils wherſoever they came. In that of Stephen the 4. Myſia and Bulgaria were made tributary. By the Daughters of Bela and Stepher, both the 4. of thoſe names, the Houſes of Naples and Bohemia came to claim the Kingdom of Hungary; as Lewis the firſt, by Elizabeth his Mother, Siſter of Caſimir the 2. did the Kingdom of Poland. The reſt of their affairs ſhall be briefly touched at in the following Catalogue of

The Dukes and Kings of HUNGARIE.

A. Ch.
1. Cuſala, the firſt Duke (or Captain) of the Hungars, ſubdued Tranſylvania and the Upper Hungary, and paſſed over the Danow; ſlain in 1302 24. Charles, ſurnamed Martel Son of Charles King of Naples, by Mary, Daughter to Stephen the 4. Againſt whom was choſen Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, Son of Wenceſlaus the ſecond, and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Bela the fourth; and after three years Otho of Bavaria, deſcended from Elizabeth, another of the Daughters of Bela the fourth, was choſen alſo by a Faction againſt Wenceſlaus. But Wenceſlaus ſurrendring his Claim to Otho, and Otho not long after being forced to renounce his Title, Charles Martel remained King of the whole.

1343 25. Ludovicus, Nephew to Charles Martel by his Son Carlibert, ſucceeded King of Poland alſo, in right of Elizabeth his Mother, Siſter of Caſimir the 2.

1383 26. Charles II. King of Naples, deſcended from Charles of Naples, and Mary, Daughter of Stephen the 4. before mentioned, by their Son John of Durazzo, one of the younger Brothers of Charles Martel; poiſoned after a ſhort Reign by the Widow of the former King, to make a way for her Daughter to the Crown.

1387 27. Sigiſmund Emperour, King of Bohemia, and Duke of Luxemburg, ſucceeded in right of Mary his Wife, eldeſt Daughter of Lewis or Ludovicus, her younger Siſter Eduigis being Queen of Poland.

1438 28. Albert of Auſtria, Emperour, and King of Hungary and Bohemia, in right of Elizabeth his Wife, the Daughter of Sigiſmund.

1440 29. Ladiſlaus, or Vladiſlaus, Son of Jagello King of Poland, in the Minority of Ladiſlaus the Son of Albert choſen King of Hungary; unfortunately ſlain at the Battel of Varna, with 30000 of his people; and perhaps his Perjury might deſerve it. For having made and ſworn a Truce with the Turk, the Pope's Legate, upon a ſeeming advantage, abſolved him of his Oath, and drew him into the Field. At the beginning the Chriſtians had the better: but at the laſt, Amurath the 2. againſt whom they fought, lifting up his eyes to Heaven, and deſiring Chriſt to look upon the perfidious dealing wherewith his Followers had diſhonoured him, re-encouraged his men, and ſo got the Victory.

1444 30. Ladiſlaus V. King of Bohemia, the Son of Albert by Elizabeth, Daughter of Sigiſmund and Mary.

1458 31. Matthias Corvinus, Son of the famous Huniades, after the death of Ladiſlaus the 5. King of Hungary.

1491 32. Vladiſlaus II. or Ladiſlaus VI. Son of Caſimir the 4. of Poland, and of Elizabeth the Daughter of Albert, ſucceeded in the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia; his three younger Brothers ſucceſſively in that of Poland.

1517 33. Ludovicus II. King of Hungary and Bohemia, both born and dead before the ordinary courſe of nature; being in the 21. year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign, unfortunately drawn unto the Field, to encounter Solyman the Magnificent, one of the hardieſt Captains in his time. The Battel was fought at a Village called Mogachz, or Mugace, juſt betwixt Belgrade and Buda; in which 19000 of the Hungarians were ſlain, and the young King drowned in the Flight. A moſt lamentable Diſcomfiture. Lewis thus dead, John Supuſio, Vaivod or Governour of Tranſylvania, was by the States choſen King of Hungary. But Ferdinand, Archduke of Auſtria, and Brother unto Charles the fifth, challenged the Kingdom in right of Anne his Wife, Daughter to Vladiſlaus, and Siſter to Lewis King of Hungary and Bohemia. On this Pretence he invaded the Kingdom, and drove out John his Competitor; who, to recover his Right, called Solyman the Magnificent into the Country, who took ſo faſt footing in it, that his Succeſſors could never ſince be removed.

1527 34. John Sepuſio, Vaivod of Tranſylvania, choſen King upon the death of Ludovicus, the 2. outed by Ferdinand of Auſtria, reſtored by Solyman the Great Turk, died Anno 1540: after whoſe death the Hungarians cauſed his Son Stephen, an Infant, to be crowned King in his Cradle, of which he was immediately deprived by Solyman his pretended Patron, who, under colour of preſerving that Kingdom for him, ſeized Buda and other the chief Towns thereof, which he after kept unto himſelf.

1540 35. Ferdinand of Auſtria, elected King of Bohemia, in reſpect to the Lady Anne his Wife, Siſter of Ludovicus the 2. Anno 1527, did in the ſame Right lay Claim to the Crown of Hungary; choſen to which by a party prepared for him, he was always in contention with with John de Sepusio; each of them acknowledged King by their several Factions: but he was by both sides received on the death of John.

1572 37. Rodolphus, Emperour, &c. Son of Maximilian.

1608 38. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, afterwards Emperour.

1618 39. Ferdinand II. of Gratz, next Heir unto Matthias of the House of Austria, afterwards Emperour, &c. against whom a Party of Hungarians called in Bethlem Gabor, Prince of Transylvania, whom they elected for their King, intending (as they said) to crown him also. But the Affairs of Bohemia going on the Emperour's side, Gabor relinquished his pretensions, and hearkned to a Peace betwixt them.

1625 40. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the second, chosen and crowned King in the life of his Father, and in the year 1627 King of Bohemia also, succeeding after him in the Empire, and now living, Anno 1648.

This Kingdom doth pretend it self to be Elective, and to have special Priviledges indulged them by their former Princes; and anciently indeed it was so in both respects, the last especially; King Andrew giving authority to his Prelates, Peers, and other people, Ut sine nota alicujus Infidelitatis, &c. that without any imputation of Disloyalty they might contradict, oppose, and resist their King, if he did any thing in violation of their Laws and Sanctions. But both their liberty of Elections and pretence of Priviledges have been so shaken and restrained by their Kings of the House of Austria, that the Elections are become a matter of Formality only, and their Priviledges depending wholly on their Prince's pleasure, now grown too potent for them to contend withal, unless they should betray their Country into the hands of the Turks. To which some of them have expressed some strong Inclinations, the Oppressions laid upon them by the Austrian Family being deemed unsufferable.

The Forces of this Kingdom, when it was entire, may best be seen by those great Armies which they have brought into the Field against the Turk. By whom two parts of three being since subdued, that which remains must not be thought able to answer the proportion of former times; though they have done more than could be reasonably expected from it. For at the Battel of Keresture, Anno 1596, there were 6000 Hungarian Horse, and 10000 Foot of this Nation only; besides those of Germany and Transylvania: and the next year, notwithstanding the Discomfiture of that Army, they raised no less than 20000 Horse and Foot, on the noise of some Preparations among the Turks. 'Tis true, their Foot are commonly but meanly armed; the defect wherein is rather to be imputed to the Prince, then unto the people, who can but bring their Bodies (which is all they have) for defence of their Country. And for their Horse, (whom they call Heyducks) maintained in continual readiness at the charge of the Nobility and principal Gentry, they are next Cousins to the Cosacks, almost as mischievous as they, and hold as strict Intelligence with the Turks as those do with the Tartars.

The chief Revenues of this Kingdom come from the Silver-Mines, out of which is yearly raised about a million and a half of Guldens. Maximilian the second made it up two millions, by seizing on the Lands of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and assigning annual Pensions to the Bishops, Canons, and other Religious persons. Most of which Sum comes clearly to the Emperour's Coffers, the Prefidiary Souldiers being paid with Contribution-money raised upon the Country; and the Lieutenant-general, whose entertainment comes to 30000 Dollars yearly, defrayed upon their Purses also.

The chief Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of the Dragon, instituted by Sigismund Emperour and King hereof, at such time as by the Council of Constance against John Hus and Hierom of Prague, and by the sharpness of his Sword proved upon their Followers, he had cast down (as he conceived) the Dragon of Heresie and and Schism. But the Device proved of no long continuance, expiring almost with the Author.

The Arms of Attila the Hunn, once the King of this Country by the name of Pannonia, are said to have been Gules, a Falcon displayed Or, membred and crowned Argent. But the Arms of the Kingdom at this time are Barre-wise of eight pieces, Gules and Argent.

There are in HUNGARY

OF SCLAVONIA.

SCLAVONIA is bounded on the East with Servia, Macedonia, and Epirus, from which it is parted by the River Drinus, and a Line drawn from thence unto the Adriatick; on the West with Carniola in Germany, and Istria in the Seigniory of Venice, from which last it is divided by the River Arsia; on the North with Hungary, on the South with the Adriatick Sea. So called from the Solaves, or Sclavi, a Sarmatian People, of whom more anon.

It contains in length from Arsia to the River Drinus, according to Pliny's Computation, 800 Italian miles; the greatest breadth being 325 of the same miles. But others reckon the length of it at no more than 480 miles: who may be reconciled with Pliny by supposing this, that these last measure in a straight and direct Line from River to River; and that Plinj coasted by the Creeks and Reaches of the Adriatick. It is situate in the Northern Temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and seventh Climates; so that the longest Day in Summer is about fifteen hours and an half.

The Country is generally fruitful of all those Commodities which are found in Italy, to which it is little inferiour; yielding not only Wine and Oyl in very good plenty, but good store of Cattel; and of wild Beasts of pleasure is no want at all; some rich Veins also of Gold and Silver. The Northern parts are mountainous, cold, for the most part lying under Snows, not capable of Wine, or any the like Productions which require much Heat. But even these mountainous parts afford very good Pasturage, and breed a wealthy race of Sheep, which bring forth young twice a year, and are shorn four times. Nor do the Sea-coasts come behind in advancing the Profit of the people, not only yielding store of Fish, but the benefit of many excellent and convenient Havens.

The People are couragious, proud, stubborn, and untractable, of strong Bodies and able Constitutions, fit for works of Drudgery; and so employed by the Venetians, when first brought under their Command: who, using them in all servile Offices both at home and abroad, occasioned the neighbouring Nations to call their Villains or Bond-servants, as they of Venice did, by the name of Sclaves; that being originally as to this People the name, not of their Condition, but of their Ancestors and Country.

The Christian Faith was here planted, I mean in reference to this People who dow now inhabit it, about the time of Charles the Bald, Emperour of the West, Anno 877, Sueropilus being the first of their Kings who embraced the Gospel. But lying in the mid-way of Greece and Italy, the Religion of the Church of Rome, and that of the Greek Church are both allowed of; that of the Greeks being as prevalent in the East parts hereof, as that of Rome is in the Western. But here it is to be observed, that though this People, according to their Division into East and West, follow the Rites and Ceremonies of those several Churches; yet on both sides it is indulged them to celebrate Divine Offices in their natural Language, contrary to the usage of the Church of Rome in all places else. And yet the people are not all of the Christian Faith, the Turkish and Mahometan prevailing in those Towns and Territories under their Obedience.

But though they be not of one Religion, they are all of one Language, which is the old Sarmatian (or Sclavonian) Tongue, generally spoken in the Empire of Russia, Livonia, Poland, Silesia, Bohemia, Moravia, some part of Hungary, Istria, Sclavonia, where we now are, Dacia, Epirus, Georgia, Mengrelia, (both in Asia) and by all the Captains, Officers, and other Souldiers of the Turkish Empire: the Language generally spreading over all those Countries which either were Sarmatian in their first Original, or made theirs by Conquest under the united name of Sclaves, or otherwise intermixt with them by the necessity of Commerce and Trade, or dispatch of their common Businesses. Insomuch as, taking in the Subdivisions of the Provinces and Countries before specified, it is affirmed by Gesner, a right learned man, that there are no fewer than threescore Nations which have the Sclavonian Tongue for their vulgar Language.

Chief Mountains in this Country are those called Scardonici, (from Scardona, one of the best Towns of Illyris) dividing Dalmatia in the midst, and extending along the Coasts thereof; by Ptolemy called Ardium. Of Rivers those of special note amongst the Ancients were, 1. Titius, now Variecha, separating Illyris from Dalmatia. 2. Arsia, now Arsa, the utmost bound upon the West; as 3. Drinus is upon the East: of which the first falleth into the Bay of the Adriatick, which is called Golfo di Quernero, (Sinus Flanaticus by the Ancients;) the other into the Saw or Savus, somewhat West of Belgrade. 4. Narron, now Narento, running not far from Epidaurus.

The Boundaries and Land-Marks being thus set out, I should proceed to the Division of the Country as now it standeth. But I must first look on it as it stood in the time of the Romans: in whose time that part of the whole Province which lay from the River Arsia to the Titius was named Liburnia and Illyris; that from the Titius to the Drinus was called Dalmatia. But the Illyrians being the stouter and more warlike People, and such as created greatest Troubles to the Romans, it pleased the Conquerours, when they had fully subdued both Nations, to call the whole Country by the name of Illyricum; and not so only, but to extend this name over all their Provinces (the Diocese of Thrace excepted) which lay between the Alps and the Euxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Danow; for so far the Jurisdiction of the Præfectus Prætorio of Illyricum did at first extend. Huic Præfecto (saith Zosimus) Constantinus, ejus Institutor, Macedones attribuit, Thessalos, Cretenses, Græciam, & circumjacentes Insulas, Epirum utramque, Illyricos, Dracos, Triballos, & Pannonias, Valeriam usque & Mysiam superiorem. And that all these did then pass by the name of Illyricum appeareth as well by that of Pollio in the Life of Claudius the second, expressly saying, Illyricum Thracas, Mysos, Dacos, Dacos, Dalmatias & Pannonias continebat; as by that of Socrates the Hiſtorian, who lib. 32. cap. 10. calleth Sirmium, the chief Town of Pannonia Inferior, and lib. 5. cap. 6. Theſſalonica, the chief City of Macedon, Urbes Illyricas, or Illyrian Cities. By which account Illyricum, in the largeſt extent of that name, contained no leſs than 18 Provinces of the Roman Empire; that is to ſay, 1. Noricum Mediterranеum, 2. Noricum Ripenſe, 3. Pannonia Superior, 4. Pannonia Inferior, 5. Valeria, 6. Savia, 7. Dalmatia. 8. Mœſia Superior. 9. Dardania. 10 Dacia Mediterranea, 11. Dacia Ripenſis, 12. Macedonia, 13. Theſſaly, 14. Achaia. 15. Crete, 16. Epirus Vetus, 17. Epirus Nova, and 18. Prævalitana. Theſe 18 Provinces being caſt or made up into three Dioceſes, viz. the Dioceſe of Illyricum ſpecialy ſo called, containing the ſeven firſt, 2. the Dioceſe of Macedon, containing the ſeven laſt, and 3. the Dioceſe of Dacia, comprehending the other four, were governed by the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, who had firſt his chief Seat and Reſidence at Sirmium before mentioned. But in the Diviſion of the Empire betwixt the Sons of Theodoſius the Great into the Eaſtern and Weſtern, the Dioceſe of Illyricum ſpecially ſo called (after that named Illyricum Occidentale) was laid unto the Weſtern Empire, under the Governance of the Præfectus Prætorio of Italy; and thereupon the Seat or Reſidence of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum removed from Sirmium unto Theſſalonica. So that we are now to look upon Illyricum in a ſtricter Notion, as a Dioceſe of the Weſtern Empire, containing the ſeven Provinces before ſpecified, whereof both Noricums, both Pannonia's, and Valeria, (if at leaſt Stiermarck be that Valeria, as ſome ſay it is) have been deſcribed already in their proper places. There now remain only Savia and Dalmatia to be ſpoken of: the firſt containing all thoſe parts of this Country lying on both ſides of the Savus, (whence it had the name;) the laſt thoſe parts hereof which lie towards the Sea, known by the ancient name of Dalmatia, the Region of Illyris properly ſo called being added to it. But as new Lords give new Laws, ſo they give new Names: the Country being divided by the Sclavi into two Kingdoms, viz of Croatia, and Dalmatia; of which the firſt contained the Province of Savia, the laſt took up the whole Province of Dalmatia, bounded as before, but keeping the name of Sclavonia to it ſelf alone, being indeed the only Province in which the name and memory of the Sclavi is retained amongſt us. Afterwards as it came to be divided (as at laſt it was) betwixt the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice, we find it ſubdivided into theſe ſix parts; that is to ſay, 1. Windiſchland, 2. Croatia, 3. Boſnia, 4. Dalmatia, 5. Liburnia, or Contado di Zara, and 6. the Sclavonian Iſlands.

1. WINDISCHLAND.

WINDISCHLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with part of the Lower Hungary, from which it is ſeparated by a Line drawn from St. Nicolas near the River Dravus, to the Town of Polega, ſtanding on a little River which falls into the Savus; on the Weſt with Carniola, or Krain, a Province of the Archdukedom of Auſtria; on the North with the River Dravus, on the South with Croatia. It is thus called by the Dutch, as the Land or Country of the Winnithi, or Venedi, the greateſt Nation of the Sclaves, whom generally they call by the name Windiſch; and anciently, for ſo much of it as lieth on the North of the Savus, accounted part of Pannonia Inferior, as afterwards of the Province of Savia, till conquered by the Sclaves, and laid unto their Poſſeſſions, from them named Windiſchland, as before.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Windiſch-gratz, ſeated on the Dravus, the Vinundria and Vindomana of the Ancients. 2. Sagona, near unto the Savus. 3. Gradiſkia, on the South, and 4. Zagabria, on the North of the ſame River: from which laſt a great part of this Country is called Comitatus Zagabrienſis. 5. Novigrad, on the Savus alſo, but more near to Germany. 6. Petrowyna, ſituate at the foot of the Mountains which are between the Savus and the Dravus, and divide Hungary from Sclavonia. 7. Siſſeg, or Siſſaken, (the Siſſia of Pliny and Antoninus ſituate on the Saw, over againſt Zagabria, where it receiveth the River Kulp; famous for the notable Reſiſtance which the Turks there found Anno 1593, who, hoping by the Conqueſt of this Province to open a free paſſage into Germany, entred it with a puiſſant Army, (having in their way taken the Caſtle of Oſtrowitz, and the ſtrong Town of Wihits, in Croatia) and ſate down very ſtrongly intrenched before this Town. But the Town held it out moſt gallantly againſt all their Batteries and Aſſaults, till relieved by a power of Germans who came to ſuccour them: by whom 8000 of the Turks were ſlain in the place, and moſt of the reſt drowned in the River Savus, as they fled haſtily and (through that great haſte) blindly from the Sword of the Conquerour.

This Province, for the moſt part, is under the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria, as Kings of Hungary, to which Crown it formerly belonged: thoſe parts of it which lie next to Hungary, on the North and Eaſt, groaning under the Tyranny and Bondage of the Turkiſh Garriſons.

2. CROATIA.

CROATIA is bounded on the North with Windiſchland, from which it is parted by the River Una or Wana; on the Eaſt with Boſnia; on the South with Liburnia, or Contado di Zara; on the Weſt with Carniola. The reaſon of the name I find not among my Authors, but only it was impoſed by the Sclaves at their firſt coming hither; who comprehended under this name all the Inland parts of Sclavonia, from the Mountain Ardium to Pannonia, including Boſnia and Windiſchland, though diſtinguiſhed afterwards.

The Country is for the moſt part cold, mountainous and hilly, overſpread by the Branches of the Mountains Bæbii, ſpoken of by Ptolemy; yet reaſonably fruitful, ſtored with all neceſſary Proviſions for the life of man, and would yield more increaſe and profit both to Lord and Tenant, were it not for the ill neighbourhood of the Turk, to whoſe Tyranny and Oppreſſions it hath been and is ſtill expoſed. The people for the general are held to be good Souldiers, mentioned in our modern Stories by the name of Crabats.

Chief Towns in it are, 1. Maſch, or Moſth, bordering upon Germany, the Aleta of the Ancients. 2. Oſtrowitz, a ſtrong Fort on the ſame Frontier. 3 Wihits, by the Dutch called Bibigen, by the Ancients Funium, the Metropolis or chief place of the Country, encompaſſed like an Iſland by the River Una, and fortified with ſtrong Works by the help of Art; but taken by the Turk Anno 1592, and all the Souldiers in it cruelly murthered, contrary to the Articles agreed on at the Surrendry. 4. Zeng, 5. Wackat, 6. Tarnaw, 7. Modriſch; of which little memorable.

This Country, with the reſt included anciently under this name, was one of the two Kingdoms of Sclavonia; the Princes whereof were uſually entituled Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia. In the year 1007 the Venetians, having before poſſeſſed themſelves of ſome Towns on the Sea-ſide, firſt ſet footing there. How the whole Country of Sclavonia came to the Crown of Hungary ſhall be ſhewn anon. It is held part of it, in the right thereof, by the Houſe of Auſtria; part of it by the Turks, in the way of Conqueſt: the Venetians having now no ſhare in it, for ought I can find.

3. BOSNIA.

BOSNIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Servia, a Province of Dacia; on the Weſt with Croatia, on the North with the River Savus and the Eaſt parts of the Lower Hungary, on the South with Dalmatia. So called, as ſome think, from the River Boſna, which runneth through it; as others, from the Beſſi, a People of Dacia, driven out of their Country by the Bulgari, and removing hither, by the change of a Vowel called Boſſi, whence the Country Boſnia.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Jaicza, by the Latines called Jazyga, ſituate on the top of an high Hill, at the bottom whereof it is almoſt encompaſſed with two Rivers, which there uniting paſs from thence unto the Savus. The Town, by reaſon of the rocky Precipices of the Hill, the Unfordableneſs of the River, and an inacceſſible Caſtle, is held to be impregnable: the Metropolis in former times of this petit Kingdom, and the ordinary Sepulture for the Kings thereof. 2. Warboſoni, at this time the chief Town of the Country, but not walled about. 3. Cazach, the uſual Reſidence or Retiring-place of the Boſnian Kings. 4. Schwanica, not much obſervable. 5. Dorobiza, the firſt Town taken by Mahomet the Great in his Conqueſt of this Kingdom; as 6. Cliſſa was the laſt, the unfortunate King Stephen being taken in it.

This Country, anciently accounted of as a part of Croatia, together with it was united to the Crown of Hungary, under the Patronage and Homage whereof it was erected into a Kingdom; but the preciſe time when, I find not. Some ſay about the year 1420. If ſo a Kingdom of late date, and ſhort continuance. For in the year 1464 Mahomet the Great, firſt Emperour of the Turks, having taken Conſtantinople, and almoſt all the reſt of Greece, caſt his eye upon it, ſuddenly ſurpriſed it, and having taken Stephen the laſt King hereof, moſt barbarouſly commanded him to be flay'd alive. After whoſe death this Kingdom was converted to a Province of the Turkiſh Empire, and governed by one of the Baſſa's of it, as it ſtill continueth.

4. DALMATIA.

DALMATIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Albania, from which it is parted by the River Drino; on the Weſt with the Titius, (now Varieca) which divides it from Liburnia; on the North with Boſnia; on the South with the Adriatick Sea. This only of all the Provinces of Sclavonia retaineth its ancient Name and Bounds. So called from Dalminium, the chief Town hereof in the time of the Romans, from which the People were called Dalmatæ, and the Country Dalmatia.

The Country in the time of the Romans was full of Woods, and thoſe Woods of Robbers, who from thence iſſued out to make Spoil and Booty. Dalmatæ ſub Sylvis agunt, indè ad Latrocinia promptiſſimi, ſaith the Hiſtorian. And by the advantage of theſe Woods they intercepted and diſcomfited Gabinius, one of Cæſar's Captains, marching through their Country with 1000 Horſe, and 15 Companies of Foot towards Macedonia, to the Aid of his General againſt Pompey. But their Woods being deſtroyed, they became more peaceable, and, in ſtead of Robberies by Land, began to exerciſe themſelves at Sea in the way of Merchandizing, to which their large Sea-coaſts and commodious Havens ſerved exceeding fitly.

Places of moſt conſideration in it are, 1. Sebenico, on the Sea-ſide, not far from the Influx of Titius or Varieca; by Ptolemy called Sicum, in whoſe time a Colony of Roman Souldiers was ſent hither by the Emperour Claudius. 2. Salona, a Roman Colony alſo, one of the Juridical Reſorts for theſe parts of the Province, and the ordinary Arſenal for their Natives. Renowned in ancient Stories for the Retreat of Diocletian, a native of this Country, who, having governed the Roman Empire 20 years with much Felicity, but a great deal of Cruelty, depoſed himſelf, and retired to this City, where he followed the Trade of a Gardener, working with his own hands, and obſerving with great content the productions of Nature. Inſomuch that when Maximianus Herculeus, his Aſſociate, (who at his perſwaſion had done the like) invited him to reſume the Empire, he returned this anſwer, Utinam poſſitis viſere Olera noſtris manibus plantata, &c. That if he would come unto Salona, and ſee how well the Worts which he had planted with his own hands did thrive and proſper, he would never trouble his Head with Crowns, nor his Hands with Scepters. A rare expreſſion of a ſettled and contented mind. The name and ſome of the Ruines do ſtill remain, to preſerve the memory of ſo remarkable a place. 3. Spalato, Eaſt of Sebenico, a Sea-Town, and an Archbiſhop's See, who writes himſelf Primate of Dalmatia; as anciently and of right he was, till the Biſhop of Venice, being made a Patriarch by Pope Eugenius the fourth, Anno 1450. aſſumed that Title to himſelf, together with a Superintendency over all the Churches of this Country, as ſubordinate to him. Of note for many learned Prelates, but for none more than for Marcus Antonius de Dominis, who, ſeeming to loath the Romiſh Superſtition, came for Refuge into England Anno 1616, and having here both by Preaching and Writing laboured to overthrow the Church of Rome, upon I know not what Projects he declared himſelf to be of another mind Anno 1622, and returned again to Rome, where he writ as reproachfully of the Church of England. So that we may ſay of him, as Socrates in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory ſaith of Ecebolius, who under Conſtantius was a Chriſtian, under Julian a Pagan, and a Chriſtian again under Jovinian; Τοιοῦτος μὲν ὢν κῦρος ἦν ἀνχαὶς Ἐκβόλιος φοίτιόν τι ἦν ὕστερον, So wavering and unconſtant a Turn-coat was Ecebolius from his begining to his end. But Ecebolius ſped better than Antonius did, he being received into the Church upon his Repentance: but this infatuated man was impriſoned in the Caſtle of St. Angelo, and his dead Body burnt to aſhes. A juſt reward for ſo great Levity and ſo groſs Apoſtaſie as he had ſhewed unto the World in his going hence. 4. Almiſſa, the Piguntium of Ptolemy, mounted on a high Rock, and defended with an impregnable Caſtle. 5. Stagno, upon the point of a long and ſpacious Cherſoneſe, not far from which the River Naron (or Narento) falls into the Adriatick. 6. Caſtel Novo, a ſtrong Fortreſs within the Gulf of Cattaro, now in poſſeſſion of the Turks. 7. Antivari, on the farther or Eaſtern ſide of the Bay, an Archbiſhop's See; but that and the Sees of his Suffragan Biſhops, being ſeven in number, are now in poſſeſſion of the Turks. 8. Cattara, on the ſame ſide of the Bay; by Ptolemy called Aſcrivium, inhabited in his time by Roman Citizens; now a ſtrong hold for the Venetians againſt the Turks, and giving name unto the Gulf, which, formerly called Sinus Rhizonicus, from Rhizana, (now Riſine) ſituate at the bottom of it, is at this time called from this Town Golfo de Cattaro. 9. Dulcigno, by Ptolemy called Ulcinium, originally founded by the Colchians and therefore called Colchinium by ſome ancient Writers. 10. Scutari, more within the Land, (the Scodra of Ptolemy and Antoninus) ſtrongly ſeated on a ſteep Rock, memorable for the ſtout Reſiſtance which it made for for a whole year againſt the whole Puiſſance of Mahomet the ſecond, battered for the moſt part of that time with 70 pieces of Ordnance of wondrous bigneſs, eſpecially that called the Prince's Piece, which carried a Stone or Bullet of 1200 pound weight; but taken at the laſt, Anno 1578. Not far from this Town is the great Lake called by Strabo Labeatis, now the Lake of Scutari, 130 miles in compaſs, and environed on all ſides with Mountains, except towards the North: out of which iſſueth the Drinus, now called Drino, or Drina, which, parting Sclavonia, from Macedon, and Servia, paſſeth into the Savus. 11. Aleſio, the Liſſus of Ptolemy, the farthest Town of all Dalmatia towards Greece; memorable for the Grave of Scanderbeg, who was buried here, whereof more hereafter. 12 Medon, raiſed out of the Ruines of Dioclea, an ancient and famous City, the Birth-place of the Great Emperour Diocletian, ſpoken of before. 13. Dalminium, once the Metropolis of this Province, ſituate on the River Drinus; firſt ſacked by Marcus Figulus, a Roman Conſul, An. V. C. 689; and after, on a new Revolt, by one Naſica, ſpoken of by Strabo: not able after two ſuch Ruines to revive again: nothing being now left of it but the name and memory.

Betwixt the Cherſoneſe of Stagno and the Gulf of Cattaro ſtands the Town and Territory of RAGUSI; not ſubject, as all the reſt are, either to the Turk or to the Venetians, but governing themſelves by their own Laws and Magiſtrates, as a free Commonwealth: paying only to the Turk 14000 Zecchins yearly in a way of Tribute, and as much in Preſents; diſcharged in that regard of Cuſtoms and Impoſitions in all his Dominions. It was anciently called Epidaurus, (of which name there were two other Cities in Peloponneſus.) But that Town being raſed by the Goths, the Inhabitants, (after their departure) not knowing where to retire themſelves, built this in the place of it, at the foot of a ſteep Mountain; enjoying a pleaſant ſituation near the Sea, with a little, but commodious, Port, forced out of the water by the art and induſtry of workmen. The Town is well built, fortified with Walls and a well-furniſhed Caſtle; now an Archbiſhop's See, and a noted Empory; rich, and ſtrong in Shipping, commanding over a ſmall and barren Territory within the Land, and ſome pleaſant Iſlands in the Sea. So that the Riches of it proceed not from their Rents and Revenues riſing out of the Earth, but by the benefit of their Traffick upon the Waters: in which they are ſecured by the Protection of the Turk, without which they had fallen before this time into the hands of the Venetians; as on the other ſide preſerved by the State of Venice from being a Prey to their Protectors. They were of more Wealth heretofore than they are at preſent, at what time they traded to moſt parts of this Weſtern world in thoſe great Veſſels which from hence were called Raguſes, but corruptly Argoſies; the laſt of which (their number leſſening with their Trade) they lent unto the King of Spain for the War of England Anno 1588, in which Action it was loſt and wrecked on the Coaſt of Ireland.

5. CONTADO DI ZARA.

CONTADO DI ZARA, or the County of Zara, called anciently Liburnia, and Illyris ſpecially ſo named, is bounded on the Eaſt with Dalmatia, on the Weſt with Iſtria, on the North with Croatia, and on the South with the Adriatick Sea, or Gulf of Venice.

It took this latter name (the former being long diſcontinued) from Zara, the chief Town thereof, the Jadera of Ptolemy and the Ancients; a Roman Colony at that time, now an Archbiſhop's See; enjoying a ſafe and large Port, and ſituate on a low Cherſoneſe thruſting out like a Promontory into the Adriatick; belonging to the State of Venice, by whom it is well fenced and fortified againſt foreign Invaſions. For the poſſeſſion and command of this Town there have been great Wars betwixt the Hungarians and the Venetians, to whom it ſeemeth to be of ſuch importance, that being once taken by the Hungarians, it was redeemed for 100000 Crowns of Ladiſlaus King of Naples, pretending againſt Sigiſmund of Luxemburg to the Crown of Hungary. In this Town is the Church of S. John de Malvaſia, which was built by a company of Sailers, who, being in a Tempeſt, made a Vow, that, if they eſcaped, they would conſecrate a Temple to S. John de Malvaſia, whoſe Morter ſhould be tempered with Malmſey: and accordingly they paid their Vows. Far leſs did another Maſter of a Ship intend to perform his Promiſe, though he ſpoke bigger, who, in a like extremity of Danger, promiſed our Lady to offer at her Altar a Candle as great as the main Maſt of his Ship. For when one of his Mates, jogging him, told him he had promiſed an Impoſſibility: Tuſh, Fool, (replied the Maſter) we muſt ſpeak her fair in time of need; but if ever I come aſhore, I will make her be content with a Candle of Eight to the pound. And in a like fit of Devotion was he who on the ſame occaſion plainly told God, that he was no common Beggar, he never troubled him with Prayers before; and if he would hear him that time, he would never trouble him again.

Other Towns herein conſiderable are, 1. Albona, retaining ſtill the old name, (the Alvona of Ptolemy) ſituate near the River Arſia, the Divider of this Province from Iſtria. 2. Flavona, or Flanona, ſituate againſt the Gulf of Quernero, of old called Sinus Flanaticus, as before was noted: of ill report amongſt Sailers, for frequent Tempeſts raiſed on every Wind. 3. Zegna, by Ptolemy and Pliny called Senia, ſituate on a Flat or Level. 4. Nona, of old called Ænona, compaſſed with the Sea. 5. Scriſſia, now a poor Village, in the place where ſtood the Argyruntum of Pliny. 6. Scardona, now a mean Village alſo, heretofore of great note, and the Juridical Reſort for the whole Province; from whence the neighbouring Mountains had the name of Scardonici, the Bounds of this Country and Croatia.

The ancient name of this Country was Liburnia, as before is ſaid, but extending more Northwards beyond the Mountains of Ardium or Scardonici; this and Dalmatia being then the Membra dividentia of the whole Illyricum. The People hereof, called by one general name Liburni, were much given to Piracies; and for the better ſpeed therein, the Authors and Inventors of thoſe ſwift Veſſels which were called Liburnicæ and Liburnæ. Of which thus Horace,

Ibis Liburnis inter alta navium,
Amice, propugnacula.
That is to ſay,
In a Liburnian ſhalt thou be Amongſt the ſtouteſt Ships at Sea.

In imitation of which Veſſels, being ſwift and light, the Romans, in the time of their Wealth and Pride, invented a kind of Chair or Litter, (ſuch as thoſe we call Sedans) wherein they were carried on mens Shoulders with ſuch eaſe and pleaſure, that they could not only ſleep or read, but write in them alſo. The Porters or Bearers of them were of this Nation commonly; from whence, or from the faſhion of the Veſſel which they did reſemble, they were called Liburni. Of theſe thus Juvenal in his third Satyr,

Si vocat officium, turbâ cedente vehetur
Dives, & ingenti curret ſuper ora Liburno,
Atque obiter leget, aut ſcribet, vel dormiet intus:
Namque facit Somnum clauſâ Lectica feneſtrâ.

Thus

Thus Engliſhed by my honoured Friend Sir Robert Stapleton, in his excellent Tranſlation of that harſh Satyriſt:

When Buſineſs calls, a Crowd the rich man ſhuns,
And or'e mens Heads in's huge Sedan he runs,
Reads, writes, and ſleeps within it, as he goes:
For Sleep will come if he the Curtains cloſe.

Beſides which office of Chair-carriers, or Sedan-men, as we call them now, this People being, when once conquered, a ſervile Nation, furniſhed the Romans with thoſe Beadles whom they employed in calling the Citizens from the Fields to their publick Buſineſſes: to which the ſame Poet alludeth in the next Satyr, ſaying, Clamante Liburno, Currite, jam ſedit, &c. But to proceed. The nearneſs of this Country to the Adriatick occaſioned the Bay of Quernero, or Cornaro, as ſome call it, commonly called Sinus Flanaticus, to be ſometimes named Sinus Liburnicus; the parts of Italy on the other ſide of it to be called Regna Liburnorum in the Poet Virgil; and gave the name of Liburnades to a Shole of Iſlands lying on the Coaſt hereof, 60 at leaſt in number, as is ſaid by Strabo. To which and other Iſlands of the Adriatick we are now to haſten, leaving the Story of Illyricum to the cloſe of all.

6. The SCLAVONIAN Iſlands.

ALong the Coaſts of Sclavonia lie a Cluſter of Iſlands, to the number of a thouſand, as is ſaid by Pliny, moſt of which (if indeed ſo many) are but Rocks, not Iſlands, or not inhabited at all, nor of any note. The principal whereof, and ſuch as deſerve place place here, are, 1. the Liburnades before mentioned. 2. The Abſyrtides. 3. The Iſles of Raguſi. 4. Arbe. 5. Curzola. 6. Zara. 7. Liſſa and Brazzia; the reſt not being worth the looking after as to our Deſign. The whole number of the Inhabitants is reckoned in the total to no more than 40000 perſons.

1. The LIBURNADES, ſaid by Strabo to be 60 in number, lie all along the Coaſt of Liburnia, or Contado di Zara. The chief whereof are, 1. Iſſa, now called Pago, containing 100 miles in compaſs, having a Town of the ſame name; but in all that Tract of ground not above 1100 Inhabitants, in the time of my Author, by reaſon of the ſharp Air, and great want of Fewel. The Salt-pits here yield great Commodity not only to the people themſelves, but alſo to the State of Venice, ſupreme Lords hereof. 2. Tragurium, now Trau and Trahu, ſo called from the chief Town hereof, built by thoſe of Iſſa: ſo near the Continent, that it ſeems to be a part thereof. By Mela it is named Tagurium, with ſome little difference. 3. Pharus, ſo called from the Pharii, or Parii, of whom it was once a Colony, long ſince come to Ruine. It is now called Leſina, the greateſt of all the Adriatick, as being 150 miles in compaſs, and very fruitful for the bigneſs. It hath a Town of the ſame name, which enjoys a ſafe and ſpacious Harbour; unwalled, and of no great beauty, but fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, which commandeth both the Harbour and the Shipping in it. The Birth-place of Demetrius Pharius, ſo often mentioned in the Stories of Greece and Rome.

2. The ABSYRTIDES are in number many, ſo called from the River Abſyrtus, which thereabout falls into the Adriatick; according unto that of Lucan, Et cadit Adriacas ſpumans Abſyrtus in undas.

Abſyrtus foaming with his haſt,
Into the Adria falls at laſt.

But whether that River were ſo called by the Colchians at their landing there, in memory of Abſyrtus the Son of Æetas King of Colchis, whom they went to ſeek, or for ſome other reaſon, I determine not. Certain I am, it could not be ſo named from the ſcattering of his Limbs hereabouts by Medea his unnatural Siſter, as is ſaid by Pliny; that cruel fact being done on the Shores of the Euxine; the place being called Tomos afterwards upon that occaſion. But of theſe Iſlands, being in number many, as before was ſaid, two only are of ſpecial note; that is to ſay, 1. Vegia, or Vegio, not far from Segna on the firm Land, containing in compaſs betwixt 80 and 100 miles, and about 10000 Inhabitants: the moſt populous of all theſe Seas. It hath a Town of the ſame name, with a very fair Harbour: the Iſland by Pliny called Curicta, the chief Towns of it in his time being Fulfinium and Curicum. 2. Abſorus, as Ptolemy, Abſyrtium, as Pliny calls it, in whoſe time it was one Iſland only, but now divided into two by the Venetians, letting in the Sea betwixt them: the one of them is called Cherſo, the other Oſero; both joyned together by a Bridge made by the Venetians, and both together making up 140 miles in compaſs; each of them having one Town only, and that of the ſame name with the Iſland; the Inhabitants in both not exceeding 5000 perſons. Stored with ſufficiency of Corn, plenty of Wine, and abundance of Wood, great quantities whereof are ſent yearly to Venice. They have alſo goodly Herds of Cattel, and great Flocks of Sheep, affording by their Fleſh, Wool, Cheeſe and Butter, a good increaſe of profit to the Owners of them.

3. The Iſlands of RAGUSI, (for ſo I call them which belong to that Commonwealth) are but three in number. 1. Gravoſa, a very pleaſant place, full of Gardens of Oranges, Limons, and Pomegranates. 2. Languſte, environed about with very high Mountains, in which are the Raguſians Farms, made rich by the great Charge and Induſtry of the ſeveral Occupants, ſo as to yield them Wine, Oyl, and moſt excellent Fruits; which they receive more plentifully from a goodly Plain ſituate in the midſt hereof, and naturally more fruitful than the other parts. Near to this laſt Iſland is good fiſhing for Sprats: and in both an Art of making their Trees to bring forth Oiſters, by bending down their Boughs, and ſtaying them under the water with Stones; ſo as in two years there are ſo many Oiſters faſtned unto them as is ſtrange to ſee, and in the third year they are very good meat. 3. Melyda, lying betwixt Raguſi and the Iſle of Curzola, by Pliny called Melita, and on that ground ſuppoſed by ſome to be that Iſland on which St. Paul did ſuffer Shipwreck, Acts 26. But the name of Barbarus, which the Text joyns to the Inhabitants of it, not proper to an Iſland betwixt Greece and Italy in the times of St. Paul, and his landing, when he parted thence, at Syracuſe, an haven of Sicily ſo far from this, ſo near unto the other Melita, which is now called Malta, ſufficiently refel this Fancy, though otherwiſe not improbably grounded.

4. Of thoſe which are known only by one ſingle name the chief are, ARBE, ſo called in the time of Pliny, from the beſt Town of it; but by Ptolemy it is named Scardona. A pleaſant Iſland, in compaſs about 30 miles, and containing ſome 3000 Inhabitants; the only Havenleſs Iſle of all the Adriatick: but that defect is abundantly recompenſed by the natural Sweetneſs of the place, which ſo enticed certain diſſolute Rovers of Auſtria, that they ſeiſed upon it Anno 1618, and had like to have occaſioned an heavy War betwixt Ferdinand, Archduke, of the Houſe of Gratz, (not long after choſen King of the Romans) and the State of Venice, if Philip the third of Spain had not made up the Breach.

5. CURZOLA, by Ptolemy and Strabo called Corcyra, or Melæna, more rightly Corcyra Melæna, or Corcyra Nigra, to difference it from Corcyra, now Corfu, in the Ionian Sea. The chief Town of it, being of the ſame ſame name with the Iſland, was founded by the Gnidians of the Iſle of Crete. It is ſufficiently fruittul, but of Wine eſpecially; forty miles long, in compaſs ninety, and very populous for the bigneſs; notwithſtanding that the people, being Sea-faring men, do much uſe the Seas, and build many Ships. In the year 1571, a little after the taking of Cyprus, and before the Battel of Lepanto, it was invaded by Uluz Aly, General of the Turkiſh Fleet, with a Navy of 60 Gallies: for fear of whom Contarenus, the Venetian Governour, together with the Townſmen and Garriſon Souldiers, abandoned Curzola, the chief Town hereof. The ſilly Women thus forſaken, and preferring Death before Diſhonour, defended the Walls, and with Fire, Stones, and ſuch other Weapons as they had, they beat off the Enemy; till at the laſt a violent Tempeſt forced the Turkiſh General to remove his Gallies farther off, to a place of ſafety.

6. ZARA, LISSA, BRAZZIA, three ſmall Iſles, not otherwiſe memorable but for their Misfortunes, ſpoiled by the Turks at their departure from Curzola, who carried thence 1600 Chriſtians into cruel Bondage. The reſt I purpoſely omit, being rather Rocks than Iſlands, barren and ſtony for the moſt part, and not much inhabited.

The ancient Inhabitants of Illyricum, in the full extent of it, comprehending Liburnia and Dalmatia, were the Iapodes, bordering on Italy; the Scirtones, or Scirtarii, confining upon Macedon; the Mazæi, in the midſt about Salona; the Peiruſtæ, lying towards Pannonia; the Derrii, Ceraunii, Daurſii, Vardæ, Siculotæ, Sardiotæ, and others of inferiour note: all making up the great and potent Nations of the Liburni and the Dalmatæ, and comprehended generally in the name of Illyrians. Of theſe the Liburnian Illyrians (Illiryci, ſeu Liburni, as they are indifferently called by Florus) were the firſt who felt the Forces of Rome: which growing State they had provoked by their frequent Piracies, but more by murthering the Embaſſadours which were ſent unto them to require Satisfaction; Teuta their Queen, a proud and imperious Dame, commanding Execution to be done upon them. Warred upon by the Romans for ſo many Injuries under the Conduct of Centimalus, one of their Conſuls, they were overthrown, (as having more of the Pirate than the Souldier in them) ſome of their chief Nobility executed, in revenge of the Wrong done to the Embaſſadours, an yearly Tribute impoſed on them, and the Queen deprived of the greateſt part of her Kingdom, conferred by the Romans on Demetrius Pharius, one of their Confederates. But he proving unfaithful to them in their War with Hannibal, and Gentius, their laſt King, who commanded over Illyricum, ſiding againſt them with Perſeus King of Macedonia, Anitius the Prætor is ſent with a ſufficient Army to make an end of that work; who uſed ſuch diligence therein, that Scodra the chief Town of the Kingdom was taken, and the King himſelf, together with his Wife and Children, made Priſoners; by conſequence the whole War ended, antequam geri Romæ nunciaretur, before they knew at Rome that it was begun. The Liburnians after that became quiet Subjects, the whole Country on the taking of Gentius being made a Province of the Romans Anno V.C. 586, and they employed at Rome in many ſervile offices, as before was ſaid: and then the Dalmatians began to caſt off the Yoke. But Dalminium, their chief City, being firſt ſacked by Marcus Figulus, and after by Naſica before mentioned, they continued quiet and obedient till the time of Auguſtus Cæſar, when they again rebelled at the inſtigation of one Batto, a man very potent with the People, who, having ten years together maintained the Liberty of his Country, at laſt, broken and wearied by the Forces of Germanicus and Tiberius, ſubmitted himſelf unto the two Generals; who, asking the reaſon of his Revolt, were anſwered, becauſe the Romans ſent not Shepherds to keep, but Wolves do devour, their Flocks. Thus finally conquered, it continued a Roman Province till the coming of Odoacer into Italy, who brought it under his Command; as the Goths alſo did, having vanquiſhed him, and thereby made themſelves Maſters of Italy and the reſt of his Purchaſes. But the Kingdom of the Goths being brought to an end by the good fortune of Juſtinian, and the valour of Beliſarius and Narſes, two of his Commanders, (but very ill requited by him) Illyricum became a part of the Eaſtern Empire; continuing under the power of the Græcian Emperours till the time of Phocas, that bloudy Tyrant; when it was made a Prey to the Sclaves.

Of theſe though we have ſpoken before in ſeveral places, as their Fortunes and Affairs have led us; yet being this is the only Country which preſerves their name, we will here ſpeak more exactly of them then we have done hitherto; eſpecially as to their Manners, Name, and firſt Original, and finally of their Succeſſes in this Country. And firſt for their Original, I take it for a thing paſt queſtion that they were no other than natural Sarmatians, inhabiting on the North of the River Iſter, uniting themſelves under this Name in their Undertakings and Attempts on the Eaſtern Empire: as the many Nations of Germany took the name of Franks and Almans in their Actions and Atchievements againſt the Weſtern. But why they took this Name rather than another, is not yet agreed on. Some fetch the original of it from Slowo, which in the Sclavonian Tongue ſignifieth a Speech or Word, becauſe they were all of one common Language: others from Slawa, ſignifying in that Language Fame or Glory, in regard of that great Fame and Honour which they had atchieved by their Succeſſes on the Empire. But when I find a potent Nation of the Winnithi, Winuli, or Venedi, a Sarmatian People, called Sclavini by Jornandes, poſſeſſed in his time of the farther Shores of the River Iſter, oppoſite to Illyricum and Thrace, and by that Name waſting and foraging theſe Provinces and other parts of that Empire in the time of Juſtinian, as we read in Procopius that they did; I ſee no reaſon why we ſhould look farther for the name of Sclaves than from theſe Sclavini. For having in the time of Phocas ſubdued this Country, and called it Sclavinia or Sclavonia, after their own Name; by that and other fortunate Succeſſes on the Eaſtern Empire, and the Honour they had thereby gotten, they might very well induce the reſt of the ſcattered Tribes of the Sarmatians to unite together with them both in Name and Action, and try their fortunes in the Conqueſt of the Weſt of Europe, as theſe had done already on the Eaſt parts of it. In which Deſign they ſped ſo well, that they became Maſters of almoſt all thoſe Countries which lie betwixt the River Viſtula and the Euxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Baltick; communicating their Language unto all the Provinces and Nations conquered by them; and to moſt their Manners, Rites and Cuſtoms. Their Government was at firſt by Kings, but ſo that the Succeſſion ſeldom held in a Race or Family, and thoſe that had the Throne did not long enjoy it. For having a Law amongſt themſelves, that he who killed a Tyrant ſhould ſucceed in his place; they had few Kings whom ſome or other would not vote to be a Tyrant, and then diſpatch him out of the way, that a greater Tyrant than himſelf (as it commonly happeneth in ſuch caſes) might poſſeſs the Power. Inſomuch that they had a new King almoſt every year, none of them for the ſpace of an hundred years dying natural deaths; and all that while the People (as it muſt be) were moſt miſerably torn in pieces by inteſtine Wars. They were not cured of this Diſtemper, till the ſeveral Tribes and Nations of them (as Poles, Moravians, Bohemians, theſe here, and thoſe of other Countrys) had their ſeveral Princes ſucceeding one another in a regular way. Their Religion was Gentiliſm at the firſt. For being originally Heathens, they worſhipped ſuch Gods as others of the Gentiles did; Jeſſan for Jupiter, Ladon for Pluto, Marzim for Mars, Zievane for Venus, and Nian for Diana. They had alſo a Goddeſs called Fagode, to whom they prayed for Fair weather and a temperate Air. To their Children they uſed to give no Name till they began to grow great, and then they conducted them to the Temple of their Gods; where they cut off their firſt Hair, and offered it as a Pledge of their future Service: at which Solemnity they called together their Friends and Kinsfolk to make merry, with Banquets, Dancing, Singing, and all kind of Sports; offering in ſacrifice an Hog, and Wine mixed with Honey, ſomewhat like Metheglin.

The Goſpel was firſt generally received amongſt them by the Preaching of Cyrill and Methodius, two right godly men, who had before converted the Georgians and Circaſſians, two great Aſian Nations, employed therein by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, with good Succeſs as to the Work, and with no ſmall Honour and advantage to thoſe Patriarchs alſo. The Eaſtern Sclaves, inhabiting thoſe parts of this Country which lie next to Greece, and all the Dacian Provinces, except Tranſylvania, being of the Communion of the Church of Greece; but privileged to officiate all Divine Services in their natural Language. The reſt, as more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Hungary and the German Emperours, ſubmitted by degrees to the Popes of Rome, who by this means did reap where they never ſowed.

But to return unto the Story. The Sclaves, thus ſettled in this Country, (ſince called Sclavonia) continued abſolute Maſters of it, under the Title of Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia, till the year 970; when growing unſufferable by their frequent Piracies, and having raviſhed or ſurprized a company of Venetian Ladies, they forced that State (as the Liburnians did the Romans) to make War upon them: which ended in the Loſs of Leſina and Curzola, two of their beſt Iſlands, and almoſt all the Sea-Towns on the Coaſt of the Adriatick, poſſeſſed for the moſt part ſince that time by the State of Venice: a Tribute alſo of a hundred Barrels of Wine, and a Preſent to the Duke of 3000 Coney-skins, being laid upon them; Petro Urſeolo, being then Duke of Venice, and Marcomir King of the Sclavonians. Afterwards Zelamirus, the laſt King, dying without Iſſue, bequeathed the Kingdom to his Wife, and ſhe as freely to her Brother Vladiſlaus, King of Hungary, ſurnamed the Saint; the Right hereof accruing by this means to the Kings of Hungary, but the Poſſeſſion of a great part of it remaining to the State of Venice: the cauſe of much War and Bloudſhed betwixt thoſe Princes, till the Turk came to part the Fray, and got the greateſt part for himſelf by their Diſagreements. Betwixt theſe three Sclavonia at this time doth ſtand thus divided: the Venetians poſſeſs the greateſt part of the Iſlands, and all the Sea-coaſts from the River Arſia to the Bay of Cattaro, (the City and Commonwealth of Raguſi excepted only;) the Houſe of Auſtria, in Right of the Crown of Hungary, the Inland parts of Windiſchland and Croatia; and the Turks (who firſt ſet footing here in the Reign of Mahomet the ſecond) the whole Kingdom of Boſnia, the Patronage of Raguſi, ſome Towns in Windiſchland and Croatia, and all the reſidue of Dalmatia, from the Bay of Cattaro to Albania.

The Arms of Sclavonia were Argent, a Cardinal's Hat, the Strings pendant, and platted in a True-love Knot, meeting in the Baſe, Gules.

There are in Sclavonia

Archbiſhops 4. Biſhops 26.

And thus much for SCLAVONIA.

OF DACIA.

DACIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Euxine Sea and ſome part of Thrace, on the Weſt with Hungary and Sclavonia, on the North with Podolia and ſome other Members of the Realm of Polaud, on the South with the reſt of Thrace and Macedonia. So called from the Daci, who here firſt inhabited; in Strabo better known by the name of Davi: who proving, when firſt known to the Romans, an officious people, willingly putting themſelves to Service in hope of Gain, occaſioned the Romans in their Comedies and common Speech to call a Sycophant or Servant by the name of Davus,

It lieth on both ſides of the Danow, fronting all along the Upper and the Lower Hungary, and ſome part of Sclavonia: extended from the 7. Climate to the 10. ſo that the longeſt Summers Day in the moſt Northern parts thereof is near 17 hours, and in the moſt Southern 15 hours, 3 quarters.

By this account, with reference to the other Limits before laid down, it differeth much in Situation and Dimenſions from the ancient Dacia deſcribed by Ptolemy: that lying wholly on the North-ſide of the Danow, but taking in ſo much of the Upper Hungary as lieth on the Eaſt-ſide of Tibiſcus, this comprehending all the reſt of the ancient Dacia, with both the Myſia's and Dardania, and, in a word, the whole Dacian Dioceſe in the largeſt extent thereof, the Province of Prævalitana excepted only; which, though a Member of this Dioceſe, was no part of Dacia, but rather of Macedon or Albania. For the clearer underſtanding whereof we may pleaſe to know, that Dacia properly ſo called was ſituate on the North ſide of Danubius, as before was ſaid, extending as far Weſtward as the River Tibiſcus, where it frontiered on the Jazyges Metanaſtæ; inhabited by a military and valiant People, who many times, eſpecially when the Froſt did favour them, paſſed over the River, and infeſted the Roman Provinces. And though repreſſed and made tributary butary by Julius Cæsar, yet they brake out again in the time of Augustus, who sending Lentulus against them with a puissant Army, compelled them to retire on the other side of the River, planting the Southern Banks thereof with strong Towns and Garrisons, to restrain them from the like incursions for the time to come. By means whereof, Si Dacia nunc non victa, saltem ab atque dissita est, saith the Historian, though Dacia was not overcome, yet it was removed somewhat farther off, and the Provinces thereby secured from the attempts of that People. After this, from the time of Cotiso, with whom Augustus had to deal, we find little of them till the Reign of Decebalus their last King, a man both ready in Advice, and quick in Execution. Against him Domitian made War by Julianus his Lieutenant, who gave Decebalus a great Overthrow, and had then utterly vanquished him, if his Wit had not better befriended him then his Sword. For, fearing that the Romans making use of their Victory, would enter and take possession of his Countrey, he pitched in the way a great number of Stakes in Battel-array, putting on them the old Corslets of his Souldiers; which, looking like so many men at Arms, frighted the Enemy from approaching the Countrey. Trajan was the next that made War against him and brought him to that Exigent, that having with much loss endured some few Skirmishes, he yielded himself, and is acknowledged a Friend to the Senate and People of Rome. But being one of a high spirit, and born in a free Air, he once again fell off from the Romans; but to his own Destruction: for seeing by the Valour of Trajan his Kingdom conquered, and his Palace taken and destroyed, he fell upon his own Sword, and Dacia was made a Province of the Roman Empire. Lost in the time of Gallienus, it was again recovered by Aurelianus; who, finding how difficult and chargeable the keeping of it was like to be, transplanted the Roman Colonies, and the more civil sort of the Natives, to the other side of the River, placing them betwixt the two Mysia's, (in some part of each) and calling the Countrey given to them by the name of Dacia, or New Dacia, leaving the Old unto the Goths, and others of the barbarous Nations, whose Thorough-fare it was in all their Enterprises and Designs upon the Roman Empire. It was divided by Aurelianus into the two Provinces of Dacia Mediterranea, and Dacia Ripensis; this lying on the Banks of the Danow, the other more within the Land: which, with the Provinces of Mœsia Superior, Dardania, Prævalitana, and part of Macedonia Salutaris, made up the whole Diocess of Dacia in the times succeeding. It was subject with that of Macedon to the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, and consequently appertaining (after the Division) to the Eastern Empire. And it continued in this state till the time of Justinian, who being a Native of this Countrey, subducted it from the Command of that Præfect, and instituted both a Præfectus Prætorio for this Diocess only in Civil matters, and a Primate for the Affairs of the Church, both settled in the City of Justiniana, of his own Foundation; enlarging the Jurisdiction of the first by the addition of some part of Macedonia Secunda and Pannonia Secunda, and giving to the other all those Prehemineneies which had been anciently enjoyed by the greater Patriarchs. But this new Institution was of no continuance. For first the Sclaves, and afterwards the Russians, Hungars and Bulgarians, breaking over the Danow, dismembred it piece-meal from the Empire, and divided it under new names amongst themselves. Of which, together with the nature of the Soil and People, I shall speak anon, having first took a view of the Rivers, Hills, and other Landmarks, which are to be my chief Guides in the Chorography or Description of them.

The Rivers then of most note are 1. the Danow, which here at Axium, or Axiopolis, a Town of Bulgaria, takes the name of Ister, continuing it from thence to its Æstuarium, where it falleth into the Euxine Sea with 7. Mouths or Channels; that is to say, 1. Peuce. 2. Naracustoma. 3. Calliostoma. 4. Plendostoma. 5. Spireostoma. 6. Boreostoma: the name of the last I find not amongst my Authours, quia languidissimum, nec perpetuum, as it is in Ptolemy. 2. Marulius, now called Marisch. 3. Termes. 4. Aluta, keeping its old name. 5. Hierasus. All of Old Dacia, and all falling into the Danow or Ister: as do also Ciabrus, now Ibar, a River of Cervia. And 6. Sconia of Bulgaria, or the Lower Mysia. Chief Mountains of it are, 1. The Carpathian. 2. Scardus. 3. Ozbelus; whereof the first parteth it from Sarmatia Europæa, the second from Dalmatia, and the third from Macedon.

This said, we will proceed to the description of the several Provinces which we have comprehended under this name of Dacia; that is to say, 1. Transylvania. 2. Moldavia. 3. Walachia. 4. Rascia. 5. Servia. 6. Bulgaria: The first four in Old Dacia, on the North-side of the Danow; the two last in New Dacia, on the South thereof.

TRANSTLVANIA is bounded on the East with Moldavia, on the West with the Upper Hungary, on the North with Russia Nigra, a Province of the Realm of Poland, from which it is parted by the Carpathian Mountains; on the South with Rascia and Walachia.

It took this name from the great Woods lying betwixt it and Hungary; the name in Latine signifying the Countrey beyond the Woods. By the Dutch it is called Siebenbergen, from seven Castles or strong Holds anciently built in it to defend the Frontiers: Septemcastrensis in some Latine Authors upon that occasion. But by the more elegant Latinists it hath been named Pannodacia, as that part of Dacia, which either was inhabited by the Pannonians, or made subject to them.

The Soil doth naturally abound with Wine, Corn, and Fruit; of which it was so plentiful in the time of the Romans, that the Emperour Trajan caused a piece of Money to be coined, having the Figure of Ceres, holding in the one hand a Cornu-copiæ, and in the other a plain Tablet with this Inscription, Abundantia Daciæ. Particularly, besides great plenty of Wheat and most excellent Wines, it yieldeth great store of Cherries, Damascens, Malacatoons, Musk-melons, not inferiour to those of Italy, and also Centaury good store, and many other Medicinal plants; some Mines of Gold and Silver, many of Iron, Brass, Copper, and not a few Veins of Salt and Sulphur. Of Cattel such abundance, that many times large Oxen are sold for a Floren, or half a Crown apiece; and a most notable breed of Horses: not to say any thing of that variety of Wild Beasts which they have in their Woods and Forests, and of all sorts of Fowl both for food and pleasure. So populous withal, (for the most fruitful Countreys are commonly populous also) that Castaldo, Governour hereof in the Minority of Stephen the fourth Son of John de Sepusio, Anno 1551. advanced Army of 70000 able men, consisting of the Natives of this Country only, for the Siege of Lippe, a strong Town of Hungary, but on the Borders of this Countrey.

The People are much of the same nature with the Hungarians, to whom they have been a long time subject, but somewhat more stubborn and untractable; speak the same Language that they do, with some difference in the Dialect only; converted at the same time to the Chris-ſtian Faith, and under the ſame form of Eccleſiaſtical Government. In former times they uſed to read, as the Jews do, from the right hand to the left; but of late herein they conform to the Weſtern Nations, from whom they are generally deſcended.

For that the people of this Country are the Progeny of the Saxons, is evident 1. by the Saxon Language yet in part retained. 2. We find that Charles the Great, like a politick Conquerour, placed many of that Nation here, weakning ſo their ſtrength at home, and fortifying the Bounds of his Empire. And 3. by a Story recited by Verſtegan, which we touched in our Deſcription of Brunſwick; the whole Narration is this. Halberſtadt was beyond credit troubled with Rats, which a Muſician, whom they called the Pyd Piper, undertaking for a great maſs of mony to deſtroy, they agree: hereupon he tuned his Pipes, and all the Rats in the Town dancing after him are drowned in the next River. This done, he asketh his pay, but is denied: whereupon he ſtriketh up a new fit of Mirth: all the Children, male and female, of the Town, follow him into the Hill Hamelen, which preſently cloſed again. The Parents miſs their Children, and could never hear news of them. Now of late ſome have found them in this Country, where I alſo leave them: only telling you this, that this marvellous accident is ſaid to happen the 22. of July, 1376. Since which time it is ſaid that the people of Halberſtadt permit not any Drum, Pipe, or other Inſtrument to be ſounded in that Street: and eſtabliſhed a Decree, that in all writings of Contract or Bargain, after the Date of our Saviours Nativity, the Date alſo of this their Childrens Tranſmigration ſhould be added in rei memoriam. But though the Dutch or Saxons make up the main Body of them, yet, being conquered by the Hungars, they received many of their Colonies; and in the Northern parts there remain ſtill ſome of the old Scythians planted there by Attila. Out of thoſe Members is the Body of this State compoſed: ſo ſtrong and populous, that it is conceived to be able to raiſe an Army of 90000 men; and actually did arm 6000 Horſe and 12000 Foot for the Battel of Kereſture, Anno 1596. being more by 2000 then the whole Realm of Hungary ſent unto that Service.

Chief Towns herein of the foundation of the Dutch or Saxons, are 1. Hermenſtat, in Latine Hermanopolis, (of old called Cibinium, from the River Cibin, on which it was ſituate) ſo named of one Herman the Founder of it; little inferiour to Vienna for ſtrength or greatneſs, well fortified both by Art and Nature. 2. Cronſtad, in Latine called Corona, by ſome Braſſovia, by others Stephanopolis; this laſt name being given it by Stephen King of Hungary, who repaired and beautified it; ſituate on the Borders of Walachia, amongſt fruitful Mountains; remarkable for a fair Library and a kind of Academy; and the moſt noted Empory or Mart-Town of all this Country; of great Reſort, eſpecially in the Time of their publick Fairs, by Turks, Arabians, Greeks, Armenians, Polanders, Walachians, and other Nations. 3. Biſtricia, (by the Dutch called Noren) ſo called from the River Biſtrice, which runneth through it: ſo pleaſant and ſo ſweet a Town, that there is no dirt or mire to be ſeen at any time; or if there be, the people preſently ſwell up the River, and ſo cleanſe the Streets. 4. Mediaſus (by the Dutch, Medwiſch) ſo called quaſi medius conſeſſus, becauſe ſituate in the midſt of the Country; a Town almoſt as neat as Biſtrice. 5. Segoſwaria, or Schesburg, on the declivity of an Hill. 6. Zabeſus, or Laia, once the chief Town of the Saxons, but now much decayed; ſituate in a very deep Valley, well fenced with Waters, and thoſe Waters well ſtored with Fiſh. 7. Clauſenburg, or Coloſwar, the Zeugma of Ptolemy, in Latine called Claudiopolis, from Claudius the II. Emperor, by whom re-edified: at firſt a Colony of the Saxons or Dutch only, but of late times the Hungarians, coming in as Strangers, were at laſt privileged as Citizens, and inhabited it together with them. The Town is well ſeated in the middle of a pleaſant Plain, encompaſſed with an handſome Wall, and beautified with elegant Buildings. 8. Alba Julia, now Weiſſenburg, the Apulum of Ptolemy, ſituate on a ſmall Brook then called Apulus, (but now Oratus) whence it had the name. Built on the ſide of an Hill near the River Mariſch, (or Mariſius) over-looking a large and fruitful Plain: heretofore a Biſhops See, and the ordinary Reſidence of the Prince or Vaivod of Tranſylvania; but now a Garriſon of Hungarian Souldiers, holding it for the Emperour, as King of Hungary.

Chief Towns belonging to the Hungarians, and by them inhabited, are, 1. Waradin, much mentioned in the Stories of theſe later times, ſince the Invaſions of the Turks; ſituate on the Borders of Hungary. 2. Iharda, built in or near the place where ſtood the Saline of Ptolemy, ſo called from the abundance of Salt-pits which were then about it. 3. Engvedine, by the Romans called Anuium, from a Cauſey leading to it, raiſed by one Annius, and from him ſo named; ſome Fragments whereof are ſtill remaining. 4. Deva, remarkable for a Vein of the beſt Wines. 5. Fenuſchium, affording very pleaſant Wines alſo, not inferiour to thoſe of Venuſium in Italy. 6. Zilachi. 7. Gela, of which little memorable. 8. Millenback, not far from which, betwixt it and the Town of Bros, is a very ſtrong Fortreſs, commanding a ſtreight and narrow paſſage leading into this Countrey out of Hungary.

In the North part hereof lieth the Province called ZEGKLER, inhabited by the Siculi, an old brood of Scythians, brought hither by, Attila, on his firſt Conqueſt of this Countrey, and here ſtill continuing. A people which have much in them of the ancient Hunns, and had heretofore a peculiar Language to themſelves, but now they ſpeak the Hungarian generally, differing in the Dialect only. But though, by the neceſſity of Commerce and Cohabitation, they are brought into the ſame Language; they ſtill retain their ancient Cuſtoms, governed by their own Laws, and living after the ſame manner as the Switzers do; each of their Cantons (ſeven in number) being abſolute in and of it ſelf, but all united with the Tranſylvanians, and with one another, for defence of the whole Countrey againſt the ſeveral Pretenſions of the German and Turkiſh Emperours. And though they do acknowledge ſome Subjection to the Emperour as King of Hungary, yet it is but what they liſt themſelves: being anciently priviledged from all Taxes, more then the paying of a Bull for every Houſhold, in the way of an Heriot, at the Coronation of the new King, when and how oft ſoever it may chance to happen. Their Cantons (Sedes they call them) are, 1. Sepſi. 2. Orbay. 3. Kyſdi. 4. Czyk. 5. Gyrgio or Uduarhelli. 6. Marous-Zeek. And 7. Arania-Zeek; ſo called from the chief Town in each Diviſion. In former times no Nobleman, nor any one of better Means and greater Eminence than other, was known amongſt them: but now of late that Parity (or Confuſion rather) is grown out of credit, and ſome begin to over-top the reſt both in Power and Title, as in other places.

The firſt Inhabitants of the old Dacia, whereof this Province was a part, were the Anarti, Tauriſci, Rhatacenſii, Cauceenſii, the Buridenſii, and Biephi, &c. Firſt conquered they were by Lyſimachus, the great and mighty King of Thrace, one of the renowned Captains of Alexander the Great; in token whereof, innumerable Medals in the age of our Grandfathers were found in this Countrey, having his Image on the one ſide, and this word Victoria on the other. How they were afterwards ſubdued by the Emperour Trajan, and quitted by Aurelianus, hath been ſhewn already.

dy. Being forsaken by the Romans, it was won by the Goths; their constant Dwelling, till forced over the Danow by the Hunns, the next Possessours of this Countrey; the Road or Thorough-fare from that time of those barbarous Nations which out of Asia made their Inroads on the Europeans. Having been successively subdued by the Sclaves and Rosses, this part hereof was conquered by Stephen, the first King of Hungary, surnamed the Saint; by whose perswasion and inducements they received the Gospel. They were governed after this time, as a Member of that Kingdom, by a Deputy, whom they called the Vaivod of Transylvania, (the word Vaivod signifying as much as Præfectus Militiæ, or a Lord-Lieutenant;) a man, by reason of the greatness of his place and power, of most Authority in that Kingdom. The names and Succession of these Vaivods, till the time of John Huniades, comes imperfectly to us; but after that more clear and constant, in this order following.

The VAIVODS and PRINCES of TRANSYLVANIA.

1. John, surnamed Huniades, made Vaivod hereof by Vladislaus the IV. A man of great Valour and Renown, the great Defender of his Countrey against the Turks, whom he overthrew in many Battels, especially in that of Maron, where he slew 50000 of them. He died about the year 1458.
2. Stephen, of the noble Family of Cattory, Vaivod in the time of Matthias King of Hungary, the Son of Huniades.
3. Stephen II. surnamed de Sepusio, from the place of his Honour or Estate; not so much memorable for any thing as for being Father of Barbara, the Wife of Sigismund King of Poland, and of
4. John II. called also de Sepusio, after the death of Lewis the II. chosen King of Hungary, of whom before amongst the Kings of that Realm
1526 5. Americus, Bishop of Veradium, made Vaivod by John de Sepusio, on his taking of the Crown of Hungary; treacherously murthered, for not complying with the Turk, Anno 1534.
1540. 6. Stephen III. surnamed Maylat, a noble Hungarian, but extremely ambitious, having not long after the death of Americus usurped the Vaivodship, was in the year 1540 confirmed in that Dignity.
1541 7. Stephen IV. Son of John de Sepusio the late King of Hungary, by Solyman the Magnificent made Vaivod of Transylvania, being then an Infant, (by whom he had been deprived of his Kingdom of Hungary not long before:) being incroached upon not long after by the said Solyman, this Countrey was put into the hands of Ferdinand King of Hungary, other Lands being given to the young Prince in exchange hereof.
1551 8. Stephen V. surnamed Dobus, for his Valour shewed against the Turks in defending Agria, made Vaivod of this Countrey by the said King Ferdinand. But Solyman, not liking that this Countrey should be at the Devotion of the Kings of Hungary, conferred the same (under the Vassalage of his Empire) upon one
9. John III. whose Family and surname I have no where found; a professed Champion of the Turks, and as professed an Enemy to Ferdinand and his Successors in the Kingdom of Hungary.
10. Stephen VI. surnamed Battory, (of which House he was) made Vaivod by the Turk; and afterwards, on the Commendation of Amurath the III. chosen King of Poland.
1575 11. Christopher Battory, Brother of Stephen, on whose Election unto Poland he succeeded here, and was the first who, leaving the Title of Vaivod, took that of Prince of Transylvania.
12. Sigismund, Son of Christopher, shook off the Turkish Bondage, defeated many of their Armies, and slew some of their Bassa's, (the Scanderbeg of the times he lived in.) But not being able to hold out against so potent an Adversary, he resigned his Estate to Rodolphus the Emperour, having for it in exchange the Dukedoms of Oppeln and Ratibor in Silesia, and an annual Pension of 50000 Joachims. But finding his Pension ill paid, he made a new Resignation of it to 1599 13. Andrew Battory, Cousin of Sigismund, slain within the year by the Vaivod of Valachia. After whose death
1601 14. Rodolphus, Emperour and King of Hungary, is admitted Prince of Transylvania, on the second Resignation of Sigismund. But his Souldiers behaving themselves with too great Insolence, Sigismund was called back again, but never well settled: so that at last he was fain to leave the Countrey in the power of the Emperour, and retire to Prague, where in the year 1613 he died unlamented. In the mean time
1604 15. Justine, or Istivan, surnamed Botscay, a Nobleman of this Countrey, made Prince hereof by the great Turk, and supported by him, cleared the Province of the Germans: and being followed by great Companies of those of the Reformed Religion, he not only obtained of the Emperour Rodolphus a Confirmation of this Estate unto himself, but Liberty of Conscience, and the free Exercise of Religion for both the Nations, presently after which he died, Decemb. 30. 1606.
1607 16. Sigismund II. of the noble Family of Ragotzy, elected in the February following by the Transylvanians: but finding himself not able to make his Election good against the Emperour, and being unwilling to subject himself unto the Turks, after the end of one year he relinquished the Government, and betook himself again to a private life.
1608 17. Gabriel Battory, of the Family of the former Princes, succeeded by the favour of Achmet the great Turk: after whose death, so welcome unto his Neighbours and Subjects,
1630 19. Stephen VII. surnamed Ragotzy, on the death of Bethlem Gabor, succeeded Prince, by the power and favour of the Turks, under whose Clientele and Protection he doth still enjoy it, (as his Predecessors did before him) against all Pretensions of the Empire and Realm of Hungary: as on the other side he is defended by the Emperour and Crown of Poland from being made Thrall unto the Turks.

2. MOLDAVIA.

MOLDAVIA is bounded on the East with the Euxine Sea, on the West with Transylvania, on the North with the River Nieſter, the Tyras of Ptolemy and the Ancients, by which it is parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland: and on the South with Valachia.

It is ſo called, as ſome ſay, quaſi Mæotavia, from its nearneſs to the Fens of Mæotis; or rather from the Huuns and other People of thoſe Fens who poſſeſſed the ſame. Others conceive that it was firſt called Maurdavia, i. e. nigrorum Davorum Regio, the Countrey of the black Davi, (for by the name of Davi were the Dacians called, as we find in Strabo and ſome others;) ſo named from their Complexion, or the colour of their Caps and other Garments; as Nigra Ruſſia, a near neighbouring Province of the Realm of Poland, on the like occaſion. But the more probable opinion (as I take it) is, that it took this name from the River Moldava, which runneth through it; as the Moravians had that name from the River Morava. The Nature and Religion of the People we ſhall find in Valachia, whereof anciently it was reckoned for a part.

The Countrey is very fruitful in Corn, Wine, Graſs, and Wood; but more uſed for Paſturage then Tillage, by reaſon of the great want of people to manure the Land: by means whereof it affordeth great plenty of Beef and Mutton, whereby they ſupply ſome parts of Poland and the populous City of Conſtantinople. And theſe they iſſue out in ſo great a number, that the Tenth peny, exacted by the Prince or Vaivod in the way of Cuſtom, amounteth to 150000 Crowns per annum: and yet the Clergy and the Gentry are diſcharged of this Impoſt. But the main Trade of this Countrey is not driven by the Natives: the Port Towns being full of Armenians, Jews, Hungarians, and Raguſian Merchants, who foreſtal the Markets, and barter all their Corn and Wine into Ruſſia and Poland; their Skins, Wax, Honey, powdered Beef, Pulſe and Butter into Conſtantinople: it being credibly reported, that from the Ports of this Countrey no fewer then 500 Ships laden with Corn, Victuals, and other Proviſions neceſſary to the life of man, are yearly ſent unto that City.

The Countrey is in a manner round, the Diameter each way being near upon 300 Engliſh miles: but ſo ill inhabited, by reaſon of the neighbourhood of the Turks, Tartars, and Polonian Coſſacks, that certain Engliſh Gentlemen having in the year 1609. travelled at leaſt 240 miles in the Countrey, could meet with in all the way but nine Towns and Villages; and for an hundred miles together the Graſs ſo high, that it rotted on the ground for want of Cattel to eat it, and of men to order it. So that we are not to expect in it many eminent Cities or Towns of note; though it afford two Archbiſhops and two Biſhops Sees, Followers (as all the reſt of the People are) of the Traditions and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

The principal of thoſe which be, are, 1. Occazoma, Zucconia, or Soczava, the Vaivod's Seat. 2. Fucciania. 3. Fazeling; of which little memorable. 4. Kotiim, a place of great ſtrength, on the Borders of Poland; by ſome called Cochina; the ordinary Magazine of the Countrey. 5. Jaſſy, commonly called Yas, the chief Town for Wealth and Trade in all this Province. 6. Bender, a ſtrong Town on the Euxine Sea. 7. Polada, near the Danow. 8. Bialigrad, ſituate on or near the River Tyras, now called Nieſter; a ſtrong Town againſt the Tartars, and Polonians. 9. Kilia, anciently called Achilleia ſituate on the Shore of the Euxine Sea, for the moſt part compaſſed round with the waters of it, and therefore ſaid by Ptolemy to be an Iſland. 10. Ac-Germen, of old called Aſprocaſtron, and Moncaſtrum, a very ſtrong Town on the ſame coaſt alſo. Both taken by Bajazet, the ſecond Emperour of the Turks, Anno 1485. But theſe three Towns are not ſo properly in Moldavia, at leaſt not in Moldavia properly ſo called, as in a little Province called Beſſarabia, lying on the Euxine, formerly counted part thereof, till conquered by the Turks, in the year aforeſaid, it became a Member of that Empire. A Tract inhabited by the Beſſi in the times of Ptolemy, who being driven out of their Countrey by the Bulgarians, ſettled themſelves (as ſome ſay) in that part of Sclavonia, which is now called Boſnia.

The whole Countrey, following the Fortune of Tranſylvania and the reſt of Dacia, till the coming of the Sclaves and Roſſes, was for a while accounted part of the Ruſſian Empire, till the diſmembring of that Empire by the Tartars. After which it was ſometime Homager to the Polanders, ſometime to the Hungarians, according as the Vaivods or Princes of it could find beſt Conditions. By Mahomet the Great it was made Tributary to the Turks; but the Tribute at the firſt was very light and eaſie, not above 2000 Crowns per annum: that mighty Emperour, who aimed at more profitable Conqueſts, being loth to ſpend his Forces on ſo poor a Purchaſe as the addition of this Province would have been unto him. But Bajazet his Son, finding how fit it lay for the more abſolute Command of the Euxine Sea, took in that part hereof which is called Beſſarabia, reducing it into the form of a Turkiſh Province, Anno 1485, as before was ſaid; impoſing on the reſt an increaſe of the former Tribute; and ſo left it unto the diſpoſal of its natural Princes. After which time the Vaivods fearing to be made Vaſſals to the Turks, did many times riſe in Arms againſt them, aided therein ſometimes by the Hungarians, and ſometimes by the Polander; which laſt pretended to the Sovereignty and Chiefage of it. Bogdanus, Vaivod hereof in the time of Selimus the ſecond, uniting himſelf more cloſely with the Polonians, became thereby ſuſpected by the Turkiſh Tyrant; who with a great power chaſed him out of his Countrey, and gave the ſame unto one John, a Moldavian born, but bred up for the moſt part in the Turkiſh Court (where he renounced his Faith, and was circumciſed) under the yearly Tribute of 60000 Crowns. But John the new-made Vaivod was no ſooner ſettled, but he returned again to his firſt Religion, and for that cauſe grew leſs affected by the Turks. Which being obſerved by the then Vaivod of Valachia, he practiſed to obtain that Dignity for his Brother Peter; offering to double the ſaid Tribute, and to aſſiſt in Subjugation of the Countrey. The Turk, accepting of theſe Offers, compounds an Army of 70000 Valachians, 30000 Turks, and 3000 Hungarians, with which they fell into Moldavia; and were ſo gallantly received by the noble Vaivod, that few of them eſcaped the Slaughter. But being afterwards betrayed by his old Friend Czarnieviche, and, againſt faith given, barbarouſly murthered by the Turkiſh Baſſa; Moldavia fell into the hands of the Turks, and was united to that Empire, Anno 1574. the Vaivods from that time forwards being nominated by the Turkiſh Emperours, and governing as Subſtitutes and Lieutenants for and under them. And though Aaron, one of the ſucceeding Vaivods, did ſhake off this Yoke, and confederated himſelf with Sigiſmund Prince of Tranſylvania, and Michael Vaivod of Valachia, for Defence of themſelves and their Eſtates againſt that Enemy: yet being afterwards ſupplanted by Roſwan, one of his own ambitious Subjects, and that Confederacy disjoynted, it became ſubject firſt unto the Polonians, by the power and pra-practice of Zamoiskie, Chancellour of Poland; and then unto Rodolphus, Emperour of Germany; and finally unto the Turk, as before it was. And though the Polanders have since made use of some opportunities in imposing Vaivods on this Countrey, in despite of the Turks: yet was it commonly to their own Loss, little or no Benefit to the Moldavians, and in the end drew the whole Power of the Turks upon themselves in the Reign of Osman; they never since intermeddling in the Affairs of this Province, but leaving them entirely to the Turks disposing; who receive hence some yearly Tribute, but have not hitherto obtained the entire Possession of it, so long since aimed at by those Tyrants.

3 VALACHIA.

VALACHIA is bounded on the East with Moldavia, and a Branch of the Ister, or Danubius, bending towards the North; on the West with Rascia, on the North with Transylvania and some part of Moldavia, and on the South with the Danubius wholly, by which it is parted from Servia and Bulgaria. First called Flaccia, from one Flaccus a Noble Roman, who, on the Conquest hereof in the time of Trajan, brought hither an Italian Colony; afterwards by corruption Vlachia, and at last Valachia.

But the name of Flaccia or Vlachia was at first of more large extent then it is at present, comprehending all Moldavia also: divided in those times by a Ridge of Mountains into Cisalpina, and Transalpina; the name of Moldavia being afterwards appropriated to the one, and that of Valachia (properly and specially so called) unto the other. The people of both, in token of their first Extraction, speak a corrupt Latine or Italian Language; but in Matters of Religion follow the Dictates of the Greek Church, and obey the Patriarch of Constantinople, under whom all Ecclesiastical Affairs are governed by one Archbishop, and two Bishops. In other things they partake generally of the Rudeness and Barbarity of those Nations, which have since subdued them; being a rough-hewn people, hardly civilized, ignorant for the most part of Letters and all Liberal Sciences, not weaned perfectly (in so long time of their profession of Christianity) from the Superstitions of the Gentiles, swearing by Jupiter and Venus, marrying and unmarrying at their pleasures, much given to Magical Charms and Incantations, and burying with their Dead both Cloaths and Victuals, for their Relief in that long Journey to the other World.

It is in length 500, in breadth 120 miles. The Countrey is for the most part plain and very fertile, affording store of Cattel, a breed of excellent Horses, Iron-mines, Salt-pits, and all Provisions necessary to the life of man. Some Vines they also have, and not few Mines of Gold and Silver, more then for fear of the Turks, and other ill Neighbours they dare discover. They are begirt about with woody Mountains, which afford them Fewel; and very well watered with the Rivers of 1. Pruth, called anciently Hierasus. 2. Stertius. 3. Fulmina. 4. Teltz. 5 Aluta, all of them falling into 6. the Danow, which in this Province, at the Influx of Fulmina, takes the name of Ister. Yet is it not (at the present) very populous, the Spaciousness and Fertility hereof considered, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Tartars, Turks, and Polonian Cossacks: their late long Wars against those Nations and the Dutch having much decreased their former numbers, with which they so abounded in the times foregoing, that the Vaivod of this Countrey, in the year 1473, was able upon little warning to bring 70000 men into the Field for present Service.

Places of most note herein are, 1. Galacz, on the Influx of the River Pruth, or Hierasus, into the Danubius; the water of which River is so unwholsome, that it causeth the Body to swell. 2. Trescortum, not far from which they dig a Bituminous earth, so refined and pure, that usually they make Candles of it instead of Wax. 3. Prailaba, by some called Brailovia, the Town of most Trade in all this Countrey, situate on the Danow, and defended with a very strong Castle, fortified by Art and Nature, and furnished with a strong Garrison of Turks, as the Key of this Province, opening the Door unto the rest. The Town was most cruelly destroyed and raised to the ground, with an incredible Slaughter of the Inhabitants of all Sexes and Ages, for the space of four dayes together, by John the Vaivod of Moldavia, spoken of before, at his first revolting from the Turks: but the Castle, in regard of the great strength of it, was scarce attempted by him. 4. Teina, a Fortress of great strength, but in the hands of the Turks also. 5. Zorza, corruptly for San-Georgio, seated on the Danow, with an Arm whereof the Castle of it is encompassed; garrisoned by the Turks, and by them held to be so strong and so safe a place, that at the taking of it by Sigismund the Prince of Transylvania, Anno 1596, there were found in it 39 great pieces of Ordnance, with such store of Arms and Ammunition as might well have served for a whole Kingdom. 6. Tergovista, or Tervis, sometimes the chief City of the Province, and the ordinary Residence of the Vaivod, till the taking of it by the Turks: once beautified with a fair and famous Monastery, by the Turks converted into a Fortress; environed with deep Trenches, strong Bulwarks upon every quarter, and great store of Ordnance; but many times lost and got again, according to the changes and chance of War. 7. Pineresta, about a days journey from Tergovista, seated on the Danow, remarkable for two Bridges built near unto it. The one was of Boats, (the laying whereof took up no less then a whole months time) for the transporting of the Army of Sinan Bassa against Sigismund Prince of Transylvania before mentioned, and broken down by the said Bassa in his Flight, having been worsted in all places by the Transylvanian. The other was the work of the Emperour Trajan, in his War against Decebalus King of Dacia, built all of Stone, and laid on Piles and Arches of a wonderful greatness; 24 Piles or Pillars whereof are yet remaining, to the great admiration of all beholders. 8. Cebium, of old called Lycostomos, in vain besieged by the Forces of Mahomet the Great, coming in person to subdue this petit Province. 9. Zarmizegethusa, the Seat-royal of Decebalus King of Dacia, taken and destroyed by Trajan in his War against him; who, causing it to be repaired and more beautified then formerly, gave it the Privileges of Rome, and the name of Vlpia Trajana, which it retained as long as Dacia was a Province of the Roman Empire; now a small Village called Vetzet. Some stones have been digged up hereabouts with this Inscription, COLONIA. VLPIA. TRAJANA. AVG. DACIÆ. ZARMIS. which clearly shew as well the Dignity and esteem as the Antiquity of the place, before Trajan's times.

This Province, as the rest of Dacia on that side of the Danow, after the coming in of the Sclaves and Rosses was under Princes of their own, whom they called (as those of Transylvania and Moldavia did) by the name of Vaivods. Protected by the Hungarian Kings they lived long in Peace; till, sensible of the approaching Danger which the Conquest of most part of Servia and Bulgaria by the Turks was like to bring them, the Vaivod of it in the time of Bajazet the First passed over the Danow with his Forces, and having done great Spoil to the Turkish Territories, returned again unto his Countrey. Rather provoked then weakened with which Invasion, Bajazet comes into Valachia, overcomes the Vaivod in a pitched Field, compelling him to sue for Peace, and to pay him Tribute. But Bajazet being not long after taken Prisoner by Tamerlane, and the Succession controverted amongst his Sons, the imposed Tribute was with-held, till Mahomet, the fifth King of the Turks, having settled the Affairs of that tottering State, Anno 1417 enforced them to a new Composition, and the payment of all former Reckonings. The fortunate Successes of Huniades in several Battels, induced them once more to change their Masters, and to put themselves under the Protection of the Hungarians, as they had been formerly: but they paid dear for it, their Country being made the Thoroughfare of the Turkish Forces in their Attempts upon that Kingdom. But the Hungarians being vanquished at the Battel of Cassova by Amurath the second, the accustomed Tribute was brought in, and the Turks satisfied for the present, being then hardly put to it by the famous Scanderbeg. Not long after, in the year 1462. Mahomet the Great undertook the Conquest of this Countrey, upon advertisement that Wladus, the then Vaivod of it, intended to joyn with the Hungarians in some War against him: and finding how unprofitably he had spent his Forces in fighting against Woods, Mountains, and a wasted Country, he set up Dracala, the younger Brother of Wladus, to claim the Government; who, making a Party amongst the people, and having the Turk for his Assistance and support, possessed himself of the Estate, to be holden of him as a Vassal to the Turkish Empire. And it continued in this state, the Vaivods being after this at the Turks appointment, and paying all Exactions imposed upon them, till the Revolt of Sigismund the Prince of Transylvania, Anno 1595. at what time Michael, the then Vaivod hereof, taking that opportunity to shake off this Yoke, confederated with him and the Moldavian for their common Safety. And though he held out longer against Turk and German then either of the other did, discomfited the Turks by his own proper Forces at the Battel of Nicopolis, vanquished the Transylvanians, and added that Province for a while unto the Estate: yet, being at last outed of his Countrey by the Polanders, and another put into his place, he was shamefully slain in his own Tent, by the privity and consent of Basta, Lieutenant of Rodolphus, Emperour, and King of Hungary. After whose death the Countrey, miserably distracted betwixt two Vaivods, the one placed by the Emperour Rodolph, and the other by Mahomet the Grand Seignior, endured all the Spoil and Wreck which so calamitous a Competition could bring upon it: till in the end, the fortune of the Turks prevailing, the Valachians were constrained to submit unto their Disposal, and receive their Vaivods from that Court, as they had done formerly; performing their accustomed Duties, and paying such yearly Tribute as is laid upon them. Which notwithstanding, partly by their own natural Unquietness and partly by the ambition of such persons as contend for that Dignity, they have since been many times embroiled in Wars; never so quietly composed, but that a new Hope, or the Artifices of the Turkish Ministers, starts them into Action. By means whereof, when they have tired and spent themselves in their own Combustions, they may in fine be fully conquered, and made the next addition to the Turkish Monarchy.

Of what Revenue these Provinces severally were to their natural Lords, and of what severally to the Turk, I am not able to determine. But look upon them as conjunct, and as they stood at the time of the Revolt so often mentioned, and they yielded one way with another into the Treasury of the Grand Seignior no less then a million of Ducats yearly. Knolles in his Turkish History doth report it so. And his Continuator doth affirm that Moldavia only, before the said Revolt, did yearly yield unto the Turk a whole Tun of Gold, 2000 Horses for service, 10000 great Measures of Wheat, with as much Barley, and a wonderful proportion of Butter, Honey, and other Victuals; adding withal, that the other two Provinces paid as much, or more, for their yearly Tribute. After which rate, the Estimate made by Knolles may hold very good. But since the Reduction of these Countries to their former Obedience, the Turks having been more moderate in their Exactions then they were before, for fear of startling them to some new Engagement; whom they have brought to this Obedience and Conformity with such a vast expence both of Blood and Treasure as would have purchased the best Kingdom of Christendom in the open Market. Insomuch that the ordinary Tribute of Moldavia is now but 40000 Chequins, that of Valachia but 24000 of the same Coin; besides 1000 Horses yearly sent from both. Such Bribes and Presents as are given by the Vaivods hereof, either to get or hold their places, being marchantable Ware, and wholly at the Turks disposing, not being part of this Accompt.

4. RASCIA.

RASCIA is bounded on the East with Valachia, on the West with Hungary, on the North with Transylvania, and on the South with the River Danow; encompassed on three sides with that River, and another now called Temes, by the Latines Samus; and on the East divided from Valachia by the River Aluta. Called Rascia from the Rasciani, a Sclavonian People, whom Ortelius placeth in this Tract, and from him Maginus. But here it is to be observed, that besides this Countrey, the Rascians held some Towns and Territories on the other side of the Danow, and amongst others the strong Town of Chrysonicum; whereof more anon.

The Countrey is poor enough, but the people poorer, oppressed in former times by the Servians, and of late by the Turks; which makes them valiant and adventurous upon all occasions, as commonly those people are who give themselves the hope of bettering those Fortunes which they cannot make worse. Places of most note here are, 1. Bodon, a Town of Trade, on the Danow, memorable for the Marts or Fairs which are here held annually. 2. Zarnovia. 3. Covin. 4. Novebarde. 5. Severin, not far from which, betwixt it and Bucaresta, a Town of Valachia, are the remainders of Trajan's Bridge before mentioned. 6. Colambes, and 7. Columbella; of which little memorable.

These Rascians, as before is said, were a Tribe of Sclaves, settled in this Countrey, at the time of their first spreading in the East, and here continuing ever since in possession of it. Governed at first by their own Princes, whom, by a name borrowed from the Grecians, they called their Despots; that being once the Title of the Heir apparent or designed Successor of the Eastern Empire, as Cæsar had been formerly in the Empire of Rome, and Monsieur in the same sense in the Realm of France, to signifie the eldest Brother (if Heir apparent to the Crown) of the King in being. But as the following Emperours did affect new Titles, so that of Despot fell from one step to another, till given at last unto the Governours of Provinces; as the Despot of Epirus, Peloponnesus, &c. and in the end was assumed by the several Princes of Rascia, Servia, and Bulgaria. How this Estate became united unto Servia, I am yet to seek: but sure I am, it was united in the person of George Despot of Servia, and as a part of his Estate surprized by Amurath the second, who boasted his Success therein, (in a Speech made unto his Souldiers at the Siege of Belgrade) notwithstanding that he had to strive with Hunger, Thirst, Labour, and Desperation. Nor have I found at what time or under whose Conduct they passed over Danubius, and there possessed themselves of Chrysonicum, and some other Towns and Territories on that side of the River, which they still retain, either surrounded by the Servians, or at least intermingled with them; which makes some Writers of opinion that the Rascians and the Servians are but one and the same People under divers names: to which conjecture their being subject to the same Prince gave some farther ground. But whensoever they passed over, most probable it is, that, proving either troublesom Neighbours, or unwelcome Guests, they gave occasion to the Despots of Servia to make War upon them, and, having vanquished them on that side of the River, to carry the War over unto this; till in the end the whole Countrey was made subject to them. Added to Servia, they fell together with it into the power of the Turks, as was said before. But being more impatient of the Yoke then the Servians were, they did the Turks much mischief many times, as they came in their way: never so much nor so effectually, as when Mahomet the III warred against the Hungarians; at what time they frequently distressed his Armies, by cutting off his men, and intercepting the Provisions of Arms and Victuals intended for the great Army of Sinan Bassa. After which at the time when Sigismund Prince of Transylvania had won so many noble Victories against the Turks, 10000 of these Rascians, casting off that Yoke, offered themselves unto his Service. These are the only memorable Actions which are told us of them; though this last was only the attempt of some private Adventurers, the whole Nation still continuing in Obedience, as before they did. But following (as they did) the Fortunes of Servia, and having a Concernment on that side of the Water, we shall there say something farther of them.

Thus have we seen when and by what means the whole Province of Old Dacia became in part subject, and in part tributary, to the Turks. It is now time to pass over the Danow, and look upon the other part of this Province, called Dacia Nova, or New Dacia; containing after our accompt four Provinces of the Roman Empire, that is to say, both Mysia's, Scythia, and Dardania, besides the two Dacia's, Mediterranea and Ripensis, interjected betwixt the two Mysia's, as before is said: all now reduced only unto two of the Turkish Provinces, namely, the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria.

5. SERVIA.

SERVIA is bounded on the East with Bulgaria, on the West with Bosnia, and some part of the Lower Hungary, on the North with the Danubius, by which it is parted from Rascia and some part of Valachia, on the South with Albania, and part of Macedon. It containeth all Mysia Superior, and a great part of Dardania; and took this new name from the Serbi, or Sorabi, a Sclavonian People, of whom more hereafter.

This Countrey, with the neigbouring Rascia and the modern Sclavonia, was first converted to the Faith by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius, formerly remembred, between the years 860 and 890. of both which there is reserved some special Monuments. For Methodius, having obtained both of the Patriarch of Constantinople and the Pope of Rome, that the Nations by them converted might celebrate all Divine Offices in their natural Language, translated the whole Bible into the Sclavonian Tongue, which still they have among them in high esteem. And Cyril is said to have devised the Servian Character, not used in this Countrey only, (though here originally) but also in Rascia, Bulgaria, Bosnia, Moldavia, and most parts of Russia: which Character, from this Cyril, (or Chiuril, as they pronounce it) is still called Chiurlizze.

The Countrey was very rich and fruitful before the Conquest of it by the Turks, well stored with Mines of Gold and Silver, especially about Zerbenic, a strong Town hereof. The people are rude and gros, and much given to Wine; false of their Promises, and that upon slight occasions, so that there is but little trust to be laid upon them.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey, are, 1. Colubra, and 2. Lim, falling into the Savus. 3. Ibar, falling into the 4. Morava; as that into the Danow at Chrysonicum, or Chrysovetlia, a strong Town of the Rascians. Principal Towns hereof, 1. Nissa, the Nessum, as I take it, of Ptolemy, by whom it is said to be a City of the Dardanians; now the Metropolis of this Countrey, and the Key thereof: besieged and taken by Amurath, the third King of the Turks, Anno 1367. 2. Vidina, by the Turks called Kiratow, taken by Ferisbeg, in the beginning of Bajazet the first, and ever since the Seat of a Turkish Sanzack under the Beglerbeg or Bassa of Temeswar. 3. Crassova, and 4. Zerbenic, rich in Silver Mines; a great temptation to the Turks to invade this Countrey. 5. Simandria, or Senderovia, by some called Spenderobe, by the Hungarian Zenderin, by the Turks Semender; situate on the Danow not far from Belgrade, and taken by Amurath the II. Anno 1438. since governed by a Turkish Sanzack under the Beglerbeg of Buda. 6. Novograd, in the Borders hereof, fortified with an impregnable Castle. 7. Stoniburg (in Latine Stonibrigadum) the ordinary Seat of the Despots. 8. Prisden, said by Mercator to be the Birth-place of the Emperour Justinian; most like to be Taurefium, a City of the Dardanians, mentioned by Procopius, who maketh it the Birth-place of that Emperour, by whom it was repaired and fortified with four great Turrets, thence called Tetrapyrgon. But others (more probably) make him to be born at Lochrida, a Town of Bulgaria; of which more hereafter. 9. Scopi, by Ptolemy called Scupi. And 10. Ulpianum, first built by Trajan, whose forename was Ulpius; afterwards re-edified by the said Justinian, and called Secunda Justiniana, (Justiniana Prima, being in Bulgaria:) now a poor Village called Pyrethi, as Lazius, or Czanadre, as Marius Niger is of opinion. 11. Rhetiaria, by Ptolemy, for distinction sake, called Rhetiaria Mysorum, then the chief City of the Mœsians, of which now no Ruines are remaining. 12. Raveniczen, the Vendenis of Ptolemy, but not else observable.

Besides these Towns and many other of less note which properly belong to this Province of Servia, the Rascians also hold some Towns on this side of Danubius, the chief whereof is Chrysonicum, or Chrysovetlia, an old Town, almost wholly ruinated, till repaired and fortified by the Turks, Anno 1449. who marking the convenient situation of it on the Banks of Danubius, near to the Fall or Influx of the River Morava, and how commodiously it stood both to command and to annoy the rest of this Countrey, and for transporting of their Forces to the other side of that great River, made it their first work to possess themselves of it, and have held it ever since with a very strong Garrison. Such other Towns as the Rascians have on this side of the River, or of lesser note, are looked on by our Authour but as Towns of Servia, (by the Despots whereof they were long since conquered) where before we had them.

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey, such as are most considerable in the story of it, were the Bastarnæ, the Dardani, and the Mœsi: the Tricornesii and Picensii, spoken of by Ptolemy, being either Branches of the Mœsii, or else an obscure People not worth the looking after. Of these the Dardanians were most ancient, inhabi-inhabiting near Mount Hæmus, on the Borders of Macedon; a barbarous People, and perpetual Enemies of that Crown; most mischievous in their Attempts and Designs against it in the declining state thereof, making great and frequent inroads into that wealthy Country, with the spoils whereof they enriched themselves. Insomuch that Philip the Father of Perseus, finding no other likely means to be rid of that Trouble, negotiated with the Bastarnæ, a strong and hardy Nation that dwelt beyond the Danubius, to abandon their own Dwellings, and come to him with their Wives and Children; promising to assist them in rooting out the Dardanians, and give them possession of their Countrey. But Philip dying as the Bastarnæ were in their March through Thrace, and no care taken by his Son to pursue the Business, they returned all home again, except 30000, which pierced into Dardania, and made their own Fortunes as they could. This practice, as it gave matter of Quarrel to the Romans against the Macedonian; so it occasioned Perseus, the Son of Philip, to make use of these Bastarnæ against the Romans, at whose request 10000 Horse and as many foot passed over the Danow, under the Conduct of Claudicus, a King amongst them. But finding that Perseus was too strait-laced to part with Money for their pay, they returned again, forraging the Countrey as they passed. But whether they passed over that River, or mingled themselves with the rest of their Nation, who upon Philip's invitation had before come over, that I do not find. Howsoever, coming by this means acquainted with the sweets of this Countrey, divers of them came over hither in the following times, incorporating with the Dardanians, or bordering near them; insomuch as Tacitus for the most part joyns them both together, either as the same, or neigbouring Nations: first vanquished and added to the Roman Empire by C. Curio Scribonius, immediately upon the end of the Civil Wars raised by Spartacus and the Fencers, or Gladiatores; the Mysians, or the Mæsi, being broken at the same time also, Anno V. C. 681. As for the Mæsi, being the last and greatest of these Nations, they were most probably a Colony of the Mysians of the lesser Asia, anciently called Mysi, and the Countrey Mysia, as those Asians were, and as those Europæans are by the Greek Writers generally, and by Florus and some others amongst the Latines; though after, for distinction sake, Tacitus, Pliny, Virgil, and generally most Latine Authours, give them the name of Mæsi. A fierce and savage People they were held to be, Barbari barbarorum, as my Authour calleth them, more barbarous then commonly the Barbarians were: but, for all that, subdued by M. Licinius Crassus in the time of Augustus Cæsar, who overcame them in two Battels, and after vanquished the Bastarnæ, and their King Deldo, whom he killed in fight; the Countrey being reckoned after that as a Roman Province. It continued in this estate till the Fall of the Eastern Empire, when it was subjected by the Sclavi or Sarmatians of Europe; and in the division of the Spoil fell unto the Sorabi, a Sclavonian People, contractedly called Sorbi, and at last Serbi, Servii, and the Countrey Servia. It was reduced again to the Obedience of the Eastern Emperours by Basilius Porphyrogenitus, Anno Ch. 1000. or thereabouts; but more absolutely conquered by John and Manuel Comnenus, two of his Successors: but so as they were suffered to live under their own Princes, whom they called Despots, Homagers to the Empire, and depending on it. Inriched with the Conquest and addition of Rascia, (the certain time whereof I have no where found) they were first set on by the Turks in the time of Lazarus the Despot, from whom Amurath the first Took the Town of Nissa, being the chief of all this Countrey; provoked thereto by the great Forces which the Servian and Bulgarian Despots had raised against him for the Siege of Adrianople. And though Lazarus, terrified with this Loss, made his Peace with Amurath: yet after he brake out again into open War, in which he was overcome and slain in the Plains of Cassova, whereof more anon. To Lazarus succeeded Stephen, who quietly enjoyed his Dominions here; the Turks being in the mean time embroiled in War amongst themselves by the Sons of Bajazet. But that Difference being once composed, and Mahomet absolutely settled on his Father's Throne; the Turks began again to pursue this Quarrel: which George the Son of Stephen compounded with Amurath the second, Son of Mahamet, paying the Turk an yearly Tribute, and giving him his Daughter Mary for a Wife or Concubine. But this Alliance did not so well unite their Affections, (though George did many ill Offices in regard thereof to his Christian Neighbours) nor so well settle his Estate, but that Amurath in fine dispossessed him first of Rascia, and afterwards of Servia also, for letting Huniades escape, whom he had in his power. And though Amurath was necessitated to restore Servia again, upon the Peace made with Vladislaus the King of Hungary; yet Mahomet the Great, on the death of George, soon possessed himself of it. For Lazarus, the youngest of George's Sons, having deprived Stephen and George his elder Brethren (whose eyes Amurath had before put out, to make them uncapable of the Government) of the Principality, compelled them to seek to Mahomet for Aid. But dying whilst these matters were in agitation, his Widow put her self and her three Sons, Peter, John, and Martin, under the Protection of the Hungarians; and by that means, but with much trouble and many difficulties (the blind Brethren still soliciting the Turks against her) held the State awhile; till the people, finding no assurance in that kind of Government, and weary of the daily Harms they received from the Turks, yielded themselves absolutely to the Power of Mahomet, about the year 1460, continuing ever since a Province of the Turkish Empire.

6. BULGARIA.

BULGARIA is bounded on the East with the Euxine Sea, on the West with Servia, on the North with the River Danow, which is here in the East part called Ister, on the South with Thrace: called formerly by the name of Mysia Inferior, as lying lower then the other on the course of that River; as Servia, lying up the Water, was called Mysia Superior. Afterwards it was reckoned of as a part of Dacia, and in that notion was the Birth-place of Galerius, one of the Cæsars in the Empire of Diocletian, born in this Countrey near the Borders of Thrace, not far from the City Sardica; who therefore, in the Martyrologies of the middle Times, was called by the name of Dacianus. Finally, it took this name from the Bulgars, a Scythian People, who in the year 566. possessed themselves of it.

The Countrey for the most part is full of sharp and rugged Hills, Branches of the great Mountain Hæmus, which divide it from Thrace, and spread themselves over all this Province, insomuch that even the Mid-lands of it are rough and stony: and though the lower parts have some Plains and Valleys, yet are they generally full of Woods and Deserts; the most unpleasant and least peopled part of both the Dacia's. The Inhabitants hereof, in some conformity to the Countrey, are patient of all Toil and Labour, and not easily tired; but nothing is more troublesom then their Conversation: more full of Courage then of Valour; their Courage not proceeding by the rules rules of Reason, but issuing only out of Brutishness, or a natural Fiercenes.

They first received the Christian Faith towards the latter end of Justinian the 2. who died in the year 713, Trebellius being then their Prince; afterwards by the persuasion of Leo the 4. surnamed Porphyrogenetus, about the year 789. But those Conversions being but partial and for private ends, they relapsed shortly after to their former Gentilism; not totally gained unto the Gospel till the Empire of Michael and Theodora, in the year of Grace 860. Subject since that unto the Jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople; but not without great opposition of the Popes of Rome, who laid a Claim unto them.

Places of most note in it are, 1. Axium, or Axiopolis, on the Banks of Danubius, which from this Town begins to take the name of Ister. It is now called Colonamich, of no great fame otherwise. 2. Dinogetia, by Antonine called Dinigutia, now Drimago, situate also on the Ister, opposite to the Influx of Hierasus, and the Town of Galacz. 3. Mesembria, situate on the Euxine, and still retaining the old name; in Strabo, by some errour of the Transcribers, called Menebria. 4. Marcianopolis, on the Ister or Danubius also, built by Trajan in honour of Marcia his Sister, whence it had the name: in vain besieged by the Goths at their first Irruptions on this Country; and afterwards much mentioned in the Stories of that warlike People, for many Bickerings and some great Battels they had near it with the Emperour Claudius, in one of which they were overthrown by him with a mighty Slaughter. 5. Nicopolis, (by the Turks called Nigebol) built by the same Trajan on the Danow, at the Fall of the River Jatre, at his return from the Conquest of Dacia, whence was the occasion of the Name; the word Nicopolis signifying the City of Victory; sufficiently memorable for the Founder of it, more for the many great Battels fought near unto it; whereof two were principal. The first, that of Sigismund the Emperour and King of Hungary, besieging it with an Army of 130000 Christians in the time of Bajazet the first, (whose Father Amurath had taken it from the King of Bulgaria:) the issue of which Siege was this, that Bajazet coming to raise the Siege obtained the Victorie, with the loss of 60000 Turks; the Army of the Christians being wholly routed, 20000 slain, all the rest almost taken Prisoners, and the young Emperour forc'd to flie by Sea to Thrace, thence unto Constantinople, afterwards to Rhodes, and at last, after 18 months absence, to his Realm of Hungary. The other (as it were in revenge of this) was fought betwixt Michael Vaivod of Valachia, and the Forces of Mahomet the third, over whom the Vaivod got a remarkable Victorie, and, as the Fruits thereof, sacked the City it self, carrying thence great Spoil and Bootie, and infinite multitudes of People; with some whereof he made up his Army, sending the rest to inhabit and manure the void and desart places of his own Dominions. 6. Sophia, called Tibiscum in the time of Ptolemie, repaired by the Emperour Justinian, who gave it this name, from a famous and magnificent Temple founded and dedicated by him unto S. Sophia. The ordinary Residence in these late times of a Turkish Beglerbeg, who hath the chief Command of Europe under the Grand Seigniour. Once taken by Huniades, and by him at the command of Vladislaus King of Hungary, burnt to the ground; but afterwards repaired, and more strongly fortified then it had been formerly. 7. Varna, anciently called Dionysiopolis, situate on the Euxine Sea, near the Borders of Thrace: remarkable for the great Defeat there given the Christians, the first Flight of Huniades from the face of the Turks, and the death of Vladislaus King of Hungary, spoken of before. 8. Sumium, 9. Pezechium, 10. Calacrium, 11. Galatea, and 12. Macropolis; all taken by the Hungarians in their way to Varna, and lost again upon the issue of that Battel. 13. Silistria, at this time the chief City hereof, and the ordinary Abode of a Turkish Bassa: delivered to Amurath the first by Sasmenos, Prince or King of Bulgaria, out of a vain hope to save thereby the rest of his Country. 14. Parastlaba, or Perstlaba, the ancient Seat of the Kings of Bulgaria, till the taking of it by John Zimisces Emperour of Constantinople, who caused it to be called Johannopolis: but it soon lost that new Name, and is now an ordinary Village called Peretalaw. 15. Ternova, the usual Seat or Residence of the later Princes of this Country at the Conquest of it by the Turks. 16. Budina, once of great importance, and the chief of this Country; but being taken by Huniades in the course of his Victories, it was by him burnt down to the ground, as having been the cause of much War to the Christians there: supposed to be built in or near the place where once stood the old City of Oescus, the principal Town of the Triballi, called therefore Oescus Triballorum; though some will have that City to be now called Elida. 17. Venuzina, a Town of great strength, and one of the first pieces taken by the Turks. 18. Cassova, fatal to the Christians, who in the Plains hereof had two main Defeats. The first by Amurath the first, who here discomfited Lazarus the Despot of Servia, and the greatest Army that the Christians ever raised against the Turks: Lazarus himself being slain in the Fight, and Amurath himself shortly after the Battel stabbed in the Belly by one Miles Cobelitz, a wounded and half-dead Souldier, as he was taking a view of the dead Bodies which lay there in heaps. The last by Amurath the second to the famous Huniades, whom he here discomfited after a cruel Fight continuing three days together; in which were slain 17000 Christians, and amongst them the greatest part of the Hungarian Nobility; Huniades put again to flight, and forced to some Extremities to preserve his life: the Turks buying this great Victory with the loss of 40000 men, as themselves confessed. The place in which these Fights were fought, called the Plains of Cassova, extendeth 20 miles in length and 5 miles in breadth, incompassed round with pleasant Mountains, in the form of an Amphitheatre; as if it were designed by Nature for a Stage of action. 19. Doroslorum, by some of the Ancients called Rhodostolon, the Seat in Ptolemie's time of the First Legion called Italica; afterwards one of the chief Towns which the Rosses or Russians had in this Country: from whom it was taken by John Zimisces the Eastern Emperour, decaying after that time by little and little, and now wholly ruinate. 20. Achridus, the Birth place of Justinian, by whom it was beautified and enlarged, and called Justiniana Prima: who, raising the Diocese of Dacia into a Prefecture, placed here a Primate for the Affairs of the Church, (which honour it doth still retain, the Bishop hereof being the Primate of all Dacia) and a Præfectus Prætorio for Affairs of State. But he being dead, the Town returned to its old name, now called l' Ochrida, contracted by William of Tyre to Acre, by the Turks called Giustandil: a distinct Principate of it self in in the time of Amurath the first, and by him made tributary at his first War with this Country.

And here it is to be observed, that those parts of this Country which lie next to the Euxine Sea had anciently the name of Pontus, as had also some parts of Asia minor which bordered on the same Sea also; and that the City of Tomi, as Ptolemie, or Tomos, as Pliny calleth it, to which Ovid was banished by Augustus Cæsar, was a City of this European Pontus, and not of the Asian, as hath been commonly conceived. For Tomi is by Ptolemie placed amongst the Cities of Mœsia inferior ferior, and by Ovid on the West or left side of the Euxine, and not upon the South thereof, as appeareth by these Lines of his:

Cùm Maris Euxini positos ad læva Tomitas
Quærere me læsi Principis ira jubet.

That is to say;

My wronged Prince's Wrath commands me 'bide
At Tomos, on the Euxine's Western side.

The place is at this day called Tomiswar, according to Cælius Calcagninus: but others would have it to be the same which is now named Kiovia, in the same Tract also; not far from which is said to be a Lake called to this day Owidow Jezcocoor, the Lake of Ovid. For what cause he was hither banished is not yet agreed on. Some say it was for the unlawful Pleasures which he enjoyed with Julia the Emperours Daughter, whom he celebrates in his Amorum under the borrowed name of Corinna. Others imagine that he had seen Augustus himself unnaturally using the company of the same Julia, his Daughter; for which the offended Prince exiled him: and that he alludeth hereunto in his Book de Tristibus, saying, Cur aliquid vidi? cur noxia lumina feci? &c. A Crime of which I dare not think that noble Emperour to be any way guilty. But certain it is, that whatsoever was the true reason of it, that which was openly pretended was the writing of those lascivious and inflammatory Books de Arte amandi, tending to the Debauchment of Youth and Corruption of Manners, which he in divers places of his Works acknowledgeth for the cause thereof.

But to return unto the business of this Countrey. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were towards the East the Troglodytæ, dwelling near the Mouth or Fall of the River Peuce into the Euxine or Black Sea; the Peucini, inhabiting on the very Mouth of it; and in a little Island opposite thereunto, called also Peuce, now Pizina, the Cribizi, Piarensii and Dimensii, the Western parts being wholly taken up by the Triballi, the most potent Nation of them all, who alone had the happiness to vanquish Philip King of the Macedonians. For Philip having, or pretending, a Quarrel against Mataes a King of the Sarmatians, entred his Countrey, overthrew him in a set Fight; carried with him great Booties, and among other things 20000 Mares for Breed, which he took in the Battel; it being the Custom of the Scythians and Sarmatians to use Mares only in their Wars, because their not stopping in the midst of a Race to piss could be no impediment to them in their Flight. In his return homeward these Triballi deny him passage through their Countrey, unless they might partake of the Spoils. This being denied, they fall from words to blows, and next to a pitch'd Field. In which Fight Philip was wounded with an Arrow, which, passing through his thigh, nailed him to his Saddle; his Horse being galled with the Wound, falling down to the ground. Which the frighted Macedonians seeing, and supposing him dead, fled out of the Field, leaving all their Spoils to the Triballi, as if they had been sent out onely to be their Receivers. So true an Observation is it, that the very Life-blood of an Army runs chiefly in the Veins of the General or supreme Commander. Over-topped after this by the Mœsi, or mingled with them, they were first broken by the Romans under the Conduct of C. Curio Scribonius, spoken of before; the absolute Conquest of them and the rest of the Mœsians being reserved for the times of Augustus Cæsar. By him, or his Successors, the whole Countrey of the Mœsians being cast into two Provinces, this part of it had the name of Mœsia inferior, that, lying Westward up the Water, being called Mœsia superior, for distinction sake. By the Emperour Aurelianus the Dacians, being forced from the other side of the Danow by the Barbarous Nations, or by him prudently removed to avoid their Fury, were planted here betwixt both the Mysia's, divided afterwards into two Provinces taken out of the other, Mediterranea, and Ripensis; which, with the help of the higher Mysia, Dardania, Prævalitana, and part of Macedonia Salutaris, made up the whole Diocese of Dacia, as before was said. The residue hereof, now passing under the name of Bulgaria, was afterwards divided into two Provinces also; another Province being taken out of the East parts of the lower Mœsia, lying betwixt the River Phanissus and the most Northern Branch of the Ister, which they called Scythia, because the Aroteres, a Scythian People, did once possess it; the Romans ambitiously affecting to be thought the Conquerours of that unconquerable Nation. Successively by the Goths and Hunns was this Countrey taken from the Romans: recovered again in or before the time of Justinian, who had here his Officers which were subordinate to the Vicar or Lieutenant of Thrace, to which Diocese they properly and of right belonged.

But long they held not in that State; the Sclavonians first, and after the Bulgarians, being Masters of them. Of the first of these enough hath been said elsewhere. These later being a Scythian People, inhabiting on the Banks of the River Volga, were at first called Volgari, afterwards Bulgari: though some conceive they had the name of Bulgarians from Bulgar, the chief Town of their Nation: but both uncertain. In the time of the Emperour Anastasius they made their first Sally into the Provinces of the Empire, foraging Illyricum and Thrace: afterward, in the Reign of Heraclius, they were hired by Cosrhoes the Persian (with many other Barbarous Nations) to besiege Constantinople. In the Reign of Constantine surnamed Pogonatus, conquering or casting out the Sclaves, they planted themselves in these Countries; compelling the Emperour to compound with them for a sum of mony, from making any farther Inroad into his Dominions. From this time forward we find their Princes called by the name of Kings of the Bulgarians: the first of which after their settling in these parts was Trebellius, or Trebellis, as some call him, the first Christian Prince of the Bulgarians, by whom Justinian the Second was first restored unto the Empire, of which he had been outed by Absimarus; and afterwards well beaten by them, and forced to flie unto Constantinople, on some Breach between them. Growing into good terms with the Eastern Emperours, they aided them against the Saracens, then besieging the Imperial City; of whom they slew 22000 as they were foraging the Country: and in the time of Leo the fourth, called Porphyrogenetus, they became Homagers to the Empire, by whose perswasion Telericus King of the Bulgarians received the Sacrament of Baptism; and thereupon was honoured by him with a Wife of the Imperial Family, and the honourable Title of a Patrician. After this time the Kings hereof had many Privileges indulged them by the Constantinopolitans, not usually communicated unto other Princes, viz. their Crown of Gold, their Tiar or Cap of Silk, and their red Shooes, for their Regal (which were also the Imperial) Ornaments. To these Kings also, and to these only, did the Greek Emperours allow the Title of Βασιλεὺς, as being merely Imperial. Other Kings they called Ῥῆγες, from the Latine word Reges. Insomuch that when Basilius Macedo had received Letters from Pope Adrian the second, wherein Lewis the Second the Western Emperour was called Basileus; he rased out that Imperial Attribute, and dispatched an Embassie to Lewis, wherein he challenged it at his his own peculiar Epithet. Some Quarrels after falling out, Crunns the Bulgarian King, in the time of Nicephorus, Successor to the Empress Irene, invadeth Thrace, and, taking the City of Sardica, killeth that Emperour in his Tent, and worsteth Michael (who ſucceeded) in the open Field; Meſembria, a principal City of this Countrey, being taken and ranſacked by him. But Bogor, of another temper, not onely did receive the Sacrament of Baptiſm, which many of his Predeceſſors had intermitted; but brought his Subjects (who rebelled on the Change of Religion, and thereupon were fought with and vanquiſhed by him) to the ſame Faith alſo: gratified for that cauſe by Theodora the Empreſſe with ſome large Acceſſion unto his Eſtate. After long Wars betwixt the Bulgarians and the following Emperours, the Fortune of the Conſtantinopolitan did at laſt prevail: Samuel King of the Bulgarians being overthrown, 15000 of his Souldiers taken and deprived of ſight, and the Country conquered by Baſilius the ſecond, ſurnamed Porphyrogenetus, Anno 1015, from that time Tributary to the Empire; to which they did good ſervice in the time of Conſtantinus Ducas, uſing their Help againſt the Uzi, a new Swarm of Scythyans, paſſing over the Iſter with an Army of 60000 fighting men, and waſting Macedon and Greece. The like did John, another of the Kings thereof, aiding the Greeks againſt the Latines, whom they overthrew with a great Slaughter, Baldwin the Emperour of the Latines in Conſtantinople being taken Priſoner, ſent in Bonds to Ternova, and there cruelly murthered, Anno 1206. Nor were they wanting to aſſiſt them againſt the Turks, when they grew dangerous to that Empire by the taking of Adrianople: for the Recovery whereof they raiſed a great and puiſſant Army, unfortunately diſcomfitted by the Forces of Amurath the firſt Anno 1369. Provoked with which Invaſion, Amurath, having ſettled his Affairs in Aſia, with an army of 30000 falleth into Bulgaria; takes divers Places of importance, and prevailed ſo far, that Saſmenos the laſt Prince hereof, wrapping his Winding-ſheet about him, to ſhew that he had deſerved Death, proſtrates himſelf moſt abjectly at the Tyrant's feet, offering to put Siliſtria (his ſtrongeſt City) into his poſſeſſion. For not performance of which Offer, his Country is again invaded, and moſt part of it taken from him; he being permitted to enjoy the reſt upon hard Conditions, as Vaſſal and Tributary to the Turk. But Bajazet, Amurath's Succeſſor, not content herewith, picked a Quarrell with him, and made an abſolute Conqueſt of Bulgaria, converting it into a Province of the Turkiſh Empire, Anno 1396. In which ſtate it hath ever ſince continued, governed by three Turkiſh Sanzacks under the Beglerbeg of Greece: the Sanzacks reſiding at Nicopolis, Siliſtria, and Sophia, in which laſt the Beglerbeg himſelf doth ſometimes reſide.

There are in DACIA

Archbiſhops. Biſhops.

And ſo much for DACIA.

Mount Hæmus.

BEfore we enter into Greece, we muſt croſſe MOUNT HÆMUS, a Ridge of Hills extending from the Euxine Sea to the Adriatick, and thereby ſeparating Greece both from Dacia and Sclavonia. They are ſo high and Subject to the Weather, that Stratonicus, an old Grecian, did uſe to ſay, that eight moneths of the Year it was always cold, for the other four, Winter. It was affirmed by ſome of the ancient Writers, that from one of the higheſt Heads hereof as well the Adriatick as the Euxine might have been diſcerned: the truth of which report, upon very good reaſon, hath been called in queſtion. But out of doubt, from ſome one Top or Summit of it there is ſo full a Proſpect into Thrace and Macedon, that from hence Perſeus taking a ſurvey of the Site of theſe Countries, poſitis per abrupta Caſtris, &c. as the Storie hath it, was able to make choice of the fitteſt places for Forts and Caſtles, whereby to lock up all the paſſages againſt his Enemies the Romans. In the parts bordering upon Thrace it is ſo rough and craggy, that it is not to be paſſed but at two places onely. Whereof one was made by the Emperour Trajan, where is yet to be ſeen a mighty ſtrong Gate built of great ſqudre Stone, by which the Paſſage that way was either opned or ſhut at the pleaſure of them who had the keeping of the ſame, with a ſmall Force exceeding eaſily defended againſt puiſſant Armies. The other, being ſituate near a little River by the Bulgarians called Saltiza, not altogether ſo ſtreight and narrow as the other, but riſing high, and full of broken Rocks and dangerous Precipeces, is alike impaſſable; defenſible at eaſe, and without any great danger; as was experimentally found by the famous Huniades, when he attempted (but in vain) to have led his Forces this way for the Siege of Adrianople. Thoſe parts hereof which border upon Macedonia, though ſomewhat openet, are not much eaſier of aſcent; the Paſſages through the broken Rocks and Precipices being very difficult, and not eaſily maſtered: inſomuch that when Perſeus, the laſt King of Macedon, had fortified the Streights hereof againſt the Romans, non reliquiſſe aditum niſi è Cœlo venientibus videbatur, it was conceived (ſaith Florus) that there was no paſſage left for any Forces, unleſs they fell immediately from the Heavens themſelves.

This great and rockie Chain of Hills, as they were vehemently expoſed to Wind and Weather, ſo were they deſtitute of thoſe Commodities which were either comfortable, or indeed merely neceſſarie to the Life of man: which made the Paſſage over them in a manner impoſſible unto any Armies, but what were very patient both of Cold and Hunger. Yet were they not left deſolate and void of People, eſpecially in theſe ſides hereof which lay next to Greece; but moſt eſpecially in thoſe parts which bordered or confined on Thrace: where the Spurs and Branches of the Hils ſpreading far and wide and taking up a great part of the Country, occaſioned the Romans, in the Diviſion of the Dioceſe of Thrace into ſeveral Provinces, to call that part or Province of it which lay next to Mœſia by the name of Hæmimontum, or Hæmimontana. The principal Towns whereof were Adrianople, Uſcudama, and Anchialus: the principal Governour thereof being a Roman Preſident. Where, by the way, we may take notice of an Errour in the common Impreſſions of the Code, Lib. VII. Tit. 62. Leg. 23. where we find Hæmi montem, for Hæmimontum; the first being the name onely of the Mountain, and the latter (which is there meant) of the Roman Province.

But to return unto the Mountain. There is another of this name in Thessalie, mentioned (or mistook for this) by Servius in his Notes on the first Book of the Georgicks; on the Top whereof was said to be the Habitation of Mars, at the Bottom the most pleasant Valley of Tempe: so called from Hæmus, the Son of Boreas and Orithyia, amongst the Poets. And possibly, to distinguish this from that of Thessalie, Ptolemy and others call it Æmus, without the Aspirate: though it may as well be that there are others of this name, as that this is called in divers places or in divers Authours by other Names; one part hereof being called Scombrus by Aristotle, another Scombrus by Thucydides, and by Laonicus the whole called Prasobus. The like may be observed at the present also, Pinetus calling it by the name of Catena Mundi, a great part whereof it links together; Cuspinianus Costegnazzo, Lazius Kriviczne, the Italians Mont Argentaro, the French Monte de Castegnao, the Sclavonians Cumoniza, and the Turks Balkan. Which I have therefore here observed for the Reader's sake, that, meeting any of these names in the Stories either of the ancient or modern Times, he may know what Hills or Mountains are intended by them. Which said, I now pass on to Greece, the way being thus prepared and laid open to me.

OF GREECE.

GREECE, in the present Latitude and Extent thereof, is bounded on the East with the Propontick, Hellespont, and Ægean Seas; on the West with the Adriatick; on the North with Mount Hæmus, which parteth it from Bulgaria, Servia, and some part of Illyricum; and on the South with the Sea Ionian. So that it is in a manner a Peninsula or Demi-Island, environed on three sides by the Sea, on the fourth onely united to the rest of Europe.

But this is onely in relation to the present Extent hereof, the name being anciently restrained within narrower Bounds. Confined at first to Attica and the parts adjoyning; ab Isthmi angustiis Hellas incipit, as it is in Plinie: and it took the name of Hellas from Hellen, the Son of Deucalion; as that of Greece, or Græcia, from Græcus the Son of Cecrops, the first King of Athens. Communicated afterwards to Peloponnesus, [illegible] Thessalie also: and finally, when the Macedonian [illegible] had enlarged it self over the petit Commonwealths and Estates hereof, it came to be communicated to that Country also. The People for this cause are known by divers names, by some called Achivi, by others Myrmidones, sometimes Pelasgi, Danai, Argivi, &c. But the name whereby they are best known in Sacred Writers is that of Ἕλλωνες, so called from Hellas, the more proper and genuine name of Greece in the strictest notion and acception. A name used frequently and familiarly in the Book of God, both absolutely, to denote this Nation, as where it is said, σοφίαν Ἕλληνες ζητοῦσι, that the Greeks seek wisedom, 1 Cor. 1. 22. and relatively, as in opposition to the Jews the Barbarians, and Hellenists or Græcizing Jews. First with relation to the Jews, and then it signifieth the whole Body of the Gentiles generally, of which the Græcians were the most eminent and famous people as Ἰουδαίῳ τε πρῶτον καὶ Ἕλληνι to the Jew first, and also to the Gentiles, Rom. 2. 9, 10. Give none offence, οὔτε Ἰουδαίοις οὔτε Ἕλλησιν neither to the Jews nor to the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 10. 32. and elsewhere frequently. In which, and all other places of that kind, where the Antithesis lieth between the Jews and other Nations, we are to understand the Gentiles, the whole Body of them; though many times our Translators, I know not why, render it literally the Greeks, as Rom. 1. 16. and 10. 12. &c. 2ly. with reference to all other Nations not so well versed in the Learning and Civilities of that Age as the Græcians were, whom by a common name of scorn they called Barbarians: according unto that of Strabo, Barbaræ sunt omnes Nationes præter Græcos; the Romans themselves, though then the great Lords of the World, being included in the reckoning. And so the word is taken Rom. 1. 14. I am a Debtor, saith S. Paul, Ἕλλησί τε καὶ βαρβάροις both to the Greeks and the Barbarians, to the wise and unwise; in which as well the Romans, as those of other Nations, have the name of Barbarians. Last of all, for the Græcizing Jews, whom the Vulgar Latine called Græcos, and our English Græcians: they were such of the Jews who, living dispersed amongst the Gentiles, used the Translation of the Septuagint, making that the Canon both for Life and Doctrine. which difference betwixt them and the Jews inhabiting in Judæa, who kept themselves unto the Scriptures in their Mother-tongue, and used the Hebrew onely in all Sacred actions, occasioned many Jars amongst them, which sometimes brake out into open Violence; insomuch as R. Eliezer brake into the Synagogue of the Alexandrians at Hierusalem, and therein committed many Outrages. Of this Unfriendliness between them mention is made Act. 6. 1. where it is said, that there arose a murmuring of the Græcians against the Hebrews, &c. In which place, though the English and Vulgar Latine use the name of Græcians, yet ought they more properly to be rendred Hellenists, or Græcizing Jews, as in all other places, viz. Acts 9. 29. and 11. 20. &c. where they are called Ἑλληνισταί, and not Ἕλληνες, in the Greek Originals.

But to proceed to our Discription of the Country: we find it situate in the Northern Temperate Zone, under the fifth and sixth Climates, the longest Day being 15 hours; inhabited by a People which were once brave men of War, sound Scholars, addicted to the love of Vertue and civil Behaviour; a Nation once so excellent, that their Precepts and Examples do still remain as approved Rules and Tutors, to instruct and direct the man that endeavoureth to be vertuous: famous for Government, affectors of Freedom, every-way noble. For which Vertues in themselves, and want of them in others, all their Neighbours and remote Nations were by them scornfully called Barbarians barians: a name now most fit for the Græcians themselves, being an unconstant People, destitute of all Learning, and the means to obtain it, Universities; uncivil, riotous, and so lazie, that for the most part they endeavour their Profit no farther then there Belly compells them; and so perfidious withall in all their Dealings, especially towards the Western Christians, that it is grown into a Proverb amongst the Italians, Chi fida in Grego, sara intrigo, i. e. He that trusts to a Greek is sure to be couzened. When they meet at Feasts or Banquets, they drink small Draughts at the beginning; which by degrees they increase, till they come to the height of Intemperancy: at which point when they are arrived, they keep no rule or Order; whereas before to drink out of one's turn was accounted a point of Incivility. Hence as I believe, sprung our By-word, As merry as a Greek, and the Latine word Græcari.

The Women for the most part are brown-complexioned, exceedingly-well-favoured, and excessively amorous. Painting they use very much, to keep themselves in grace with their Husbands; for when they once grow wrinkled, they are put to all the Drudgeries of the House. Both Sexes generally in their Habit and outward Garb apply themselves to the State under which they live; such as are subject to the Turk conforming unto the Dress and Fashions of the Turks, as those who live under the Venetians do to that of Venice.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by S. Paul, invited by the Spirit to come over into Macedonia, Acts 16. 9, 12. passing from thence to Thessalonica, the chief City of Mygdonia, ch. 17. 1. from thence to Athens in Achaia, v. 15, 16. then unto Corinth, the Metropolis of Peloponnesus, ch. 18. 1. watering the greatest part of Greece with the Dew of Heaven, and planting Bishops in most Churches where he preached the Gospel; as Dionysius (the Areopagite) at Athens, Aristarchus at Thessalonica, Epaphroditus at Philippi, Silas at Corinth, and Titus in the Isle of Crete. The like he did in many other Countreys also accounted Members of the Greek Church, though not of Greece. the name of the Greek Church extending over all the Provinces of the Eastern Empire, governed by the 4 Patriarchs, 1. of Alexandria, who presided over Ægypt and Arabia; 2. of Hierusalem, whose Patriarchate (erected onely in regard of our Saviour's Passion in that City, and the great opinion which by that means accrued unto it) confined within the Bounds of Palæstine; 3. of Antioch, whose Jurisdiction contained all Syria, Armenia, Cilicia, and the Isle of Cyprus, and whatsoever else was within the Diocese of the Orient; and 4. of Constantinople, to whose charge were committed all the other Provinces of the Greek Church, as Greece, Russia, Dacia, Sclavonia, part of Poland, and all the Illands in the Adriatick, Ionian and Ægean Seas, together with all Asia minor, and the Isles thereof, (except onely the Provinces of Cilicia and Isauria) and the Countreys lying on both sides of Pontus Euxinus and Palus Mæotis. The reasons of the large increase of whose Jurisdiction, confined at first within the Diocese of Thrace, were, 1. the reputation of being Seated in the Imperial City, which drew after it (by a Decree of the Council of Chalcedon) all the Provinces of Asia, minor, (Cilicia and Isauria excepted onely;) 2. the voluntary submission of the Græcians upon their Separation from the Church of Rome. by which all Greece, Macedon, Epirus, the Isle of Crete, and all the Islands in the Ægean and Ionian Seas, which formerly had no Superiour but their own Primate, the Archbishop of Thessalonica, became subject unto them; 3. the diligence of the Patriarch hereof in converting by his Suffragan Bishops and other Ministers the Russians, Bulgarians and Sclavonians, to the Faith of Christ, which made those people to look upon Constantinople as their Mother-Church; and 4. the Piety and Care of the later Patriarchs, in supplying with new Pastors and Ministers those parts and Provinces of the West which, being conquered by the Turk, had been forsaken by their old Clergy and left like Sheep without a Shepherd.

And yet this Church, though thus extended and enlarged in the outward Members, is very much streightned and impaired at home; the Country being thinly peopled, and many of those people trained up from their infancy in the Mahometan Law. So that it is a greater wonder that there should be any remainders of Christianity left amongst them, then that the open Professors of it should be so few; the Tyrannie of the Turks on the one side, and the Temptations of Preferment upon the other, being rightly pondered. For who could look to finde twenty Churches of Christians in Constantinople the Seat and ordinary Residence of the Turkish Emperours? or that in Salonichi, or Thessalonica, there should be 30 Christian Churches, and but three Turkish Mosquits? that the Primate of this Salonichi, should have under him 10 Suffragan Bishops, whereof he of Philippi hath no fewer than 150 Churches under his Jurisdiction? or, finally, that under the Metropolitans of Athens and Corinth there should be as many? So mercifully hath God dealt with this luxurious and perfideous People, as not to take away their Candlestick, though he hath darkned and obscured the Light thereof.

As for the Fathers of this Church, anciently and at this present held in most esteem, they were no other then such as had been Bishops of the greater Sees. That is to say, 1. S. Chrysostome, first a Reader of Antioch, afterwards Patriarch of Constantinople: 2. Basil, and the two Gregories, 3. Nyssen, and 4 Nazianzen; all in Asia minor; this last of Constantinople also: 5, 6. the two Cyrills; the one Patriarch of Alexandria, the other of Hierusalem: 7. Epiphanius, Bishop of Salamis in the Isle of Cyprus: 8. Theodoret, Bishop of Cyprus, &c. Men of renown and precious memory amongst them to this very day. From whose Writings if they deviate in any material Point of Doctrine, it is in that of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, which they grant to be per Filium, but not à Filio. And though Clichtovius, Lombard, and other moderate men of the Church of Rome, do grant the difference to be rather in modo explicandi, quàm in ipsa re; and that the clause à Filióque was added by the Romanists to the ancient Creeds, the Græcians not being privy nor consenting to it: yet so uncharitable is that Church towards these poor men, languishing under the Tyrannie of Turkish Thraldome, as to persecute them with Reproach and Scorn, brand them for Schismaticks and Apostates, and solemnly to anathematize them in Bulla Cœnæ every Maundy-Thursday. And it is a very hard measure to adde, and anathematize too; as is right well observed by the late Lord Arch Bishop of Canterbury, in his notable Discourse against the Jesuite. Other particular Tenets in which the Greek Church differeth from the Romish and Reformed (as in some Points it doth from both) have been already specified in our Discription of Russia: the Churches of the Greeks and Moscovites differing in no material Points, but, 1. the manner of distributing the Sacrament; 2. the exacting of Marriage by the Moscovite in the party admitted unto Orders; 3. the frequent admitting of Divorces upon light occasions; and 4 and finally, in being less strict in observing the Lent before Easter then in any of the other three. For whereas the Græcians account it a damnable sin to eat Flesh or Fish which hath blood in it, in any of their other Lents or times of Abstinence; (they have in both Churches four in all) in that before Easter, which of all reason ought to be kept most most punctually, the Laiety eat all sorts of Fish without any exception, the Bloud of some of which, as the Cuttle by name, is held to be a delicate Food, and in great request.

The Language they spake was of their own, of which there were four Dialects; viz. 1. the Attick, 2. the Dorick, 3. the Æolick, 4. the Ionick; besides the common phrase of speech most in use among them. A Language of great fame for the Liberal Arts, but more for so great a part of the Holy Scripture first delivered in it: and for the lofty Sound, significant Expressions, genuine Suavity, and happy composition of words, so excelling all others, that even in the flourishing of the Roman Empire it so much overtopped the Latine, that the Histories of Rome it self (as by Polybius, Appian, Dion and Cassius) were written in it. It was once also the general Language of Anatolia, some parts of Italy, Provence in France, and almost all the Islands of the Mediterranean. But now, partly by the mutilation of some words and contraction of others, partly by confusion of the true sound of Vowels, Diphthongs and consonants, and the translating of the Accents, and finally, by the admixture of forein Nations it is not onely fallen from its natural Elegancy, but from its largeness of extent. For it is now shut up within the Limits of Greece, and the Sea-coast of the lesser Asia opposite unto it; and there not onely much corrupted, but almost quite devoured by the Turkish and Sclavonian Tongues; but specially by that which they call Franco, a mungrell Language, composed of Italian, French, and some Spanish words, used as the ordinary Speech for Commerce and intercourse betwixt Christians, Jews, Turks, and the Greeks themselves, who do not understand, and much less speak, the true genuine Greek. So that although they still retain for ordinary days S. Chrysostom's Liturgie, and that of S. Basil for the Festivals: yet being both written in the ancient and learned Greek, they are no more understood by the Vulgar Græcian, then the Latine Service by the common and illiterate Papist.

The Soil questionless is very fruitfull, and would yield great profit to the Husbandman, if they would take pains in the tilling: but they, knowing nothing certainly to be their own, but all things subject to the Grand Seigniour and his Souldiers, neglect the Tillage of their Lands, on the same grounds with those who said in the Poet's Eclogues.

Impius hæc tam culta novalia Miles habebit?
Barbarus has segetes? En quis consevimus Arva!

Shall misbelieving Turks these Acres spoil,
Which I manur'd with so much Cost and Toil?
Shall they enjoy my care? See, neighbours, see
For whom these goodly Corn-fields tilled be!

The more natural and certain Commodities which they transport into other parts are Wines, which, in memory of the Water which our Saviour turned into wine, and on the sixth day of January, being that day whereon this Miracle was wrought, they use to baptize: for which cause the Jews will drink none of them. They send also into other parts of the World Oil, Copper, Vitriol, some Gold and Silver, Velvet, Damasks, Turkie-Grograms, &c.

This Country hath formerly been famous for the brave Commanders, Miltiades, Aristides and Themistocles of Athens, Lisander and Agesilaus of Sparta, Pelopidas, and Epaminondas of Thebes, Aratus and Philopœmen of Achaia, Pyrrhus of Epirus, Philip of Macedon, the Subverter of the Græcian Liberty, and Alexander his Son, (to omit infinite others) the Subverter of the Persian Monarchy; for the divine Philosophers, Plato, Socrates, Aristotle and Theophrastus; for the most eminent Law-givers, Solon and Lycurgus; for the most exquisite Poets, Hesiodus, Homer, Sophocles and Aristophanes; for the famous Historiographers, Xenophon the Condisciple of Plato, Thucydides, Plutarch and Herodotus; for the eloquent Orators, Æschines, Demosthenes and Isocrates; and, lastly, for the Authors and Establishers of all humane Learning whatsoever, onely the Mathematicks excepted.

The cheif Rivers are, 1. Cephisus, which, arising in the Frontiers of Epirus, disburtheneth it self into the Ægæan Sea. 2. Erigon, and 3. Aliacmon; which, beginning their course in the more Northen parts of Macedon, end it in Thermaicus Sinus. 4. Strymon in Mygdonia. 5. Athyras, and 6. Nesus, in Thrace. 7. Stymphalus, where Hercules killed the Stymphalian Birds. 8. Ladon, in Arcadia. 9. Inachus, whose Daughter Io, turned into a Heifer, was worshipped by the Ægyptians under the name of Isis. 10. Achelous, in Epirus, much celebrated by the ancient Poets, especially by Ovid in his Metamorphosis. As is also 11. Peneus, the cheif River of Thessaly, and there arising from Mount Pindus, and increased with the waters of many Rivers. Daphne the Nymph, whom Apollo is fabled to have loved, and turned into a Bay-tree, lived near or on the Banks of this River Peneus, and is therefore said to be his Daughter: as Io above mentioned was the Daughter of Inachus. Of less note, Populifer 11, Sperchius, & irrequietus 12. Enipeus, 13. Apidanusque senex, lenisque 14. Amphrysus, & 15. Æas.

That is to say,
Cool Sperchius, Enipeus that troubled ran,
Smooth Amphryse, Æas, and old Apidan.

The rest of less note, and the most eminant Mountains in each part hereof, shall be remembred in their places, as we see occasion.

Thus much of the whole Countrey in gross. And as for the Division of it with reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained in a manner two whole Dioceses, viz. Thrace, and Macedon: the first under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis, the latter (together with that of Dacia) under the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum. Of these the Diocese of Macedon, lying wholly within the Bounds of the modern Greece, contained the Provinces of Macedonia Prima, 2. Macedonia Secunda, or Salutaris, (now, as in former times, called Albania) 3. Epirus Nova, taking up the Countreys of Phocis, Locris, and so much of the Old Epirus as was on that side of the River Achelous, 4. Old Epirus, comprehending all the rest of that Countrey, 5. Thessaly, 6. Achaia, containing all Achaia and Peloponnesus, the Countreys of Locris and Phocis excepted onely, and 7. Crete or Candie, with the Islands adjoyning. And for the Diocese of Thrace, it was divided into the Provinces of, 1. Thrace specially so called, 2. Europa, 3. Rhodope, 4. Hæmimontum, 5. Mœsia Inferior, and 6. Scythia: of which the four first make up the Body of Thrace, and shall there be spoken of; the two last, being comprehended in the modern Dacia, have been described already in their proper places. But not to bind my self precisely unto this Division, (though I shall look on this as occasion serveth) I shall consider Greece in the several Provinces of, 1. Peloponnesus, 2. Achaia, 3. Epirus, 4. Albania, 5. Macedon, 6. Thrace, 7. the Islands of the Propontick, 8. Ægæan, and 9. the Ionian Seas, and 10. finally the Isle of Crete.

1. PELOPONNESUS.

PELOPONNESUS is bounded on the East with the Cretan, on the West with the Adriatick or Ionian Seas, on the North-east with Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia, on the North-west with Sinus Corinthiacus, now Golfo di Patras or Lepanto, and on the South with the Mediterranean. So that it is almost an Island, properly called a Peninsula, rounded with the Sea, except where it is tied to the main Land of Greece by an Isthmus six miles in breadth, which the Grecians and Venetians fortified with a great Wall and five Castles. This Wall was called anciently Hexamilium, and was overthrown by Amurath the Second, who harassed and spoiled all the Countrey. It was afterwards in the year 1453, upon the rumour of a War, built up again by the Venetians (who then had the greatest part of this Countrey) in 15 dayes; there being for that time 30000 men employed in the work. This Wall extended from one Sea unto the other; which, had it been as gallantly guarded as it was hastily made up, or as it was well fortified had it been as well manned, might easily have resisted the Turks, until more means had been thought on to defend it. Not less observable, but more fruitless, was the Design of some in the elder times, to cut through this Isthmus, and make a perfect Island of it. It was attempted by Demetrius King of Macedon, Julius Cæsar, and Caius Caligula; by none more eagerly pursued then by the Emperour Nero, who, to hearten his Souldiers, loth to attempt so fruitless an Enterprise, took a Spade in hand, and busily began the work. Yet at last the Souldiers, being frighted with the Bloud which abundantly broke forth, with the Groans and Roarings which they continually heard, and with the Hobgoblins and Furies which were always in their sight, perswaded the Emperour, now half out of the humour, to leave this, and enjoyn them some more profitable Service. It was also given over by the former Princes on the like Discouragements. But of this Isthmus we shall add no more then these words of Ovid, and so pass forwards to the Description of the Countrey; that is to say,

Æquora bina suis oppugnant fluctibus Isthmon,
Et tenuis Tellus audet utrumque Mare.

Which may be thus Englished;

Two Seas assault the Isthmus with th ir Waves,
And that thin Neck of Land both Seas out-braves.

As for this Countrey of Peloponnesus, it is in compass 600 miles, and was called at first Ægialia, from Ægialus the first King of Sicyon; next Apia, from Apis the fourth King; after that Sicyonia, from Sicyon the 19 King thereof: and finally Peloponnesus, from Pelops the Son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, and Νῆσος, Insula, the word signifying as much as the Isle of Pelops. But it is now of late called Morea; and that à Maurorum Incursionibus, from the Incursions of the Moors, as Mercator thinketh: but by the Moors he means the Saracens, as some others also do.

It is conceived to be the most pleasant Countrey in all Greece, abounding in all things necessary for the Life of man; and in such also as do serve for Delicacy and Contentment only: adorned with many goodly Plains, swelled with fruitful Hills, well stored with Ports and Havens on all sides thereof. And though no Countrey in the World, for the bigness of it, hath suffered in the Ruine of so many brave and stately Cities; yet is it still the most populous and best inhabited of all the Continent of Greece. Near the middle of it, in Laconia, is the Mount Taygetus, from the top whereof there was no City of note in all this Peninsula but might easily be seen. A most gallant Prospect. The whole was divided commonly into these seven Provinces; 1. Achaia propria. 2. Elis. 3. Messene. 4. Arcadia. 5. Laconia. 6. Argolis. and 7. Corinthia.

1. ACHAIA propria is bounded on the East with Argolis and Corinthia, on the West with the Ionian Sea, on the North with Sinus Corinthiacus or the Gulf of Lepanto, on the South with Elis. So called from the Achæi, the Inhabitants of it; the Adjunct propria being added to difference it from Achaia in the Continent or Mainland of Greece.

Places of most consideration in it are, 1. Dyme, situate in the most Western point of it, in or near the Promontory called Araxus. The Town is now called Chiarenza, and the Promontory Cabo di Chiarenza. Not far from which is another Promontory or Head-land, of old called Rhium, opposite to another in Ætolia that was called Antirrhium, divided by a very narrow Streight or Fretum, which openeth into the Bay of Corinth; fortified on each side with a Castle for defence thereof, commonly called Castelli di Lepanto: both built and fortified by Bajazet the second, when he had finished the Conquest of Peloponnesus, to secure the entrance of this Bay; both taken and demolished by Andrew Doria, Lord Admiral to Charles the V. to lay the Bay open to the Christians; and finally, both within few years recovered and repaired by Solyman the Magnificent, as they still continue. 2. Ægium, where Jupiter is said to have been nursed by a Goat, whence it had the name; Αἴξ in Greek signifying a Shee-Goat: once a strong Town, now ruined and destroyed by the Turks; called at this day Vostiza, or Bostizan. 3. Ægira, once the chief City of all this Tract, situate on a steep and inaccessible Hill; now a small Village, called Xylocastro. 4. Olenus, so named from Olenus the Son of Jupiter and Anaxithea, now called Chaminisa. 5. Patræ, situate at the very Mouth of the Gulf, opposite to Lepanto. First called Aroe, but being by one Patreus enlarged and walled, took the name of Patræ, which name it holdeth to this day, being still called Patras; the Town of most note on the bay of Corinth, which is called from hence Golfo di Patras. A Town of good Trade, and much frequented not long since by the English Merchants, who had here their Consul, called the Consul of Morea: but formerly more memorable for the death of S. Andrew the Apostle, who here suffered Martyrdom. 6. Pellene, distant from the Sea about 60 Furlongs: the people whereof being constant to their old Fashions of Apparel, occasioned the Proverb of Pellenica vestis, applied to old Cloths out of Fashion. Here were once also the two Cities of 7. Helice, and 8. Buris, sunk by the violence of a Tempest into the bottom of the Sea, about the time of the Battel of Leuctra. Not to say any thing of 9. Tritæa, and 10. Phera, two other Towns hereof, of note in the former times; so little now remaining of them, as if they had been sunk at the same time also.

But the chief Town of all this Province (if not a Province of it self) is Sicyon, situate not far from the Isthmus, in the most Eastern parts hereof, and giving to the Territory or adjoyning Countrey (as once unto the whole Peninsula) the name of Sicyonia. The Territory is rich, especially in Olives, and Works of Iron; the City the most ancient of all Greece, built within little time of the general Flood and restauration of mankind. First called Ægialia, after Sicyonia, by the name of the first and nineteenth King hereof; by whom and their Successors it was much adorned and beautified with Temples, Altars, Statues and Images of their several Gods: the ancientest Kingdom in the World, the Assyrian and Ægyptian excepted only, only, and perhaps not those. It took beginning in the person of Ægialeus, within 150 years after the Deluge, and 200 years before the death of Noah; continuing in a Race of Princes who swayed the Affairs of Peloponnesus, till overtopped by the growth and good fortune of the Kings of Argos. The names of whom, by reason of the undoubted Antiquity of this Kingdom, I shall here subjoyn in the ensuing Catalogue of the last King of Sicyon. After whose death, A. M. 2812, the Estate hereof was governed by the Priests of Apollo, seven of them successively one after another: the first five, only years apiece; Amphictyon, who was the sixth, continuing 9 years in the Regency, and Charidemus, the last of them, ruling 18 years. After whose death, or departure, I know not which, A. M. 2844, the Heraclidæ, who about that time returned into Peloponnesus, made themselves Masters of this Countrey; there being no Kings of Sicyon from this time forwards.

The Kings of SICYON.

2391	13. Marathon.	2791	26. Zeuxippus,

Of these Kings the most memorable were Ægialeus and Apis, the first and fourth, from whom this Peninsula had the names of Apia and Ægialia; Ægirus, the 6 giving name and being to the City Ægira spoken of before; Marathon, the 13. of whom perhaps the famous Fields of Marathon (in the other Achaia) took denomination; Epopeus, the 17. who founded a Temple to Minerva, and therein placed his own Monument or Trophies; Sicyon, the 19. the Founder of the City Sicyon, or at least the Repairer and Enlarger of it; Pelasgus, the 25. from whom perhaps the Græcians might be called Pelasgi, if not known formerly by that name. After this time I find no man of note who bare sway in Sicyon, till the time of Aratus, the special Ornament of this Town, (of which a Native) and one of the principal Establishers of the Achæan Commonwealth against the Spartans and Macedonians; of which more hereafter in the general History of Peloponnesus.

2. The Countrey of ELIS hath on the East Arcadia, on the West the Ionian Sea, on the North Achaia propria, on the South Messenia. The chief Cities are, 1. Elis, which gives name to the whole Province. So called from Elisha the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who fixt himself in these parts of this Countrey, where he built this City, calling it by his own name, as his posterity in honour of him did the Isles adjoyning, mentioned in the Prophet Ezekiel by the name of the Isles of Elisha, ch. 27. v. 7. Nigh to this City runneth the River Alpheus, of which we have spoken in Sicilia: and in this City reigned the King Augeas, the cleansing of whose Stable is accounted one of the Wonders or twelve Labours performed by Hercules. 2. Olympia, famous for the Statue of Jupiter Olympius, one of the seven Wonders, being in height 60 Cubits, composed by that excellent Workman Phidias of Gold and Ivory. In honour of this Jupiter were the Olympick Games instituted by Hercules, and celebrated on the Plains of this City, A. M. 2757. The Exercises in them were for the most part bodily, as Running in Chariots, Running on Foot, Wrestling, Fighting with the Whorlbats, and the like. But so that there repaired thither also Oratours, Poets, and Musicians, and all that thought themselves excellent in any laudable quality, to make triall of their several Abilities: the very Criers, who proclaimed the Victories, contending which should cry loudest, and best play his part. The Rewards given to the Victour were only Garlands of Palm, or such slight remembrances; and yet the Greeks no less esteemed that small Sign of conquest and Honour, then the Romans did their most magnificent Triumphs: those which were Conquerours herein being met by all the principal men in the City in or under which they lived, and a passage broken in the main Walls thereof for their reception; as if the ordinary Gates were not capable of so high an Honour, or able to afford them entrance. Insomuch that when Diagoras had seen his three Sons crowned for their several Victories, a Friend of his came to him with this Gratulation, Morere, Diagora, nunquam enim in Cœlum ascensurus es, that is to say, Die now, Diagoras, for thou shalt never go to Heaven: as if no greater Happiness could befall the man either in this life or that to come, then that which he enjoyed already. The Judges and Presidents of these Games were some of the Citizens of Elis, deputed to it; highly commended for their Justice and Integrity in pronouncing who best deserved without Partiality. Of these thus Horace in his Odes:

Sunt quos Curriculo pulverem Olympicum
Collegisse juvat; Metáque fervidis
Evitata Rotis, Palmâque nobilis
Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.

Quos Elæa domum reducit
Palma cœlestes.

That is to say,
Some in Olympick Dust take pride
Their Chariots and themselves to hide;
Whom the shunn'd Mark, and Palm so priz'd,
Like to the Gods hath eterniz'd.

Such as like Heav'nly Wights do come
With an Elæan Garland home.

But to proceed, after the death of Hercules these Games were discontinued for 430 years: at which time one Iphitus, warned so to do by the Oracle of Apollo, renewed them, causing them to be solemnly exercised every fourth year: from which Custom Olympias is sometimes taken for the space of 4 years; as quinque annorum Olympiades for 20 years. Varro reckoneth the times before the Floud to be Obscure; those before the Olympiads, and after the Floud, to be Fabulous; but those that followed these Olympiads to be Historical. These Olympiads were of long time, even from the restauration of them by Iphitus untill the Reign of the Emperour Theodosius, the Græcian Epoche, by which they reckoned their Account: the first of them being placed in the year of the World 3174, before the building of Rome 40 years; the last in the 440. year after Christ's Nativity. According to which reckoning this Account continued for the space of 1214 years; the memory of which remains, though the name of Olympia be not found in Peloponnesus; the Town at this day being called by the name of Scouri. 3. Pisa, whose people followed Nestor to the Wars of Troy; and in their return were by Tempest driven to the Coasts of Italy, where they built the City Pisa in Tuscany. 4. Tornese, a new Town, or the new new name of some ancient City; from whence the adjoyning Promontory, of old called Chelonites, is now called Cabo di Tornese.

3. MESSENIA hath on the East Arcadia, on the North Elis, on the South and West the Sea. It takes its name from the Metropolis Messene, situate on Sinus Messeniacus, now called Golfo di Corone. 2. Pylos, where Nestor was King, now called Navarino; a desolate and poor Village not worth the noting. Of which thus Ovid speaking in the name of Penelope;

Nos Pylon, antiqui Neleïa Nestoris arva,
Misimus; incerta est reddita fama Pylo.
To Pylon, aged Nestor s Seat, we sent;
But could not hear from thence how matters went.

3. Modon, or Methone, seated in the most Southern part of this Peninsula, from whence unto the Isthmus which joyneth it to the rest of Greece are reckoned 175 Italian miles. The Town is commodiously seated in a Demi-Island, washed on the one side with the Sea, and so well fortified toward the Land, that in the opinion of most men it is thought impregnable; adorned on the South-side with a large and capacious Bay, about 3 miles wide, secure from all Winds except the North, and shut up with a little Island called anciently Oenussa, but now Sapienza, which makes it one of the safest Harbours in all these Seas. It was possessed once by the State of Venice, but conquered by the Turk, after many sharp and fierce Assaults, Anno 1500, both Pylus and Corone yielding on the noise thereof. The best Retreat since that time of the Turkish Navies, and the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Sanzack, who hath the Government of this whole Province of Morea under the Beglerbeg of Greece. 4. Corone, or Coron, the chief Town on the Bay of Messene, called from hence Golfo di Corone, and the last which held out against the Turks for the State of Venice, once Lords of all the Sea-coast of Peloponnesus. 5. Cyparissi, now called Arcadia, from whence the Bay adjoyning hath the name of Golfo di Arcadia. Here is also the Promontory called of old Coryphasium, now Cabo Zunchi.

The people of this small Province had once a great sway in the whole Peninsula. At first they were confederate with the Spartans in so strict a League, that they mutually sent young Virgins to one another for their publick Sacrifices: but afterwards Corrivals with them for the supreme Power. The Spartans, at the last getting the upper hand of them, oppressed them with a miserable Servitude. The occasion this: In the Confines of this Country stood a Temple of Diana, common alike to the Messenians, Spartans, and Dores. It happened that some Spartan Virgins were by the Messenians here ravished: which abuse the Spartans pretended to be the ground of their War; the true reason indeed being their Covetousness of the sole Empire. This War broke out three several times. The first continued twenty years: in which space the Lacedæmonians, fearing their Absence would hinder the supply of Children in the City, sent a company of their ablest young men home to accompany their Wives. Their Off-spring were called Parthenii, who, coming to full growth, abandoned Sparta, sailed into Italy, and there built Tarentum. The second, being of 23 years continuance, was raised and maintained by Aristomenes, one of the chief men of the Messenians; in which they prospered till Aristocrates, King of Arcadia, one of their Confederates, revolted to side with Lacedæmon. Then began they to decline, and Aristomenes was thrice taken Prisoner, still miraculously escaping. His last Imprisonment was in a Dungeon, where by chance espying a Fox devouring a dead body, he caught hold of her Tail. The Fox running away, guided Aristomenes after; till the straightness of the Hole by which he went out made him leave his hold, and fall to scraping with his Nails: which exercise he never left till he had made the Hole passable, and so escaped; and having a while upheld his falling Country, died in Rhodes. The third War was like Drops after a Tempest; in which the Messenians being finally subdued, were forced to abandon their Country, or become Slaves unto the Spartans, who put them to all Drudgeries and servile works; as they did the Helots, whom they counted as their Bondmen. And to this life some of them did apply themselves with so much Obsequiousness, that at last it grew into a Proverb, Messenâ servilior, that such a one was more servile, or more slavishly used, than these poor Messenians. But the greatest part of them, not brooking that heavie Yoke, passed into Sicily, and there built the City of Messana. Others were planted in Naupactum, by the State of Athens; the rest dispersed up and down in all parts of Greece: few of them left in their own Country, till Epaminondas, having vanquished the Lacedæmonians at the Battel of Leuctra, restored them to their ancient Possessions.

4. ARCADIA hath on the East Laconia, on the West Elis and Messene, on the North Achaia propria, and on the South the Sea. This Country took its name from Arcas, the Son of Jupiter and Calisto; but was formerly caled Pelasgia: the people whereof thought themselves more ancient than the Moon.

Orta priùs Lunâ, de se si creditur ipsi,
A magno tellus Arcade nomen habet.
The Land which of great Arcas took its name
Was e're the Moon, if we will credit Fame.

The chief Cities are; 1. Mantinea, nigh unto which the Theban Army, consisting of 30000 Foot and 3000 Horse, routed the Army of the Spartans and Athenians, consisting of 25000 Foot and 2000 Horse. In this Battel Epaminondas, that famous Leader, received his death's wound, and not long after died. At his last Gaspe one of his Friends bemoaning his untimely death, Alas, said he, thou diest, Epaminondas, and leavest behind thee no Children. Nay, replied he, two Daughters will I leave behind me, the Victory of Leuctra, and this other at Mantinea. It was afterward called Antigonia, in honour of Antigonus, Tutour or Protector of Philip, the Father of Perseus, King of Macedon; but by command of the Emperour Adrian restored to its old name again, and is now called Mantegna. 2. Megalopolis, the Birth-place of Polybius, that excellent Historian. The one half of it had sometimes the name of Orestia, from the lodging of Orestes in it: the whole is now called Leontari, on what cause I know not. 3 Phialia, towards the Sea. 4. Psophis, so called from Psophis, one of the Sons of Lycaon, once King of this Country, slain by Jupiter. 5. Stymphalus, situate near a Lake and River of the same name, where Hercules slew the Stymphalian Birds; so great in number and in body, that they darkened the Sun-beams, and terribly infested this little Province, till driven thence by Hercules. Here was also in this Town a Temple dedicated to Minerva, from hence called Stymphalida. 6. Tegea, famous for the Temple of Pan here worshipped, and from hence called Tegæus: more for the War made upon the Tegeates, or people hereof, by the Lacedæmonians; who, thinking themselves assured of Victory, brought with them store of Chains and Fetters, wherewith to lead captive their conquered Enemies; but, being overcome in Battel, were themselves bound with them, and forced as Slaves to till the Grounds of these Tegeates. Here is also in this Country the famous River Styx, whose water, for the poisonous taste, was called the water of Hell; by which Poets feign that the Gods use to swear, as may be every where observed; and that what God soever swore by Styx falsly, he was banished from Heaven, and prohibited Nectar for 1000 years.

This Country, for the fitness of it for Pasturage and Grazing, hath made it the subject of many worthy and witty Discourses, especially that of Sir Philip Sidney, of whom I cannot but make honourable mention: a Book which, besides its excellent Language, rare Contrivances, and delectable Stories, hath in it all the Strains of Poesie, comprehendeth the universal Art of speaking, and, to them which can discern and will observe, affordeth notable Rules for Demeanour, both private and publick. Which noble Gentleman, as he may worthily be called the English Heliodore, so the ingenious Author of the History of Melintus and Ariana may deservedly be called the French Sidney.

5. LACONIA is bounded on the West with Arcadia, on the East and South with the Sea, on the North with Argolis. Called first Lelegia, from the Leleges, by Strabo said to be the first Inhabitants of it; afterwards Oebalia, from Oebalus a King of Lacedæmon; and finally Laconia, of the Lacones who succeeded the Leleges in the possession hereof, on their removal into the Islands of the lesser Asia. It is by some Writers also called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities which it once had in it.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, and the Fields very spacious; yet for the most part not well tilled, in regard of the many Hills and Mountains which overthwart it. Well watered with the River Eurotas, and memorable for many fair Bays and Promontories: of which the principall are the Promontories of Malea and Tænaria, now called Cabo Malio and Cabo Matapan; and of the Bays, that called Golfo di Colochina, the Sinus Laconicus of the Ancients, into which the River Eurotas (now better known by the name of Vasilipotamo, or the Kingly River) pours his gentle Streams. The nature of the People we shall find in Sparta.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Leuctra, situate on the Sea-side, near the Bay of Messene: of which name were two others in Greece, the one in Arcadia, the other in Achaia; but this last most memorable. 2. Amyclæ, so called from Amyclas, the third King of Sparta, by whom it was first founded: renowned afterwards for the Birth of Castor and Pollux, the Sons of Tyndarus; and of good note for being the Foundress of the City of Amyclæ in Calabria Superior, at first a Colony of this: distant from Lacedæmon about 20 Furlongs. 3. Thalamæ, nigh to which is the Lake of Lerna, where Hercules slew the Monster Hydra; and not far off Mount Taygetus, near the Promontory Tænaria, in which the Natives shew a Cave, (believed in former times to be the Descent into Hell) out of which the Poets feign that Cerberus was dragged by Hercules. 4. Salassia, where Antigonus vanquished Cleomenes, the last King of Sparta. 5. Epidaurus, (seated on the Bay named Golfo di Napoli) now called Malvasia: a Town well built, and very well peopled; remarkable for the sweet Wines called Malvesey, or Malmsey, sent frm hence into all other parts in great abundance. 6 Sparta, So called from Sparta, the Son or Brother of Phoroneus, the second King of Argos, the Founder of it: but afterwards beautified and enlarged by Lacedæmon, the second King of this Country, it took that name also; promiscuously known by both in the best Authors. One of the Eyes of Greece, and a famous Commonwealth; but at first governed by Kings, as most of the Greek Cities in ancient times. Tyndarus, the Father of Castor and Pollux, was once King hereof. After whose death, and the death of the said famous Brethren, Menelaus was admitted King of Sparta, or Lacedæmon, in right of Helena his Wife, their Sister. And though Nicostratus and Megapenthes, Sons of Menelaus by another Venter, succeeded after his decease; yet the Spartans soon rejected them, and received Orestes the Son of Agamemnon to be their King, marrying him to Hermione, the Daughter of Menelaus and Helena, and consequently the Niece of Tyndarus. Tisamenes, the Son of Orestes and Hermione, succeeded next; in whose time the Heraclidæ, or posterity of Hercules, returned into Greece, under the Conduct of Temenus, Ctesiphon, and Aristodemus, Sons of Aristomachus: whereof the first possessed himself by force of Arms of the City Argos, the second of Messene, and the third conquered the City and State of Sparta; which, dying very shortly after, he left unto his two Sons, Eurysthenes and Procles, the Roots of the two Royal Families which joyntly and in common governed the Affairs of Sparta; first absolutely as Sovereign Princes, without any controul, afterwards at the direction of the Senate, and finally under the Command and Check of those popular Officers whom they called the Ephori. But because these Spartan Kings in each several period were for the most part men of action, and often mentioned in the Histories of the elder time; I will first make a Catalogue of them, and then subjoyn such Observations and Remembrances as I think most pertinent.

The Kings of SPARTA of the first Family.

3655	26.	Acrotatus.		26. Eurydamidas, the last King of the Line of the Euripontidæ, slain by Cleomenes, the last of the other Line also.
		Arius II.
		Leonidas III.
		Cleombrotus II.
3714	30.	Cleomenes III. the last of the Line of the Agidæ; who, having slain Eurydamidas, the Son of Agis the third, substituted his Brother Epiclides in his place. But being himself shortly after vanquished by Antigonus of Macedonia, and forced to fly his Country with his Wife and Children, the Government of the Heraclidæ ended, after it had continued here for the space of 908 years, or thereabouts.

Under these Kings the Government at first was ἄγαν Μεσηκὸν, as Plutarch termeth it, sufficiently Monarchical, if it were not more. Under Eunomus, the fourth King of the second House, the people, finding the Reins of Government let loose, began to mutiny and grow too headstrong. To bridle whom, and to restrain the Kings withall, (should they prove exorbitant) Lycurgus, the Protector of Charilaus, the sixth King of that House, did ordain the Senate, committing to them the supreme Power in matters Civil, and leaving to the Kings the ordering all Military and Sacred business. To curb the Insolencies of this Senate, who quickly found their own strength, Theopompus, the eighth King of that House, with the consent of Polydorus, the tenth King of the other, instituted a new Magistracy chosen out of the Common People, whom thy called the Ephori; which grew in fine to such an height of Pride and Tyranny, as not only to controll the Senators, but to censure, fine, imprison, depose, and mutually to kill their Kings, as the spirit of Sedition moved them. So that the State of Lacedæmon was at first a Monarchy under Kings, then an Aristocracy under the command of the Senate, next a Democracy under the Ephori, and finally, by those popular Officers made so plain a Tyranny, that Aristotle and Plato, two great Commonwealths-men, who died before they had embrued their hands in the bloud of their Kings, call it in plain terms πεγαυίδα and τὸ πεγαυικὸν, a most absolute Tyranny. What think you would these men have called it, had they lived to see Leonidas the third deposed, and Agis the third of that name also most barbarously murthered by these popular Villains?

But being the Foundation of this Commonwealth was first laid, and the good Laws and Politick Constitutions by which it did so long subsist in great Power and Splendour established, by the Wit and Power of Lycurgus, as before was said; we are to know concerning him, that he was the Son of Eunomus, the fourth King of the second House, slain in a Popular Tumult by the Common people. Who, finding by this Essay, that the People were become too head strong for the Kings to govern, unless reduced to extreme Bondage by their Kings, which he wished not neither, took the advantage of the Minority of Charilaus to new mould the Government; and what he could not do by fair means, to effect by Arms; forcing this Charilaus, though his Nephew, when he came to age, to flie for Sanctuary to the Temple of Juno. Having ordained what Laws he pleased, and settled such a Form of Government as himself well fancied, the better to decline the Envy of so great a Change, he got leave to travel, binding the people by an Oath to observe all his Laws untill his return; and, being gone, commanded at his death, that his Ashes should be cast into the Sea, lest, being carried back to Sparta, the people might conceive themselves released from their Oath. By means whereof his Laws continued in force near 700 years, during which time that Commonwealth did flourish in all Prosperity. The particulars of which Institutions he that lists to see, may find them specified at large by Plutarch in the Life of Lycurgus. Suffice it that the Discipline was so sharp and strict, that many went into the Wars for no other reason than on a hope to rid themselves from so hard a life; and that Diogenes, returning hence to the City of Athens, gave out that he returned from Men to Women, ὅτι τὰς ἐν Σπάρτῃ ἐκ τῶν ἀνδρῶν εἰς τὰς γυναῖκας and being asked in what part of Greece he had met with the compleatest men, made answer that he could no-where meet with Men, but that he had found some Boys amongst the Spartans. A Cynical and rugged Answer, but such as carried a great deal of Judgment in it; the Spartans being more stout and resolute in all their Actions, and less effeminate in their Lives, than the rest of the Græcians. But besides the strictness of the Discipline under which they lived, there was another thing which made them wish for Wars abroad; namely, the little or no power which either the Kings or People had in Civil matters, or Affairs of State, entirely left to the disposing of the Senate and the Power of the Ephori. So that the Kings, having by the Laws the Command of their Armies, were willing to engage in War upon all occasions, and the Common people as desirous to attend them in such Employments as the Kings could wish. Upon these grounds War was made a Trade amongst them; beginning with the Helots, a neighbouring People, then with the rest of the Laconians, afterwards quarrelling the Messenians, their old Confederates: all which they severally subdued, and made subject to them. In the War which Xerxes made against the City of Athens, their King Leonidas the first, of the elder House, went forth to aid them; slain at the Streights of Thermopylæ, courageously fighting for the Liberty of Greece: and when it was thought fit to set upon the Persian Fleet, Eurybiades the Spartan Admiral did command in chief. In pursuit of thir War against the Persians Pausanias and Ageſilaus were of moſt renown: the firſt in helping the Athenians to drive them out of Greece; the other in making War upon them in their own Dominions. Freed from the Perſians, they grow jealous of the State of Athens, whom they looked on as their Rivals in point of Sovereignty and Glory. Hence the long War betwixt theſe Cities, called Bellum Peloponneſiacum, managed for the moſt part in Peloponneſus, from thence transferred into Sicily, and at laſt ended in the taking of Athens: the Government whereof they changed into an Ariſtocracie under thirty Magiſtrates of their own appointment, commonly called the Thirty Tyrants. Proud of this fortunate Succeſs, their next Quarrel was with the Bœotians, the conquered Athenians covertly, and the Perſians openly, aſſiſting the Enemy. Here their Proſperity began to leave them. For, beſides many ſmall Defeats, Epaminondas the Theban ſo diſcomfited them at the Overthrows of Leuctra and Mantinea, that Sparta it ſelf was in danger of utter Ruine. Not long after happened the Holy War, chiefly undertook againſt the Phocians, wherein alſo they made a party: but this War being ended by King Philip, they ſcarce breathed more Freedom than he gave air to. But when Alexander's Captains fought for the Empire of their Maſter, all theſe flouriſhing Republicks were either totally ſwallowed into, or much defaced by, the Kingdom of Macedon. The Lacedæmonians held the chief ſtrength of a Town to conſiſt in the Valour of the people; and therefore would never ſuffer Sparta to be walled, till the times immediately following the death of Alexander the Great: yet could not thoſe Fortifications then defend them from Antigonus Doſon, King of Macedon, who, having vanquiſhed Cleomenes King of Sparta, entred the Town, and was the firſt man that ever was received into it as Conquerour. So much different were the preſent Spartans from the Valour and Courage of their Anceſtours. Cleomenes being forced to forſake his Country, and the Race of the Heraclidæ failing in him, they became a Prey to Machanidus and Nabis, two wicked Tyrants; from whom they were no ſooner freed, but they were made ſubject (in a manner) to the power of Rome: and in the end the Town was ſo weak and inconſiderable, that it was not able to reſiſt the pooreſt Enemy; now a ſmall Burrough called Miſithra. And ſo I leave them to the thoughts of their former Glories, having now nothing elſe to boaſt of but the fame and memory of their Actions in former times.

6. ARGOLIS, ſo called from the chief City Argos, is bounded on the South with Laconia, on the Weſt with Corinthia and Achaia propria, on the Eaſt and North with the Sea. A Territory remarkable for a moſt excellent breed of Horſes, and from thence called Hippium.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Argos, founded by Argus, the fourth King of this Country; the chief of this Kingdom. Memorable, as for other things, ſo 1. for the Death of Pyrrhus King of Epirus; who, having forced his Entry into it, was here ignobly ſlain, after all his Victories, by the hands of an old Woman, throwing a Tile at him from the top of an Houſe: 2. for the long Race of the Kings hereof, from Inachus the contemporary of our Father Abraham, Anno 2003, unto Acriſius their laſt King: whoſe Daughter Danaë, being ſhut up in a Tower of Braſs, was deflowred by Jupiter; to whom ſhe bare the renowned Perſeus, ſo memorized in ancient Poets. But Perſeus, having by misfortune ſlain his Grandfather, the old King Acriſius quitted the City of Argos as unlucky to him, and transferred the Kingdom to Mycenæ, a City of his own Foundation, and ſo better fancied, which was by means hereof the ſecond City of eſteem in this little Province; growing in ſmall time unto ſo great Riches, that it got the name of dites Mycenæ, as appeareth by Horace, in whom the Horſes of Argos and the Wealth of Mycenæ are placed in one Verſe together:

Aptum dicit equis Argos, ditéſque Mycenas.
For Horſes Argos is of fame,
For Wealth Mycenæ hath the name.

3. Trœzen, ſituate on the Sinus Saronicus, (now called Golfo di Engia) the Royal Seat of Pittheus, the Grandfather of Theſeus by the Mothers ſide, who was born herein: from whence the Town in Ovid hath ſometime the name of Pittheïa Trœzen, and Theſeus many times is called Trœzenius Heros; as Hercules had the name of Tyrinthius Heros from 4. Tyrinthia, another City of this Province, in which he was nurſed, 5. Nemea, where Hercules ſlew the dreadful Lion which annoyed this Country. In honour of which noble Act were inſtituted in time following the Nemean Games, which continued of great fame in Greece for many Ages. The Exerciſes were, Running with ſwift Horſes, Whorlbats, Running on foot, Quoiting, Wreſtling, Darting, Shooting. Some have referred the Original of theſe Games to one Opheltes, a Lacedæmonian, in whoſe Honour they conceive them inſtituted, and others fetch it higher, from the War of Thebes. But this I take to be the more allowable Opinion. 6. Epidaurus, on the Sea-ſide famous for the Temple of Æſculapius, and the Cure of all ſorts of diſeaſes there; ſo called from Epidaurus, the Son of Argus, the Founder of it. Of the ſame name, but of a different ſituation from that before mentioned in Laconia; that being ſeated on the Bay called Golfo di Napoli, this on that of Engia. Once called Meliſſa and Æmera, at that time an Iſland, but by an Earthquake laid unto the Continent; now called Pigiada. 7. Nauplia, ſo called of Nauplius King of Eubœa, and Father of Palamedes, to whom it anciently belonged. A Station then, as now, for Shipping; in that regard called Nauplia Navale, now Napoli, or Napolis; the richeſt and beſt traded in all this Tract, giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, now called Golfi di Napoli, of old Sinus Argolicus, into which the famous River Inachus, having paſſed through the City of Argos, doth diſgorge it ſelf; ſo called from Inachus the Father of Io, and the Original and Progenitor of

The Kings of ARGOS and MYCENÆ.

A.M.
2093	1.	Inachus, the ſuppoſed Father of Io, from whom the Græcians are ſometimes called by the name of Inachii.
2143	2.	Phoroneus, the Son of Inachus and Meliſſa, from whom the ſaid Io hath the name of Phoronis in the Poet.
2223	3.	Apis, the Son of Jupiter and Niobe the Daughter of Phoroneus, who, leaving Greece, went into Ægypt, where he taught the people Tillage, and was there worſhipped afterwards in the form of an Ox.
2308	5.	Criaſus, by ſome Peiraſus, the Son of Argus.
2363	6.	Phorbas, the Son of Criaſus; in whoſe time Atlas and Prometheus are ſaid to flouriſh.
2397	7.	Triopas, the Son of Phorbas, and the Brother of another Phorbas, who planted himſelf in the Iſle of Rhodes.
2442	8.	Crotopus.
2464	9.	Sthenelus, outed of the Kingdom by
2475	10.	Danaus, the Brother of Ægyptus; by whom being driven out of Ægypt, he was made King

King of Argos by consent of the people: the Father of those many Daughters got with child by Hercules From him the Græcians are called often by the name of Danai.

2525 11. Lynceus, Son of Ægyptus, the Brother of Danaus.

2556 12. Abas, the Son of Lynceus and Hypermnestra the Daughter of Danaus.

2566 13. Prætus, the Son of Abas.

2606 14. Acrisius, the Brother of Prætus, and the Father of Danaë; who being foretold by the Oracle that he should be slain by a Son of that Daughter, shut her up in a brazen Tower. But Jupiter, having corrupted the Guards with Gold, got the Ladie's consent, by whom he had Perseus, so renowned amongst the Poets and Historians of those elder times.

2637 15. Perseus, the Son of Jupiter and Danaë, exposed by his Grandfather to the Seas, miraculously preserved, and grown into great fame by his brave Exploits. He restored Acrisius to his Throne, from which he had been deposed by his Brother Prætus. But after having ignorantly and unfortunately slain the said Acrisius, he removed his Seat unto Mycenæ; where he reigned together with his Son Sthenelus.

2645 16. Eurystheus, the Son of Sthenelus, much spoken of for the difficult Tasks which, at the instigation of Juno, he imposed on Hercules his Foster-child, and the supposed Son of Amphitryon his Cousin-german.

2753 18. Agamemnon, the Son of Atreus, Commander of the Greeks at the War of Troy, in which action there engaged 69 Kings of the Græcians, wafted over with a Navy of 1224 Ships; killed at his coming home by Ægisthus, his Cousin-german.

2768 19. Ægisthus, the Son of Thyestes, having defiled Clytæmnestra the Wife of Agamemnon in the time of his absence, by her procurement murthered him at his coming home, and usurped the Kingdom

2775 20. Orestes, Son of Agamemnon, revenged his Father's death on Ægisthus and Clytæmnestra his own Mother. After which falling mad, and restored again unto his Wits, he married Hermione, Daughter of Menelaus and Helena, by whom he had the Kingdom of Sparta also.

2803 21. Penthilus, the Son of Orestes, and the last King of this Line, outed of his Estate by the Dores and Heraclidæ, who made themselves Masters of all Peloponnesus, which they possessed untill the Conquest of it by the Macedonians.

7. CORINTHIA is a little Region, lying towards the Isthmus or Neck of Land which joyneth Peloponnesus to the rest of Greece, betwixt Argolis and Achaia propria. It containeth only the Territory of the City of Corinth, not large, nor very fruitful of those Commodities which the rest of this Peninsula doth abound withal; as being mountainous and hilly, and, by reason of the nearnes of the Sea, full of craggy Rocks. The chief, and indeed the only, Cities of note in it are, 1. Cenchreæ, the naval Road or Station of Ships for Corinth, mentioned Acts 18. 18. and Rom. 16. 1. in both Texts reckoned a distinct Town from Corinth, as indeed it was: situate on that Bay which openeth into the Cretan Sea, called anciently Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia; and consequently opposite to 2. Lechæum, the other naval Road for Corinth, situate on the Western Bay, called of old Sinus Corinthiacus, now the Gulf of Lepanto. 3. Corinth it self, commodiously situate for the Command of all Greece, (had not the Inhabitants been more given to Merchandise than unto the Wars) as being seated on the bottom of the Neck or Isthmus, the Ionian Sea upon the West, and the Ægæan on the East, washing the Walls thereof, and giving it on each side a capacious Haven; in which regard it is called by Horace bimaris Corinthus. It is in compass about eleven miles, for Strength impregnable, for Command as powerful, mastering both Seas on which it stood, and cutting off all passage from one half of Greece to the other: to which last end the Castle called Acrocorinthus, looking into both Seas, served exceeding fitly; and was therefore called one of the Fetters of Greece. The City is rich, very well traded, and neatly built, most Houses beautified with handsom Pillars, from then called Corinthian: more memorable for the Wealth of the people, and the conveniency of the Situation, than for any notable Exploits performed by them, or any great Influence which they had on the States of Greece. But in regard of the Wealth, Greatness, and Situation, accounted by the Romans one of the three Cities which they held capable of the Empire; Carthage and Capua being the other two. In this City lived the famous (or infamous) Whore Thais, who exacted 10000 Drachma's for a single night's Lodging: which made Demosthenes cry out, Non emam tanti pœnitere, and occasioned the old By-word, Non cuivis homini contingit adire Corinthum.

'Tis not for every man's avail
Unto Corinth for to sail.

Near hereunto stood the Acrocorinthian Mountains, at the foot whereof the City, and on the top whereof the Castle called hence Acrocorinthus, were seated: out of which flowed the famous Fountain named Pyrene, of old consecrated to the Muses; by Persius called Fons Caballinus, because feigned by the ancient Poets to have been made by the Horse Pegasus dashing his foot against the Rock. And on the other side hereof in the Isthmus were celebrated yearly the Isthmian Games, ordained by Theseus in honour of Neptune; in imitation of the Olympick devised by Hercules in honour of Jupiter. The Exercises were much the same, and the Reward no other than a Garland of Oaken Boughs: yet they drew yearly a great Resort of people to them; partly to exercise themselves, and behold the Sports; and partly to sacrifice to Neptune, who had hard by a famous Temple.

As for the Fortunes of this City, it was at first called Ephyre, at that time a small and obscure place; but beautified and repaired by Corinthus, the Son of Pelops, it took the name of Corinth; governed by him and his posterity, till the coming of the Heraclidæ into Peloponnesus, at what time one Aletes of the Race of Hercules possessed himself hereof, with the name of King, A. M. 2849. Twelve Princes of his Line enjoyed it for the space of 220 years and upwards: when the House failing in the person of Automanes, they were governed by temporary Officers, like the Archontes of Athens. Continuing under this Government 124 years, the City was seized on by one Cypselus, A. M. 3294, who left it to his Son Periander, one of the Seven wise men of Greece; counted a Tyrant in those thoſe times, for no other reaſon than that he had ſuppreſſed the Popular Government. After whoſe death, Anno 3364, the City did recover its former Liberty. In the Battle betwixt Athens and Lacedæmon, and other the Eſtates of Greece, for the Superiority, it did little meddle; the aim of this people being Wealth, not Honour; not intereſſed in any Action of renown in all thoſe times, but in the ſending of Timoleon to the aid of the Syracuſans againſt the Tyrant Dionyſius, who did Lord it over them. It was ſubdued, together with the reſt, by the Kings of Macedon; and with the reſt reſtored to Liberty by the power of Rome: under whom growing ſtill more rich, and withall more inſolent, they abuſed certain Roman Embaſſadours. But iraſci populo Romano nemo ſapienter poteſt, as is ſaid in Livie, which the Corinthians found too true; the City being beſieged, ſacked, and burnt unto the Ground by Lucius Mummius, a Roman Conſul, Anno V. C. 607. In the burning whereof there were conſumed ſo many goodly Statues of Gold, Silver, Braſs, and other Metals, that, being melted into a Lump, they made up by that fatal chance the ſo-much-eſtimated Metal called Æs Corinthium, more highly prized in Rome than Gold or Silver. Repaired again, it was of great eſteem in the time of the Emperours, converted by St. Paul to the Chriſtian Faith; and having flouriſhed a long time in Pride and Pleaſures, decayed by little and little, till it came to nothing, and is now a ſmall Burrough called Crato.

Having thus ſpoken of the ſeveral Eſtates of Peloponneſus, it reſteth that we ſpeak ſomewhat of the Eſtate of the whole, varied according to the Fortunes of thoſe particular, which had moſt Influence on the ſame. The Affairs hereof were a long while ſwayed by the Kings of Sicyon, whence it had the name of Sicyonia, reſtrained afterwards to the Territories of that City only. But when the Kings of Argos came in place and power, it depended much upon their pleaſures; from Apis the third King whereof, (if not rather from Apis the fourth King of Sicyon) in the opinion of ſome Writers, it was named Apia. But Pelops, the Son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, coming into Greece, and marrying Hippodamia, Daughter of Oenomaus King of Elis, became the moſt powerful Prince of all this Peninſula, taking from him the name of Peloponneſus. The Kingdom of Mycenæ, growing into Power and Credit, had the next turn in ſwaying the Affairs hereof for a certain ſeaſon; as after that the Dores and Heraclidæ, poſſeſſed at once of Argos, Sparta, Corinth, and Meſſene. The Spartans, getting the Preeminence over all the reſt, were the next who governed the Affairs of it, and they held it long; having firſt conquered Laconia, and ſubverted the Eſtate of Meſſene; by means whereof, and by their fortunate Succeſs againſt the Perſians, they became almoſt abſolute in their Commands, without any Competitor. But their Power being broken by Pelopidas and Epaminondas in the Theban War, the petit States hereof began to take heart again, and ſtand upon their own Legs; as they did awhile, till the Kings of Macedon ſucceeding Alexander the Great brought them once more under, and made them Fellow-ſervants with their Spartan Maſters. In the Confuſions which enſued in Macedon amongſt the Competitors for that Kingdom, Patræ and Dyme, two Cities of Achaia propria, firſt united them in a ſtrong League of Amity, at ſuch time as Pyrrhus firſt went into Italy: into which Confederacy the Cities of Tritæa and Pheræ ſhortly after came; and not long after that of Ægira, and the reſt of Achaia propria. Their Affairs were firſt governed by two Prætors with Advice of the Senate, as afterwards by one alone with the like Advice; of which Marcus Carinenſis was the firſt, and Aratus of Sicyonia the ſecond. The ground thus laid, and the reputation of this new Commonwealth increaſing by the Vertue of Aratus, the Epidaurians, Trœzenians, Argives and Megarian became Members of it, maintaining gallantly the Liberties of Peloponneſus, till finally maſtered by the Romans. In the Diviſion of whoſe Empire it fell, with all the reſt of Greece, to the Conſtantinopolitans, and in the declining of their Fortunes, when the Latins got poſſeſſion of the Imperial City, moſt of the Sea-coaſts of it were allotted to the State of Venice; the Inland parts, formerly parcelled out amongſt many Princes, whom they called Deſpots, continuing as before they were. By Iſabel, a Daughter of one of theſe Deſpots, (and, as it ſeems, the chief among them) married to Ferdinand, Son of James the firſt, and Father of James the ſecond King of Majorca, the Title of Prince of Majorca came into that Houſe; uſed by them and the reſt of theſe petit Princes, till all together were made a Prey to the Turkiſh Tyrants, Mahomet the Great and Bajazet the ſecond, by whom they were wholly conquered. For howſoever Thomas and Demetrius, Brethren of that unfortunate Prince Conſtantinus Palæologus, had fled hither at the taking of Conſtantinople, and were received and obeyed by thoſe petit Princes: yet being unable to hold out againſt the Conquerour, they became his Tributaries. But their falling out amongſt themſelves, and neglecting then to ſend in the Tribute agreed upon, gave Mahomet the Great occaſion to invade the Country, and, under colour of aiding one Brother againſt the other, to deſtroy them both, as he did accordingly: Demetrius being carried Priſoner to Conſtantinople, and Thomas forced to abandon Peloponneſus, and fly to Italy, Anno 1457. Such Towns hereof as belonged to the State of Venice followed the ſame Fortune alſo in the time of Bajazet, by whom they were all taken at the laſt, and the whole Country brought under his Obedience, Anno 1500, or thereabouts. Governed ever ſince that time by a Turkiſh Sanzack under the Beglerbeg of Greece, who hath his Reſidence at Modon, a Regiment of 1000 Horſe to ſecure the Country, and 700000 Aſpers (that is to ſay, 14000 Crowns) a year for his Entertainment.

2. ACHAIA.

ACHAIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Ægean Sea, on the Weſt with Epirus, on the North with Theſſaly, and on the South with Peloponneſus and the Seas thereof. Called anciently Hellas, from Helles, the Son of Deucalion; but whence it had the name of Achaia is not yet agreed on: though ſure I am that from hence the Inhabitants of it were called Achivi, (a name communicated afterwards to all the Græcians) to difference them from the Achæi of Achaia propria.

The Country is famous in the Authors of the elder times, more for the Gallantry of the Men, than any great goodneſs of the Soil and place: yet that is ſufficiently memorable for the Hill Hymettus, ſwarming with Bees, plentiful of the ſweeteſt Honey, and rich in Mines of excellent Marble; as alſo for the River Cephiſus, which runneth almoſt through the whole length hereof; divided into two main Streams, of which the one is called Aſopus, the other retaineth its firſt name. Upon the Banks hereof ſtood the Temple of Themis, to which Deucalion did repair to be directed in the Reſtauration of Mankind, as the Poets fable.

It was divided anciently into theſe ſeven Parts; viz. 1 Attica, 2. Megaris, 3. Bœotia, 4. Phocis, 5. Locris, 6. Doris, and 7. Ætolia. A Diviſion now as much diſuſed as the name of Achaia, changed by the Turks into that of Lebadia, of which more anon.

1. ATTICA hath on the Weſt Megaris and ſome part part of Bœotia, on all other parts compaſſed with the Sea: ſo called from Athens, the chief City. The Soil for the moſt part is very barren and craggy; yet by the Arms and Induſtry of the people made both rich and famous; inſomuch as the yearly Revenues of the State of Athens were 1200 Talents. The Money current in this Country was commonly ſtamped with an Ox, whence came the By-word Bos in lingua, applied to ſuch Lawyers as were bribed to ſay nothing in their Client's Cauſe. Not much unlike to which was the Proverb riſing from the Coin of Ægina (an Iſle adjoyning) ſtamped with the figure of a Snail, viz. Virtutem & Sapientiam vincunt Teſtudines.

Places of moſt obſervation in it were, 1. Phyla, a ſtrong Fortreſs on the Borders of Bœotia, ſurprized by Thraſibulus and others of the baniſhed Athenians, during the Government of the thirty Tyrants: the taking whereof was the firſt ſtep towards their own and their Country's Liberty, which ſoon after followed. 2. Eleuſis, on the Borders of Megaris, almoſt impregnably fortified by the thirty Tyrants when they had the command of Athens, by whom it was deſigned for their Retreat in all times of Danger. But having withdrawn hither on the taking of Phyla and Piræus by the Thraſybulians, they found ſtrong Walls a weak defence for ſo much Wickedneſs; being trained out as to a Parly, and ſo deprived of the Place and their Power together. It was firſt build by one Eleuſius, who entertained Ceres as ſhe was in Queſt of her Daughter Proſerpina; who, to reward him, taught him the uſe of Agriculture; and he in honour of her built here a Temple. Hence Ceres in the Poets is called Eleuſina, and her Sacrifices Sacra Eleuſinia; and ſometimes the City alſo Cereälis Eleuſis, ſo called by Ovid in the ſeventh Book of his Metamorphoſes. 3. Rhamnus, upon the River Aſopus, famous for the Temple of Amphiarus, and the Statue of the Goddeſs Nemeſis, hence called Rhamnuſia in the Poets: This Nemeſis, or Rhamnuſia, being the Goddeſs of Indignation, puniſhed thoſe who made themſelves unworthy of their preſent Fortunes. 4. Tricorytum, of more Antiquity than fame. 5. Marathon, on the South-ſide of the River Aſopus, oppoſite to Rhamnus; of great note for the Diſcomfiture given by Miltiades the Athenian to the numerous Army of Darius, conſiſting of 200000 and 10000 Horſe: the Emulation of which noble Victory ſtarted ſuch brave Reſolves in the breaſt of Themiſtocles. As memorable in the Poets of thoſe elder times for the Marathonian Bull there ſlain by Theſeus. 6. Mopſopia, the ordinary Dwelling-place of Theſeus, before he fixed his Seat at Athens, it being at this Town that he reſtored Helena (whom he had before ſtoln from her own Country) to her two Brethren Caſtor and Pollux; of which both Rape and Reſtitution we find mention in Ovid, the one in the Epiſtle of Oenone to Paris, the other in that of Hermione to Oreſtes; in which laſt it is ſaid expreſly, Reddita Mopſopiâ Tyndaris urbe Soror, that is to ſay, that ſhe was delivered to her two Brethren (who had taken much pains in ſeeking for her) in the Town of Mopſopia. 7. Piræus, the Port-town to Athens, and the ordinary Station for their Shipping, the Haven hereof being capable of 400 Sail; diſtant from the City about two miles, but joyned unto it by two long Walls reaching from the one to the other, for ſecuring the conveyance of their Merchandiſe to and from the Sea. The Port it ſelf was impregnably fortified by the Advice of Themiſtocles. But as theſe long Walls were broken down by the command of the Spartans, when the City of Athens was taken by them; ſo were the Fortifications of Piræus it ſelf demoliſhed by the command of Sylla, in his War againſt Mithridates King of Pontus, the better to keep under the Athenians. 8. Panormus, a Sea-town alſo, and of very good Trade, but not of ſuch importance as the other was. 9. Athens, one of the Eyes of Greece, and the chief of Attica, ſituate from the Sea two miles, as before was ſaid; the Haven of Piræus ſerving it with all Commodities which came from other parts by ſhipping. Firſt built by Cecrops the firſt King of it, by whom it was called Cecropia, A. M. 2409; repaired afterwards by Theſeus, and furniſhed with good Laws by Solon; and finally thus named from Minerva, (whom the Greeks called Athene) to whom they dedicated, and in whoſe Honour there were yearly kept ſome ſolemn Games, called Panathenaia. A City heretofore adorned with all thoſe excellencies of Strength and Beauty which Art or Coſt could add unto it. Renowned, as for many things, ſo for three eſpecially: 1. For the inviolable Faith of the Citizens in all their Leagues, and moſt firm Affection to their Friends: ſo that Fides Attica grew in the end unto an Adage. 2. For the famous Scholars which here taught and flouriſhed; this being ſo happy a Nurſery of the choiceſt Wits, and ſo fitly ſeated for the Muſes, that the very Natives, being in other Countries, could ſenſibly perceive ſome want of that natural Vigour which at home was reſiant in their ſpirits. Ità ut corpora iſtius Gentis ſeparata ſint in alias Regiones, Ingenia verò ſolis Athenienſium muris clauſa eſſe exiſtimes, as Velleius hath it. Yea and, to ſay the truth, it was a moſt famous Univerſity, from whoſe great Ciſtern the Conduit-pipes of Learning were diſperſed over all the World. Yet did not Learning ſo effeminate or ſoften the hearts of the people, but that 3. This one City yielded more famous Captains than any in the World beſides, not excepting Rome; Miltiades, Ariſtides, Themiſtocles, Cimon, Pericles, Alcibiades, Phocion, and divers others of great name. Who though they were the men that both defended and enlarged this Commonwealth, yet were the people ſo ungrateful to them, or they ſo unfortunate in the end, that they either died abroad in Baniſhment, or by ſome violent death at home. Themiſtocles, the Champion of Greece, died an Exile in Perſia, Phocion was ſlain by the people, Demoſthenes made himſelf away by Poiſon, Pericles was many times indangered, Theſeus their Founder firſt depoſed, and then deſpitefully impriſoned, Ariſtides, Alcibiades, Nicias, &c. baniſhed for ten years by the Oſtraciſm; a form of Puniſhment, ſo called, becauſe the name of the party baniſhed was writ on an Oyſter-ſhell; and only uſed towards ſuch who either began to grow too popular, or potent among the men of ſervice. Which Device, allowable in a Democracie, where the over-much Powerableneſs of one might hazard the Liberty of all, was exerciſed in ſpight oftner than for deſert. A Country-fellow meeting by chance with Ariſtides, deſired him to write Ariſtides in his ſhell: and being asked whether the man whoſe Baniſhment he deſired had ever wronged him, he replied, No, he was only ſorry to hear folk call him a Good man. We find the like unfortunate end to moſt of the Romans ſo redoubted in War. Coriolanus was exiled, Camillus confined to Ardea, Scipio murthered, with divers others; only becauſe their Vertue had lifted them above the pitch of ordinary men. Ventidius was diſgraced by Antony; Agricola poyſoned, with the privity of Domitian; Corbulo murthered by the command of Nero: all able men, yet living in an Age wherein it was not lawful to be valiant. In latter times it ſo happened to Gonſalvo the great Captain, who, having conquered the Kingdom of Naples, driven the French beyond the Mountains, and brought all the Italian Potentates to ſtand at the Spaniards devotion, was by his Maſter called home, where he lived obſcurely, though honoured after his deceaſe with a ſolemn Funeral. Worſe fared the Guiſes and Biron in France; worſe Eſſex, and Dudley of Northumberland, with us in England. Neither will I omit William Duke of Suffolk, who, having ſerved 34 years in our Wars with France, and for 17 years together never coming home, at his return was quarrelled, and baſely murthered. It were almoſt impiety to be ſilent of Joab, the braveſt Souldier and moſt fortunate Leader that ever fought the Lord's Battels, and yet was killed at the horns of the Altar. Whether it be that ſuch men be born under an unhappy Planet; or that Courtiers, and ſuch as have beſt opportunity to endear men of War unto their Sovereigns, know not the way of commending their great Deſerts; or that Envy, the common Foe to Vertue, be an hinderance to it; I am not able to determine. And yet it may be that Princes naturally are diſtruſtful of men of action, and are not willing to make them greater whoſe name is great enough already. And it may be the fault is in the Souldiers themſelves, by an unſeaſonable over-valuing of their own Performances, as if the Prince or State were not able to reward or prize them: which was the cauſe of the death of Silius in the time of Tiberius. Concerning which Tacitus giveth us this good Note, That Over-merit in great Subjects is exceeding dangerous, and begets Hate in ſtead of Favours. Beneficia eò uſque læta ſunt, dum videntur exſolvi poſſe; ubi multùm anteverterunt, pro gratia Odium redditur, ſaith that wiſe Hiſtorian.

But to look back again on Athens: it was firſt built by Cecrops, the firſt King thereof; governed by him and his Poſterity with no lower Title for 400 years, as is apparent by this following Catalogue of

The Kings of ATHENS.

A. M.
2394	1.	Cecrops, who firſt made Jupiter a God, and ordained Sacrifices to be offered to him, as Pauſanias writeth.
2444	2	Cranaus, outed of his Kingdom by
2453	3	Amphictyon, the Son of Deucalion, and Uncle to that Amphictyon who firſt inſtituted the ſupreme Court of the Amphictyones, or Common-Council of all Greece.
2463	4.	Erichthonius, the Son of Vulcan.
2513	5.	Pandion, the Father of Progne and Philomela, ſo famous in the old Poets; of whom more hereafter.
2553	6.	Erichtheus, whoſe Daughter Orithyia was raviſhed by Boreas King of Thrace.
2603	7.	Cecrops II. Brother of Erichtheus.
2643	8.	Pandion II. Son of Erichtheus.
2668	9.	Ægeus, Son of Pandion the ſecond, of whom the Ægæan Sea took name.
2706	10.	Theſeus, the Son of Ægeus, and Companion of Hercules, vanquiſhed the Minotaur in Crete, collected the People of Attica into a body, and incorporated them into the City of Athens, which he had beautified and enlarged.
2746	11.	Mneſtheus, the Son of Peteus, Grandchild of Erichtheus, ſerved with the other Greek Princes at the War of Troy.
2769	12.	Demophoon, the Son of Theſeus, reſtored unto his Fathers Throne on the death of Mneſtheus.
2802	13.	Oxyntes, Son or Brother of Demophoon.
2814	15.	Aphydas Son of Oxyntes, ſlain by his Brother.
2815	15.	Thymades the laſt of the Line of Erichtheus.
2823	16.	Melanthius of Meſſene, driven out of his own Kingdom by the Heraclidæ, obtained that of Athens.
2860	17.	Codrus, the Son of Melanthius, the laſt King of Athens; who, in the Wars againſt the Peloponneſians, having Intelligence by an Oracle that his Enemies ſhould have the Victory, if they did not kill the Athenian King, attired himſelf like a common Beggar, entred the Peloponneſian Camp, and there played ſuch Pranks, that at the laſt they were fain to kill him. Which when the Enemy underſtood, they thought themſelves by this means deprived of all hopes of Succeſs, and ſo broke up their Army, and departed homewards. For this the people of Athens did ſo honour his memory, that they thought no man worthy to ſucceed as King, and therefore committed the managing of the Eſtate to Governours for term of Life, whom they called Archontes: the firſt Archon being Medon, the Son of Codrus. They differed not from the former Kings in point of Power, but only in the manner of their Admiſſion: the former Kings claiming the Government by Succeſſion in right of Bloud; and theſe Archontes holding by Election only: whoſe names here follow in this Liſt of

The perpetual Archontes in the State of ATHENS.

A. M.
2882.	1.	Medon, the Son of Codrus.
2902	2.	Acaſtus, the Son of Medon.
2938	3.	Archippus, the Son of Acaſtus.
2957	4.	Therſippus, the Son of Archippus.
2998	5.	Phorbas, the Son of Therſippus.
3029	6.	Megacles, the Son of Phorbas.
3059	7.	Diogenetus, the Son of Megacles.
3087	8.	Phereclus, the Son of Diogenetus.
3106	9.	Aritthon, the Son of Phereclus.
3126	10.	Theſpieus; in whoſe time began the Kingdom of Macedon.
3153	11.	Agameſtor.
3173	12.	Æſchylus, the Son of Agameſtor. After whoſe death, Anno Mundi 3195, the Athenians, weary of theſe Governours for term of Life, as being leſs obnoxious to the Check and Cenſure of the People, choſe themſelves Officers or Archontes for ten years onely: at the end of which time they were to yield up their places, and make room for others. But being a People greedy of Novelties and deſirous of Change, they had only ſeven of thoſe Decennial Archontes; their Officers from that time forwards being choſen annually: which Officers, being nine in number, we may call moſt properly the Provoſt, the chief Biſhop, the Marſhal, and the ſix chief Juſtices, all choſen out of the Nobility. And ſo it held for the ſpace of 170 years, till the time of Solon; who was the firſt which put the Supreme Authority into the hands of the People; and gave the firſt hint unto that Democracy which afterwards prevailed in Athens by the help of Pericles, who, being one of the great Council of the Areopagites, took from them a great part of their Power in deciding Controverſies and Suits in Law, putting them over to the Judgment of the Common people. A Government ſo dearly loved by the Athenians, that in all the Cities which they conquered, or reſtored to Liberty, or won to their Party from the Spartans, they cauſed it to be admitted: as on the other ſide the Spartans introduced and confirmed an Ariſtocracy (their own beloved Government) in all the places where they proſpered. As for the Court of the Areopagites, of much fame in Athens, it conſiſted from the firſt beginning ἐκ τῶν κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν Ἀρχόντων, of ſuch as had born ſome of the nine chief Offices; who, being once admitted, held for term of Life. Firſt inſtituted in the time of Demophoon, the Son of Theſeus, and called by the name of Areopagites, either for that they held their Court in the Street of Mars, ἐν Ἄρεως πάγῳ, mentioned Acts 17. 22. or becauſe Mars, being being accuſed for a Murther, did firſt plead before them. A Court which held in eſtimation under all theſe Changes, and ſo continued till the time of the Roman Empire.

But to return again to the Story of Athens. In or about the latter end of the life of Solon, Piſiſtratus altered the Free State, and made himſelf the abſolute Maſter of the City: but he once dead, the People regained their Liberty, driving thence Hippias the Son of Piſiſtratus; who hereupon fled for Succour to Darius the Perſian Monarch, occaſioning by that means the firſt coming of the Perſians into Greece. What Succeſs the Perſians had in Greece the Hiſtories of thoſe Times abundantly inform us: Darius being vanquiſhed by Miltiades at Marathon, and Xerxes by Themiſtocles at Salamis. Yet did not Athens ſcape ſo clear but that it was taken by Xerxes, though indeed firſt abandoned and voluntarily diſmantled by the Athenians. When the Perſians were retired homewards, the People of Athens re-edified their Town, and ſtrongly fortified it with high and defenſible Walls: which done, thy put their Fleet to Sea, and ſpoiled the Coaſts of Perſia in all quarters, inriching, their City with the Spoiles, and inlarging their Power and Dominion by the addition of many Iſlands and Sea-Towns. Hereby they grew unto that Wealth and Potency, that they were ſuſpected by their weaker Neighbours, and envied by their ſtronger, the Lacedæmonians eſpecially; who, fearing to loſe their ancient Priority over Greece, but pretending the Surpriſal of Potidæa, a City of Thrace, from the Corinthians, and ſome hard meaſure by them ſhewed upon the Megarenſes, made War upon them. In the beginning of this War the Athenians not onely reſiſted the whole Power of all Greece confederate againſt them, but ſo exceedingly proſpered, that the Spartans ſued for Peac, and could not get it. But the Scales of Fortune turned: For after they had held out 28 years, they were compelled to pluck down the Walls of their City, and ſubmit themſelves to the will and pleaſure of the Spartans, now by the puiſſance and good fortune of Lyſander become their Maſters: by whom the Government was changed, and an Ariſtocracie (or rather Oligarchie) eſtabliſhed under 30 Magiſtrates, known commonly by the name of the 30 Tyrants; expelled not long after by the Valour of Thraſibulus and his Aſſociates, as hath been touched upon before. Not long after the end of this War, which the Hiſtorians call Bellum Peloponneſiacum, the Perſians, ſeeing how the Spartans, not having now the State of Athens to oppoſe them, began to work upon their Empire, furniſhed Conon, a noble Athenian Gentleman with a Navy ſo well provided, that he overcame the Lacedæmonians in a Fight at Sea, and thereby put his Countreymen into ſo good heart, that they made a party in the War called Bellum Sacrum; compoſed at the laſt by Philip of Macedon, who brought not onely the Thebans, whom he came to aid, but the Athenians, Spartans, and the reſt of the adverſe party, under his Command. A Servitude from which they were never freed, till as well Macedon as the reſt became Fellow-ſervants unto Rome. But though this brave City had then loſt her power in point of Arms, yet ſhe ſtill kept her credit as an Univerſity in point of Arts. Origen, Chryſoſtom, Baſil, and Gregory Nyſſen, men of Renown and Eminence in the Primitive times, are ſaid to have ſtudied at Athens: the like is affirmed of Pope Joan, if the Tale be true, for the middle Ages. And ſo it held, as I conjecture, though not ſo eminently as before, till the year 1440, when taken by Mahomet the Great, who wondred much (as my Authour telleth) at the extream Beauty of the Caſtle, and the ſtrength of the Walls, not having loſt in ſo long time their former Excellencies. Since that it is ſenſibly decayed, and is now an ordinary Burrough, (by the Turks called Setines) but ſtill preſerveth the Reputation of an Epiſcopal See, the Biſhop of it holding up the Title of Athenienſis.

2. MEGARIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Attica, on the Weſt with the Bay of Corinth, on the North with Bœotia, and on the South with the Iſthmus and the Gulf di Engia: So called from Megara, the cheif City.

This is the leaſt Province of all Greece, and not very fruitfull, (the Countrey for the moſt part being hard and rocky) not beautified with many Cities. The principal of thoſe which were are, 1. Pegæ, or Pagæ, ſituate on the Bay of Corinth, and ſpoken of both by Pliny and Ptolemy; but not otherwiſe memorable. 2. Megara, (now Megra) firſt built by Megareus, the Son of Apollo, and from him thus named. Remarkable in former times for a Sect of Philoſophers, called from hence Secta Megarica, founded by one Euclide, a Diſciple of Socrates; of whom ſee Laertius. More memorable in the Poets for Niſus, once the King of this little Territory on whoſe Head there is ſaid to have grown a purple Hair, on which the preſervation of his Life and Kingdom did depend: Which Jewel his Daughter Scylla is ſaid to have delivered unto King Minos, her Father's Enemy, of whom, then beſieging this City, upon the ſight of him from an high Turret, ſhe became inamoured. But he rejecting her and her Preſent both, after the taking of the City returned into Crete: which the unhappy Woman ſeeing, ſhe threw her ſelf after him into the Sea, and was turned into the Bird called Ciris. I leave the morallizing of the Fable unto the Mythologiſts: obſerving onely by the way the antiquity of that politick practice, to love the Treaſon, and hate the Traitour. But the glory of this City did not end with Niſus: For, ſhaking off the Cretan Yoke, it became ſui juris once again: and being conveniently ſeated on the very Iſthmus, amounted to that height of Proſperity, that they contended with the Athenians for the Iſland of Salamis. And in this War they ſo cruſhed the power and ſpirit of Athens by one fatal Overthrow, that the Athenians, to prevent all the like Diſaſters, did ordain by Law, that whoſoever mentioned the Recovery of Salamis was to loſe his Life: ſo that Solon was compelled to feign himſelf frantick, the better, to propound the Enterpriſe. In which although the State of Athens got the Iſle of Salamis, yet did the Megarenſes continue a Free people, till brought under (with the reſt) by the Macedonians, and with them made ſubject unto Rome.

3. BOEOTIA is bounded on the South with Megaris and the Bay of Corinth, on the North with the River Cephiſus, on the Eaſt with Attica and a Branch of the Ægæan Sea, and on the Weſt with Phocis. Thus named from βοῦς, which in Greek ſignifieth an Ox; becauſe when Cadmus, weary of ſeeking his Siſter Europa, (whom Jupiter had ſtoln out of Phœnicia) came to the Oracle at Delphos, he was commanded to follow the firſt Ox he ſaw, and where the Ox did reſt it ſelf there to build a City.

In the Country is nothing ſingular, but an ancient Cuſtom of burning before the Door of an Houſe in which a new-married Wife was deſigned to dwell, the Axle-tree of the Coach which brought her thither; giving her by that Ceremony to underſtand, (as Plutarch telleth us in his Morals) that ſhe muſt frame her ſelf to live and abide with him, without hope of departure. In this Country alſo are the Streights of the Mountain Oeta, from the neighbouring Baths called Thermopylæ, not above 25 foot in breadth; which in the War that Xerxes made againſt the Greeks were valiently defended by Leonidas King of Sparta with no more then 300 of his men, who, haveing valiantly resisted that Army which in its passage out of Persia had drank Rivers dry, and slain at least 30000 of them, died every man upon the place. To hide the greatness of which Loss, lest it should terrifie the rest of his Army which were coming on, Xerxes commanded all the slain men to be buried in several Pits, except a thousand; as if no more then they had been lost in that passage.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Thespia, on a River of the same name, at the Fall whereof into the Bay it is pleasantly seated; shadowed on the North with a Branch of the Mountain Helicon, and consecrated, as that was, unto the Muses, hence called Thespiades in the Poets. 2. Platæa; nigh to which Mardonius, General to the Persians, was overcome by the Greeks, with the loss of Mardonius himself and 160000 men on the Persian side; and on the other no more then 31 Spartans, 16 Arcadians, 52 Athenians, and about 600 of the Megarenses. In memory of which brave exploit, and to preserve the names and honour of those Worthies who there laid down their Lives for the Liberty of Greece, there was a Festival kept anually by the Platæans in the month of September, with solemn Sacrifices, and a kind of divine acknowledgement unto the deceased; continued from the time of Aristides the Athenian, who first ordained them, to the days of Plutarch, who records it; but how long after I am not able to say. In this great Fight the commander in cheif was a noble Spartan, called Pausanius, who, afterwards having a Design to make himself Sovereign of all Greece, and being discovered in the Practice, fled for Sanctuary to the Temple of Pallas. From whence because it was counted Sacrilege to constrain him by violence, it was unanimously resolved to wall up the Entrances; his own Mother laying the first stone. It is recorded that, before the fighting of this Battel, the Athenians had been told by the Oracle that they should be Conquerous, if they fought upon their own ground: whereupon the Platæans, within whose Territories the Persians had prepared to fight, bestowed that Field on the State of Athens. In requitall of which noble act, Alexander the Great re-edified and enlarged their City, having been first burnt and sacked by the Persians, and after levelled with the ground by the Lacedæmonians, because confederate with Athens in the War against them. 3. Leuctra, remarkable for the great Overthrow which the Thebans, under the Conduct of Epaminondas, gave unto the Spartans and their King Cleombrotus, who was there slain: by which Victory they did not onely preserve their own Liberty, but brought their Enemies to that fall of Courage and Reputation, that they could never rise again: the divine Vengeance overtaking them in that very place where some of their Nation had deflowred the Daughters of Scedasius, who had given them courteous Entertainment. For which when no Reparation could be had from the State of Sparta, the unfortunate Damosels slew themselves, to avoid the infamy of consenting to their own Dishonour, and were buried in those very Fields where this Battel was fought. 4. Aseræa; the Birth place of Hesiod, a man (according to Paterculus) elegantis ingenii, & carminum dulcedine memorabilis: though it hath pleased that proud Critick, Julius Scaliger, intending to deifie Virgil, to prefer the worst Verse in the Georgicks of the one before the whole Works of the other. 5. Labadia, near the River Cephisus; the Inhabitants whereof were counted the most superstitious of all the Græcians: memorable for the Trophonian Den or Cave, and the Oracle there given by Jupiter, hence called Trophonius: into which Cave none were permitted to enter and receive the Oracle, but after many Ointings, Washings, and the like Superstitious preparations, too long and many to be specified in this place and time. A Town which still preserves so much of its ancient Estimation, that from hence (as I conjecture) the whole Countrey of Achaia hath the name of Livadia, by which the Turks call it at this present. 6. Chærona, or Chæronæa, the Birth place of Plutarch; near unto which was fought that memorable Battel betwixt L. Sylla and the Romans against Archelaus, one of the Lievtenants of Mithridates King of Pontus, leading an Army of 120000 Souldiers, of which 10000 onely escaped with life, the Romans losing but 14. 7. Orchomenus, no less memorable for another Victory, obtained by the same L. Sylla against Dorilaus, another of that King's Commanders, having an Army of 80000 men, of which 20000 lost their lives that day. After which Victories, when Sylla might easily have destroyed that King, he suddenly patched a Peace up with him, that he might hasten unto Rome, where Marius and Cinna had troden his Faction under foot; preferring by that act the pursuit of his own private Quarrels before that of his Countrey, endangered more by Mithridates after his return, then it had been formerly. 8. Aulis, a Port-Town on the Shores of the Ægæan Sea, where the Græcians took shipping when they went to the War of Troy; here making Oath never to give over the Enterprize untill they had destroyed that City. Concerning which thus she in Virgil,

Non ego cum Danais Trojanam exscindere Gentem Aulide juravi.

That is to say,

I took no Oath at Aulis, to destroy,
As did the Greeks, the Town and State of Troy.

But the cheif City of this Countrey, and such as had a special Influence over all the rest, was the City of Thebes, situate on the Banks of the River Cephisus, where it was built by Cadmus the Phœnician, after all his wanderings. Famous in old times for the Wars between Eteocles and Polynices, the Sons of the unfortunate Prince Oedipus, and of his Mother and Wife Jocasta. The History of which War is the most ancient piece of Storie that we find of all Greece, the former times and Writings containing nothing but Fables, little savouring of Humanity, and less of Truth; as of Men changed into Monsters, the Adulteries of the Gods, and the like. In this Town lived Pelopidas and Epaminondas, who so crushed the Lacedæmonians at the Battels of Leuctra and Mantinea, that they could never after re-obtain their former Puissance. This Commonwelth long flourished, and at last, being over-burthened in the Phocian War, was glad to submit it self to the Protection of the Macedonians, under the leading of King Philip; who by this means first got footing in Greece, into which afterwards he thrust his whole body. Upon the death of Philip, Thebes revolted from the Macedonians, but Alexander his Successor quickly recovered it: and to dishearten the Greeks in the like Attempts, he raised the City, selling all the Inhabitants of age and strength; onely Pindarus's house he commanded to be left standing, in honour of that learned Poet. At the Sack of this Town, one of the Macedonian Souldiers entred the house of a principal Woman, named Timoclea, ravished her, and rifled her Coffers, but still demanding more Treasure, she shewed him a deep Well, saying, that there all her Money was hidden. The credulous Villain stooping down to behold his Prey, she tumbled him into the Well, and overwhelmed him with Stones. For which noble act, the generous Prince not onely dismissed her unhurt, but most highly commended her. It was after re-edified by Cassender, and followed for the most part, as the rest of the Bœotians did, the Fortunes of Macedon. It is reduced at this time to the ſtate of an ordinary Burrough, and called Stibes by the Turks.

4. PHOCIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Bœotia, on the Weſt with Doris and Locris, on the North with the River Cephiſus, and on the South with the Bay of Corinth. A Country ſomewhat ſwelled with Mountains, but thoſe of eminent note in the elder times. The chief wheof are, 1. Helicon, 2. Cithæron both conſecrated to the Muſes, and both contending with Parnaſſus for heighth and bigneſs. 3. Parnaſſus, of ſo great an heighth, that in that great Deluge in which moſt of theſe parts of Greece were over-whelmed with the Waters, Deucalion and Pyrrha ſaved themſelves and many others on the Top hereof: for which, and for its two Summits reaching to the Clouds, it is of great renown amongſt the Poets; as in Ovid thus,

Mons ibi verticibus petit arduus Aſtra duobus, Nomine Parnaſſus, ſuperátque cacumine Nubes.
Parnaſſus there with his two Tops extends
To the toucht Stars, and all the Clouds tranſcends.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Anticyra, ſituate near the Sea, and famous for the Helleborum there growing, an Herb very medicinal for the Phrenſie; whence the Proverb, Naviget Anticyram, applied to mad-men. 2. Pytho, or Pythia, ſaid to be ſeated not only in the middle of Greece, but of all the World: Strabo relating how Jupiter, deſirous to know the exact middle of the Earth, let looſe two Eagles, one from the Eaſt, and the other from the Weſt, which flying with an equal Wing, (ſo we muſt conceive) and meeting at this very place, ſhewed it apparently to be the Navel of the World. By reaſon of which covenient ſituation in the Heart of Greece, it was made a Seſſions-Town for all the Græcians, and honoured with the Court and general Aſſembly of the Amphictyones; men choſen out of the prime Cities of Greece, who had power to decide all Controverſies, and to make Laws for the common good. A Court firſt inſtituted by Acriſius, as Strabo telleth us: or, as Halicarnaſſæus more probably, by Amphictyon the Son of Helles, from whom they ſeem to have their name. The Commiſſioners from the ſeveral Cities, with reference to the places for which they ſerved, had the name of Phylagoræ; when aſſembled, they were called the Amphictyones: their Meetings were at the beginning of the Spring and Autumn. Some inſtances concerning their Authority will not be amiſs. In the time of Cimon, the Cirrhæans, having by Piracy wronged the Theſſalians, were fined by this Council; and after that the Lacedæmonians, for ſurprizing Cadmea. And the Phocians, for ploughing up the Land of Cirrha, which belonged to the Temple of Delphos, were by them amerced: and becauſe they continued obſtinate, and paid not their Amercements, their Dominions were adjudged to be confiſcate unto that Temple. But they, diſobeying this Decree alſo, ſpoyled the Temple it ſelf: for which War being proclaimed againſt them by the reſt of the Græcians, who by the Aſſiſtance of Philip King of Macedon brought them to Obedience, the Council was again aſſembled; in which it was decreed that the Phocians ſhould raze the Walls of their Cities, that they ſhould pay the yearly Tribute of ſixty Talents, that they ſhould no more keep Horſe and Arms, till they had ſatisfied the Treaſury of the Temple, nor any longer have a Voice in thoſe Conventions. It was alſo then enacted, that the loſt Suffrages of the Phocians ſhould be veſted in King Philip and his Succeſſors, Kings of Macedon; on whom they alſo did confer the perpetual Preſidentſhip, and made them Princes of that Senate. A Court to which the Sanhedrin of the ſeventy Elders amongſt the Jews, and, in our times, the Diets of the Empire, and the Aſſemblies of the Switzers, carry moſt reſemblance. 3. Cirrha, on the Sea-ſide, the Port-town to Delphos. 4. Criſſa, ſo called from Criſſus the Son of Phocus, and grandchild of Æacus, ſituate on the edge of the Bay of Corinth; called ſometimes from hence Criſſæus Sinus. 5. Scarphis, memorable for the Defeat of Critolaus, Captain of the Achæan Army, by Metellus one of the Roman Prætors: the Loſs of which Battel drew after it the Deſtruction of Corinth. It was obſerved in the ſucceſs of this great Fight, that a Band of Arcadians, eſcaping out of the Battel, came unto 6. Elatea, another City of this Province, and were there kindly entertained on memory of ſome former Alliances, till news came of the Overthrow of Critolaus; when they were ordered by the State of Phocis to relinquiſh the Town, (for Adverſity ſeldom meeteth with returns of Friendſhip.) They were ſet upon and all ſlain by the Romans in the ſelf-ſame place in which their Anceſtors had unworthily forſaken the reſt of the Græcians in their War againſt Philip King of Macedon, for the publick Liberty. 7. Daulis, a City appertaining to Tereus King of Thrace, who, having married Progne, the Daughter of Pandion King of Athens, raviſhed her Siſter Philomela, and cut out her Tongue, the better to keep his Villany undiſcovered. But Progne being made acquainted with the double Injury, firſt made him ignorantly eat his own Son Itys, whom ſhe had baked in a Pie; and after killed him, with the help of her raviſhed Siſter. 8. Delphos, renowned in old times for the famous Temple of Apollo, in which, with that of Jupiter Hammon in Marmarica, (now reckoned as a part of Ægypt) were the moſt famous Oracles of the ancient Gentiles; dark Riddles of the Devil, couched and contrived with ſo much Cunning, that the meaning of them was moſt hidden, when it was thought moſt eaſie to be diſcerned. An Inſtance of which is that given to Cræſus, in the War by him projected againſt the Perſian, which was thus delivered;

Cræſus Haly penetrans magnam ſubvertet opum vim.
When Cræſus over Halys goes,
A mighty Nation he o'rethrows.

Which he interpreting according to his own hopes, croſſed the River, was vanquiſhed by Cyrus King of Perſia, and his Kingdom conquered. The like we find of Pyrrhus King of Epirus, who, before he made War againſt the Romans, conſulted with the Oracle, and received this Anſwer;

Aio te, Æacida, Romanos vincere poſſe.

Which doubtful Prediction he thus conſtrued, Te poſſe vincere Romanos, That he ſhould overcome the Romans; but found it unto his coſt that the meaning was, Romanos poſſe vincere te, That the Romans ſhould overcome him: as indeed it happened. By another kind of the ſame Fallacy, which the Logicians call Amphibolia, did this great Enemy of mankind overthrow another, who, demanding of the Oracle what Succeſs he ſhould have in an Expedition which he was in hand with, received his Anſwer in theſe words, Ibis redibis nunquam per bella peribis.

Which he thus pointing, Ibis, redibis, nunquam per, &c. engaged himſelf in the War, and was therein ſlain. Whereupon his Followers, canvaſſing the Oracle, found the meaning of it to be this, Ibis, redibis nunquam per, &c. The like Juggling he alſo uſed in thoſe ſupernatural Dreams which Philoſophers call ἐνυπνιάσεις. For Cæſar, dreaming that he carnally knew his own Mother the night before he paſſed over the Rubicon, became Lord of Rome, the common Mother of the Romans; and Hippias, the Son of Piſiſtratus the Tyrant of Athens, having upon the ſame projects the ſame Dream, was killed and buried in the Bowels of his Mother the Earth. So that had Cæſar miſcarried in his action, and Hippias thrived; yet ſtill had the Devil been reputed his Crafts-master, and the Father of Truths. But as the Ecclesiastical History telleth us, that Julian the Apostata, consulting with the Devil, was told that he could receive no Answer, because that the Body of Babylas the Martyr was entombed nigh his Altar: so neither could the Devils deceive the World, as formerly they had done, after Christ, the Truth it self, was manifested in the Flesh, and tormented these unclean Spirits, though, as they alledged, before their time. Augustus, as Suidas telleth us, in whose time our Saviour was born, consulting with the Oracle about his Successor, received this not satisfying Answer:

——— Παῖς
Ἑβραῖος κέλεταί με, θεὸς μακάρεσσιν ἀνάσσων,
Τόνδε δόμον θεσπιεπῆ, ἠδ' αὐδὴς ἐκίδας.
Λοιπὸν ἄπειρ ζεφύρου ἐκ βωμοῦ ἡμετέρου.

An Hebrew Child, whom the blest Gods adore;
Hath bid me leave these Shrines, and pack to Hell;
So that of Oracles I can no more.
In silence leave our Altar, and farewell.

Whereupon Augustus, coming home, in the Capitol erected an Altar, and thereupon in Capital Letters caused this Inscription to be ingraven, HÆC EST ARA PRIMOGENITI DEI. Now as the Devils had by Christ's Birth lost much of their wonted Virtue, so after his Passion they lost it almost altogether. Concerning which Plutarch, in a Tract of his Morals called Περὶ τῶν ἐκλελοιπότων χρηστηρίων, Why Oracles cease to give Answers, telleth us a notable Story, which was this. Some company, going out of Greece into Italy, were about the Echinades becalmed; when on a sudden there was heard a Voice loudly calling on one Thamus, an Ægyptian then in the Ship. At the two first calls he made no answer; but to the third he replied, saying, Here I am. And the Voice again spake unto him, bidding him, when he came to the Palodes, to make it known that the great God Pan was dead. When they came unto the Palodes, which are certain Shelves and Rocks in the Ionian Sea, Thamus, standing on the Poop of the Ship, did as the Voice directed him: whereupon was heard a mighty Noise of many together, who all seemed to groan and lament with terrible and hideous shreekings. News hereof coming to Tiberius, he caused the learned men in his Empire to enquire out of their Books who that Pan should be: by whom it was answered, that he was the Son of Mercury and Penelope, with Ignorance enough, and little satisfaction to the business propounded to them. Such therefore as more narrowly observed the Circumstances of this accident found it to happen at the time when our Saviour suffered on the Cross; who was indeed the true God Pan, the chief Shepherd and Bishop of our Souls, as the Scripture calleth him: and that, upon this divulging of his Death and Passion, the Devils, who used to speak in Oracles, did with great Grief and Lamentation forsake that Office, which had been so gainful to them in seducing Mankind. That all Oracles at that instant ceased I dare not say; though it be certain that about that time they began to fail: it being said by Juvenal, who lived in the Reign of Domitian, Delphis Oracula cessant, that the Oracle of Delphos was then silent; the rest decaying sensibly in a short time after.

But to proceed. The Temple of Apollo being spoiled by the Phocians, as before was noted, caused the War betwixt them and the Thebans, called the Holy War: in which the Thebans, being likely to have the worst, sent for Philip of Macedon, who made an end of the Quarrel by subduing both. The Treasure which the Phocians found in the Temple was reckoned at 60 Talents of Gold; but it proved Aurum Tolosanum, and brought a sudden Ruine on their State and Nation: Sacrilege being so unpardonable a Crime, even amongst the Heathen, that the fault of some few, countenanced by the rest of a people, hath brought Destruction on them all. It was afterwards with the like ill fortune ransacked by Brennus and his Gauls, in the wain of the Macedonian Empire; all of them miserably perishing who had any hand in it.

5. LOCRIS is bounded on the East with Phocis and a Branch of the Ægæan Sea, on the West with Ætolia, on the North with a long Ridge of Hills which part it from Thessaly, and on the South with parts of Achaia, Bœotia, Phocis, the Bay of Corinth, the Streights of Antirrhium, and a part of the Ionian Sea. So that for largeness of Extent, and the commodiousness of the Seas, it yieldeth to no Province in Achaia, though not so fruitful as some others. Divided into the three Nations, of the Locri Ozolæ, lying towards the South, on both sides of the Streights, so called from some ill Smels of the Country or people; 2. the Epicnemidii, inhabiting the middle parts, so named from Mount Cnemis, not far from Parnassus; and 3. the Opuntii, so called from Opus their chief City, lying on the North-side of the River Cephisus, on the Coasts of the Ægæan or Eubœan Seas.

Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Opus, the Head-City of the Opuntians, situate on the River Asopus, being one of the main Branches of Cephisus. 2. Cynus, the Port-Town to Opus. 3. Thronium, the prime Town of the Epicnemidii, mentioned by Polybius, Livie, Ptolemy. 4. Cnemides, at the foot of Mount Cnemis, whence they had their name. 5. Amphissa, the chief City of the Ozolæ, situate in the inland parts of it: the People whereof, refusing to yield to the Sentence of the Amphictyones against their Confederates the Phocians, were the cause that Philip of Macedon returned into Greece. Against whom, grievously infesting the Bœotian, and manifestly aspiring to the Command of Greece, the Athenians desperately opposed; not so much with possibility of prevailing, as being urged on by the sharp and biting Orations of Demosthenes made against his Procee dings: which being by him called Philippicks, occasioned Tully to call his bitter Invectives against M. Antonius by the same name also. But the Success hereof was such as commonly attendeth a broken Fortune: The Athenians being vanquished at Chæronæa, and Philip declared Captain of Greece against the Persians, obtained under that Title the Command he sought. 6. Enantia, as Ptolemy, Oeanthia, as Pliny and Pausanias call it; opposite to Ægira in Achaia propria. 7. Molycria, by Ptolemy placed here, and by others reckoned in Ætolia: not far from whence is the Promontory of Antirrhium, so called because just opposite to that of Rhium in Achaia propria, between which runneth a narrow Streight, (not so wide as the Hellespont) which openeth into the Bay of Corinth: each Promontory being for that cause fortified by Bajazet the second with a very strong Castle; that on this side being gallantly defended by the Turks, when besieged by Doria, Anno 1532; for being forced with great Slaughter into a strong Tower which commanded the Castle, they rather chose to blow it up, together with the Ammunition, Victuals, and themselves to boot, than that the Fort should come intire into the hands of the Enemy. Some place this Promontory in Ætolia also; but, following the authority of Ptolemy, I have placed it here. 8. Naupactus, so called from the building of Ships there by the Heraclidæ; situate on the Corinthian Bay, near the Mouth thereof. Given by the Citizens of Athens to the poor Messenians, when, after the end of the third War, the Lacedæmonians, unwilling to have them troublesom Neighbours, (and they scorning to be quiet Slaves) compelled them to seek new Habitations. It hath of late been called Lepanto, giving the name of the Gulf of Lepanto to the Bay of Corinth; by that name ſubject for a while to the Venetians, and from them taken by the Turks Anno 1499. Of theſe Locrians thoſe of Italy were a branch or Colony, whoſe Law-giver was Zaleucus, ſpoken of elſewhere.

6, DORIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Phocis, on the Weſt with Ætolia, on the North with the Hill Oeta, and other Mountains which divide it from Theſſaly, and on the South with Ætolia and part of Locris. The Air hereof is very healthy, and the Soil ſufficiently fruitful, if well manured; but now the greateſt part lieth waſte for want of Tillage. Firſt peopled by the Dores or Dorienſes, deſcended from Dorus the Son of Helen, and Grandchild of Deucalion, by whom they were placed in Theſſaly, afterwards ſpreading into this Country, which they left their name to, as their proper Dwelling: though many of them, following the Heraclidæ into Peloponneſus, poſſeſſed themſelves of the greateſt part of Laconia alſo; imprinting on the ſame their Dialect or form of Speech, from them called the Dorick.

Chief Cities hereof are, 1. Doris, ſo called in memory of Dorus, the firſt Progenitour of this People. 2. Erineus, ſeated at the Foot of Parnaſſus, mentioned by Thucydides, Strabo, Mela, Ptolemy, and the reſt of the Ancients. 3. Bium, as Ptolemy; or Boion, as Strabo and Pliny call it. 4. Cytinum, near Parnaſſus alſo, in the common Impreſſions of Diodorus Siculus the Hiſtorian falſly called Cynthinium. 5. Lilæa, ſituate not far from the Spring or Fountain of the River Cephiſus; which, riſing hereabouts, paſſeth through the whole length of Achaia, and falls into the Ægæan or Eubœan Sea.

7. ÆTOLIA hath on the Eaſt Locris, on the Weſt Epirus, on the North Doris, on the South the Ionian Sea. ſaid to be ſo called from Ætolus, the Son of Mars, who, being by Salmoneus caſt out of Elis, fixed himſelf in this Country.

Here is the Foreſt of Calydon, where Meleager and the Flower of the Greek Nobility ſlew the wild Boar. Here is the River Euenus, over which the Centaur Neſſus having carried Dejanira, Wife of Hercules, and intending to have raviſhed her, was ſlain by an Arrow which Hercules on the other ſide of the River ſhot at him. Here alſo is the River of Achelous, of whom the Poets fable many things: as that being Rival with Hercules in the love of Dejanira, he encountred him in the ſhape of a Bull; and that when Hercules had pluck'd off one of his Horns, the Nymphs made of it their ſo-much-celebrated Cornucopia.

The people of this Country were the moſt turbulent and unruly people of all Greece, never at Peace with their Neighbours, and ſeldom with themſelves. The Macedonians could never tame them, by reaſon of the Craggineſs of the Country: yet they brought them to ſuch terms, that they were compelled to let the Romans into Greece, who quickly made an end of all.

Principal Towns hereof were, 1. Chalcis, ſituate near the Spring-head of Achelous before mentioned. 2. Arachthus, near the River ſo called; which, ariſing hereabouts, paſſeth into Epirus, and falleth into the Bay of Ambracia, not far from Nicopolis. 3. Olenus, not far from the Foreſt of Calydon. 4. Pleurone, giving name to the adjoyning Country, called hence Pleuronia, the People whereof had the name of Curetes ἀπὸ τῆς κουρᾶς, from their ſhaving, it being their cuſtom to ſhave the fore-parts of their Heads, and let the Hair grow on the hinder-parts only, nè Hoſtes eos cæſarie apprehenderent, becauſe their Enemies ſhould not lay hold on them by the Fore-tops, and ſo pull them down. 5. Thermus, the Parliament-City, or place of general Aſſembly, for all the States of Ætolia: which Meeting was called Panætolium. It was choſen for thoſe Meetings in regard of the ſituation and ſtrength thereof; as being ſituate well-near in the midſt of the Country, environed with rocky Mountains, of ſteep and difficult aſcent. For that cauſe it was made alſo the receptacle of their Wealth and Treaſure in all times of danger: but taken at the laſt by Philip of Macedon, with all the Spoil in it, in his War againſt them. 6. Calydon, near the Foreſt ſo called, giving name unto it: the royal Seat of Oeneus, Father of Meleager; divided into two parts by the River Euenus, which runneth through it, according unto that of Ovid,

Et Meleagræam maculatus ſanguine Neſſi
Euenus Calydona ſecat.
That is to ſay,
Calydon, Meleager's Town, the Floud
Euen divides, defil'd with Neſſus bloud.

Adjoyning hereunto were the Athamanes, whom Pliny makes a People of it, who gave name unto a little Province called Athamania; but ſuch (as little as it was) as gave it the Title of a Kingdom to Animander; a Prince whom the Ætolians made ſpecial uſe of in their Wars againſt Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Perſeus, ſuggeſting to him and his Children, that they were deſcended of the Houſe of Alexander the Great, and ſo engaging them, in hope of that Kingdom, to hazard the quiet of their own. The places of moſt note are, 1 Dium, 2. Athenæum; both of them taken by Philip in that War.

Theſe, as they were the laſt Actors on the Stage of Achaia, ſo had they the moſt deſperate part in all the Tragedy of that Country. The Affairs whereof, governed ſucceſſively by that State which was moſt powerful, were for a long time managed by the Athenians; whoſe Counſels and Concluſions went for Law amongſt them. But that Eſtate being broken, if not ſubverted, by the Power of Sparta, the Thebans and Bœotians, who came next in play, had the chief Command; uniting almoſt all the reſt in deſign with them againſt the Spartans, who now grew terrible to all. Becoming inſolent by the courſe of two much Proſperity, and the many great Victories which they had againſt the Spartans, and thereupon quarrelling with the Phocians, they were the cauſe of Philip's coming into Greece; who, as he had learned amongſt them the uſe of Arms, ſo made he uſe thereof at laſt, and of their Diſſentions, to unite all the States of Greece under his Command; Thebes it ſelf being taken and ſacked by Alexander the Son of Philip, as before is ſaid. The Macedonians thus prevailing, partly by Force, but eſpecially by Art and Practice, there was no People in Achaia that durſt oppoſe them; till theſe Ætolians, a reſtleſs and impatient People, took the Cauſe in hand. Who thrived ſo well under Antigonus and Philip, two of the laſt Kings of Macedon, that they took from them many Towns, invaded Theſſaly, attempted Macedon it ſelf, and, when they could not otherwiſe obtain their purpoſe in the Deſtruction of that Kingdom, opened a paſſage for the Romans to effect it for them. But finding no ſuch favour at the Romans hands as they did expect, they began to murmur, and afterwards to excite Antiochus and the Greeks againſt them, drawing thereby thoſe Forces againſt themſelves which they had invited into Greece, and were the firſt People of all the Græcians that were conquered by them; though, by the Mediation of the Rhodians and ſome other Friends, their Country was reſtored unto them, with the loſs only of Cephalenia, Zant, and ſome other Iſlands, which the Romans were reſolved to keep as the fruits of the War. This was about the 564 year of the building of Rome, Fulvius Nobilior being then Conſul, and chief Commander mander in this War. After which time the ſeveral Eſtates hereof enjoyed ſo much Liberty as the Romans, their new Maſters, thought fit to give them: till they were finally made abſolutely ſubject in the time of Veſpaſian, by whom Achaia was reduced into the form of a Province, Peloponneſus being reckoned as a part thereof. In the Diviſion of the Empire by Conſtantine the Great, the Weſt parts hereof being divided from the reſt were called New Epirus; but both of them made Provinces of the Dioceſe of Macedon, under the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum; the principal Officer of this part being called the Proconſul of Achaia: continuing under him and his Succeſſors, Emperours of Conſtantinople, till the Deſtruction of that Empire by the power of the Turks; but ſo that it remained not always under the Command of one ſole Officer, the Politie of that State being altered, and this Country parcelled out into many Governments, eſpecially after the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines, or Weſtern Chriſtians. At that time Theodorus Angelus, a noble Græcian, and one of the (then) Imperial Family, ſeiſed on Ætolia and Epirus; part of which laſt, and all the firſt, he left to Michael his Son, who held them, though with ſome diſpute betwixt him and Michael Palæologus, the firſt Emperour of Conſtantinople after the Expulſion of the Latines. Charles, the laſt Prince of that Family, dying without Iſſue about the year 1430, bequeathed Ætolia to another Charles, the Son of his Brother; and Acarnania (being that part of Epirus which the Princes of Ætolia held) to his baſe Sons, Memnon, Turnus, and Hercules. But many Quarrels happening upon this Diviſion, Amurath the ſecond having then newly conquered Theſſalonica, compoſed the Differences by taking all unto himſelf, Anno 1432. There were at that time other Princes of like Authority, as of Athens, Phocis, and Bœotia; but the firſt the chiefeſt, as honoured not only with the Title of Dukes of Athens, but of Princes of Achaia alſo; ſuch being the Fortune of that City, as to have the firſt and laſt great Sway in the Affairs of Achaia. For at the Tranſlation of the Empire upon the Latines, Godfrey of Troyes, a French-man, was made Duke of Athens and Prince of Achaia, of whom Paulus Æmilius ſpeaketh, Anno 1220: which Honour afterwards was conferred on Walter de Bren, a Kinſman of John de Bren, the laſt King of Jeruſalem, Protector of Baldwin the ſecond the laſt Emperour of the Latines, mentioned by the ſaid Æmilius, Anno 1288. And though on the Defeat and death of this Walter by the Catalonians, then ranſacking thoſe parts of Greece, the Title of Duke of Athens was aſſumed by Frederick Alphonſo, the Son of Frederick King of Sicily, and by other Princes of that Houſe: yet, upon better ground, by the Heir general of this Walter it was conveyed in Marriage to Izaulus di Accio, a Nobleman of the Realm of Naples; whoſe Son Walter (commonly called the Duke of Athens) for a time obtained the Sovereignty of the State of Florence, Anno 1342, but loſt it ſuddenly again by his too much Cruelty. Francis de Acciavol, the laſt Prince of this Houſe, having been brought up in the Court of Mahomet the Great, as one of his Favourites, ſurrendred his Eſtate herein, at the perſuaſion of that Tyrant, in change for the Country of Bœotia and the Dukedom of Thebes: which he no ſooner had received, but he was ſent by Mahomet to Zoganus his Lieutenant in Morea, by whom at firſt he was courteouſly received, at laſt cruelly murthered. And ſo the whole Country of Achaia fell into the poſſeſſion of the Turks, Anno 1454, or thereabouts.

3. EPIRUS.

EPIRUS is bounded on the Eaſt with Ætolia, on the Weſt with the Adriatick, on the North with Theſſaly, Macedon, and ſome part of Albania, and on the South with the Ionian Seas. So called from the Solidity and Firmneſs of it; the word Epeiros in the Greek Tongue ſignifying as much as Terra firma, or the firm Land. But by the Turks at this day it is called Albania, which name they give to all the Lands and Countries in their poſſeſſion lying upon the Adriatick and Ionian Seas.

In this Country was born Olympias, Mother of Alexander the Great; and Pyrrhus, who conquered the Realm of Macedon, and was the firſt Foreiner who made triall (though to his own Loſs) of the Power and Puiſſance of Rome; accounted by Hannibal, next to Alexander, the ſecond great Souldier of the world. Here is alſo Mount Pindus, ſacred to Apollo and the Muſes, dividing this Country from Theſſaly, and therefore common unto both: as alſo the Acroceraunian Hills, ſo called, becauſe they are ſo much ſubject unto Thunder and Lightning; eminent for their height, and much feared by Mariners, who, when they ſee a little Cloud riſing on the top hereof, are ſure of a Tempeſt. Finally, here are the famous Rivers Acheron and Cocytus, which, for their black waters and unſavoury taſte, are ſaid to be the Rivers of Hell: from which laſt the Sacrifices and Solemnities made in honour of Proſerpine, whom Pluto raviſhed and brought hither, had the name of Cocytia. Whence, by a Metonymie, theſe Rivers are taken ſometime for Hell it ſelf; as in that of the Poet, Flectere ſi nequeo Superos, Acheronta movebo.

Since thoſe in Heaven I cannot move,
The Powers of Hell I mean to prove.

The Soil hereof is very barren, and in many places full of Foreſts, and thin of people; but towards the Sea reaſonably fruitful: plentiful of Oxen, Dogs, and Sheep, of more than ordinary bigneſs, and yielding the beſt breed of Horſes. The people uſe a diſtinct Language from the Græcians, though of the Greek Tongue not utterly ignorant: and, by reaſon of the Barrenneſs of their own Country, become great Wanderers, eſpecially in Summer-time, when they travel into Thrace, Macedon, and Aſia minor, hiring themſelves to work in Harveſt under the Turks, as alſo to threſh, winnow, and make clean their Corn; and in the Winter-time return to their Wives and Children. They are able of body, ſwift of foot, apt to undergo any Toil and Labour; having withall good Courages and high Projections: which makes ſuch of them as delight not in works of Drudgery to look for action in the Wars, and otherwiſe to rob and ſpoil the neighbouring Mountains of Albania. Till their Subjection to the Turks, they were much uſed both by the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice in their ſeveral Wars, ſerving on Horſe or Foot, as occaſion was: as Mercenary as the Switzers in the Weſtern parts, but not ſo faithful to the party entertaining them.

Anciently it was divided into Chaonia, (which was the proper Epirus) lying on the Weſt, and Acarnania, bordering on Ætolia, from which it is parted by the River Achelous: the middle parts hereof being Amphilochia, Theſprotia, and Almene: all very populous in former times, and ſo continued till Paulus Æmilius, on the Conqueſt of Macedon, overthrew ſeventy of their Cities. Few of which being ſince re-edified, and the Country for a long time languiſhing under the Turks, here are not any very fair Towns or well-peopled Cities at the preſent to be ſpoken of; and therefore we muſt look on ſuch as flouriſhed in the times fore-going. The principal whereof were, 1. Dodona, one of the Cities of of Chaonia, memorable for the Temple and Oracle of Jupiter, hence called Dodonæus; situate in a fair Grove, the Trees whereof are said to be Vocal, and to give the Oracle: though others say it was delivered first by a pair of Pigeons, whereof the one afterwards fled to Delphos, the other to the Temple of Jupiter Hammon in Ægypt. It was the ancientest Oracle of all Greece: and so perhaps was the Town the ancientest Town also. Said to be first built by Dodon, the Son of Jupiter and Europa: more probably so called from Dodanim, the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who first inhabited this Region; the whole Countrey (Greece I mean) being called Javan from the Father, (by which name commonly it occurreth in the Hebrew Text) this Town Dodona from the Son. 2. Cassiope, a Port-Town, with a fair Promontory of the same name adjoyning to it. 3. Onchesmus, by Strabo called Onchimus, and by Pliny Echinus, a Port-Town also, now called Santi Quaranta. 4. Panormus. on the Sea-side also, retaining still the old name, and but little else. 5. Antigonia, more within the Land, founded or repaire'd by Antigonus a King of Macedon; now called Argiro Castro, as Niger thinketh. 6. Phœnice, once the cheif Town hereof; which being sacked by the Illyrians, under Teuta their Queen, gave the Romans an occasion of Quarrel with them, upon Complaint made to them by the Epirots. 7. Pelodes, a Port-Town, the Principal in that part which was called Thesprotia; as 8. Tarona, on the River Thyamis, and 9. Sybota, an ancient Haven-Town, (now called Syvita) was in that part hereof which was called Almene. 10. Argos, the cheif City of the Amphilochians. This part hereof was first named Molossia, from Molossus the Son of Pyrrhus and Andromache, remarkable for the best breed of Mastives, hence called Molossi: and afterward Chaonia, by Helenus the Son of Priamus, whom Pyrrhus the Son of Achilles settled in this Country; who having unfortunately slain his Brother Chaon, caused it in memory of him to be called Chaonia; Chaoniamque omnem Troiano à Chaone dixit as it is in Virgil. Of these Molossians, Pluto, the third Son of Saturn, was sometimes King, called, from the flat and hollow situation of this Countrey, consisting much of deep Valleys, the King of Hell.

Towns of especiall note in Acarnania were, 1. Anactorium, on the Bay of Ambracia, now called Vanizza. 2. Ambracia, the Regal Seat or Court of Pyrrhus, giving name unto a fair and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Larta, from Larta an adjoyning Town, situate in or near the place where Ambracia stood. It was once subject unto Periander, King or Tyrant of Corinth, who being slain by a Woman named Leonna, whom he kept as his Concubine, occasioned the Inhabitants from that time forwards, in memory of their Deliverance, to worship a Lion. Afterwards being taken from the Children of Pyrrhus by the Macedonians, and from them wone by the Ætolians in the time of their greatness, it was besieged by Fulvius, a Roman Consul spoken of before. Who, seeing that he could not force it, was willing, at the Mediation of the Athenians, Rhodians, and other Friends of both parties, to conclude a Peace; but so that he despoiled this City at his going hence of much excellent Imagery, carrying away with him unto Rome the Pictures of the nine Muses most admirably well done by the hand of Zeuxis, the rarest Painter of his times. 3. Buthrotum, a Roman Colony, by Pliny called Colonia simply; now a small Village called Butrinto. 4. Leucas, situate on the point of a Promontory of the same name also, anciently memorabe for the Temple of Apollo. By leaping into the Sea from the top of this Promontory, such as unfortunately loved were cured of that malady: the first triall of that kind being made by Sappho that famous Poetresse. At that time it was joyned unto the Land; but since, by the violence of the Sea or the hand of man, it is made into an Iland; according unto that of Ovid,

Leucada continuam veteres habuêre Coloni,
Nunc Freta circumeunt———

That is to say,

Leucas, in former times joyn'd to the Land,
Environ'd round with Waters now doth stand.

It was called Leucas, from the Whiteness of the Rock or Promontory, having before the Seperation or disjunction of it been called Neritos; the cheif Town of it varying with the name of the Isle and Promontory. Both Town and Iland at this time is called S. Maure, taken by Bajazet the second from the State of Venice, and by him given unto the Jews, (who do still inhabit it) at their expulsion out of Spain. 5. Nicopolis, a Colony of the Romans, of great both Wealth and Beauty in the time of S. Paul, who from hence dated his Epistle to Titus: called in that Postscript Nicopolis of Macedonia, because Epirus at that time was part of the Province of Macedon, though afterwards a distinct Province of it self. It was first built by Augustus Cæsar on a Promontory opposit unto Actium, on the other side of the Bay: that being the place where his Land-Souldiers were incamped before the Naval Battel betwixt him and Mark Antony; and was thus called either in memory of his Victory, or from a poor man and his Ass, whom he met there the day before. For asking the man his name, he told him that his name was Eutyches, i. e. Fortunate; and that the name of his Ass was Nicon, i. e. Conquerour: which happy Omen made his Souldiers couragious and hopeful of Victory: and he in memory thereof erected here two brazen Images, the one of the Ass, the other of his Master. It is now a small Village called Prevesa. 6. Actium, on the Sea-shore, nigh unto which Augustus and Antony fought for the Empire of the World. The Navy of the latter consisted of 500 Galleys; the former had 250 onely, but those crowned with Victory: Antonius shamefully deserting his Souldiers to follow after Cleopatra, who on the very first Charge fled away for Ægypt. The Town being now ruined, the Promontory upon which it stood is called Capo di Figalo.

The Countrey was first peopled by Dodanim the Son of Javan, or at least by some of his Posterity coming hither from the Isle of Rhodes; whose Memory was preserved a long time in the Town of Dodona, by him, or from him, so denominated. Afterwards, being parted into several Nations, and those Nations united in the common name of Epirots, it became a great and powerfull Kingdom; governed by a Race of Kings descending from Pyrrhus the Son of Achilles, and continuing till the time of Pyrrhus Æacides. A man of such Courage and Magnanimity, that he did not onely recover his own Kingdom, of which Cassander had deprived his Father; but got the Kingdom of Macedon from Cassander's Children: outed of which, he tried his Fortune with the Romans Anno Mundi 3683, V. C. 471. After his death this Kingdom was shrewdly shaken by the Macedonians, and shortly after subdued by Paulus Æmilius, who, as we now said, destroyed 70 Cities hereof in one day. For desirous to satisfie his Souldiers after his Victory in Macedon, he sent unto the Epirots for ten of the principle men of every City. These he commanded to deliver up all the Gold and Silver which they had; and to that end, as he gave out, he sent certain Companies of Souldiers along with them; unto whom he gave secret Instructions, that on a day by him appointed they should fall to sack every one the Town whereunto they were sent. A barbarous and bloudy Decree, 70 Cities confederate with the Romans ruined in one day, and no fewer then 150000 Epirots made and sold sold for Slaves. But the chief motive which induced him to so great a Cruelty was, by dispeopling this Countrey, lying with a long and fair Sea-coast overagainst Italy, to give the Romans oppertunity to land their Armies without any Resistance for the farther Progress of their Forces into Macedon, Thrace, Mœsia, or where else they pleased. Which ungodly Policy was afterwards imitated by William the Couquerour, who laid waste all that part of Hampshire since called New Forest, and therein 36 Parish-Churches, that he might have a safe Landing-place for his Norman Forces, if the English should at any time endeavour to make head against him. Being made subject to the Romans, it was a while part of the Province of Macedonia; but afterwards, when Macedonia was made a Diocese, it became a distinct Province of it self, called by the name of Old Epirus, to difference it from the Province of New Epirus, which lay Eastward of it. At the Division of the Empire it belonged to the Constantinopolitans, and so continued till the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians: at what time Theodorus Angelus, a Prince of the Imperial Family, seised on Ætolia and Epirus, as before is said, and sped so well in his Designs, that he took the strong City of Durazzo from the State of Venice, (to whom it fell in the division of that Spoil) and cunningly (if not treacherously) intercepted Peter the third Emperour of the Latins whom, as some say, he caused to be Murthered at a Banquet. After his death, his whole Estate being divided into two parts, Ætolia with that part hereof which is called Chaonia continued in his House till the time of Charles Prince of Ætolia and Epirus, spoken of before, after whose death it was subdued by Amurath the Second, as before was said. The residue hereof, together with that part of Macedon which is called Albania, fell to the Family of the Castriots: the last of which, named John, (the Father of Scanderbeg) seeing himself unable to resist that Tyrant, who had already swallowed up all his neighbour-Princes, submitted his Estate unto him, and gave unto him all his Sons for Hostages. No sooner was the old Prince dead, but Amurath seised on his Estate, murthered his three eldest Sons, and caused George, the youngest, to be train'd up in the Law of Mahomet: who afterwards, escaping out of his Power, and recovering all his Father's Countries, assumed also the Style or Title of Prince of Epirus. After whose death his Children, not being able to make good their Game, lost it to Mahomet the Great; as shall be shewn more fully in the Story and Discription of Albania, which is next to follow.

4. ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the East with Macedonia, on the West with the Adriatick, on the North with Sclavonia, on the South with Epirus. The Country is mountainous and barren; watered with few Rivers, and those of no great note amongst the Ancients; as 1. Laus, 2. Apsus, 3. Panyasus, 4. Celydnus: all of them falling into the Adriatick.

It took this name from the Albani, once the Inhabitants of this Tract from whom the cheif City hereof was called Albanopolis. Other Towns of most consideration are, 1. Sfetigrade, or Vestigard, (called by some the Holy City) situate in the Borders of Epirus, on the top of an Hill, where it is fenced about like an Eagle's Nest: one of the last Towns in all this Conntrey which was taken by Scanderbeg at his recovery of his Birthright and Estate herein; but being once taken by him, held good courageously against the Turk, the Souldiers neither fainting in their Oppositions, nor corrupted by Money, till at the last subdued by a Superstition. There was in the Town one onely Well, into which a treacherous Christian cast a dead Dog; at the sight of which, being the next day drawn up, the Souldiers gave up the Town; being so unseasonably superstitious, that no persuasion, nor the example of the Captain or the Burgo-masters, could make them drink those (as they thought) defiled waters. 3. Durazzo, a Town of great Strength, first called Epidamnum, and afterwards Dyrrhachium. Under the Walls of which Town was the first bickering between the Souldiers of Cæsar and Pompey, not onely to the present Loss, but also the utter Discomfiture of Cæsar, as he himself confessed, if the Enemie's Captain had known how to have overcome. I must not omit the Valour of Scæva at this Siege, who alone so long resisted Pompey's Army, that he had 220 Darts sticking in his Shield, and lost one of his Eys; and yet gave not over till Cæsar came to his Rescue.

Parque novum Fortuna videt concurrere, Bellum
Atque Virum----densamque ferens in Pectore Sylvam.
Fortune beholds an unaccustom'd Sight,
An Army and a man together fight, Whose Breast a Wood of Arrows cover'd quite.

In the Division of the Eastern Empire amongst the Latines it fell into the power of Venice; taken at last after a long and tedious Siege, by Amurath the second, Anno 1474. 4. Dibra, in the Hill-countries, near Epirus; the first Town which submitted to the valient Scanderbeg at his revolting from the Turks; supposed to be the Deborus of Ptolemy. 5. Croia, conceived to be the Epicaria of Ptolemy, the chief Town of all this Countrey seated amongst inaccessible Mountains, and made impregnable by Art: not got by Scanderbeg, but by a Wile; who, having got into his power, the Secretary of the principal Bassa, forced him to write Letters in his Master's name unto the Governour hereof to deliver it unto him; which was done accordingly. Afterwards it was in vain besieged by Amurath the second, who under the Walls hereof gave up his wretched Soul to the Devil; and thrice besieged by Mahomet his Son and Successor, before he could again possess it: but taken at the last after Scanderbeg's death, as if the Genius or Tuteler Deity of the place had departed with him. 6. Petrella, a Town of great Strength, seated on the top of an Hill (as almost all the Towns of Albania are) about 25 miles from Croia; delivered unto Scanderbeg at his first sitting down before it: as also was 7. Petra Alba, three miles from Petrella, near the Borders of Macedon, and situate like the other on the top of a Mountain, the River Emathus running under the bottom of it. 8. Stellusa, fifty miles from Croia, built on the top of an high Hill in the middle of a pleasant and fruitfull Valley, with great and spacious Plains about it. 9. Dagna or Dayna, a place of great importance in the Hill-Countrey towards Sclavonia; for the possession whereof rose a War betwixt Scanderbeg and the State of Venice: but the Venetians, being worsted at the Battel of Drino, relinquished their Pretentions to it. 10. Aulon, a Port-Town, now called Valona, situate over against Hydruntum or Otranto in Italy, distant from it about 60 miles. The Town is unwalled, but fortified with a very strong Castle. A Town unfortunately fit for the Invasion of Italy, and was accordingly made use by Achmetes the cheif Bassa under Mahomet the Great, who from hence passed his Army over into Apulia, took the Town of Otranto, and, had not the death of Mahomet, and the Combustions thereon following amongst the Turks, altered the Design, might have opened them a very fair way for the adding of Rome unto Constantinople. 11. Apollonia, a Town of great note in the time of the Romans; a Sea-Town, furnished with a commodious Haven, which they held as their Entrance into Greece; to that purpose serving them as commodiously, as Calais did the English in their Wars with France.

This

This Countrey anciently was a part of Macedon inhabited by the Talautii, Æstræi and Albani, from which last (but not till these latter times) it had the name of Albania but whether these Albani were a Colony of the Albanians of Asia, (though it be very probable) I determine not. When it was made a Province of the Empire it contained all Prævalitana and some part of Macedonia Salutaris; being under the Diocese of Dacia in the time of Justinian, but at first of Macedon. Dismembred from the main Body of it when the Latines had subdued Constantinople, it fell unto the noble Family of the Castriots; who, though they took unto themselves the Title of Kings or Princes of Epirus, (most of which they held) as the Countrey of more Note and Eminence, yet was Albania the greatest Strength, and Croia the cheif City thereof, the Seat of their Residence: they being called in that respect by some Writers the Kings of Albania. John Castriot, the Father of Scanderbeg, seeing himself unable to resist the Turks, became their Homager, and delivered four Sons for Hostages; whom Amurath the second in their Father's life time caused to be circumcised, and turn Mahometans: and after his decease murthered the three eldest, and seized upon Croia the cheif City with the rest of the Countrey. But George, the youngest of those Sons, being reserved for better Fortunes, was carefully brought up by Amurath (who somewhat passionately affected him) in the Stratagems of War, though some of his Courtiers then told him that he nourished a Serpent in his Bosom, which would one day sting him. Amurath, to make triall of his Disposition, offered him on a time the Crown of Albania: to which he prudently replied, that he preferred the honour of his Service before all the Kingdoms of the World; and that he held his hand fitter for a Sword, then his Head for a Crown. Satisfied with which Answer the Tyrant preferred him to the place of a Sanzack or Provincial Governour, and gave him some office of Command in all those Armies which he set out against the Christians, Escaping out of the Battel wherein Caramben, the great Bassa, was overthrown and taken Prisoner by Huniades, he got the Town of Croia by a piece of wit, as before was said; aud in a very short time after made himself Master of Petrella, Petra, Alba, Stellusa, and all the rest of the Countrey, by the reputation and terrour of his first Successe. Having recovered his Inheritance out of the hands of the Turks, he reconciled himself to the Church of Christ, styling himself the Souldier of CHRIST JESUS from that time forwards. Invaded by a vast Army of Turks, he overcometh Aly Bassa, and kills 20000 of his men. With no more then 20 Horse and 50 foot he assaulteth Mustapha in his Camp; in which 5000 Turks were slain, and 300 taken. With whom encountring not long after in the open Field, he slew 10000 of his men, took many prisoners, and Mustapha himself amongst the rest, whom he ransomed for 25000 Ducats. Falling upon the Host of Amurath, then besieging Croia, he killed Feris Bassa hand to hand in a single Combat: and in the time of Mahomet, who succeeded Amurath, vanquished Isaac the great Bassa, routed his whole Army, had the Spoil of his Camp, took 20 of his faireſt Ensignes, and slew 30000 of his Souldiers. Not to instance in the rest of his noble Actions it is reported that in the course of his War against the Turks he killed no fewer then 3000 of them with his own hands; using a Turkish Scimiter in all his Fights, of great weight and bigness. Which when Mahomet on a Peace between them had desired to see, and afterwards returned again with this Censure of it, that he saw nothing in it more then ordinary: the gallent Prince sent back this Answer, that the Virtue of the Weapon depended on the Strength of his Arme, which he could not send him, for that he did reserve it for the death of his Enemies. Finally, having held his Cards against Amurath and Mahomet, two most fortunate Gamsters, for the space of 24 years, he set up his Rest at last a Winner; dying in Peace at Lissa, then belonging to the State of Venice, Jan. 17. An. 1466, and was there honourably interred. At the taking of which Town by the Turks about nine years after, his Body was digged up by them, not in spight, but honour; that man accounting himself happy who could get any of his Bones to preserve as a Relick, supposing that as long as he had it about him he should be invincible. But with him died the Liberty of his Countrey also, not long after subdued by the Turks, and made a Province of that Empire, as it still continueth; the name of Albania being by them extended over all Epirus, and so much of Dalmatia also as is under their power.

The Armes of this Kingdome (or rather of the Kings thereof) were Gules, an Eagle Sable.

MACEDONIA is bounded on the East with the Ægean Sea, on the West with Albania, on the North with Mœsia Superior and a part of Thrace, and on the South with Epirus and Achaia.

It was first called Æmonia, from Mount Hæmus, which shutteth up that side hereof which is towards Mœsia; after Æmathia, or Emathia, from a King of it called Æmathus; Macedonia, from Macedo, the Son of Deucalion, and the Father of Caranus, the first King of the Line of Alexander; and finally Kittim, or the Land of Kethiim, whereof see 1. Macchab. 1. 1. and 8. 5. from Kittim the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who was planted here. Anciently it was of more large extent then it is at the present, extending from the Ægean Sea unto the Adriatick, till the taking of Albania out of it, which hath streightned it upon that side, but the rest is as formerly.

The Country taking it together, is very fruitfull and pleasent though on the outward parts thereof begirt with rough Mountains and thick Forests: in former times much celebrated for its Mines of Gold and Silver, which are long since exhausted. It contained formerly the Provinces of Æmathia, Pieria, Pelasgia, Istiæotis, Phthiotis, Thessalie, Mygdonia, Amphaxitis, Paraxia, Edonis, and many others of less note, inhabited by 152 several Nations: now principally divided (besides Albania) into, 1. Thessalie, 2. Macedon specially so called, and 3. Migdonia, which the Turks call Jamboli.

1. THESSALIE hath on the East the Ægean Sea, on the West Albania, on the North Macedon and Mygdonia, on the South Achaia. A sweet and delectable Country it is, the Pleasures and Delights whereof inclined the People to be very effeminate and dissolute in their course of life, made them in love with Luxury and Ease, and much like the Persians in Behaviour, whose Entrance into Greece they did therefore favour. Yet notwithstanding this Debauchedness, they were esteemed the best Horsemen of all the Græcians: by their excellent managing of which creature, (as if they had been one piece with it, and either lent the Horse their Minds, or borrowed his Body) they gave occasion unto the Fiction of the Centaurs, half Men, half Beasts.

It is now called Comenolitari, and of old was very famous for many things, especially 1. for the Hill Olympus of so great height, that it seemeth to transcend the Clouds and is therefore frequently by the Poets used for Heaven it self. 2. For the Hill Othrys, inhabited by the Lapithæ, over whom Piritbous, was King. 3. for the Mountains of Pelion and Ossa, the Dwelling-places of the Centaurs, who, intending to ravish Hippodamia, the new Bride of Piritbous, on her Wedding-day, were slain by Hercules and the Lapithæ. 4, For the delectable Valley of Tempe ſituate betwixt Oſſa and Olympus, extending in length ſix miles, and five in breadth; ſo beautified with Nature's Gifts, that it was ſuppoſed to be the Garden of the Muſes. 5. and laſtly, For the Dolopes and Myrmidones, (who did here inhabit) over whom Achilles had Command at the Siege of Troy: theſe laſt, by reaſon that they were a laborious and thrifty People, being fabled by the Poets to have firſt been Emmets, transformed into men at the Prayer of Æacus, when he wanted Souldiers.

-------Mores quos ante tenebant
Nunc quoque habent; parcum genus eſt, patiensq; laborum
Quæſitique tenax, & quod quæſita reſervet.
The cuſtome they of Emmets ſtill retain,
A ſparing Folk, and unto Labour ſet,
Strangely addicted to all kind of Gain,
And wary Keepers of what-e're they get.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Tricca, the Epiſcopal See of Heliodorus, the Author of that ingenious Piece called the Æthiopick Hiſtory; which he ſo prized, that he choſe rather to looſe his Biſhoprick then conſent to the burning of his Book, which a Provincial Synod had adjudged to the Fire. A Piece indeed of rare Contexture and neat Contrivances, without any touch of looſe or laſcivious Language: honeſt and chaſt Affection being the Subject of it, not ſuch as old or modern Poets ſhew us in their Comedies or other Poems. For here we have no Inceſtuous mixture of Fathers and Daughters, no Pandariſm of old Nurſes, no unſeemly Action ſpecified where heat of Blood and Opportunity do meet; nor indeed any one paſſage unworthy of the chaſteſt Ear. 2. Lamia, where the Athenians, after the death of Alexander, hoping to recover their Freedoms, beſieged Antipater: which was the laſt honorable Enterpriſe undertaken by that great and renowned City, known in old Hiſtories by the name of Bellum Lamiacum. 3. Lariſſa, ſituate on the South of Demetrias, but on the ſame Bay; memorable for the Birth of Achilles, from hence called frequently in the Poets Lariſſæus Achilles, which Birth of his is aſcribed by others to the Town of Phthia, (from whence the Region called Phthiotis takes the nomination) frequently mentioned in the Poets upon that account: and poſſibly, being neighbouring Cities, the one might be the place of his Birth, and the other of his Habitation. 4. Demetrias, ſituate on the Bay called Sinus Pelaſgicus, (now Golfo dell' Armiro) of very great Strength by Art and Nature. Which being held by the Macedonians, together with Chalcis in the Iſle of Eubœa, and the City of Corinth, kept all Greece in aw, and were therefore commonly called the Fetters of Greece; the Græcians never thinking themſelves at liberty till thoſe Towns were diſmantled by the Romans. 5. Pharſalus, nigh to which was fought the great Battel betwixt Cæſar and Pompey for the Sovereignty of the Roman Empire. A Battel more famous then bloudy, 6000 only of 300000 which were in the Field on both ſides, being therein ſlain. A Battel before which the Pompeians were in ſuch a miſerable Security, that ſome of them contended for the cheif Prieſthood, which was Cæſar's Office; others diſpoſed of the Conſulſhip and Preferments in the City of Rome: Pompey himſelf being ſo wretchleſſe, that he neither conſidered into what place it were beſt to flie if he loſt the day, or by what means he might provide for his own Safety, and end the War: as if the War had been made againſt ſome ignoble Enemy, and not againſt that Cæſar who had taken 1000 Towns, conquered 300 Nations, took priſoners one million of men, and ſlain as many. 6. Philippi, ſo named from Philip the Macedonian, the firſt Founder of it; ſituate in the farther part of the ſame Plains of Pharſalia, and famous for as memorable a Battel as that before, and of no leſs conſequence: that namely betwixt Auguſtus and M. Antonius on the one ſide, againſt Brutus and Caſſius on the other; theſe latter being rather overcome by Chance then Valour. For either of them (thinking the other vanquiſhed) ſlew himſelf in the Field; being the two laſt that ever openly ſtood out for the common Liberty, and are therefore called by Cremutius Cordus Ultimi Romanorum, or the laſt of the true Roman Spirits. 7. Gomphi, a very ancient City bordering on Epirus. 8. Pheræ, in which City Alexander the Tyrent reigned, againſt whom that noble Captain Pelopidas the Theban fighting was ſlain in Battel: the Tyrant being not long after murthered by his Wive's Brother, and by that means all Theſſalie recovering Liberty. 9. Pegaſa, or Pagaſa, ſituate on the Bay called Sinus Pelaſgicus which from hence is ſometimes named Pegaſicus; in which the Ship called Argo was ſaid to be built, ſo famous for the renowned Voiage of the Argonauts. The Hill Pelion ſpoken of before is not far from hence. 10. Pythion or Pitheum, of great note (according to ſome) for the Pythian Games there celebrated in the honour of Apollo, who hereabouts killed the Serpent Python: the Conquerours in which Games were crowned at the firſt onely with an Oaken Garland, but afterwards with one of Lawrel. Of which thus the Poet.

Néve operis famam poſſet abolere Vetuſtas,
Inſtituit ſacros celebri certamine Ludos,
Pythia de domiti Serpentis nomine dictas, &c.
Thus made to ſpeak Engliſh by G. Sandys;
Then leſt the well-deſerved memory
Of ſuch an Act in future time ſhould die,
He inſtituted the ſo-famous Games
Of free Contention, which he Pythia names.
Who Ran, who Wreſtled beſt, or rak'd the ground
With ſwifteſt Wheels, the Oaken Garland crown'd.

Theſe Games, together with the Olympick, Iſthmian and Nemæan, ſpoken of before, made the four annual Meetings amongſt the Græcians, renowned for the univerſal Concourſe of the nobleſt ſpirits. 11. Doliche, which, together with Pytheum, and 12. Azorum, another City of this Tract, ſtanding near together, are called in Livius the Hiſtorian by the name of Tripolis. 13. Hypata, the Metropolis of Theſſalie, ſo called by Heliodorus in his Æthiopick Hiſtory before mentioned, who placeth it near the Bay called Sinus Maliacus, now Golfo di Ziton and not far from Mount Oeta, bordering on the Province of Doris: upon which Mountain Hercules, being tortured with a poiſoned Shirt ſent by his innocent Wife Dejanira, is ſaid to have burned himſelf; thence called Hercules Oetæus. Of all which Towns, Lamia, Pagaſa and Demetrius, are in the Region called Phthiotis; Lariſſa, Doliche, Pytheum and Azorum, in that called Pelaſgia; Gomphi and Tricca in Iſtiæotis; the reſt in Theſſalie properly and ſpecially ſo named.

This Countrey, at firſt called Æmonia, afterwards Pelaſgia, then Pyrrhæa, from Pyrrha the Wife of Deucalion, and finally Theſſalia, from Theſſalus one of the Companians of Hercules; by Plinyis called Dryopis, Eſtiotis by Strabo, Pelaſgia by Diodorus, and by Homer Argos; the name of ſome cheif City or particular Province being figuratively uſed for the whole. It was divided commonly into four parts, 1. Theſſaliotis, 2. Iſtiæotis, 3. Pelaſgiotis, and 4. Phthiotis, the name of Theſſalie or Theſſaliotis in the end prevailing, and accordingly diſtributed into ſeveral Governments, united finelly in the perſon of Philip, the Father of Alexander, who partly by Force, but ſpecially by Art and Practice, made himſelf Maſter of the whole. Continuing in a mixt condition betwixt free and ſubject under the Macedonian Kings of the 2. Race, it became ſubject with that Kingdom to the ſtate of Rome: firſt reckoned as a part of the Province of Macedon; after a Province of it self, when Macedon was made a Dioceſe, part of which it was. But from a Province of that Dioceſe, and a Member of the Eaſtern Empire, it was made a Kingdom; given with that Title to Boniface Marqueſſe of Montferrat in exchange for Candia, together with the City of Theſſalonica, and ſome part of Peloponneſus, at the Deviſion of that Empire amongſt the Latines. which Title he affected, in regard that Reiner, the Brother of Boniface his Grandfather, had formerly been created Prince of Theſſalie by the Emperour Emanuel, whoſe Daughter Cyri-Maria (or the Lady Mary) he had took to Wife In him as it began, ſo this Title ended; Theſſalonica falling to the State of Venice, Theſſalie reverting to the Empire when the Greeks recovered it: from whom it was ſubdued, and added to the Turkiſh Empire, in the Reign of Amurath the ſecond, Anno 1432.

2. MACEDON ſpecially ſo called is bounded on the Eaſt with Migdonia, on the Weſt with Albania, on the North with Mount Hæmus, on the South with Theſſalie. The Countrey is for the moſt part fruitfull, as before was ſaid, but not ſo ſurfeiting with Delights as to make the people wanton or effeminate in their courſe of life; they being naturally good Souldiers, exact obſervers of military Diſcipline, and inured to Hardneſs, which their many ſignall Victories do moſt clearly evidence both in Greece and Aſia.

The Greeks in the pride of their own wits reckoned them amongſt the barbarous Nations; and yet, by a ſtrange kind of contradiction, aſcribe unto their Countrey the Seats of the Muſes. For in this Country was Mount Pimpla, with a Fountain of the ſame name at the Foot thereof, both conſecrated to the Muſes, from hence called Pimpleides. Here alſo was the Hill Libethrus, and the Province of Pieria; from whence the Muſes had the names of Libethrides and Pierides; by this laſt called more frequently then by any other name what-ever, eſpecially by the Greeks themſelves. But the Birth of Ariſtotle in this Country doth more convince the Græcians of this fooliſh Arrogance then all the Muſes in the world. A man ſo admirable in the general courſe of Learning, ſo univerſally comprehenſive of all Arts and Sciences, that the beſt-witted Græcian might have been his Scholar, and thought it a great Happineſs, as King Philip did, that they had any Children to be tutoured by him.

The principal Rivers hereof (beſides Erigon and Aliacmon, ſpoken of before) are, 1. Axius, at preſent called Vardari, riſing out of the Hill Scardus, a Branch of Mount Hæmus, and paſſing through the whole extent of this Country into Sinus Thermaicus, or the Gulf of Theſſalonica, as it is now named: the faireſt River of theſe parts, and of ſweeteſt Water; but ſuch as maketh all the Cattel black which drink of it. 2. Chabrius 3. Echedorus; both riſing out of the mid-land Countries, and both falling into the ſame Bay alſo. Beſides which there are three other fair and capacious Bays aſcribed to Macedon, though two of them belonging properly to Mygdonia; that is to ſay, Singiticus, now Golfo di monte ſanto, and Toronaicus, now the Gulf or Bay of Aiomana, and the third, common unto Thrace alſo, which is Sinus Strymonicus, now the Bay of Conteſſa.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, according to the ſeveral Regions and parts hereof, were for the Almopi, 1. Horma, called afterwards Scleucia; 2. Europus, of which name there were four in Macedon; 3. Apſalus, Of Sintica, 4. Triſtolus, 5. Paræcopolis, 6. Gariſcus, 7. Heraclea, for diſtinction called Heraclea Sintica; there being many others of that name in Greece. In Edonis, bordering toward Thrace, 8. Scotuſa, 9. Eerga, 10. Amphipolis, on the River Strymon, with which it is encompaſſed, whence it had the name; ſeated ſo cloſe on the edge of Thrace, that it is queſtionable to which of them it belongs of right; once garriſoned by the Athenians, and from them taken by Philip the Macedonian in the firſt riſe of his Fortunes. 11. Crenides, bordering on Thrace alſo, and by ſome Writers laid unto it, but I think erroneouſly: repaired and beautified by Philip before mentioned, by whom it was called Philippi; and ſituate in a Countrey ſo rich in Mines of Gold, that the ſaid Philip drew thence yearly 1000 Talents, which make 600000 French Crowns, or 140000 l. of our Engliſh mony. Afterwards made a Roman Colony, and accounted the chief City of Macedonia, as appeareth Acts 16. 12. to the People of which S. Paul writ one of his Epiſtles. Next in Æmethia we have 12. Tyriſſa in the Mid-lands, bordering upon Theſſalie; now called Ceretſi. 13. Ædeſſa, called afterwards Ægæa, and now Vodena; the firſt Town of all this Country taken by Caranaus, the Founder of the firſt Race of the Kings of Macedon. 14. Beræa, on Sinus Thermaicus, honoured with the preaching of Paul and Silas; the Citizens whereof are by S. Luke commended for their readineſs in receiving the Goſpel. 15. Pella, on the ſame Bay alſo; the Birth-place of Alexander the Great, from hence called Juvenis Pellæus. 16. Pydna, upon the ſame Bay, at the Influx of the River Aliacmon; in which Caſſander beſieged and took Olympias the Mother, Roxane the Wife, and Alexander the Heir apparent of Alexander, all whom he barbarouſly murthered. This Cruelty he committed, partly to revenge himſelf of Alexander, who had once knocked his Head and the Wall together; and partly to cry quit with Olympias, who had before as cruelly murthered Aridæus the baſe Son of Philip, and Eurydice his Wife, with whom Caſſander was ſuppoſed to be over-familier. Memorable alſo is this Town for the great Battel fought near it betwixt Perſeus the laſt King of Macedon and P. Æmilius the Conſul, in which Perſeus, having ſhamefully deſerted his Army, loſt both the Battel and his Kingdom, with no leſs then 20000 of his foot, which were therein ſlain; the Romans having ſo cheap a Victory, that it coſt them not above an hundred or ſixſcore men. 17. Dium, not far from the Hill Olympus, and about a mile from the Sea, of which mile the River Helicon, becoming there a Lake, and called Baphyrus, taketh up one half. It is ſituate in the Borders towards Theſſalie; the way unto it out of Tempe being ſtreight and narrow, and almoſt impaſſable, by reaſon of the Spurs of the Mountains running overthwart it: which, had it been well defended by the Macedonians, would have kept their Country from the Romans, who that way attempted it. But Perſeus, hearing that the Enemy had got into Tempe, onely took care to get his Treaſure out of Dium, and ſo abandoned both the Paſſage and the Town together. 18. Phylace, more within the Land; as is 19. Eribœa. But theſe four laſt are in that part hereof which is called Pieria.

3. MYGDONIA hath on the Eaſt the Ægæan Sea, on the Weſt Macedon properly and ſpecially ſo called, on the North Edonis and Sinus Strymonicus, on the South Sinus Thermaicus, or the Gulf of Theſſalonica; ſo that it is almoſt a Peninſula, environed on three ſides with Water.

Here is in this Country the Hill Athos, ſtanding in a Peninſula, (the Iſthmus being once cut through by Xerxes, but ſince cloſed again) ſaid to be 70 miles in circuit, 3 days journey long, half a day's in breadth, reſembling the ſhape of a Man lying with his Face upwards: the higheſt point whereof, covered perpetually with Snow, is ſaid to caſt a Shadow as far as Lemnos. It is exceeding fruitfull both in Graſſe, Fruit, Oil, and Wine, and wondrous plentifull in Hares, according to that of Ovid,

Quot Lepores in Atho, quot Apes paſcuntur in Hybla:
How many Hares on Athos feed,
What Swarms of Bees on Hybla breed.

It is inhabited onely by Greek Monks, whom they call Caloires, of the order of S. Baſil, to whom the Hill, commonly called the Holy Mountain, hath been long ſince dedicated: the place being ſo privileged by the Grand Seigniour, that neither Turk nor Græcian may inhabit in it, except ſuch Græcians onely as profeſs this Life. Of theſe there are about 6000, diſperſed in 42 Monaſteries, built after a military manner, for fear of Thieves and Pirates, wherewith they were much infeſted in times paſt: frequented with great Concourſe of People coming thither to behold and adore ſome Reliques, (for which they are of much eſteem;) the free Oblations of thoſe Pilgrims, and ſome Benevolence from the Turks, which do much reſpect them, being the cheif means of their Subſiſtence. The manner of their life is like that of the ancient Eremites: poorly clad, their Shirts of Woollen, which they both ſpin and weave themſelves; none of them idle at any time, doing ſtill ſomewhat for their Livelihood, and the advancement of the Houſe of which they are, as dreſſing Vines, felling Timber, yea and building Ships. Few of them give themſelves to Study, and ſome of them are of ſo groſs an Ignorance, that they can neither write nor reade. They are bound by their Order to lodge and entertain ſuch Strangers as have occaſion to paſs that way, according to their rank and calling; and that of free coſt too, if it be deſired.

Towns of moſt note, according to the ſeveral Regions and parts hereof, are, for Mygdonia ſpecially and properly ſo called, 1. Antigonia, ſo called from Antigonus a King of Macedon, the firſt Founder of it, 2. Xylopolis. 3. Terpillus, 4. Phyſco, 5. Aſſorus; all mentioned by Ptolemy, but not elſe obſervable. 6 Apollonia, for diſtinction ſake called Apollonia Mygdoniæ, to difference it from Apollonia in Albania, then a part of Macedon: famous for the Studies of Auguſtus Cæſar, who here learn'd the Greek Tongue. For Amphaxiis, there was 7. Arethuſa; 8. Stagira, now called Nicalidi, renowned for the Birth of Ariſtotle, hence named Stagirites. 9. Theſſalonica, ſituate on the bottom of Sinus Thermaicus, now called the Bay of Salonichi, by the name of the Town. Anciently the Metropolis or Head-City of Macedon; the Seat of the Prefectus Prætorio for Illyricum, after the removall thereof from Sirmium; as alſo of the Primate of the Greek Church, who reſided here. To the people of this City did S. Paul write two of his Epiſtles. It continued in great power and credit till the Fall of the Conſtantinopolitan Empire into the hands of the Latines: at which time it was beſtowed firſt on Boniface Marques of Montferrat, the new King of Theſſaly; after whoſe death it fell unto the State of Venice, who held it till the year 1432, when it was forced by Amurath the 2 to become Turkiſh. Which notwithſtanding, it ſtill preſerves the reputation of a beautifull and wealthy City, inhabited by rich Merchants, who drive here a great Trade, eſpecially for the commodities of the Indies; for beauty, Riches and Magnificence, little inferiour unto Naples: and though the Turks and Jews make the greateſt number of Inhabitants, yet here are reckoned 30 Churches for the uſe of Chriſtians. As for the Jews, they ſwarm here in ſuch great abundance, that in this City and that of Conſtantinople onely there are reckoned 160000 of them; but generally hated and contemned by all ſorts of People. 10. Siderocapſa, of old called Chryſites, remarkable for its Mines of Gold and Silver; ſo beneficiall to the Turk, that he receives hence monthly 18000, and ſometimes 30000, Crowns de claro. Next for Chalcidice, there was 11. Panormus, a Port-Town. 12. Sidonica, in the Peninſula of Mount Athos. 13. Athos, or Athoſa, in the ſame Peninſula, with a Promontory of the ſame name, nigh which it ſtood. 14. Acanthus, now called Eriſſo, on the Bay of the Holy Mountain. And finally in Paraxia we have 15. Ampelus, 16. Torona, giving name to the Bay adjoyning, called anciently Sinus Toronaicus, now Golfo di Aiomana. 17. Caſſandra, on the Sea-ſide, ſo called from Caſſander King of Macedon, who repaired and beautified it; being before named Potidæa. 18. Derris, 19. Merillus, 20. Pallene, ſituate in the Cherſoneſe or Demy-Iſland called Patalene, and by ſome Patalia: formerly conſecrated to the Muſes, but before that infamous for the War which the Giants are fabled to have made here againſt the Gods; at what time it was called Phlegra, the Fields adjoyning Campi Phlegræi, in which this great Battel is ſuppoſed to be fought. The occaſion of the Fable was, (as both Theagenes and Eudoxus do expound the ſame) That the Inhabitants hereof in thoſe elder times, being men of a moſt impious and inſolent Life, got the name of Giants; whom when Hercules endeavoured to ſubdue and reduce to Reaſon, it happened that there fell a great Tempeſt of Thunder and Lightning, by which they were conſtrained to flie and ſubmit themſelves. Hence the Report that thoſe Giants made War againſt the Gods. Others have placed theſe Phlegræan Fields in Theſſaly, and perhaps more probably. Certain I am, that ſome place nearer to the Hills of Pelion, Oſſa and Olympus, doth agree beſt with it: if at leaſt Ovid were not out in his narration, who makes thoſe Mountains to be heaped upon one another, for their better reaching to the Skies, and fighting upon even ground, as the ſaying is. For thus that Poet;

Affectâſſe ferunt regnum cœleſte Gigantes,
Altâque congeſtos ſtruxiſſe ad Sidera Montes.
At pater omnipotens miſſo perfregit Olympum
Fulmine, & excuſſit ſubjectum Pelion Oſſæ.

Which may be Engliſh in theſe words;

The Giants once the throne of Heaven affected,
And Hills on Hills unto the Stars erected:
Till Jove with Thunder high Olympus brake,
And Pelion did from under Oſſa take.

But from thoſe Fables to proceed to more real Stories. This Countrey was firſt peopled by Cittim, the Son of Javan, paſſing over out of Aſia minor: in memory whereof here was not onely a Town called Citium, ſpoken of by Livie l. 42. but the whole Land of Macedon is in the Book of Maccabees called the Land of Chettiim, 1 Maccab. 1. 1. and the Inhabitants hereof called Citims in the 8. Chapter of the ſame Book, v. 5. Spreading in tract of time from one Sea to the other, from the Ægean to the Adriatick, ſome Colonies of them paſſed from hence to Italy, and firſt inhabited that Countrey, as hath there been ſaid. Such as continued in theſe parts, divided into ſeveral Tribes, as in all parts elſe, became in time to be united in the name of Macedons. A People not much taken notice of in the former times, living a poor and painfull life, Goatherds and Shephards for the moſt part, ſcarce able to defend their own Mountains from the next Invader, much leſs to dream of conquering either Greece or Perſia: And therefore Alexander told them, and not much unfitly, (though by him ſpoken in paſſion, and to their Diſgrace) that his Father Philip had firſt made them Gentlemen. For Philip having learned the Rudiments of War under Epaminondas, (being then an Hoſtage with the Thebans) and by that means becoming acquainted with the Temper and State of Greece, not onely freed his own Kingdom from the Illyrians, Thracians, and other barbarous Nations, who had gained upon it; but taking advantage of the Factions raiſed amongſt the Græcians, (which he knew how to feed and cheriſh for his own improvement) ment) brought them at first wholy to relly upon him, and after to be subject to him. Insomuch that never any Monarchy had a swifter Growth, nor a more speedy Dissolution: there passing not full 40 years from the first of Philip to the last of Alexander; in which space it was both begun, perfected, and broken to pieces. For the Foundation being laid in Murther, Perjury and Treason, as at first it was, was never likely to be blessed with a long Continuance.

The Kings of MACEDON.

3536	12. Archelaus. 24.		24. Aridæus. 6.

Of these 24 Kings onely 6 are famous: viz. 1. Caranaus, the first King, originally of Argos, of the Race of Hercules, and by an Oracle commanded to lead a Colony into this Countrey, and to follow the first Flock of Cattel he saw before him. Being here arrived in a tempestuous stormy day, he espied a Herd of Goats flying the fury of the Weather. These Goats he followed unto Ædessa, into which, by reason of the darkness of the Air, he entred undiscovered, wone the Town, and in short space became Lord of all the Countrey. On which occasion as the Goat afterwards became the Armes and Ensign of the Kings of Macedon, so by that Beast those Kings were figuratively designed in the Holy Scripture: of which see Dan. 8. 5, 21. 2. Perdiccas, the fourth King, who at Ægæ built a Burial-place for all his Successors, assuring his People, that as long as their Kings were there buried his Race should never fail; and so it hapned. For the Kingdom of Macedon, after the death of Alexander the Great, who was buried at Babylon, was translated to the Sons of Demetrius. 3. Europus, who in his infancy was carried in a Cradle against the Illyrians his Enemies, and returned victorious. This the Macedons did, either because they thought they could not be beaten, their King being present; or persuading themselves that there was none so void of Honour and Compassion as to abandon an Infant, no way able to save himself from Distruction but by the Valour and fidelity of his Servants. 4. Alexander, the Son of Amyntas, famous for a notable Exploit on the Persian Embassadours; who, being sent from Megabyzus, requested a view of the Macedonian Ladies. No sooner were they entered, but petulantius eas Persis contrectantibus, as Justine relateth the Story, they were called back by this Alexander, sending in their steads young Springals maidenly attired; who, upon the like Indignities offered slew these effeminate Asians. After which he behaved himself so discreetly, that the Persian Monarch gave him all Greece betweee Hæmus and Olympus. 5. Philip, Father to Alexander, who governed first as a Guardian to Amyntas, the Son of Perdiccas his elder Brother; but afterwards took unto himself both the Kingdom and Title of King; which he continued in the Deposition of his Nephew and natural Sovereign, the Murther of the rest of his Brethren, and the Destruction of all such as opposed his practice. But, being otherwise a man of approved Abilities, he cleared his own Countrey of the Illyrians, subdued Achaia, Thrace, and a great part of Peloponnesus, and was chosen General of the Greeks against the Persians. But as soon as he had made all things ready for this Expedition, he was slain by one Pausanias, a young Gentleman whom he had formerly abused in the heat of his unnatural Lusts. 6. Alexander, the Son of Philip, who recovered such parts of Greece as on the death of his Father had betooled themselves with a hope of Liberty. He subdued Darius the great King of Persia, Taxiles and Porus Kings of India; founded the Monarchy of the Græcians; and in the height of his Successes was poisoned at Babylon (as it is conceived) by Cassander, one of his great Captains: his Revenue at the time of his death amounting to 300000 Talents yearly. After his death his new-got Empire was much controverted in the point of Succession, he himself dying without lawfull Issue, and having at his death bequeathed it to him who was thought most worthy by his Army: and the Souldiers, according to their several affections and Relations, thought their own Leaders most deserving. At last the Title of King (and in effect nothing but the Title) was by consent of the Commanders cast on Aridæus, a Bastard of Philip, to whom Perdiccas was appointed to be protector, (for Aridæus was a little crazed in his Brain) and to be General of the Army: by whose design he was also married to Eurydice, Daughter to Amyntas, whom Philip had before dispossessed of that Kingdom. As for the Provinces, they were assigned unto the Government of the cheif Commanders; viz. Ægypt to Ptolemy, Syria to Laomedon, Cilicia to Philotas, Media to Pytho, Cappadocia to Eumenes, Pamphylia, Lycia and Phrygia major to Antigonus, Caria to Cassander, Lydia to Menander, Pontus and Phrygia minor to Leonatus, Assyria to Seleucus, Persis to Peucestes, Thrace to Lysimachus, and Macedon it self unto Antipater: the other parts of the Persian Empire being left to them unto whose hands they were committed in the time of Alexander. But this Division held not long: for Perdiccas being once slain by Ptolemy, and Eumenes made away by Antigonus, these two became quickly too great for the rest; Ptolemy adding Syria and Cyprus to the Kingdom of Ægypt, and Antigonus bringing under his Command not onely all Asia minor, but Assyria, Media, and almost all the Eastern parts of the Persian Empire. Antipater in the mean time, succeeding in the Protectorship, banished Olympias the Mother of Alexander out of Macedonia, as bearing but a Step-dame's love unto Aridæus. But he being dead, she returned out of Epirus (the place of her Banishment) into Macedonia, where raising a strong Party amongst the people, she put Aridæus and his Wife Eurydice to death, proclaiming Alexander, the Son of Alexander by Roxane; both slain not long after by Cassander the Son of Antipater, who, to make sure work, murthered also with the like Cruelty Hercules, the Son of Alexander by Barsine, (another Persian Lady, as Roxane was) the last Survivor of that House. And so the Royal Family being rooted out, Antigonus took unto himself the Title of King: as did Seleucus, who had now recovered all the Persian Provinces beyond Euphrates. The like did Ptolemy in Ægypt, and Cassander in Macedon.

The second Race of the MACEDON Kings.

A. M.
3648	1. Cassander, Son of Antipater, supposed to have been the Poisoner of Alexander, rooted out the Bloud-royal of Macedon. His Reign was full of Troubles and Difficulties. 19.
3667	2. Alexander and Antipater, Sons to Cassander; but but not well agreeing, called unto their Aid Lysimachus and Demetrius, by whom they were both in short time murthered. 4.

3671 3. Demetrius, Son to Antigonus, the powerfull King of Asia, after he had in one Battel against Seleucus lost both his Father and all his Asian Dominions, settled himself in Macedon: but being there outed by Pyrrhus, he fled to Seleucus, and with him died. 6.

3677 4. Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, was by the Souldiers, voluntarily forsaking Demetrius, made King of Macedon: but after 7 months the Souldiers revolted to Lysimachus, as being a Macedonian born. 1.

3678 5. Lysimachus, King of Thrace, being thus made King of Macedon, was in the end vanquished and slain by Seleucus, the last Survivor of Alexander's Captains. 7.

3685 6. Ceraunus, or Ptolemy Ceraunus, Son to Ptolemy of Ægypt, having traitourously slain his Friend and Patron Seleucus, seased on Macedon: but lost it, together with his Life, unto the Gauls, who then plagued these Countryes. After whose death this Kingdom, being distracted amongst many Competitours, settled at last upon.

3687 7. Antigonus Gonatas, the Son of Demetrius, who, for his Valour shewn in expulsing the Gauls, was made King of Macedon. And though for a while he gave way to Pyrrhus, then returning from Italy, yet after the death of Pyrrhus he again recovered his Estate, but was outed once again by Alexander the Son of Pyrrhus. 36.

3723 8. Demetrius II. Son of Antigonus, recovered Macedon from the power of Alexander the Son of Pyrrhus. 10.

3733 9. Antigonus II. surnamed Doson, left by Demetrius as Protectour to his young Son Philip, usurped the Kingdom. He divers times vanquished and crushed the Græcians beginning then to cast off the Yoak of Macedon. 12.

3745 10. Philip, the Son of Demetrius. 42.

3787 11. Perseus, the Son of Philip, the last King of Macedon. The Subversion of which Estate was first begun in the time of his Father, who had not onely warred upon the Ætolians and others of the Greeks whom the Romans had taken into their Protection, but sided with Hannibal against them. Upon which grounds they sent first Titus Qu. Flaminius, one of their Consuls, by whom Philip was vanquished at the Battel of Cynoscephalos, and his Kingdom made Tributary unto Rome. After which picking a Quarrel against Perseus also, managed with variable Success by Licinius, Martius, and others of their Commanders, they dispatched Paulus Æmilius with an Army into Macedon, to bring him to absolute Subjection. Who sped so well, that Macedon was made a Province of the Roman Empire, and Perseus led captive unto Rome Anno 3789. In which Triumph, besides the Pomp of leading a captive King in Bonds, Æmilius caused the ready Money which he brought out of Greece to be carried in 750 Vessels, every Vessel containing three Talents; which made so infinite a Sum, that the Roman people were free for many years after from all Taxes and Impositions. A. M. 3789.

Macedon, thus made a Province of the Roman Empire, and afterwards divided into three parts or Provinces, that is to say, Macedonia Prima, Macedonia Secunda or Salutaris, and Prævalitana, in the new Modell of Constantine became a Dioceſe, the Dioceſe hereof containing the Provinces of Crete, Achaia, Old and New Epirus, Macedonia Prima, and the greatest part of Salutaris; the residue of Salutaris and Prævalitana (which makes up the Countrey now called Albania) being laid to the Dioceſe of Dacia. It continued part of the Eastern Empire till towards the last fatal dissolution of it; though many times harassed and depopulated by the Sclavonians, Bulgarians, Rossès, and others of the barbarous People, at their several Invasions of it. Finally, it was conquered by the Turks, first, under the Conduct of Bajazet, their fourth King, taking Nicopolis, a Town hereof bordering on Thrace, and lying North of Sinus Strimonicus now the Bay of Contessa; and after, under Amurath the second, their sixth King, making themselves masters of Thessalonica, the cheif City of it, and therewith of all the Countrey. By reason of which many Invasions and last Desolation by the Turks, there is scarce one of all those many Cities before mentioned now of any eminence, except Thessalonica onely; the rest being miserably destroyed. And for the Countrey it self, it is governed by a Turkish Sanzach, under the Beglerbeg of Greece; his annual Revenue being but 8000 Crowns, nor any thing else required of him then to maintain 100 Horse in ordinary pay for defence of his Province, and to finde 400 Horse on extraordinary occasions, as the Grand Seigniour shall command him.

6. THRACE.

THRACE hath on the East Pontus Euxinus, Propontis, and the Hellespont, on the West Macedon, on the North the Hill Hæmus, on the South the Ægæan Sea and part of Macedon. It is a very large and goodly Province, extending 20 days journey in length, and 7 days journey in breadth; and, in relation to the Heavens, reaching unto the 44. Degree of the Northern Latitude; so that the longest Day in Summer is about 15 hours, three quarters.

By several men, according to the times they lived in, it hath been called by divers names: by Stephanus Aria, by Suidas Odrisia, by Lycophron Crestonia, by some Writers Scythia, by Josephus the Hebrew Thyras. But generally it is called Thrace, or Thracia, and that, as some say, from Thrax the Son of Mars, as others, from Thracia, an Inchantress: more probably from the Ferity and barbarous condition of the first Inhabitants, the name in the Original Greek bearing that construction: most likely from Thyras, the Son of Japhet, who first planted here, in memory of whom it did retain the name of Thyras in the time of Josephus; besides many other foot-steps and remembrances of him in the names of many of their Towns, and some of their Princes; of which we have already spoken in our general Preface. Finally, by the Turks it is called Romania; either from the many Roman Colonies which were planted here, or because Constantinople, the cheif City of it, was anciently called Nova Roma: and by that name it is now called in most modern Writers.

The Countrey generally is neither of a rich Soil nor a pleasent Air: the Corn and other Fruits, by reason of the coldness of the Climate, leisurely ripening; the Vines yielding more Shade then Juice, and the Trees for the most part more Leaves then Fruit: yet in some parts there be many large and goodly Plains, where they reap good store of Corn, but of Pulse especially; and towards the Sea-side they have plenty of Wine, which Pliny much commended both for strength and goodness.

The People anciently were very bold and valient, and called by some Αὐτονόμοι, because every man was a Law to himself. So that it was truly said by Herodotus, that if they had either been all of one mind, or under one King, they they had been invincible. Of Manners they were rude and savage, somwhat near to Brutishness; buying their Wives, and selling both their Sons and Daughters, as in open Market: in that since imitated by the Turks, who possess their Countrey. The Men were more couragious then comely, wearing Cloaths according to their Conditions, ragged and unseemly. The Married-woman were in love to their Husbands so constant, that they willingly sacrificed themselves at their Funerals. The Virgins were bestowed, not by their own Parents, but the common Fathers of their Cities. Such as brought neither Beauty nor Vertue for their Dowry, were put off according to their Money; most times sold as other Cattel in the Markets. In matters of Religion they worshipped Mars, Bacchus, Diana, Mercury, as did other Gentiles: swearing especially by the first, from whom they bragged themselves to have been descended. But their cheif national Deity was one Zamolxes, sometimes a Native of this Countrey, who, having been brought up under Pythagoras, and returning home, prescribed them good and wholesome Laws; assuring them that, if they did observe the same, they should go unto a place when they left this World in which they should enjoy all manner of Pleasure and Contentment. By this means having gotten some opinion of a Divinity amongst them, he absented himself, and after was worshipped as their God. Upon these Principles, when any one was born amongst them, his Parents and other Friends, sitting round about him, lamented bitterly his coming into the World, ripping up all the Miseries and Afflictions whereto he was to be exposed in this present Life, and so deplored his condition as absolutely miserable and unhappy. But, on the contrary, when any one chanced to die, they buried him with all Joy and Alacrity; highly rejoycing that by this means he was freed from the Crosses and Disasters of this wretched world. Which is expressed thus briefly (after his wonted manner) by my Author, Lugentur Puerperia; natique deflentur; Funera contrà Festa sunt, & veluti Sacra cantu Insigne celebrantur. A piece of such sound and orthodox Divinity, that I wonder how they hit upon it in those times of Darkness; and savouring very much of the Primitive Piety, by which the Obits of the Saints were kept as Festivals, no notice being taken of the day of their Births. According to that of the good old Writer, Non Nativitatem, sed Mortem, Sanctorum Ecclesia pretiosam & festam judicat, Here lived the Tyrant Polymnestor, who villanously murthered Polydorus, a younger Son of Priamus: for which fact Hecuba, the young Prince's Mother, scratched him to death. Here also lived the Tyrant Tereus, of whom before in Phocis: and Diomedes, who, using to feed his Horses with Man's flesh, was slain by Hercules, and cast unto his Horses. And, finally, here reigned King Coтys, whom I mention not as a Tyrant, but propose as a pattern of rare Temper both in mastering and preventing Passion. For when a neighbour-Prince had sent him a Present of Glasses of the purest Metall, and no less accurate in the Workmanship or Fashion of them, (having dispatched the Messenger with all the due Complements of Majesty and Gratitude) he broak them all to pieces; lest if by mishap any of his Servants should do the like, he might be stirred to an intemperate Choler.

Chief Mountains in this Countrey, besides Hemus spoken of already, are, 1. Rhodope, the highest next Mount Hemus in those parts of the World, craggy and rough, and the Top thereof continually white with Snow: memorable for the Fate and Fable of Orpheus, who, in a melancholick humour, (having lost his Wife) betook himself to these Mountains, where with his Musick he affected both Woods and Beasts, who are said to have danced unto unto his Musick: from this place of his Abode called Rhodopeius, from his Countrey Thracius, Non me carminibus vincet nec Thracius Orpheus, &c. as the Shepherd boasteth in the Poet. The truth is, that he was a man of an heavenly Muse, and by his Dictates and good Counsel, laid down in Verse, first of all civillized this People, and weaned them by degrees from their Bestiality. Hence the occasion of the Fable. But for Mount Rhodope it self it is in the midst of this Countrey, thwarting it from Mount Hemus towards the West; which, with the Spurs and Branches of it, and the Plains adjoyning, lying betwixt the River Nessus on the West, and Melas or Niger on the East, made up that Province of the Empire called Rhodope, by the name of the Mountain. 2. Pangæus, rich in Mines of Silver. 3. Melapus, shooting towards the Sea, full of Rocks and Cliffs. And 4. Orbelus, lying towards Macedon, where there is a little Region from hence called Orbelia.

Principal Rivers hereof, besides Strymon spoken of before, the Boundary in some places betwixt this and Macedon, are, 1. Nessus, by the Græcians now called Mestro, by the Turks, Charason, which, rising out of Mount Hæmus, falleth into the Sea near the Isle of Thassus. 2. Athyras, in which name the memory of Thyras the Son of Japhet seems to be preserved; which, rising in Mount Hæmus also, loseth it self in the Propontick: as doth 3. Bathynias, another River rising from the same Mount Hæmus. 4. Hebrus, the most noted River of all this Countrey, rising out of Rhodope, and falling into the Ægæan near the Isle of Samothracæ: a River of so slow a Course, that it is not easie to discern which way it goeth; but memorable in the Poets for the Fate of Orpheus, who, being torn in pieces by the Thracian Women, had his Limbs thrown into it by those Furies. 5. Thearus, good against the Scab both in Man and Beast, issuing out of 30 Fountains, some hot, some cold; with the pleasentness of whose Waters Darius the King of Persia was so delighted, that he erected a Piller in honour of it.

The cheif Towns were, 1. Abdera, now called Polystilo, situate not far from the Fall of the River Nessus into the Ægæan, the Birth-place of Democritus, who spent his whole Life in laughing at the Follies of others. 2. Potidæa, of old a Colony of Athens, from whom it revolted, and submitted to the State of Corinth. But the Athenians, not enduring the Affront, beleaguered it, and after two years Siege, and the expence of 2000 Talents, could not recover it again but on Composition. 3. Ænos, on the Ægæan Sea; a Town of great Strength and Safety, and therefore used by the later Constantinopolitan Emperours for the securing of great persons. For hither Michael Palæologus sent Jathatines, the Turkish Sultan, flying to him for Aid; and hither Mahomet the great sent Demetrius, Prince of Peloponnesus, when he yielded up his Countrey to him: both under colour of providing for their Ease and Safety, but in plain terms to keep them in honourable Prisons. 3. Lysimachia, on the Sea-shore; once of great importance, built by Lysimachus, who after Alexander's death laid hands on this Countrey: afterwards garrisoned by Philip the Father of Perseus; on the withdrawing of whose Forces for some other Service it was taken and raised to the ground by the barbarous Thracians, and all the People of it carried into Captivity; but by Antiochus the Great re-edified and new-peopled again, moved thereunto by the convenient situation and former glories of the place. 5. Philippopolis, so called from Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Alexander, who built and fortified it as a Bridle to hold in the Thracians; called also Trimontium, from three Hills on which it was situate: beautified in the time of the Romans with a goodly Amphitheatre, continuing entire and whole till theſe latter days, and might have laſted longer by many Ages, did not the Turks daily take away the Stones thereof, which are all of Marble, to make money of them. Here are alſo many other ancient Monuments, though the Town be much waſted and deſtroyed, the Scythians at one time killing in it above 100000 perſons: which not withſtanding it is populous and well-frequented, by reaſon of the convenient ſituation of it on the River Hebrus, which they now call Mariza. 6. Trajanopolis, ſo called from the Emperour Trajan, by whom it was either founded or repaired; indifferently well peopled, and ſtill preſerving its old name. 7. Selymbria, on the Coaſt of the Propontick Sea; beautified with a commodious Port for receit of ſmall Veſſels, and many Bays adjoyning capable of greater: by Ptolemy called Selybria, and Olybria by Suidas. 8. Apollonia, upon Pontus Euxinus or the Black Sea, now Siſſopoli. 9. Phinopolis, on the ſame Sea alſo. 10. Nicopolis, at the foot of the Mount Hæmus, there being another of that name near the River Neſſus. 11. Perinthus, on the Propontick Sea, near the Influx of the River Arſus. A Town of great note in the ancient Buſineſſes of Greece; of great ſtrength, and peopled formerly with men of ſuch reſolutions, that they maintained their Liberty againſt Philip of Macedon after almoſt all the reſt of Thrace had ſubmitted to him. 12. Heraclea, at firſt a Colony of the Thebans, and afterwards of much requeſt in the time of the Romans, as being beautified with the Pallaces of Veſpaſian, Domitian, and Antoninus, Emperours of Rome, as alſo with an Amphitheatre cut out of one entire Marble, and accounted one of the World's ſeven Wonders; and, finally, made the Metropolitan City of the Province of Europe, one of the Provinces of the Dioceſe of Thrace, whereof more anon. 13. Olynthus, called by Xenophon the greateſt City of Thrace; as poſſibly enough it was in Power and Riches, though not in greatneſs of Extent. A Colony of the Athenians, rich in Trade, and Miſtreſs of a fair and goodly Territory adjoyning to it: the People whereof had been malicious Enemies to the Kings of Macedon, which principally induced Philip ſpoken of before, to ſet upon them. In which Attempt he ſped ſo well, that what he could not get by Force he obtained by Money, bribing ſome of the principal Officers to betray it to him. For the recovery whereof Demoſthenes oft moved the People of Athens, in thoſe elaborate Orations called the Olynthiacks. 14. Seſtos, in the Thracian Cherſoneſe, which, being a Peninſula abutting over againſt Troas on the Aſian ſide, is now called Saint George's Arm. Oppoſite whereunto, on the other ſide of the Water, is the Town of Abydus; remarkable for the Tragical Loves of Hero and Leander, celebrated by Muſæus, an old Greek Poet. 15. Callipolis, on the Northern Promontory of this Cherſoneſe, the firſt City of note that ever the Turks poſſeſſed in Europe; taken by Solyman, the Son of Orchanes the ſecond King of the Ottoman Race, Anno 1358; from whence they eaſily and in little time ſpred themſelves all over the reſt of Thrace: the ordinary paſſage of late times betwixt Europe and Aſia, by reaſon of the convenient Harbour and ſafe Anchorage. 16. Cardia, ſeated on the Weſtern ſide of it, oppoſit to the Iſle of Lemnos; the Birth place of Eumenes, who, being a poor Carrier's Son, attained to ſuch an ability in the Art of war, that after the death of Alexander the Great, under whom he ſerved, he ſeiſed on the Provinces of Cappadocia and Paphlagonia, and ſiding (though a Stranger to Macedon) with Olympias and the Bloud-royal againſt the Greek Captains, vanquiſhed and ſlew Craterus, and divers times drave Antigonus (afterwards Lord of Aſia) out of the Field. But being by his own Souldiers betrayed, he was by them delivered to Antigonus, and by him ſlain. 17. Sardica, ſituate towards Mount Hæmus, memorable for the Council there held againſt the Arians Anno 351. 18. Adrianople, ſeated near the midſt of Thrace, called anciently Uſcudama; but got this name from Adrian the Emperour, who repaired and beautified it: made ſubject to the Turks by Bajazet Anno 1362: from the firſt taking of it made the Seat of the Turkiſh Kings, till the taking of Conſtantinople by Mahomet the Great; by whom it was removed unto that City. 19. Pera, oppoſit to Conſtantinople, on the farther ſide of the Water, (as the word doth ſignifie in the Greek,) by ſome called Galata; once peopled by a Colony of Genoueſes, as the Mart and Factory of that State; taken by Mahomet the Great Anno 1453, but ſtill repleniſhed, for the moſt part, with Chriſtian Merchants and Artificers.

But the cheif glory of this Countrey, and of all the Eaſt, is the renowned City of no. Conſtantinople, ſeated in ſo commodius a place for Empire, that it overlooks both Europe and Aſia, and commands not onely the Propontis and Boſporus, but the Euxine Sea. Firſt founded by one Byza, and from him named Byzantium: but being taken by the Perſians, and from them recovered by the Spartans, (unwilling that the Perſians ſhould grow ſtrong in Europe) it was repaired and fortified by Pauſanias, one of their Commanders, 663 years before the Birth of our Saviour. In vain it was beſieged by Philip of Macedon, and of great ſtreugth in the Flouriſh of the Roman Empire. The Walls were of a juſt height, every Stone whereof was ſo joyned with Couplets of Braſs, that the whole ſeemed but one intire Piece; adorned beſides with Turrets, Bulwarks, and other Arts of Fortification. Siding with Niger in his War againſt Severus the Emperour, it indured a Siege of three years againſt all the Forces of the Romans: during which time the people were ſo diſtreſſed by Famine, that men meeting in the Streets would draw and fight, the Conquerour feeding on the Vanquiſhed. For want of Artillery to diſcharge on the Aſſailants, they caſt down upon them whole Statues made of Braſs, and the like curious Imagery Houſes they pulled down to get Timber for Shipping; the Women cutting off their Hair to inch out their Tackle: and having thus patched up a Navy of 500 Sail, it was loſt all by one Tempeſt. Compelled to yeild by this Misfortune, the principal of the Nobility were put to the Sword, the Wealth of the Inhabitants given for a Prey to the Souldiers, the Walls thereof diſmantled, and the Town left in rubbiſh. Yet there appeared ſo much of Majeſty and Beauty in the very Ruines, Ut mireris utrùm eorum qui primi exſtruxerunt, vel eorum qui deinceps ſunt demoliti, vires ſint potiores, as Herodian hath it. Re-edified afterwards by the Emperour Conſtantine, he honoured it with his own name, and made it the cheif Seat of the Roman Empire. The City was finiſhed May 11. Anno 331; and, being ſo finiſhed, was indowed with all the Priviledges of Rome, an equal number of Senators, one of the Annual Conſuls, and all other Officers of State, choſen out of both; the Citizens of the one being free of the other, and capable of all places of moſt Truſt and Power. For that cauſe it was called NOVA ROMA in ſome following times. This City he adorned alſo with magnificent Buildings, curious Statues, and ſuch like Ornaments, tranſported hither from Old Rome: which City he ſpoiled of more coſtly Pieces than any twenty of his Predeceſſours had brought unto it. At this day the cheif Buildings are the Turk's Seraglio and the Temple of Saint Sophia; which as they differ not much in place and ſituation, ſo as little in Magnificence and State. The Temple of Saint Sophia was, if not built, yet re-edified, by the Emperour Juſtinian. It is built of an Oval form, ſurrounded with Pillers of admirable workmanſhip, adorned with ſpacious and beautifull Galleries, roofed all over with with Moſaick work, and vaulted underneath; very ſtrong for the Fabrick, and pleaſing for the Eye. The Doors are very curiouſly wrought and plated; one of which by the Superſtitious people is thought to have been made of the planks of Noah's Ark. And yet this Temple is little more then the Chancel of the ancient Church, which contained in length 260 foot, and 180 in breadth; and yet to our Saint Paul's in London may ſeem for the bigneſs to have been but a Chappel of Eaſe. But what it wants in Greatneſs, it hath gained in Beauty, and in the Elegancy of the Building, wherein it is thought to exceed all the Fabricks in the whole World. The Sides and Floore are all flagged with excellent Marble; and before the Entrance is a goodly Portico, or Porch, in which as well the Chriſtians, who viſit it out of Curioſity, as the Turks, who repair thither for Devotion, are to leave their Shoes. By Mahomet the Great, after the taking of the City, it was converted to a Turkiſh Moſque, as it ſtill continueth; frequented by the Grand Seigniour almoſt every Friday which is the Sabbath of that People. Near hereunto ſtandeth the Palace or Seraglio of the Ottoman Emperours, on the North-eaſt Angel of the City, where formerly ſtood the ancient Byzantium; divided from the reſt of the City by a Wall containing three miles in Cercuit, and comprehending goodly Groves of Cypreſſes intermixed with Planes, delicate Gardens, artificial Fountains, and all variety of Pleaſures which Luxury can affect or Treaſure compaſs. The Palace it ſelf, enjoying a goodly proſpect in the Sea, was firſt built by Juſtinus the Emperour, afterwards much enlarged by the Ottoman Race, containing three great Courts one within another: the Buildings yielding unto thoſe of France and Italy for the neat contrivances, but far ſurpaſſing them for Coſt and Curiouſneſs.

As for the City it ſelf, it is ſaid to be 18 miles in compaſs, and to contain 700000 living ſouls; yet would be more populous then it is, if the Plague, like a cruel Tertian Ague, did not every third year ſo rage amongſt them. It is fortified towards the Land with three ſtrong and high Wals, the one higher then the other, the outermoſt higheſt of them all: towards the Sea with one Wall onely, built after the old faſhion with many Turrets, which very ſtrongly flanker and defend the ſame. But formerly both the Town and Cherſoneſe in which it ſtandeth were defended from the Incurſions of the barbarous people by a ſtrong Wall built on the very Iſthmus of it, ſome ten miles from the City, reaching from one ſide to the other: the work of Anaſtaſius who ſucceeded Zeno, Anno 494. A City which a far off gives to the Eye a moſt pleaſing object: ſo intermixt with Gardens and beſet with Trees, that it ſeems a City in a Wood; but being entred, it much deceiveth the expectation which it promiſed, the Buildings of it being mean, if not contemptible. The Streets for the moſt part are exceeding narrow, but raiſed on each ſide for the greater Cleanlineſs: the Houſes but of two Stories high, ſome of rough Stone, and ſome of Timber, without any outward Grace or exteriour Garniſhing; in many places nothing but low Sheds or rows of Shops; and in ſome places long dead Walls belonging unto great mens Houſes. The principal Beauty of the whole, next to ſome Monuments of Antiquity, which are ſtill, preſerved, and the Tombs or Sepulchres of ſome of the Ottoman Kings, which are very ſumptuous, are the Moſques or Temples of the Turks, about eight thouſand in number; and the Port or Haven, ſo conveniently profound, that Ships of greateſt Burthen may ſafely lay their Sides to the Sides thereof, for the receit or diſcharge of their Lading; and ſo commodiouſly ſeated on the Thracian Boſperus, that there is no Wind, whatſoever it be, which brings not in ſome Shipping to it. But that which gives the greateſt Pleaſure to the ſight from the Hills adjoyning is the Situation of it on ſeven Mountains, moſt of them crowned with Magnificent Moſques, built all of white Marble, round in form, and finiſhed on the top with gilded Spires, reflecting the Sun-beams with a marvellous Splendour. On the firſt whereof ſtandeth the Ruines of Conſtantine's Palace, exceeding ſtately to behold. On the ſecond, a fair Turkiſh Moſque, built on the Palace anciently belonging to the Greek Patriarch. On the third ſtands a ſtately Moſque, the Sepulchre of Mahomet the ſecond: and a very large Hoſpital, for entertainment of Pilgrims and releif of the poore: the Annual Rents whereof are valued at 200000 Checquines. On the fourth and fifth the Sepultures of Selimus the firſt, and Bajazet the ſecond. On the ſixth the Moſque and Sepulchre of Solyman the Magnificent, numbered amongſt the preſent wonders of the World. And on the ſeventh the Temple of Saint Sophia, and the Turks Seraglio, ſpoken of already. In which reſpect it is called Πόλις ἑπτάλοφος by Nicetas, Urbs ſepticollis by Paulus Diaconus; and ſo acknowledged to be by Janus Douſa, Phineas Moriſon, G. Sandys, and other of our modern Travellers, the Eye-witneſſes of it. So that if there be any Myſterie in the number of Seven, or that the ſitting of the great Whore on a ſeven-headed Beaſt, be an aſſured direction to find out the Antichriſt; we may as well look for him in Conſtantinople, or Nova Roma, where the Great Turk, the profeſſed Enemy of Chriſt and the Chriſtian Faith, hath his Seat and Reſidence, as amongſt the ſeven Hills of Old Rome, where the Pope reſideth. Or if his ſitting in the Temple of God ſhew us where to find him; we may as well look for him in the Temple of Saint Sophia, now a Turkiſh Moſque, as in Saint Peter's Church at Rome, ſtill a Chriſtian Temple.

But to return again unto Conſtantinople. As it was made by Conſtantine the Imperial City, and conſequently the cheif City of the Eaſt in all Civil matters; ſo it came in little time to have a great Sway alſo in Affairs of Religion. The Chriſtian Faith is ſaid to be firſt preached in Byzantium by Saint Andrew the Apoſtle, the Firſt Biſhop thereof. Afterwards ſpreading over Thrace, and the Churches thereof being regulated by many Biſhops, the cheif Preeminence in matters which concerned thoſe Churches was given unto the Biſhops of Heraclea, Heraclea being at that time the Metropolis or principal City of the Province. But after that Conſtantinople was built by Conſtantine, and made the Imperial City, as before was ſaid, it did not onely over-top Heraclea, and draw unto it ſelf the Metropolitan Dignity, but ſtood in Competition with the other Patriarchal Churches for the ſupreme Power: inſomuch as at the ſecond General Council holden in this City it was unanimouſly decreed, that the Patriarch hereof ſhould in degree of Honour be next unto the Biſhop of Rome, and above thoſe of Antioch and Alexandria; the ſame Decree being confirmed in the Council of Chalcedon alſo. By which not onely all the Churches in the Dioceſe of Thrace, but alſo of Natolia, or Aſia minor, (except Cilicia and Iſauria, which remained to the Patriarch of Antioch) containing no leſs then 28 of the Roman Provinces, were made ſubject to him. And though Pope Leo the firſt, pretending onely the preſervation of the Privileges of thoſe two great Churches, but indeed fearing leſt New Rome might in the end get the Precedency of the Old, did oppoſe this Act, and ſome of his Succeſſours perſiſted in the ſame Reſiſtence: yet they were forced in the end to give way unto it, eſpecially after the Emperour Juſtinian had by his Imperial Edict confirmed the ſame; by whom it was finally ordained, Senioris Romæ Papam primum eſſe omnium Sacerdotum, beatiſſimum autem Archiepiſcopum Conſtantinopoleos, Novæ Romæ, ſecundum habere locum, that is to ſay, That the Pope of Rome ſhould have the firſt place in all General Councils, and the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, or New Rome, ſhould have the ſecond. Encouraged wherewith, and with the countenance and favour of the Emperour Mauritius, John Patriarch of Conſtantinople, in the time of Gregory the Great, took to himſelf the Title of Univerſal or Oecumenicall Biſhop, the Paſtor-General (as it were) of the Church of Chriſt. And though Pope Boniface, by the Grant of that bloudy Tyrant Phocas, got that Title from him: yet the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople made good their ground, never ſubmitting either themſelves or their Churches to the Pope's Authority; being for that cauſe ſpecially accounted by the Church of Rome for Schiſmaticks, and accordingly reviled and perſecuted with all kind of Indignities. how it ſucceeded with theſe Patriarchs in the times enſuing, and by what means their Juriſdiction was extended over all Greece, Moſcovie, part of Poland, and many other Churches in the North and Eaſt, hath been ſaid already. Certain it is, the conſtant Reſidence of the Emperours from the time of Conſtantine gave great ground unto it: of whom I ſhould here add the names, but that I muſt firſt ſum up the affairs of Thrace before the Building of this mighty and predominant City, and take a brief view of the reſt of thoſe Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Greece.

Concerning which we are to know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it had the names of Strymonii, Bardi, Dolonci, Sapæi, Sai, and ſome others, united by moſt Writers in the name of Thracians. They were governed at firſt by the Kings or Princes of their ſeveral Tribes, as moſt Nations elſe; diſtinguiſhed from the common People, as in other Pomps, ſo moſt eſpeeially by their Gods, which their Kings had to themſelves apart, and were not to be worſhipped by the beſt of their Subjects. Theſe not agreeing well together for the common good, it gave the Athenians, Spartans, Thebans, and other Nations of the Greeks, a good oppertunity to invade their Country, to ſeize on the Sea-Towns thereof, and plant Colonies in them: the Country in thoſe times being meanly peopled, and conſequently giving that advantage unto the Græcians as the Indies in theſe latter times have to the Spaniards, Portuguezes, Engliſh, Hollanders, and all other Adventurers. Such of them as lay next to Macedon, proving bad Neighbours thereunto upon all occaſions, at laſt provoked Philip the Father of Alexander, to put in for a ſhare; who, being choſen Arbitrator betwixt two Competitors for that Kingdom, (drawn at laſt into fewer hands) came not unto the Council with ſuch poor Attendants as Juſtice and Piety, but with a great and puiſſant Army; wherewith having vanquiſhed and ſlain the two Pretenders, he pronounced Sentence for himſelf, and made Thrace his own, compelling the Inhabitants to pay him the tenth part of their Revenue for his yearly Tribute. After the death of Alexander this Countrey was ſeiſed on by Lyſimachus, as his part of the Spoil, who here built the City Lyſimachia; from hence invading Dacia, Macedon, and the neighbouring Regions: and he being dead, the Thracians, now accuſtomed to a forein Yoak, were either Subjects, or at leaſt Tributaries, to the Macedonians. Aiding them in their Wars againſt the Romans, they incurred the diſpleaſure of that People; who, having ſettled their Affairs in other places, and repulſed the Cimbri, thought it fit time to call the Thracians to account for their former Actions: but ſped ſo ill in the Attempt, that Porcius Cato loſt his whole Army in the On-ſet, cunningly intercepted in their Woods and Faſtneſſes. Didius the Prætor, coming in whilſt the Thracians were buſie in the Chaſe, gave them ſuch a ſtop, that he deſerved a Triumph for it, and made the Victory more eaſie to Metellus, who ſucceeded Cato in that Charge, and tryumphed alſo over them; as alſo did Lucullus on another Victory A. V. C. 680. Broken with ſo many ill Succeſſes, they were finally ſubdued by Piſo in the time of Auguſtus; and became ſo obſequious to that fortunate Prince, that Rhiſemalces, a great and puiſſant King hereof, aided him with a ſtrength of Horſe againſt the Pannonians and Illyrians, who had then rebelled. Afterwards being made a Province of the Roman Empire, in Conſtantine's new Model it became a Dioceſe under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; Thrace it ſelf being caſt into four Provinces, that is to ſay, Thrace ſpecially ſo called Hæmimontum, Rhodope, and Europa; Scythia and the Lower Meſia, ſpoken of before, being added to it: of which the Preſidents of Rhodope and Hæmimontum were not to be appealed from to the Præfectus Prætorio, as the others were, but onely to the Prefect of Conſtantinople, the Emperial City. But as Alfonſus King of Caſtile, ſurnamed the Wiſe, was once heard to ſay, (never the wiſer for ſo ſaying) That had he ſtood at the Elbow of Almighty God when he made the World, he would have ſhewed him how ſome things might have been better ordered: ſo give me leave to play the foole, and to ſay this here, that had I ſtood at Conſtantine's Elbow, I would have counſelled him to lay the Dioceſe of Thrace to the Prefect of Illyricum, who had originally onely the Dioceſes of Macedon and Illyricum under his Command; and not have placed it under the Prefect of the Eaſt, who had both Aſia's and all Ægypt under his Authority. For being that there lay Appeals from the Vickers or Lieutenants of the ſeveral Dioceſes to their ſeverall and reſpecttive Prefects, how great a trouble muſt it be to the Subjects of Thrace on every occaſion of Appeal to poſt to Antioch, there to complain unto the Prefect of the Orient, when Sermium and Theſſalonica, the ordinary Reſidences of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, were ſo hard at hand? But Conſtantine was an abſolute Prince, and might do what he liſted. He had not elſe removed his Seat ſo far towards the Eaſt, and left the Weſtern parts of the Empire open to the Barbarous people, out of a fancy onely to preſerve the Eſtern. For that it was a Fancy onely the event did ſhew: the Perſians for all this prevailing more then ever formerly; and Thrace it ſelf, though honoured with the Imperial City, and planted with ſo many Roman Colonies, ſo ill inhabited, that a great part thereof lay waſte and deſart many Ages after. Inſomuch as the Goths, being by the Hunns driven over the Danow, were by the Emperour Valens planted in this Countrey, (the Emperour having a deſign to uſe them in his following Wars;) where not contented with the Portion allotted to them, they bid fair for all, waſting the whole Province, taking divers Towns, and endangering Conſtantinople it ſelf, from whence they were not driven (Valens himſelf being killed in the War againſt them) but by the comming of ſome Saracens to the Aid of the Citizens. Nor could the Reſidence of the Emperours ſo protect this Countrey, but that it was continually haraſſed and depopulated by the Sclaves, Bulgarians, Roſſes, Saracens, and other Barbarous people falling in upon it; nor hinder one Bryonnius, in the time of Michael Ducas and Nicephorus Botoniates, from aſſuming to himſelf the Title of King of Thrace; nor finally prevent the Turks of the Ottaman Race from getting ground every day on the Leſſer Aſia, incroaching upon Thrace it ſelf, and in the end obtaining the Imperial City.

And here perhaps it is expected, conſidering the Turks are now poſſeſſed of Thrace and the reſt of Greece, that we ſhould make relation of the Nature of that People, their Cuſtomes, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings.

But

But the discourse thereof we will defer till we come to Turcomania, a Province of Asia from whence they made their first Inundations, like to some unresistible Torrent, into Persia, and after into the other parts of the World now subject to them. And therefore letting that alone till another time, we will proceed to our Description of the rest of Greece, consisting of the Islands scattered in the Pontick, Propontick, Ægean, Cretan, and Ionian Seas: leaving out such as properly belong to Asia till our Description of that Countrey, thought otherwise Greek Islands, and so accounted both for their Language and Original.

7. The Islands of the PONTICK and PROPONTICK Seas.

BEfore we come to the Descriptions of these Islands, we must first look upon the Seas in which they lie; beginning with the PONTICK first, because the greatest, and that which doth communicate and convey its Waters unto all the rest. A Sea made up originally of the Confluence of those mighty Rivers (the greatest in those parts of the World) which do fall into it, that is to say, the Danow, Boristhenes and Tanais, falling out of Europe, besides many other fair and large Rivers, (though of lesser note) to the number of at least an hundred, which pay Tribute to it: the whole compass of it being 2700 miles; in form by some resembled to a Scythian Bow when it is bended. A Sea not so salt as many others, and therefore much annoyed with Ice in Winter; seldom remitted in the Spring on the Northern Shore. The Traffick of it is wholly in a manner engrossed by the Turk, who is Master of all the Sea-coast of it, save what belongs to the Polonian and Crim-Tarter. At first it was called Ἄξεινος from the Inhospitableness of the neighbouring People, which being brought to some Conformity caused the Sea to be called Εὔξεινος. By Florus it is called Mare Sinistrum, because in the way from Rome to Asia minor it lay upon the left hand, as the Mediterranean did upon the right. It is commonly called at this time Mare Maggiore, for its greatness; and the Black Sea, because of the great Mists thence arising. Others not unprobably affirm that it is called the Black Sea from the dangerous and black Shipwrecks here happening. For it is a very dangerous Shore, full of Rocks and Sands: and for this cause there is on the top of an high Tower a Lantern, in which there is a great Pan full of Pitch, Rosin, Tallow, and the like, in dark nights continually burning, to give warning to Mariners how near they approach unto the Shore. This Sea, being the biggest of all those parts, gave occasion to them which knew no bigger to call all Seas by the name of Pontus, as Ovid, Omnia pontus erant, deerant quoque littora ponto; and in another place of the same Poet, ——— nil nisi pontus & aer: a better reason doubtless of the name, then that of the Etymologists, Pontus, quia ponte caret. Of this Sea the chief Isles are Thynnias, and Erithinus, little famous.

From hence the Sea bending Southward is brought into narrower Bounds, not being fully a mile broad, and is called the Thracian Bosporus: Thracian, for its Site nigh Thrace; and Bosporus, for that Oxen have swam over it. It hath no Island worth naming. It is fortified on each side with a very strong Castle. That on the Asian side, being the elder and the lesser, is by the Greeks called Asio-castron, by the Turks named Accechisar; the other, just opposite to it, is by the Turks called Genichisar, by the Greeks named Neocastron, or New Castle. This last was the work of Mahomet surnamed the Great, in the beginning of his Reign; in bigness not inferiour to a little City; built by him in or near the place of the ancient Damalis; environed with a Wall 22 foot broad, and containing three great Towers, their Walls exceeding 10 yards in thickness; exceedingly well stored with all sorts of Ordnance and Ammunition. By the English they are commonly called the Black Towers; partly because seated at the Entrance of the Euxine or Black Sea, and partly because they serve as a Prison for Malefactors of principal note, who seldom are discharged thence till released by death.

This Streight, having continued 28 miles in length, openeth it self into the Propontis, 300 miles in compass; confined with Thrace on the one side, and with Bithynia on the other; so as they which sail in the middle may descry the Land on all parts. Now called Mar di Marmora, from the Island Marmora, which, formerly called Proconnesus, hath for its abundance of Marble purchased this new name. The Soil is apt for Vines, and not destitute of Corn; yielding also good Pasturage for Goats, whereof here is plenty, with an incredible number of Partridges amongst the Rocks: the Countrey of Aristeus, a famous Poet, who flourished in the times of Crœsus. Anciently it had in it two Cities of the same name with the Island, called the Old and New Proconnesus: the former first built by the Miletians, an Asiak People; the latter by the Natives of this Island. But both these being long since decayed, it hath now only a small Village towards the North, with an Haven to it, inhabited by the Greeks, as is all the rest of the Island: such Christian Slaves as are in great numbers employed here by the Turks in digging Marble for their Mosques and other Buildings being only Sojourners, not House-keepers, and therefore not accounted amongst the Inhabitants. Here is also in this Propontick Sea the Isle of Cyzicus: but being it is on Asia side, we shall there speak of it.

The Sea having gathered her waters into a lesser Chanel is called Hellespont, from Helle, Daughter of Athamas King of Thebes, who was here drowned. Over this famous Streight did Xerxes, according to Herodotus, make a Bridge of Boats to pass into Greece: which when a sudden Tempest had shrewdly batteted, he caused the Sea to be beaten with 300 Stripes, and cast a pair of Fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was subject. Xerxes in this Expedition wasted over an Army consisting of two millions and 164710 fighting men, in no less then 2208 Bottoms of all sorts. When all the Persians soothed the King in the Unconquerableness of his Forces, Artabanus told him that he feared no Enemies but the Sea and the Earth; the one yielding no safe Harbour for such a Navy, the other not yielding sufficient subsistence for so multitudinous an Army. But his return over this Hellespont was as dejected as his Passage magnificent; his Fleet being so broken by the Valour of the Greeks and the Fury of the Sea, that, for his more speedy Flight, he was compelled to make use of a poor Fisher-boat. Neither yet was his Passage secure: for the Boat, being overburthened, had sunk all, if the Persians by casting away themselves had not saved the Life of their King. The loss of which noble spirits so vexed him, that having given the Steersman a golden Coronet for preserving his own Life, he commanded him to Execution as a Co authour of the death of his Servants. It is now called the Castles, or the Sea of the Two Castles; which two Castles stand one on Europe, the other on Asia side, in the Towns of Sestos and Abydus. These Castles, commonly by the Turks called Dardanelli, are exceedingly well built, and abundantly furnished with Munition. They search and examine all Ships that pass that way; they receive the Grand Seigniour's Customs, and are in effect the principal Strength of Constantinople. At these Castles all Ships must stay three days; to the end, that if any Slave be run away from his Master, or Thieves have stoln any thing, they may be in that place pursued and apprehended. So that these Castles are as it were the Out-works of Constantinople, to defend it from all Invasions, and from any Forces which may come unto it by Sea out of the Mediterranean; as for the Safety thereof from such as may find passage out of the Euxine, there are situate at the very entrance of the Thracian Bosporus two strong Castles, the one above Constantinople on Europe side, the other on the Asian Shore, which before we spake of. No European Isle of note is in either of the Streights. And therefore we pass on unto

8. The Islands of the ÆGÆAN Sea.

HElleſpont, after a forty miles course, exspatiateth its waters in the Ægæan Sea: so called either from Ægeus, the Father of Theseus, who, misdoubting his Son's safe return from the Minotaur of Crete, here drowned himself; or, secondly, from Ægæ, once a principal City in the prime Island Eubœa; or, thirdly, because that the Islands lie scattered up and down like the Leaps of a wanton Goat, from the Greek αἴγνος.

The chief Islands of it are, 1. Samothrace, 2. Thassus, 3. Imbrus, 4. Lemnos, 5. Eubœa, 6. Salamis, 7. Ægina, 8. the Cyclades, 9. the Sporades, and 10. Cythera: all which especially from Eubœa Southwards, are called the Islands of the Arches; the Sea being by the Greeks called the Archipelago, in regard of its greatness compared unto the narrow Seas which lie above it.

1. SAMOTHRACE is a small Island opposite to the Coasts of Thrace, where the Hebrus falls into the Sea; so called quasi Samos Thraciæ, to difference it from the Asian Samos, bordering on Ionia. Formerly it was called Dardania, from Dardanus the Trojan, who fled hither when he carried the Palladium thence. But Aristotle, writing of the Commonweal of these Samothracians, telleth us that it was first called Leucosia, and afterwards Samus, from Saus the Son of Mercury and Rhene, the letter M being interposed. It is now called Samandrachi, and is plentiful in Honey and Wild Deer, and better stored with commodious Harbours then any other in these Seas. It hath a Town of the same name with the Island, situate on an high Hill on the North part hereof, overlooking a capatious Haven; of late, by the Pirates frequent infesting of these Seas wholly, in a manner, desolate.

2. THASSUS, another little Island on the same Coast, opposite to the Influx of the River Nessus, lying betwixt that and Athos in Macedonia, at the Mouth of the Strymonian Bay: by Plini called Æria and Æthria, by Ptolemy Thalassia, at the present Tasso. It is in compass betwixt forty and fifty miles, sufficiently fruitful, well replenished with Woods, and yielding good store of the best Wines; mountainous in some places, but those Mountains fraught with Quarries of excellent Marble, which the Romans called Thassian, from the Island; and in the times of Philip and Alexander the Great so rich in Mines of usefull Metalls, that those Kings received yearly 80 Talents for their Customs of them. It hath one Town of the same name with the Island, situate on a large Plain in the North part of it, bordering on a goodly Bay, which serves for an Haven to the Town: and on the South parts, where the Countrey is more mountainous and hilly, there are two Towns more, each of them situate on an Hill; but the names thereof occur not amongst my Authours.

3. Imbrus, another small Island, now named Lembro, is situate betwixt Samothrace and the Thracian Chersonese, in compass about thirty miles, but more long then broad, stretching North and South, and distant from Samothrace about ten miles. The Island is mountainous for the most part, except towards the West; where it hath some pleasant and well-watered Plains: in it is a Town of the same name, situate at the foot of the Mountains, once sacred unto Mercury, but not else observable.

4. LEMNOS, an Island of more note, lieth betwixt Thrace and Macedon, not far from Imbrus; memorable amongst the Poets for the fabulous Fall of Vulcan, who, being but an homely Brat, hardly worth the owning, was by Juno in great Passion thrown out of Heaven, and, falling on this Island, came to get his Halting. However, he was anciently worshipped by the People hereof, and from hence called Lemnius. It is in compass about an hundred miles, but more long then broad, extended from the East to the West; on every side well furnished with convenient Creeks and some pretty Havens, by which the want of Rivers is in some sort recompensed.

The Countrey is for the most part plain, if compared unto the adjacent Islands, but otherwise swelled with rising Mountainets; the interposed Valleys being very fruitful of Wheat, Pulse, Wine, Flesh, Cheese, Wooll, Flax, Linen, and all other necessaries; onely Wood is wanting. And though here be no Rivers, as before was said, yet have they good Fishing on the Sea-coast for their use and sustenance; and in some parts hot Baths for Health and Medicine. But the chief Riches of this Island is in a Mineral Earth here digged, of excellent virtue for curing Wounds, stopping of Fluxes, expulsing Poisons, a Preservative against Infections, and the like; called Terra Lemnia, from the place, and Terra Sigillata, from the Seal or Character imprinted on it. For being made up into small Pellets, and sealed with the Turk's Character or Signet, it is then (not before) sold unto the Merchants; by whom it is dispersed over most parts of the Christian World. Upon the sixth of August yearly they goe to gather it; but not without much Ceremony, and many religious Preparations, brought in by the Venetians, when they were Lords of this Island, and still continued by the Greek Monks or Caloires, who are the principal in the work. There is one Hill only where it groweth, the Top whereof being opened, they discover the Vein, resembling the casting up of Worms; and having gathered as much of it that day as the Priests think fit, it is closed again; certain Bags of it being sent to the Grand Seigniour yearly, the residue sealed up, and sold to the forein Merchant.

But to return to the Topography of the place. The Eastern parts hereof are said to be fat and fruitful, the Western very dry and barren: in both containing 57 Towns and Villages, all of them inhabited by the Greeks, except only three, and those three garrisoned by the Turks, who, being Lords of the whole Island, have new named it Stalimene. In former times, from two prime Cities in it, it was called Dipolis. Of which the first was called Lemnos, by the name of the Island, as large and well-peopled now as ever formerly, but of no great estimation when it was at the best, seated upon an high Hill looking over the Sea, with a handsome Market place, on which Mount Athos casts a Shadow, though distant 87 miles from it. It was formerly by another name called Myrina; but that held not long, the name of Lemnos still remaining. 2. The second of the two Cities was then called Hephæstias, memorable for the Temple of Vulcan, hence called Hephæstiades; since desolate and destroyed, ſtroyed, and a new Town built in the place of it, being called Cochino. This Town is not great, but of a reaſonable ſtrength, memorable for the ſtout Reſiſtence which a notable Virago, named Marulla, made againſt the Turks in the time of Mahomet the Great, the Venetians then being Lords of the Iſland. For ſuddenly landing, when they were not looked for, with a purpoſe to ſurpriſe this Town, they found more Reſiſtence at the Gates then they did expect: none being more commended then this Maiden, who, ſeeing her Father ſlain, took up ſuch Weapons as lay by him, and manfully made good the place, until the reſt of the Citizens, wakened with the Alarm, came unto her Reſcue, and forced the Enemy to retire. Near hereunto is the Hill on which Vulcan is fabled to have fell; more eminent for the Mineral earth here only gathered. And not far hence Pliny reports a Labyrinth to have ſtood in the days of old, little inferiour unto thoſe of Crete or Ægypt; the Ruines of it being ſo decayed, that Bellonius, who took great pains in it, was not able to trace them. 3. The third place of note is Setira, though an ordinary Village, yet memorable for the Chappel in which the Greek Caloires begin their Oriſons on the ſixth day of Auguſt, before their gathering of the Earth ſo often mentioned. In this Countrey anciently reigned Thoas, the Son of Bacchus and Ariadne, during whoſe time the Women of the Iſland upon ſome diſpleaſure murthered all the men, the King only excepted, preſerved by Hypſipyle his Daughter, whom they made their Queen, and by whom Jaſon with the Argonauts were ſo kindly entertained for two years together, that they had almoſt forgot their intended Expedition for the Golden Fleece; ſhe her ſelf being got with Child by Jaſon at his being there, the other Women probably following her Example. Following the Fortune of the other parts of Greece, it came at laſt under the power of the Conſtantinopolitan or Eaſtern Emperours. In the Subverſion of that Empire by the Latines or Weſtern Chriſtians, (of which more hereafter) it fell to the ſhare of the Venetians, who held it till the year 1463, or thereabouts.

Beſides theſe on the Coaſt of Thrace, there are alſo ſome of leſs note on the Shores of Macedon. The principal whereof are, 1. Peparethus, as Ptolemy, Enonus, as Pliny calls it, conteining about 40 miles in compaſs, now called Saraquino, as Caſtaldus, or Lemene, as Niger hath it; fortified on the Eaſtern part with a Caſtle built upon a Rock. Others of leſs note are, 2. Scyathos, now Sciati, 3. Scopelos, 4. Halonneſus, 5. Cicynethus, now Pontico, and 6. Dromus: of which little memorable. All which, together with thoſe formerly deſcribed on the Coaſt of Thrace, being but the Acceſſories of the ſeveral Continents upon which they border, followed the Fortune of the principal, and were conquered in them.

5. EUBŒA, known to the Ancients by the names of Macris and Abantis, to the Moderns by that of Negropont, frontiereth all along the Coaſt of Achaia, parallel to which it is in Fertility; one part hereof being torn away from it by an Earthquake, and lying ſtill ſo near unto it, that between the Iſland and the Continent is only a little Euripus, which ebbeth and floweth ſeven times in one day. The reaſon of which when Ariſtotle could not find, it is ſaid that he threw himſelf into the Sea, with theſe words, Quia ego non capio te, tu capies me. In this Iſland is the Promontory Caphreus, where Nauplius, the Father of Palamedes, placed his falſe Fires, to the Deſtruction of ſo many Greeks. For underſtanding how his Son Palamedes, whom he deemed to have been ſlain by the hand of Paris, was treacherouſly circumvented by the Policy of Ulyſſes and Diomedes, he conceived ſuch a Diſpleaſure againſt the whole Hoſt of the Græcians, that he intended their general Deſtruction. To this end he cauſed Fires to be made on the tops of the moſt dangerous and unacceſſible Rocks in this whole Iſland: which the Greeks taking (according to the Cuſtom of the time) to have been the Marks of ſome ſafe Haven, made thitherward, and were there moſt miſerably caſt away; there periſhing 200 Ships, and many thouſand men. But when Nauplius underſtood how Diomedes and Ulyſſes, whoſe Ruine he principally intended, were eſcaped, he drowned himſelf for very Vexation in this very ſame place. Palamedes, this Nauplius's Son, is ſaid to have invented four of the Greek Letters, viz. Θ, Χ, Ξ, Φ; to have firſt inſtituted Centinels in an Army, and to be the firſt Inventer of the Watch-word.

It is in length 150 miles, ſtretched out from the North-weſt to the South-eaſt; in breadth not above twenty, where it is broadeſt; the whole compaſs 365 Italian miles. It is the Queen of the Ægean Sea, not only for Greatneſs, but for Fertility and Strength; plentiful in Corn, Wine, Oyl, Fruit, and Wood fit for Shipping; enriched with many fair Harbours and capacious Bays, and thoſe well fortified; watered alſo with the Rivers of Cireus and Melas, two Rivers of ſo ſtrange a nature, that if a Sheep drink of the former, his Wooll turneth white, but coal-black, if he drink of the latter. For the credit whereof I refer the Reader unto Strabo. Here is alſo ſaid to be a Stone called Amiantus, which is drawn into thread like Hemp, and good Cloth made of it; which, when it is ſtained, in ſtead of being ſent unto the Fullers, is thrown into the Fire, and ſo cleanſed. But whether this be ſo or not, (for I put it only upon hearſay) certain it is that it was once enriched with Mines both of Braſs and Iron, though thoſe now decayed; and likewiſe with Quarries of pure Marble, which continue ſtill.

The Iſland, before it was conquered by the Turks, was very populous: but the people moſt delighted to live in Villages; the Cities and walled Towns being only three. 1. Caryſto, anciently Caryſtus, with little or no variation, but by Pliny called Ægæa and Chironia; memorable for its Marble Quarries, of which were made the Pillars called Columnæ Caryſtiæ. 2. Chalcis, now Negropont, by the Turks named Eribos, ſeated on a Plain near the Water's ſide, there growing into a fair and goodly Bay called the Gulf of Negropont; a populous, ſtrong and wealthy City, ſo fortified with Walls and Bulwarks, that in the judgement of moſt men it was held invincible when the Turks firſt ſate down before it. Nor was it purchaſed by the Turk (though Mahomet, who had took Conſtantinople, undertook the buſineſs) at a lower price than the loſs of forty thouſand men, who were ſpent upon it; but taken at the laſt, and the people put unto the Sword, without conſideration of Sex or Age. A Town in former times of ſo great Wealth and Power, that it ſent Colonies abroad into Macedonia, (a principal Region of the which was hence called Chalcidice) as alſo into Sicily and ſome parts of Italy; and had a ſtrong Influence on the Affairs of Achaia alſo, as being ſituate ſo near the Continent, that it was joyned to it by a Bridge. When it was in the hands of the Kings of Macedon, this Town, together with Demetrias in Theſſaly, and the Caſtle of Acrocorinth, were called the Feſters of Greece: inſomuch that when the Roman Senate commanded Philip, the Father of Perſeus, to ſet the Grecians at liberty; the Græcians made anſwer, that in vain was their Liberty reſtored them, unleſs theſe three Towns were firſt diſmantled. Permitted by the Romans to live according to their own Laws, in memory of that Benefit they refuſed to declare againſt them in behalf of Antiochus, who thereupon made himself Master of the Town, and consequently of the Island. But forced to leave the place upon the loss of the Battel at Thermopylæ, it became free again; till finally made subject unto Rome, with the rest of Greece, and with it made a part of the Eastern Empire. In the Division whereof amongst the Latines it fell to the share of the Venetians; who from hence used with their Gallies to infest the Shores of Turkie, and disturb their Trade. Provoked wherewith, especially with their taking of Ænus, a City of Thrace, under the Conduct of Nicolas Canalis, the Venetian Admiral, who in that Enterprise had taken 2000 Turks, which he carried with him into this Island, Mahomet the Great resolves upon the Conquest of it, and with a puissant Army sets before the Town. And though it cost him dear, yet at last he got it, and therewith all the Island also, which depended on the Fortunes of it, An. 1471.

6. SALAMIS is nigh unto Megaris, one of the Provinces of Achaia; famous for the Overthrow of the populous Navy of Xerxes by the Athenians and their Confederates. What was the number of the Souldiers and Gallies of the Persian side hath been already declared. The whole Græcian Fleet consisted of no more then 270 Vessels, whereof 127 were rigged and set forth at the charge of the Athenians only, the rest by the Associates. Yet was the Admiralty committed to Eurybiades a Lacedæmonian; the Athenians preferring the main care of the common Safety before an unseasonable contention for Priority. The Spartans, seeing the inequality of Forces, intended not to have hazarded the Battel, but with full sail to have retired to Peloponnesus, into which Countrey the Persians had made Incursions; respecting more the Welfare of their own Countrey yet defensible, then the desperate estate of Attica. This Design was by Themistocles (as carefull for the estate of Athens as they for Sparta) signified to Xerxes: who, getting between them and home, compelled them to a necessity of fighting, but to his own Ruine. For in the Conflict more than 200 of his Ships were sunk, and most of the rest taken; the Confederates having lost of their Navy forty only. Between the Athenians and the Megarenses were many Contentions for this Island; the Fortune of the Athenians in the end prevailing. It hath in it a City of the same name, the Royal Seat of Telamon, the Father of Ajax, so famous in the War of Troy: more memorable for giving Birth to Solon the Legislator of Athens, one of the seven Wise men of Greece.

7. ÆGINA, now called Engia, an Island situate over against Sinus Saronicus, being that Bay of Corinth which openeth into the Ægæan, hence called Golfo di Engia; the Realm of Æacus, made for his Justice and Integerity one of the three Judges of Hell; the other two being his Brother Rhadamanthus, and Minos the King of Crete. It had formerly been called Oenone, and Oenope; but took this name from Ægina, the Daughter of Asopus a King of Bœotia, on whom Jupiter is said to have begot both Æacus and Rhadamanthus. The people hereof are properly called Æginenses and Æginetæ, much spoken of in the Wars of Athens, from which they are distant about 12 miles. The Ground hereof is very stony, but good for Barley, of which it is very plentiful: inhabited in former times by a laborious and thriving People, to whom they gave in those days the name of Myrmidons, (the Island being also called Myrmidonia) quòd Formicarum more Terram fodirent, because Emmet-like they digged up and under the Earth, to make it the more fit for Tillage; who dwelt at first in Caves without any Houses. Hence the occasion of the Fable of turning Emmets into Men at the prayer of Æacus. Both Tale and People after (I know not how) were carried into Thessaly, where before we found them.

8. The CYCLADES, so called because they lie in a Circle round about Delos, are in number 53. They are also called the Islands of the Arches, because they are in the Sea called Archipelago. They stand so close together, that in a clear day a man may see 20 of them at a time; for which cause it is with good reason accounted to be a dangerous place for Sailours in a Storm. The chief of these Cyclades are, 1. DELOS, quasi Δῆλος, signifying apparent; because when all the Earth had abjured the receit of Latona at the request of Juno, this Island, then under water, was by Jupiter erected aloft, and fixt to receive her; and in it was she delivered of Apollo and Diana: of which thus Ovid;

——— Erratica Delos
Errantem accepit, tunc cùm levis Insula nabat.
Illic incumbens sub Palladis arbore, Palmâ,
Edidit invitâ geminos Latona novercâ.
Unsettled Delos floating on the Wave,
A little Island, Entertainment gave
To wandring Laton, spight of Juno's Head, Under Minerva's Palm-tree brought to Bed.

Notable also is this Island for the Temple of Apollo, and a Custom, neither permitting men to die, or Children to be born, in it; but sending sick Men and great-bellied Women to Rhene, a small Island, and not much distant. By a more ancient name it is called Ortygia; and by that name mentioned in many of the Poets, both Greek and Latine. The chief Town of it, called also Delos, is situate on a Plain environed with Rocks, near the Hill called Cynthus, whence Apollo had the name of Cynthius, and Diana of Cynthia; as of Delius, and Delia, from the Island. In this Town had Apollo both his Temple and Oracle, delivered here more plainly then in other places, whence (as some say) it was called Delos; the word in Greek signifying manifest or apparent: made famous by the resort of people from all places hither, especially from the neighbouring Islands, who sent yearly multitudes of men and troups of Virgins to celebrate his Solemnities with Herds of Sacrifices. More wealthy afterwards by the removing of the Trade of Corinth hither; that Town being utterly destroyed by the Romans, and this made choice of by the Merchant; partly by reason of the Immunities of the place, but principally in regard of the convenient situation betwixt Europe and Asia. It continued in great Wealth and Power till Mithridates laid it waste; and at last, on the ceasing of the Oracles, was utterly forsaken. Both Town and Island are now called Sdiles. By which name also Rhene, an adjoyning Island, (before mentioned) is at this day known; chained to the other by Polycrates the Tyrant of Samos, and now united to it, at the least in name.

2. TENOS, by Aristotle called Hydrussa, by some Ophiussa, by the Moderns Tina. The chief Town of it is of the same name, so called from one Tenes the Builder of it, and giving name unto the Island. Memorable for a Fountain called Dipnosus, of which Aristotle and Athenæus do both affirm, that the Waters will not mix with Wine. The only Island of this Sea which remaineth under the power of the State of Venice, the rest being subject to the Turk; deserving therefore the first place in our Description of those Islands that incompass Delos, though anciently.

3 ANDROS (prima inter Cycladas,) was reckoned chief amongst the Cyclades, or first at least in order, because next to Delos: originally called Cauros, afterwards Antandros, and at last Andros; from Andrus the Son of Eurimachus, who founded the chief Town in it, of the same ſame name alſo. Memoroble for a pleaſant Fountain mentioned by Pliny, the waters whereof on the Nones of January yearly had the taſte of Wine. It ſtill retains the name of Andro, or Andri.

4. NAXOS, now Nicſia, one of the biggeſt of the Pack, as being about 80 miles in compaſs. In ancient times it was called Veneris Inſula, or the Iſland of Venus; afterwards Dionyſia, by reaſon of its abundance of Wine, and the goodneſs of thoſe Wines together, conſecrated to Bacchus, whom the Greeks call Dionyſius. From its wonderfull plenty of Wheat called by ſome Sicilia minor, or the Leſſer Sicily; but at laſt Naxos, from one Naxus, who had the conduct of a Colony of Carians hither. But notwithſtanding this new name, Bacchus did ſtill retain the honour to be worſhipped in it, in regard of his love unto the place; marriing here Ariadne, (as the Poets fable) whom Theſeus had left upon the Rocks: whoſe Coronet or Chaplet, being by his means made one of the heavenly Conſtellations, is by Columella called Ardor Naxius, by the name of the Iſland,; though commonly by Aſtronomers Corona Ariadnes, from the name of the Lady. The Women of this Iſland are ſaid by Pliny to be delivered generally in the eighth moneth, as Bacchus was born within that term. But it is more certainly famous in true Story for the Beauty and Fertility of it, and for a kind of excellent Marble called Ophites or Serpentinus; the ground whereof is green, diapered with blew or purple Spots, in much eſteem amongſt the Romans. When theſe Iſlands fell to the Venetians, they conferred this on one John [illegible]rino, a Patrician or Gentleman of that City, (as they and divers of the reſt on other Undertakers) from whom it came to the Noble Family of the Criſpo's, who held it till the year 1572, when James the laſt of that Houſe loſt it to Selymus the ſecond.

5. GYAROS, a little Iſland, into which the Romans uſed to baniſh Delinquents. Hence that of Juvenal, cited by G. Sandys.

Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris vel carcere dignum,
Si vis eſſe aliquid: Probitas laudatur, & alget.
If thou intend'ſt to thrive, do what deſerves
Short Gyaros or Gyves: prais'd Vertue ſtarves.

6. PAROS, now Pario, by ſome of the Ancients called Pactya, by others Minoa; but it obtained this new name from Parus, a Son of Jaſon: memorable for Quarries of the whiteſt Marble, of which commonly the Statues of the Gods were made, called from hence Marmor Parium by the Latins. It is in compaſs about 50 miles, running in a long Plain from Eaſt to Weſt, having once a Town of the ſame name ſeated in the North, once famous, but now utterly ruined. The Inhabitants hereof were noted to be very careleſs of keeping their Promiſes and Contracts: whence ἀναπειάζων grew into a Byword, applied to thoſe who made no reckning of their Promiſes. There is now a Town in it called Cephalo, but it is of no great note.

7. SCYROS, oppoſit to Magneſia in Aſia Minor, famous for the Birth of Neoptolemus or Pyrrhus, and that it was the Lurking-place of Achilles. For his Mother Thetis, being forewarned by an Oracle that he ſhould be ſlain in the Trojan War, ſent him to Lycomedes King of this Iſland, where he was brought up in Woman's Attire amongſt the King's Daughters, and deemed a Virgin; till by getting Pyrrhus on Deidamia the King's Daughter it was proved to be otherwiſe. Others relate that Ulyſſes diſcovered him by a Wile, who, coming thither like a Pedler or Peti-merchant with Armes and other Ware, to avoid diſtruſt, expoſed his Merchandiſe to the view of the Damoſels: when the other Ladies falling on the Tires and Laces, Achilles took into his hand the Spear aud Shield. Which when Ulyſſes had obſerved, he made him leave that Company, and away for Troy. The handſomeneſs of the fraud take from Ovid, thus:

Conſcia venturi Genitrix Nereia Fati
Diſſimulat Cultu Natum; & deceperat omnes
(In quibus Ajacem) ſumptæ fallacis Veſtis.
Arma ego fœmineis animum motura virilem
Mercibus inſerui, &c.

Thus Engliſhed by G. Sandys in his Tranſlation of the Metamorphoſes;

The whole Deſign in order to relate:
Thetis, fore-knowing great Achilles Fate,
Diſguis'd her Son, ſo like a Vergin dreſt,
That all miſtook, and Ajax with the reſt.
When Arms with Womens Trifles, which might blind
Suſpect, I brought to tempt a manly Mind.
Yet was the Heros Virgin-like array'd;
Who taking up the Shield and Spear, I ſaid,
O Goddeſs-born, for thee the Fate of Troy
Her Fall reſerves: why doubtſt thon to deſtroy
Great Pergamus? then made him d' off thoſe Weeds,
And ſent the Mighty unto mighty Deeds.

There is another of this name betwixt Negropont and Leſbos, which Ortelius conceives to be the Scene of this Action: but the general opinion is for this, (though that be the greater Iſle) to which the ſituation of it amongſt the reſt of thoſe Iſlands where reigned ſo many of the Greek Kings intereſſed in the War of Troy ſeems to give good countenance; the name and power of Greece not reaching in thoſe days ſo much towards the North.

8. MELOS, ſituate betwixt Crete and Peloponneſus, and equally diſtant from them both; The Promontories of Scylleum in the one, and that of Dictynnæum in the other, ſhooting out againſt it. Inhabited in former times by a Colony of Phœnicians, who coming out of Byblus, a Town of that Countrey, gave that name unto it: being called Melos afterwards by the Greeks, from its abundance of Honey. The Birth-place of Diagoras the Philoſopher, hence ſurnamed Melius, but more properly Ἄθεος or the Atheiſt the firſt who in thoſe dark times of Ignorance abſolutely denied that there was a God. Protagoras Deos in dubium vocavit, Diagoras excluſit, ſaith Lactantius of him. It is now called Milo, round in form, and containing 80 miles in compaſs. The Soil is ſufficiently fruitfull in Corn and Oyl, but defective in Wine. Here is great plenty of Marble curiouſly beſpotted, and no ſmall ſtore of Mill-ſtones; as alſo great quantities of Pitch and Brimſtone, and ſome Sulphury or hot Springs good for many Diſeaſes. The cheif Town of it is called Milo alſo

9. SERIPHUS, 20 miles from Delos, memorable of old for the Education of Perſeus the Son of Danae. It is reported of this Iſland, that the Frogs bred there are naturally mute; but ſuch as are brought from other places keep their natural tone: from whence, Proverbially, ſilent and ſullen perſons were called Ranæ Seriphiæ. It is now called Serfine or Serphone, a ſtony and rocky Iſland, and hath a Town of the ſame name.

10. CIA, by ſome called CEOS, and now Zea, oppoſit to the Promontory of Achaia called Sunium, in compaſs about 50 miles; made towards the Weſt, in faſhion of a Creſcent or half-Moon, mountainous and hilly, except towards the North; by Pliny ſaid to have been torn from Eubœa, by a ſudden violence of the Sea, many men periſhing in the waters. Of old times it was beautified with three fair Towns; 1. Julis, 2. Carthea, and 3. Careſſus: of which there is nothing now remaining.

Others there are whoſe names occur amongſt the Ancients: as 11. Miconus, now called Micole; 12. Cythnus, now Cauro; 13. Siphnus, now Siphano; 14. Therafia, now Santorini; 15. Cimolis, called formerly Echinuſa, but now Polino; 16. Oliarus, now Quiniminio; 17. Si-

cenus, now Sicino, ; 18. Polyægos, now Falconara; 19. Amorgos, now Murgo, one of the biggeſt of them all, but not elſe obſervable.

9. The SPORADES are ſo called from σπείρω, ſpargo, eò quòd in Mari ſparſæ ſunt, & non in Circulum coactæ, becauſe they lie diſperſed and ſcatered, not formed into a Circle, as the Cyclades are. They are in number twelve. viz. 1. Anaphe, ſo called by the Argonauts, ἀπὸ τ ἀναφανίσης (ϗοτομένης, becauſe the Moon did ſuddenly, and beyond her natural courſe, appear unto them, then grievouſly diſtreſſed by Tempeſt. Apollo worſhipped here is hence called Anapheus. It is now uſually called Namſio. 2. Aſtypalæa, now Stampalia, in compaſs 88 miles, by ſome of the Ancients called Theon Trapeza, or the Table of the Gods. In Aſtypale, the cheif Town of it, was Apollo worſhipped, from hence ſometimes called Aſtypaleus. 3. Helene, ſo called from that fair Greek Dame, whom Paris is here ſaid to have firſt deflowred; now called Macroniſi. 4. Los, fifteen miles from Naxos, where Homer is ſaid to have been buried: But others finde his Grave at Naxos, and ſome at Chios; the difference being almoſt as great about the place of his Burial as the place of his Birth. Then are 5. Laguſa, 6. Phocuſa, 7. Phæcaſia, 8. Philocandros, 9. Schinuſa, 10. Strybia, ; of little note either in Poetry or Story. And finally, 11. Thera, not far from Ægina, before mentioned, formerly called Calliſte; but named thus by Theras a Theban Gentleman, the Son of Autesion, conducting hither a Colony of Spartans and Minyans, (theſe laſt of Theſſaly) caſt out of Lemnos by Pelaſgus: in memory of whom, as the Founder of their Name and Nation, the Iſlanders uſed to celebrate an annual Feaſt. A Sedition after happening amongſt this People, the weaker party, under the Conduct of one Battus, admoniſhed ſo to doe by the Oracle of Apollo, paſſed over into Africk, and there built Cyrene. The Birth-place of the Poet Callimachus, who aſcribes his Original to this Iſland, as himſelf thus witneſſeth,

Καλείϛ Θηρηίδα, τὸ δ' ὕϛερον ὄνομα Θήρη,
Μήτηρ ϗυδηλε παιδὸϛ ἐμειτέρε.

That is to ſay,

Calliſte, which men Thera now do call,
Of my dear Countrey the Original.

10. CYTHERA, now called Cerigo, lieth in the bottom of this Sea not above five miles diſtant from Capo Malio in Peloponneſus; formerly called Porphyris, from the abundance of Marble, whereof the Iſland yields good plenty. It is in compaſs about 60 miles, enriched with a delightfull Soil, and having many Havens, but thoſe ſmall and unſafe, and very difficult of entrance. It is environed on all ſides with Rocks, of Themſelves inacceſſible, by which it is defended from the Turks, who hitherto have ſuffered the Venetians to enjoy it, to whom it fell in the diviſion of the Spoil amongſt the Latines, ſo often ſpoken of before. It had a Town of the ſame name: ſome two furlongs from the Haven ſtood the Temple of Venus, (the ancienteſt dedicated to that Goddeſs which the Græcians had) and therin her Statua in compleat Armour, like another Pallas. Out of this Temple (the Ruines whereof are ſtill to be ſeen) was Helen, the Wife of Menelaus, willingly raviſhed by Paris, the Son of Priam; but not enjoyed by him, till he had brought her to a ſmall Iſland of the Sporades by her name called Helene, as before is ſaid. From the Devotions of this People paid ſo duely to her, did Venus get the Adjunct of Cytherea, by which ſhe is often called in the Poets. Thus, for one, in Virgil,

Parce metu, Cytherea, manent immota tuorum
Fata tibi——

That is to ſay,

Drive Fear, fair Cytherea, from thy mind;
Thou thy Son's Fate immovable ſhalt find.

And ſo I paſs from the Ægæan to the Cretan Sea, obſerving this onely by the way, that moſt of the 69 Kings which accompanied Agamemnon in the War of Troy were Kings onely of theſe ſmall Iſlands; or elſe of other places as inconſiderable for wealth and Potency: every ſmall Town and Territory having in thoſe early times amongſt the Græcians (when Ambition had not taught the Great ones to devour the leſs) a peculier King.

9. The Iſlands of the CRETAN Sea.

THe CRETAN Sea is properly that part of the Ægæan or Ionian Sea which lyeth about the Shores of Crete, and formerly was under the Command and power thereof: as in thoſe times, the Sea about Carpathus, another Iſle of the Ægæan, had the name of Carpathian; and that about Icaria, the name of Icarian; though ſituate in the Ægæan alſo. The Iſles hereof are, 1. Crete, 2. Claude, 3. Dia, and 4. Letoa; for Melos and Cimolis, named by Ptolemy againſt the Iſlands which adjoyn on Crete, having been already ſpoken of amongſt the Cyclades, in the accompt whereof they paſs by conſent of Writers.

1. CRETA, now Candie, hath on the Eaſt the Carpathian Sea, on the Weſt the Ionian, on the North the Ægæan, on the South the African or Libyck. In form it extendeth Eaſt and Weſt with three Points or Promontories: whereof that towards the Eaſt, called anciently Samonium, is now called Capo di Salamone; that on the South-weſt, looking towards Africk, formerly named Hermæa, is now Capo Gabraſſe, and finally, that on the North-Weſt towards Peloponneſus, of old called Cimarus, is now called Capo Cheſtin. This laſt is directly oppoſit to Malea, a Promontory of Laconia; the Sea betwixt them being ſo troubleſom and tempeſtuous eſpecially on Laconia ſide, that at laſt it grew into an ordinary Caveat, Maleam prætervectus obliviſcatur quæ ſunt domi, viz. that he which was to Sail by the point of Malea, ſhould lay aſide the care of all other matters, and attend his preſent Safety onely.

It hath in ſeveral Ages and in ſeveral Authors obtained ſeveral names. By Homer and Auſtathius it is called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities then contained in it: by Pliny and Solinus, Macaros, and Macaroneſos, that is to ſay, the happy Iſland, from the goodneſs of the Soil and temper of the Air: by Stephanus, Idæa, from Ida a famous Mountain of it: by Giraldus, Telchinia, from the Telchini, the Prieſts of Cybele, who was here had in great requeſt. At the preſent it is called Candie, either à Candore, from the Whiteneſs of the Rocks wherewith it is environed; or from Candia the Metropolis or cheif Town thereof. But the general name which hath prevailed moſt in all ſorts of Writers is that of Crete, ſo called quaſi Cureta, by a Syncope or Abbreviation, from the Curetes, the firſt Inhabitants hereof; who, together with the Corybantes and Telchini, were the Prieſts of Cybele the principal Goddeſs of this Iſland: and they ſo called ἀπὸ τῆς κυρᾶς, from their Tonſure or Shaving of the Head. A Cuſtome much in uſe amongſt the Prieſts of ſome of the Pagan Deities, and poſſibly enough from them tranſmitted to the Church of Rome. And to this Etymology I do rather incline, then either to derive the name from Cretes, the Son of Jupiter and the Nymph Idæa; or from Crete the Daughter of Heſperus, though both theſe have their Authours alſo. Nor dare I to reject the Conceit of Bochartus, who, who, fetching the Etymons of most people from the Punick Language or Original, will have the Cretans to be descended from the Cerethites, a Nation of the Philistins, well known in Scripture; the word Cereth being abbreviated into Creth, from which into Crete and Cretans is no difficult passage. But in my mind his Conjecture is better then his Proof. For though it may be granted without inconvenience that the chief Arms of the Philistins were their Bow and Arrows, as appears 1 Sam. 31. 3. and that the Cretans anciently were expert at those Weapons also: yet this concludes no more that the Cretans are of the Race of the Philistins, than that almost all Nations else had the same Original; the Bow and Arrows being the ordinary Weapons of most People formerly, till Custom and Experience trained them up to others of a later date; as he himself acknowledgeth in many places of his excellent and elaborate Tractates.

In reference to the Heavenly Bodies it is situate under the beginning of the fourth Climate, so that the longest Day in Summer is no more then 14 hours and a quarter: and in relation to the Earth, set in the middle of the Sea, at so even a distance from Europe, Asia and Africk, as if naturally designed to be what Aristotle hath pleased to call it, the Lady and Mistress of the Sea. For it is distant from Peloponnesus an hundred miles, as many from Asia the Less, and not above 150 from the Shores of Africk: so verifying that of Virgil,

Jove's Birth-place Crete, a fruitful Land,
In th' middle of the Sea doth stand.

It is in length 270, in breadth 50 miles, in compass about 590. The Soil is very fruitful, especially of Wines which we call Muscadells, of which they transport yearly 12000 Butts; together with Sugar-Candy, Gums, Honey, Sugar, Olives, Dates, Apples, Orenges, Limons, Raisins, Melons, Citrons, Pomegranats. Yet, as other Countreys of the like hot nature, it is not a little deficient in Corn; the most or greatest part of which is yearly brought hither from Peloponnesus.

The Island is very populous, insomuch that it is thought that upon any sudden occasion the Seigniory of Venice can raise in it 60000 men able to bear Arms. The people have formerly been good Sea-fairing men; a Vertue commaculated with many Vices, which they yet retain, as Envy, Malice, and Lying: to which last they are so infinitely addicted, that an horrible Lie was called proverbially Cretense mendacium. This fault was aimed at by the Poet Epimenides, a Native of this Island, whose words are thus cited by S. Paul to Titus, Chap. 1. v. 12.

Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται, κακὰ θηρία, γαστέρες ἀργαί.

The Cretans always Liers are,
Unruly Beasts, of Labour spare.

To which this Proverb may be added, viz. Τρία Κάππα κάκιστα, that is to say, There are three Nations whose names begin with the letter K worse then any others; viz. Καππάδοκες, Κρῆτες, Κίλικες, the Cappadocians, Cretans, and Cilicians: though some, I know, apply this Proverb to the Cities of Corinth, Capua, and Carthage, beginning all with the same Letter, and all conceived to be very dangerous to the State of Rome. At this day the are sick of their old Diseases, as great Liers and as Idle as ever formerly; Covetous withal, and very subtile, impatient of Labour, and not caring to learn any Science perfectly: only well practised in Shooting, to which they are accustomed from their youth, and therein thought more expert then the Turks themselves.

The Language generally spoken is the Greek Tongue; though the Gentleman and Merchant, by reason of their Dependence on the State of Venice, speak Italian also. Both Languages are used also in Divine Offices: the people being generally of the Communion of the Church of Greece; but the Latine Service is used also in many places, since the Subjection of this Island to the Venecians. They were converted first unto the Faith by S. Paul the Apostle, who, having planted the Gospel of Life amongst them, left the watering of it unto Titus, whom he made Bishop of this Isle; recommending unto him the Care of the Churches there, with power of Ordination and Ecclesiastical Censure; as appears clearly by the Text Which power that it belonged to Titus as Bishop, and not as their Evangelist only, is affirmed expresly not only by the Subscription of the said Epistle, where he is plainly called ὁ Κρήτων ἐκκλησίας πρῶτος ἐπίσκοπος, the first Bishop of the Church of the Cretans; but by the concurrent Testimonies of Euseb. Eccl. Hist. l. 3. c. 4. S. Ambr. in Præfat ad Tit. S. Hieron. in Tit. c. 1. v. 5. and in his Tract de Scriptor. Ecclesiasticis, Theodoret, cited by Oecumen. in Præfat. ad Ep. Tit. Oecumenius himself in Tit. 1. and finally by Theophylact in his Preface to the same Epistle. All which in plain terms call him Bishop, and the Bishop of Crete; according to that sense and meaning of the word Episcopus, as it was used in their times, distinct from Presbyter. The Church hereof, whilst wholly under the Greek Patriaches, was governed by four Arch-bishops and 21 Bishops. But since the Subjection of this Island to the State of Venice, there is but one Archbishop, which is he of Candia, the chief City, and eight Bishops only; besides the titular Patriarch of Constantinople, who hath there his Residence; some Prelate of the Latine Church having been always honoured with that empty Title ever since the Recovery of that City from the Western Christians.

Famous was this Island amongst the Ancients for many things memorized both by the Poets and old Historians. For here reigned Saturn in the first Ages of the World, Father of Jupiter, who was born here, and secretly nursed in the Hill called Ida. For seeing that, by the Compact betwixt Saturn and his Brother Titan, Saturn was to enjoy the Kingdom for his own Life only, but all his Male-children to be murthered as soon as born; Jupiter, by the care of his Mother Cybele, was conveyed away, and secretly nursed in Mount Ida, as before was said: the Crying of the Infant being drowned by the noise of loud-sounding Cymbals, purposely used by his Rockers to avoid Discovery. Whence afterwards the Corybantes, or Priests of Cybele, used in her Sacrifices the like musical Instruments, continually sounding, and withal shaking of their Heads, (like Fidlers) in an antick and ridiculous manner. Alluding whereunto thus the Poet Claudian;

Non te progenitum Cybeleius Ære canoro
Lustravit Corybas.

That is to say,

No Cybeleian Corybas that day
That thou was born did on his Cymbal play.

Here also lived Minos and Rhadamanthus, whose Laws were after imitated in the prime Cities of Greece, and who, for their Equity on Earth, are feigned by the Poets to be (together with Æacus) the Judges in Hell. In this Island also lived the lewdly-lustful Pasiphae, Wife of Minos, who is fabled by the Poets (if it be a Fable) to have doated on a white Bull, who, they say, begat on her the Minotaur: Dedalus having framed for her an artificial Cow, into which she conveyed her self, and by that means obtained her desire. The Fable is thus expounded, that Pasiphae was in love with Taurus, one of Minos's Secretaries: whose company by the Pandarism of Dedalus she enjoying, was delivered of two Sons, one called Minos, the other Taurus. And whereas it is said that the Mino- taur was slain by Theseus; like enough that the annual Tribute of 7 Children, which the Athenians paid to Minos, was laid up in some Prison, Minos and Taurus being the Keepers or Gaolers. As for the action of Pasiphae, I think it not altogether impossible to be true, considering how Domitian, to verifie the old relation, exhibited the like beastly Spectacle in his Amphitheatre at Rome: for thus saith Martial,

Junctam Pasiphaen Dictæo, credite, Tauro
Vidimus; accepit Fabula prisca fidem.
Nec se miretur (Cæsar) longæva Vetustas:
Quicquid Fama canit, donat Arena tibi.
The Fable's prov'd a Truth, our eyes did see
The Cretan Bull sport with Pasiphae.
What cause hath then Antiquity to glory?
We saw it done, she only heard the Story.

Finally, here was the so-much-celebrated Labyrinth, made by Dædalus for the including and safe-keeping of the Minotaurus; so full of various Windings and turnings, that when any one was got to the end thereof, it was impossible for him to come out but by the help of a Clew of thread. By this Minotaur (half a Man, half a Bull) the Children of the Athenians paid yearly to Minos in way of Tribute are said to be murthered, till he was killed by Theseus, Son of Ægeus King of Athens, with whom Ariadne the Daughter of Minos falling in love, taught him a means to kill the Monster, and gave him the Clew of thread, before spoken of, to conduct him out again: the Moral or History whereof hath been shewn before. Nor must it be forgotten, that Strabo the Geographer, who flourished in the time of Tiberius Cæsar, was of Cretan Parents, (though born in the City of Amasia in the Realm of Pontus:) which adds unto this Island as much true Renown as any of the Fictions or Stories (be which they will) of former times.

Things most observable at the present are these that follow. 1. That it breeds no Serpents, no venemous Worm, or ravenous or hurtful creature; so that their Sheep graze very securely without any Shepherd. 2. If a Woman bite a Man any thing hard, he will hardly be cured of it: which if true, then the last part of the Privilege foregoing (of breeding no hurtful creature) must needs be false. 3. They have an Herb called Alimos, which if one chew in his mouth he shall feel no Hunger for that day, if Quade may be believed, who speaks it. 4. Here is (besides many other medicinal Herbs) that called Dictamnum, or Dictamnus, of special virtue against Poison, either by way of Prevention or present Cure, peculiar only to this Island: it affordeth great store of Landanum, a Juice or Gum forced with incredible labour out of a certain Tree called Cistus, of which the Mountains yield abundance; good to cause Sleep, if moderately and carefully taken; but if not very well prepared and taken with moderation, it brings the last Sleep upon a man, out of which he is not to be awakened till the Sound of the last Trumpet raise him.

Chief Mountains of it are, 1. Ida, now Psiloriti, situate in the midst of the Island, begirt about with many fair and pleasant Villages, sheltred by it from the violence of Wind and Sun; the Hill being so high, that from the Top hereof both sides of the Island may be easily seen. Here Jupiter is said to have been secretly nursed, from hence called Idæus. And at the bottom of it the Cretans use to shew some tracts of the ancient Labyrinth, being indeed no other then the Ruines of some larger Quarry: the Labyrinth made by Dædalus being so defaced in the time of Pliny, that he knew not where to find any Ruines of it. 2. Dicte, now called Sethia, in some places Lasthi, so high, that all the Winter long it is covered with Snow; yet all the sides thereof are garnished with Cypress-trees: a Mountain of such fame, that the whole Island sometimes had the name of Dictæa, the City Dictynna, the Promontory Dictynnæum, and the Herb Dictamnos, all seeming to take name from hence. 3. Leuci, a long Chain of Hills, so named from the Whiteness of them, now called di Madara, and by some La Spachia.

Rivers of any eminence here are few or none. The principal of those that be are, 1, Milopotamus, 2. Scasinus, 3. Epicidnus, and 4. Divotro, towards the North; 5. Populiar, towards the East; and 6. Limens, towards the West: none of them navigable, or capable of Ships of Burthen, scarce of little Barks. But that defect is supplied by the neighbouring Sea, which affordeth many Creeks and Bays, some capacious Havens, and great store of Fish, among which a kind of bearded Mullet, reckoned among the Delicacies of the ancient Romans. By the convenience of which Harbours, their Fish-trade, and the situation of it in the midst of the Sea, the People anciently were esteemed so good Sea-faring men, that when the people of those times did tax a man with any incredible report, they used to say, Cretensis nescit Pelagus, meaning thereby the matter to be as improbable as for one of Crete to be no Sailour.

In former times there were reckoned in this Island an hundred Cities, whence it was called Hecatompolis; of which about 40 were remaining in the time of Ptolemy, for so many of their names he gives us. Those of most note were, 1. Gnossus, the Seat-royal or Court of Minos, whence Ariadne the Daughter of Minos had the name of Gnossis; in former times called Ceratus, from a little River of that name running not far off. 2. Cydon, or Cydonia, a midland City, (as the former) memorable for an excellent kind of Apples, which the Latines called Poma Cydonia, amongst whom they were in great request, as they are at this day (though by the name of Adam's Apples) amongst the Turks: the most ancient of all the Cities of Crete, many of which were at first Colonies of this; for which reason it was called commonly Mater urbium. 3. Eleuthera, as Ptolemy, Erythræa, as the printed Copies of Florus corruptly call it; one of the first Cities taken here by the Romans. 4. Miletum, mentioned by Strabo, though omitted by Ptolemy; the place in which S. Paul left Trophimus sick, as is mentioned 2 Tim. 4. 20. which happened when the Apostle hovered about that Coast, as is said Act. 27. 7, 8. &c. For that it could not be that Miletum to which he congregated the Elders of Ephesus, appeareth by his being at Hierusalem, Act. 21. 17. and other circumstances of the Story. 5. Gortyna, nigh to which stood the Labyrinth made by Dædalus: memorable also for a Reed, growing on the River Lenæus, (near to which it stood) of which they made their strongest Arrows, by Virgil Æneid. 11. called Spicula Gortynia; as also for a light Garment much used by Hunters, which Claudian calls Gortyniam vestem, apparelling Diana the great Huntress with it. 6. Dictamnum, as Ptolemy, or Dictynna, as Pliny calls it; so named from the Hill Dicte, near to which it is situate: one of the chief Cities of the North parts of this Island; as 7. Ampelus, so named from its plenty of Vines, was upon the South. 8. Minoa, a Port-town, (now Altemara) so named from Minos, in the East; and 9. Corycus, on a Promontory of the same name, in the West side of it.

But these, and almost all the rest spoken of by Ptolemy, being so destroyed by Time and Wars that the Ruines of them are hardly visible, we must behold it in the present condition and estate thereof, divided into four parts or Provinces, according to the names and number of the four chief Cities; that is to say, 1. Sittia, 2. Candia, 3. Retimo, and 4. Canea.

In the first part, called SITTIA, lying towards the East, are 74 Villages, and but 17 Parishes, of which six only are of the Church of Rome, the residue holding ding the Communion of the Church of Greece. The principal whereof are, 1. Sittia, or Cytia, conceived by some to be the Cytæum of Ptolemy, a small Town, but populous, and very well fortified. 2. Citrapetra, betwixt Sittia and Candia, seated on the Sea-side, on a lofty Rock, at the bottom whereof is said to be a dangerous Whirl-pit, supposed to be the Panormus of Ptolemy. 3. S. Macor, the dwelling-place of one of the Bishops of the Latines,

2. In the second part hereof, called the Territory of CANDIA, lying directly West of Sittia, are reckoned 463 Towns and Villages, making up amongst them 99 Parish Churches; whereof 77 are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, the other 22 only of the Church of Rome. Of these the principal are, 1. Candia, an Archbishop's See, the Metropolis or Head-City of the Island, which takes name from hence. It is situate on the North-coast hereof towards the Ægæan, beautified with a safe and commodious Haven, and fortified so strongly, that it seems impregnable; affirmed by some to be the Matium of the Ancients: but I find no such place in Ptolemy, or in Ortelius his Thesaurus. The City is fair and large, built for the most part of Free-stone, with low Roofs, after the manner of Italy, the Streets broad and spacious from whence a fair and pleasant Plain leadeth to a place called the Cave of Minos, reported by the common people to be the Sepulchre of Jupiter. 2. Malvisin, 3. Themeni, 4. Castel novo, 5. Bonifacio, 6. Belvedere, 7. Mirabello; of which little memorable.

3. In the third part, being the Territory of RETIMO, formerly Rhithymna, lying North-west of the Territory of Candia, are accounted 265 Towns and Villages, making up 44 Parishes, whereof 36 are Græcians, and but 8 of the Latines. The chief of which are, 1. Retimo, on the Shore of the Northern Sea, as Candia is, well fortified, and a Bishop's See; but not else observable. 2. Milopotamo, an Episcopal See also, so called of the River Milopotamus, on which it is seated. 3. Agistiman, 4. Mandrus, 5. Lappa; hardly worth the naming.

4. In the fourth and last part hereof, being the Territory of CANEA, taking up all the West of the Island, are contained 240 Towns and Villages, distributed into 47 Parishes; of which 33 are of the Greek Church, and the 14 remaining of the Church of Rome. Those of most note are, 1. Canea, built by a Colony or Plantation of Venetian Gentlemen, on the North Coast also, supposed to stand in the same place where once Cydon did; second to none but Candia for Wealth and Beauty, but far before it for the commodiousness of the Port, commonly called Porto della Suda, capeable of more then a thousand good Gallies at a time, and therefore strongly fortified with two Cittadels or Castles, on each side of the Haven one, as the Door and Entrance of the Country. 2. Chisamo, in Latine called Cisamus, old and decayed, the Walls thereof only holding good against the Ruines of time; situate in a low mooriſh place towards the Ægæan. 3. Selino, built upon a Hill on the Sea-side, opposite to Chisamo. 4. Sfachia, or Spachia, situate at the foot of the Mountains, of old called Leuci, now della Spachia, from this Town: unwalled, but fortified with a Castle, built for a place of Refuge against the Incursions of such Pirates as annoied the Coasts, in which the Governour for this part hath his chief Aboad. By which account it will appear that in the whole Island are no more then 1044 Towns and Villages, and 207 Parish-Churches; of which there be but 48 which are accounted Members of the Church of Rome, the residue, 159 in number, retaining their Communion with the Church of Greece.

As for the Story of this Island, we can ascend as high as the times of Saturn, for his Antiquity affirmed to be the Son of Uranus and Vesta, or of Heaven and Earth; who, better favoured by his Mother, obtained the Kingdom of Crete, his elder Brother Titan being quite excluded. Hereupon Wars arising betwixt the Brethren, it was ordered thus, That Saturn for his own Life should enjoy the Kingdom, which after his decease should return to the Titans: and for the performance of this Contract, the Sons of Saturn were to be strangled as soon as born. But Cybele, the Wife of Saturn, unawares to her Husband, preserved first Jupiter, and after other of her Sons; which coming to the knowledge of Titan and his Sons, they made War against Saturn, but in conclusion were subdued by the Aid of Jupiter: whence grew the Fable of the Titans warring against the Gods, Saturn and Jupiter his Son being after reckoned in that number. The Titans being vanquished, a new War arose betwixt Saturn and Jupiter, occasioned only (as many unnatural Wars since these times have been) by Fears and Jealousies: which ending at the last in the Flight of Saturn, Jupiter became sole King of Crete, reigning there in great power and honour till the time of his death; and dying was interred at Gnossus, with this Inscription or Epitaph in old Greek Letters, ὁ Ζεὺς τῦ Κρόνυ, that is to say, Jupiter the Son of Saturn. After his death he was worshipped by the blind Gentiles as the chief of their Gods, and honoured frequently with the title of Πατὴρ ἀνδρῶν τε θεῶν τε the Father both of Gods and Men: though most incongruously and absurdly, as Lactantius noteth, there being many thousands living in and before the times of Saturn, when Jupiter was yet unborn. But to proceed; he being dead, Minos, begotten by him on Europa, succeeded here; who, wisely taking the advantage which the convenient situation of the Island gave him, made himself Master of the Seas, and afterwards enlarged his Dominions by the Conquest of the Megarenses and Athenians, upon which last he imposed, amongst other hard Conditions, a Tribute of seven male Children yearly to be kept as Hostages; which determined after three years by the Valour and good Fortune of Theseus. But Minos being slain in Sicily, and his Posterity extinct, the Cretans would no longer admit of Kings, but governed themselves after the manner of a Commonwealth or Free State: the Laws and Ordinances whereof, first devised by Minos, were of such esteem, that they were much imitated by Lycurgus, and are at large described by Aristotle in the 2. Book of his Politicks, ch. 8. Under this Government it continued till the Romans, having taken in all the rest of Greece, picked a Quarrel with them. For though it was pretended that they had been aiding unto Mithridates in his War against them; yet Florus states the matter rightly, affirming that the War was undertaken on no other ground, but sola nobilem Insulam vincendi cupiditate, out of a covetous desire only of subduing such a wealthy Island. And to this War they went with so proud a Confidence, that M. Antony, who commanded in it, carried more Chains with him to bring home his Prisoners then Arms to conquer them. An Insolence which he paid right dear for, his Navy being vanquished by the Cretans, the bodies of his slain Souldiers hanged upon the Masts, and himself perishing in the Action by a fit of Sickness. Metellus, who succeeded him in that charge, went on more successfully, first taking Gnossus, Eleuthera, (or Erythræa, as Florus calls it) and Cydon, their principal Cities, and not long after all the Island; using the vanquished Islanders with such Inhumanity, that most of them poisoned themselves to avoid his Cruelty: rewarded with no other Honour for so great a Victory, then that he got the surname of Creticus; his Triumph being denied by the Faction of Pompey, against whose will he had put himself upon that Service. Thus being added to the Roman Empire, it was after united unto Cyrenaica by Augustus Cæsar, both making up one Province only, governed by a Proconsul till the death of Nero; afterwards separated from it, but the time I find not. During the Reign of Constantine, in 36 years together there fell no Rain, so that this Island was in a manner wholly desolated, But Helena, the Mother of Constantine, having obtained Rain for it by her Prayers to God, it was again new peopled by several Colonies brought out of Ægypt, Syria, Greece, and the parts adjoyning. By Constantine made a Province of the Diocese of Macedonia, it continued a Member of the Eastern Empire till the time of Michael Balbus, when it was subdued by the Saracens; from them recovered by the more fortunate Conduct of Nicephorus Phocas, who came unto the Empire Anno 963. In the division of the Spoil amongst the Latines, it was first given to Boniface, Marquess of Montferrat; by him surrendred willingly to the State of Venice, who had a mind to be possessed of all the Islands of that Empire: he being recompensed with the Kingdom of Thessaly, the fair and wealthy City of Thessalonica, and many Towns and Territories in Peloponnesus. Under that State it still continueth, in vain attempted by Selimus the second in the year 1571, at what time he invaded and conquered Cyprus; and gallantly defended for this year last past against all the Forces of Ibrahim the late Grand Seigniour. What the Success of this War will be, we shall see hereafter.

For the Defence hereof against the Insurrections of the Inhabitants, who did at first ill brook the Venetian Government, there are some standing Forces kept in constant pay; besides such as are maintained in several Garrisons, the City of Canea having in it no fewer then six Companies of Souldiers, Candia 2000 Souldiers, and the lesser Cities proportionably: over which there is set so strong a Guard, that a natural Cretan is not permitted to enter weaponed into any of them. And for the preservation of their Interest in it from a forein Power, they have furnished the Island with 70 or 80 Gallies for the defence of the Shores; and have exceedingly fortified the Haven of Suda with two strong Castles, this Haven being capable of more then 1000 Vessels, and therefore meritoriously reputed the Door and Entry into the Countrey. It is reported that the King of Spain, Philip the second, did offer unto the Venetians for this Haven money more then enough; but it could not be accepted. For though the Spaniard seemed only to intend the Retreat and Relief of his own Navy when he should undertake any Expedition against the Turk; yet the wise Venetians saw, that by this Haven he might at all times awe, and when he listed surprize, the whole Countrey.

II. The other Islands of this Sea, as of lesser note, will be pass'd over in few words. The first of which is called CLAUDE, mentioned Acts 27. 16. situate on the South-west of Crete, by Mela called Gaulos; wherein in Plinie's time was a Town or City named Gaudos, now called Gozo, with the Island. 2. DIA, now Standia, a very small Island, and of little note. 3. LETOA, on the South-east of Crete, now called Christiana. And 4. ÆGILIA, or Ægialia, by Pliny Ægila, more in the Sea towards Peloponnesus; now called Cecerigo by Sophianus. Of which and others of less note (if less may be) there is no more to be said, but that they have always followed the Fortunes of Crete, on which they seem to have their principal Dependence.

10. The Islands of the IONIAN Sea.

THE IONIAN Sea is so called either from Ionius, the Son of Dyrrhachius, whom Hercules having ignorantly killed threw into this Sea, giving that name unto it to preserve his memory, as Didymus is of opinion or from Ionia a Region in the extremity of Calabria, as Solinus; or from Io, the Daughter of Inachus, as Lycophron the Poet hath it. It containeth all that part of the Mediterranean which lieth from the Ægæan or Cretan Seas unto the Adriatick, from which it is parted about Epidamnum, (otherwise called Dyrrhachium) as is said by Ptolemy; or rather at the shooting out of the Acroceraunian Hills, as is affirmed by Pliny and other Writers; and so along the Shores of the two Calabria's to the Isle of Sicily. Chief Isles whereof which pass in the account of Greece (for of those lying on the Coast of Italy we have spoken elsewhere) are, 1. the Strophades, 2 Zacynthus, 3. the Echinades, 4. Cephalenia, 5. Corcyra, and 6. Ithaca.

1. The STROPHADES are two small Islands, now called Strivali, lying against Messene in Peloponnesus; famous for nothing but the Harpyes, ravenous Birds, affirmed to have the Faces of Women, but the Talons of Vultures, sent by the offended Gods (as the Fable goeth) for the punishment of Phineus King of Arcadia, who had put out the Eyes of his Sons by a former Wife at the instigation of their Stepdame. For which he was so plagued by these Harpyes, that he could set no Meat on his Table wheresoever he was, but these ravenous creatures first devoured it, and then bewrayed the Dishes in which it was. Much pitied by the Argonauts, whom he had courteously entertained, they sent Zethes and Calais, the winged Issue of Boreas and Orithyia, who drave them thence, and having pursued them to those Islands, turned back again: whence the name of Strophades. Under which Fable was contained the sad condition of ignorant or unhappy Princes, devoured by Flatterers, Informers, and false Accusers, by whom their Name and Government was made distastful; till by good Counsel they had purged their Courts of such ugly Monsters: concerning which Alphonsus King of Naples was used to say, that these Harpyes had left the Strophades and dwelt at Rome. They are inhabited only by some few Greek Friers: and in one of them there is a Spring of fresh Water, which hath his Fountain in Peloponnesus, and, passing under the Sea, ariseth here. The Greek Priests are called Caloires, quasi καλοὶ ἱερεῖς, boni Sacerdotes; about 30 in number. They wear long Hair, never eat Flesh, and but seldom Fish; feeding usually on Herbs, Olives, Oyl, and the like. They never go out of the Islands, neither do they on any occasion permit Women to come amongst them. They all labour for their Sustenance, some in Tillage, some in Vineyards, some in Fishing; so that among very many of them, three or four only can reade. But of these somewhat hath been said elsewhere already.

2. ZACYNTHUS, or Zant, is 60 miles in compass, and distant from Peloponnesus 20 miles; so called of Zacynthus, Son to Dardanus. The Countrey is wonderfully stored with Oyl, Wines and Currans: of which last they made yearly 150000 Zecchines for their own Coffers, and 48000 Dollars which they pay for Custom to the Seigniory of Venice. They were a very poor people when the English used to traffick there first; but now they grow rich and proud. At our Merchants first frequenting the Countrey, they much marvelled to what end they bought so many Currans, and demanded whether they used to dye Cloaths or fat Hogs with them, for so they themselves did: but now they have learned a more profitable use of them. Here are also very good Salt-pits, Fresh water plenty, but little or no Wood, and less Corn: their ground being husbanded, as the case stands with them, to their better advantage; but so that that many times they are ready to ſtarve, if either the Wind or the Sea prove croſs unto them, and hinder them from fetching their Proviſions both of Fleſh and Corn out of Peloponeſus. in which reſpect they are fain to hold fair Quarter with the Turks, conſidering how eaſie it is for him to diſtreſs them for want of Victual. The Iſland is much troubled with Earthquakes, commonly once a week; in regard whereof they build their Houſes very low; and when they perceive them coming, the Prieſts are to ring the Bells, to ſtir the people to Prayers. They have a Cuſtom here at Weddings to invite many young men, whom they call Compeers, of which every one giveth the Bride a Ring: which done, it is accounted as deteſtable a Sin as Inceſt for them to accompany her in any carnal kind: and therefore they chuſe ſuch to be their Compeers who have formerly been ſuſpected of too much Familiarity with her.

The Iſland is very populous and well inhabited, but the people of a ſpitefull and vindicative nature, not to be reconciled, if angred. It containeth in it 48 Towns and Villages, the chief whereof, which paſſeth by the name of a City, is called alſo Zant, ſtreched out about the length of a mile on the foot of a mountain, but in breadth not anſwerable; beautified with a fair and convenient Haven opening towards Greece, ſafe from the danger of Pirats, though not of Winds, capable of great Fleets of ſhipping both for bulk and number, and ſo frequented from all parts, that he who hath a mind to go out of it need not ſtay for a paſſage. Yet, notwithſtanding this great Concourſe and reſort of Strangers, the Town is rather rich then well-built or beautifull; the Streets hereof being uneven and rugged, and the Buildings by reaſon of the often Earthquakes, very low. On the Eaſt ſide of it, on a round ſteep Mountain, ſtandeth a very ſtrong Caſtle, a little City of it ſelf, well garriſoned, impregnably fortified, and of a very difficult Entrance: which commandeth not the City and Harbour onely, but a great part of the Sea adjoyning. Upon the Wall thereof continually ſtands a Watchman, to deſcry what Shipping is at hand, and hangeth out as many Flags as he diſcovereth Veſſels. And over the Door of the Town-Hall (the better to inſtruct the Magiſtrates in their publick Duty) it is ſaid theſe Verſes are inſcribed:

Hic locus 1. odit, 2. amat, 3. punit, 4. conſervat, 5. honorat,
1. Nequitiam, 2. Pacem, 3. Crimina, 4. Jura, 5. Probos.

Thus Engliſhed by George Sandys, whence I had the Latine,

This place doth 1. hate, 2. love, 3 puniſh, 4. keep, 5. requite,
1. Voluptuous Riot, 2, Peace 3. Crimes, 4. Laws, 5. th' Upright.

In matter of Religion, the people, being generally Greeks both in Birth and Language, are for the moſt part of that Church alſo; but ſome adhere unto the Latine; each party having their own Biſhop: of which the Greek Biſhop hath his Cathedral in the Church of S. Nicolas, near unto the Haven which it giveth name to, and therein a Monaſtery of Caloires, or Monks of Baſil; the Latine Biſhop hath his Reſidence and Cathedral within the Caſtle, and therein a Convent of Franciſcans. The Jews have in this Town their Synagogue alſo: but there are not many of them, if not lately encreaſed. In Civil matters they are ſubject to the State of Venice, the Governour hereof (whome they call the Providore) having his Reſidence in the Caſtle, aſſiſted by a Chancellour and two Counſellours, (all Gentlemen of Venice) whom they change every third year. The Fortunes of this Iſland in former times, and by what means it fell to the Venetians, we ſhall ſhew anon.

3. The ECHINADES are certain little Iſlands, or rather great Rocks, now called Curzolari, famous for nothing but the great Battel of Lepanto, fought nigh them betwixt the Venetians and the Turks; the Turks having in their Navy 207 ſail of Ships the Venetians and their Confederates but 145 of all ſorts. But it pleaſed God to give the Victory to the weakeſt: the Iſſue of it being ſuch, that the Turks loſt 29000 men who were killed in the Fight, 3000 more which were taken priſoners, 140 of their Gallies, 400 pieces of Ordnance, and 200 Chriſtian Captives which were then redeemed: the Chriſtians buying this great Victory with the death of 7656 men or thereabouts; too great a price, could it have been purchaſed with a leſs. A Victory obtained not far from the point of Actium, wherein Auguſtus overcame the Navy of Marcus Antonius, and thereby got the Empire to himſelf alone, of which before he was but Joint-tenant with his Adverſary. So that this place ſeems to be marked out for a Stage of eminent Actions; and that this later Naval fight was but the ſecond part of the firſt.

But to return unto theſe Iſlands. They ſtand juſt againſt the Mouth of the River Achelous; of which thus the Poet,

Fierce Achelous with the Sea is mixt.
Where the Echinades (great Rocks) are fixt.

Theſe Iſlands are in number five, feigned by the Poets to be ſo many Naiades or Sea Nymphs, whome Achelous the River-God upon ſome diſpleaſure metamorphoſed into theſe Rocky Iſlands. But the truth is, that they were cauſed by the Dirt and Mud which this River carried with it into the Sea, where at laſt it ſettled to firm Ground. Of which himſelf ſaith thus in Ovid,

——— Fluctus noſtrique mariſque
Continuam deducit humum, paritérque revellit
In totidem mediis quot cernis Echinadas undis.
The fury of the Sea-waves and mine own
Continual heaps of Mud and Earth drew down,
Which, parted by the inter-running Seas,
Made, as thou ſeeſt, theſe five Echinades.

5. CEPHALENIA, the moſt populous Iſland of this Sea, is ſituate overagainſt Acarnania, part of the Province of Epirus; having on the South-eaſt Zant, on the North-weſt Corcyra or Corfu; in length containing 80 miles, 40 in breadth, the whole compaſs being reckoned at 160. Once called Tetrapolis, from the number of four Cities in it; but three of them were decayed in the time of Ptolemy, who takes notice of no more but one, and that of the ſame name with the Iſland. It is woody and mountainous in moſt places; but the Mountains intermixt with Valleyes and the Woods with Champain: plentifull in Wheat, Honey, Currans, Manna, Oyl, incomparable, though not long-laſting, Muſcadells; as alſo in Cheeſe, Wool, Turkies, and Powder for the dying of Scarlets. So deſtitute of Water, as having no River, and not many Fountains, that when their Cattel would drink, they gape both morning and evening to receive the Dew diſtilling inſenſibly from the Clouds.

The People are for the moſt part Greeks; ſome few Italians, naturals of the Seigniory of Venice, being intermixt: the whole number of the Inhabitants computed at 6000 Families, the number of the Towns and Villages to 200 or thereabouts. The principal whereof are, 1. Cephalenia, now Cefalona, fortified with good Works and a very ſtrong Caſtle. 2. Argaſtoli, a Haven-town, diſtant ſix miles from Cefalona: the Port whereof is capable of a ſufficient Navy. 3. Sidro, another Port-town alſo, lying towards the South.

As for the Fortunes of this Iſland, it was firſt called Melæna, after Teleboe: and being known by that name was made ſubject to Thebes, by the Valour and good Conduct of Amphitryo, the Theban General, by whom Pterelas, the King hereof, was slain in Battel. During which War, and the Stay of Amphitryo in this Island, it happened that Cephalus, a noble Athenian, having by misadventure killed his Wife Procris with an Arrow which he shot at a Deer, not daring to abide in his own Countrey, fled unto Amphitryo his old Friend, then newly victorious over the Teleboans; who, pitying his case, made him the Governour of this Island, since, from his name, called Cephalenia. Having continued for some time in the power of the Thebans, it passed, together with Zant and some other Illands into the hands of the Macedonians; from whom, in the declining of their Affairs; the Achæans got the Isle of Zant, and the Ætolians Cephalenia. But long they had not held them when the Romans began to look towards Greece, who under colour of setting the Continent at liberty, made themselves Masters of both the Islands, that so they might at leisure possess the whole, as in fine they did. In the Division of the Empire they fell, as parts of Greece, to the Constantinopolitans: and on the takings of that City by the Western Christians, they fell, with almost all the rest of the Islands, to the State of Venice, the Governours whereof, retaining Corfu and some other of most Importance in the hands of the Seigniour, permitted these (as many other of less note) unto private Adventurers. At the conclusion of the Peace betwixt Mahomet the Great and the state of Venice, these two, with Neritos, or Leucas, (spoken of in Epirus) were seised on by that Tyrant in despight of that Treaty or Conclusion, as belonging unto private persons, not to the Republick: but were recovered afterwards by the Venetians in the Reign of Bajazet the second, in the name of the State, and as parts thereof are still governed and defended by them.

5. CORCYRA, (now CORFV) more anciently was called Phæacia; but took this latter name from a Nymph so called, whome Neptune is reported to have here deflowred. It is situate over against Epirus, from thence 12 miles distant, stretched out from East to West in the form of a Bow, the length thereof being 54 miles, 24 the breadth; and so it is the biggest of these Seas. Commodiously seated for the Trade and Estate of Venice, as the Centre of their Dominion and Command by Sea.

The Southern parts hereof are mountainous and defective in Water, much subject to be blasted with Southernly Winds; and therefore they sow little Corn, and plant less Fruits. The Northern parts are level and delightfull, adorned with whole Groves of Limons, Oranges, Figtrees, Olives, and Pomegranates; enriched with plenty of Grain, abundance of Wines, great store of Oyl and Olives, and most excellent Honey; blest with a very temperate and healthfull Air, made odoriferous by most pleasent and sweet-smelling Fruits, which grow most plentifully in each part hereof. Alcinous, who so courteously entertained Ulysses after his Shipwreck, was once King of this Island; whose Gardens, answerable to the natural Delights and Sweetness of it, are so much celebrated by the Poets. One of which thus;

Quid bifera Alcinoi referam Pomaria, vòsque
Qui nunquam vacui prodistis in æthera Rami?

Which may be Englished in these words,

Why should I name Alcinous fertile Ground,
And Trees which never without Fruit are found?

Towns of most note and strength herein are, 1. Pagiopoli, 2. Castello S. Angelo, of good esteem in respect of many others, but far short of 3. Corfu, the chief and strongest of the Island, which the Turks have found by their frequent Repulses to be impregnable For it is situate at the foot of a Mountain, on the top of which are built two inaccessible Fortresses, as being strongly fenced with a natural Rock; the one called the Old Fortress, and the other the New: justly esteemed the chief Bulwarks of Venice, whose Trade and Power would soon decay should these Forts be lost. For which cause the two Governours (for each Fort hath one) are sworn before the State of Venice, never to hold Intelligence with one another by word or writing; lest by the Treachery of the one, the other might be wrought also from his Faith and Duty. Neither is their Command here for more then two years; their Commission then terminating, and new Successours being sent them. The Town is inhabited for the most part by Græcians, as is all the residue of the Island; beautified with one of the most commodious Havens in all the Adriatick, and the Residence of an Archbishop. A Town of such publick Concernment, in regard of the Strength and Situation, that it is accounted of as the Key of Venice, and one of the strongest Bulwarks of Christendom against the Encroachment of the Turks. The Story of it since dismembred from the Eastern Empire, at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, we have had before.

6. ITHACA, now called Val de Compare, lieth on the North-east of Cephalenia, being in compasse 50 miles: most famous for the Birth of Ulysses, the Son of Laertes, of which thus the Poet;

Effugimus Scopulos Ithacæ Laertia Regna,
Et terram altricem sævi exsecramur Ulyssis.
From th' Ithacan Rocks, Laertes Realm, we fled,
And curs'd the Land which dire Ulysses bred.

It was also called Dulichium, or else there was some other Island of that name, not far from Ithaca, whereof Ulysses was also King, who is hence called Dulichius Heros among the Poets: and in this Taunt of Aiax to him, Dulichius vertex signifieth the Head of Ulysses,

Sed neque Dulichius, sub Achillis cassîde, Vertex Pondera tanta ferret.
Achilles Helm's too great a weight, I trow,
For weak Ulysses Head to undergo.

But as weak a man as Ajax thought him, he was the Master-Wit of Greece for the times he lived in, and one that did as good Service in the War of Troy as the best Swordman of them all. A War to which he went somewhat unwillingly, as fearing the sad Consequences and events thereof; insomuch that he feigned himself mad, ploughing the Shore, and sowing Salt instead of Corn. But Palamedes, to make triall whether this was real, or but counterfeit onely, cast young Telemachus, the Son of Ulysses, before the Plough, which he observing, either drove the Plough besides him, or lifted it over him. Discovered by this means, and engaging with the rest in the Trojan War, he found out the Design of Thetis, and brought Achilles to it also: in the course whereof, by his Wit and Courage, he did very good Service; associated with Diomedes in the action against Rhesus King of Thrace, and with Palamedes in foraging the Countrey for Provisions. By his Policy was the Palladium stoln out of Troy, and consequently the City taken and distroyed, whose Fate depended on the preservation of that fatal Relick. After the ending of the War, which held out ten years, he was withheld from Ithaca ten years longer by Winds and Tempests and the Displeasure of the Gods which favoured Troy: in which he saved himself from the Inchantments of the Sirens, the Allurements of Circe, the Cruelty of Polyphemus; and after many Dangers came home in safety. A man of so compleat a Vertue, that Homer maketh him the Pattern of a Temperate and Prudent man in the Books called Odysses, (by his name, as the Greeks pronounce it;) as he doth Achilles, in his Iliads, of a compleat and perfect Soulder.

The

The Countrey is generally very rocky and barren, exceeding plentifull of Goats, but no Hares live in it; inhabited for the most part by Pirates and Exiles, men banished out of civil Society, and willingly acknowledging no Superiour over them; but subject, if to any, to the State of Venice, which hitherto hath maintained these Islands against the Turks, though many times attempted by them in the most prosperous times of their Arms and Victories. For the Venetians being gratified, at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, with almost all the Islands of the Ægæan and Ionian Seas, (as being a People strong in Shipping, and so most able to preserve the Possession of them) some of the greatest and most considerable, either for their Riches or commodiousness of Situation, were furnished with convenient Garrisons in the name of the State. The rest they did bestow on the better sort of Citizens, to be defended and made good at their own Cost and Charges; who accordingly possessed themselves of one, two or more of them, as they were of ability to set out their Gallies for the keeping of them: the Seignioury having nevertheless a Care of all, and to that end keeping a Fleet at Sea continually under one of their Admirals; whereby they did not onely preserve those Seas from the Genoua Pirats but for long time defended all their Islands also, as well against the Greeks as the Turkish Emperours. But all the Isles of the Ægæan being lost to the Turk, except Cythera and Tenos on the European, and Carpathos or Scarpanto on the Asian side; they have now onely Crete with the Isles adjoyning, and those of the Ionian Sea under their Command, and these (but specially the Isle Crete) endangered at the present by the Turkish Tyrant.

Thus having taken a view of the several Provinces and Isles which belong to Greece, according to the ancient and present state of each particular: let us next take a vew of the Græcian Emperours, who have had here their principal Residence, and possessed the whole, (though for a while their Empire was extended over all the East) as they here follow in this ensuing Catalogue of

The CONSTANTINOPOLITAN, GRÆCIAN, or Eastern Emperours.

A. Ch.

331 1. Constantine, surnamed the Great, having reigned 12 years in Rome, translated his Imperial Seat to Constantinople, which himself had founded.

341 2. Constantius, the second Son of Constantine, in the Division of the Empire, had for his Partage Thrace, Constantinople, and all the Provinces of the East. After the death of his two Brethern he remained sole Emperour, but resided for the most part in the East; a great Patron of the Arians, and as great a Persecutor of the Orthodox Christians.

366 3. Julian, surnamed the Apostate, Son of Constantius the Brother of Constantine the Great; at first a Christian, afterwards a professed Enemy of the Gospel: fortunate in his Wars against the Almans, Franks, and other Transalpine Nations, whilest he was a Christian; prodigiously slain in the Persian War, When become a Persecutor.

368 4. Jovian, or Jovinian, chosen by the Army, a Religious Prince, made Peace with the Persian, and settled the Affairs of the Christian Church: who being dead, Valentinian, one of mean Birth; but great Abilities in War, was elected Emperour.

369 5. Valens, the Brother of Valentinian, made Partner in the Empire with him, ruled in Constantinople and the East; Valentinian taking more delight in Rome and the Western parts. A great Patron of the Arian Faction and the first who brought in the Goths on this side of the Danow, whom he placed in the desart parts of Thrace, to the Destruction of the Empire, and himself to boot.

382 6. Gratian, the eldest Son of Valentinian, succeeded his Father in the West, and his Uncle Valens in the East, after whose death he left Italy and the West to Valentinian his younger Brother. Distressed by the Goths, he made Theodosius Partner in the Empire with him, and was treacherously murthered by Andragathius, at the appointment and command of the Tyrant Maximus.

383 7. Theodosius, a Spaniard born, revenged the death of Gratian on the Tyrant Maximus, and of Valentinian the 2. on the Traitour Eugenius. He vanquished the Goths, utterly suppresst the Pagan Superstitions, which till his time continued even in Rome it self, and strengthened the Church of Christ with good Laws and Ordinances.

399 8. Arcadius, the eldest Son of Theodosius, succeeded his Father in the East, as his Brother Honorius did in the West: the Roman Empire after this last Division of it being so distracted and torn in pieces, that it was never since united.

412 9. Theodosius II. Son of Arcadius, made Peace with the Goths, whom he employed against the Hunns and Persians; his more dangerous Enemies, and caused the Ephesine Council to be called against Nestorius.

454 10 Martianus, Lieutenant to Theodosius, succeeded his Master, and married with Pulcheria his Master's Sister. He called the Council of Chalcedon against Dioscorus.

461 11. Leo, a Thracian born, elected by the joynt consent of the Senate and Souldiery, sitting in the Council of Chalcedon; the Acts whereof he approved and ratified.

478 12. Zeno, the Son-in-law and Lieutenant of Leo, sent Theodorick and the Goths into Italy against Odoacer. A Tyrant and a great Drinker; in one of his drunken Fits buried quick by his Empress. In his time Constantinople was almost wholly destroyed by Fire; in which perished, amongst other things, 120000 Volumes of good Manuscripts.

497 13. Anastasius, a mean Officer of the Court, by the power and favour of the Empress created Emperour: a great Patron of Eutyches, yet fortunate in his Wars against the Persians and Arabians. In his time Constantinople, besieged by the Scythians, was likely to have fallen into great Distress, if Proclus, a Famous Mathematician, like another Archimedes, had not fired their Gallies.

521 14. Justin, the Son of a Thracian Shepherd, and Captain of the Guard unto Anastasius; a Catholick Prince, and Patron of the Orthodox Clergy, whom he called from Banishment.

528 15. Justinian, the Sister's Son of Justinus, with whom he was at first Consort in the Empire, recovered Africk from the Vandals by Belisa-

rius

rius, and Italy from the Goths by Narſes; and finally reduced the Laws of Rome into form and method.

566 16. Juſtin II. Nephew of Juſtinian, inſtituted the Exarchate of Ravenna, and loſt a great part of Italy to the Lombards. Unable of himſelf to oppoſe the Perſian, he choſe 577 17. Tiberius, one of his cheif Commanders, to be Conſort with him, who afterwards ſucceeded in the ſole Command.

584 18. Maurice, a Cappadocian born, fortunate in his Wars againſt the Perſians, from whom he recovered Meſopotamia in the time of Tiberius, by whom at his return he was married to Conſtantina his Daughter, and declared his Succeſſor. Refuſing to ranſom ſome of his Souldiers, taken Priſoners by Caganus King of the Avares, he loſt the Affections of his Army.

604 19. Phocas, a common Souldier, in a military Tumult choſen Emperour, murthered the Emperour Mauritius, with his Wife and Children, aud made Pope Boniface Supreme Biſhop or Head of the Church: ſlain in a popular Tumult by the Common people for his Luſts and Cruelties.

611 20. Heraclius, a Nobleman of Conſtantinople, choſen by the general conſent, repaired the Ruines of the Empire, vanquiſhed the Perſians, recovered Hieruſalem out of their hands: and brought home the Croſs unto Conſtantinople in triumphant manner; whence the Feaſt called Exaltatio Crucis, September 14. In his time Mahomet began to diſperſe his Dotages.

641 21. Conſtans, or Conſtantine II. Son of Heraclius, unfortunate in his Wars againſt the Saracens, who prevailed in all places. Picking a Quarrel with the Romans, he defaced Rome, robbing it of all the choiceſt Ornaments which the Goths and other barbarous people had left; and ranſacking the Iſle of Sicily, was there ſlain by the Women.

670 22. Conſtantinus III. Son of the former Conſtantine, from his long or early Beard ſurnamed Pogonatus, repulſed the Saracens from Conſtantinople, but could not hinder the Bulgarians from paſſing over the Danow.

687 23. Juſtinian II. Son of Conſtantine the 3. ſubdued Meſopotamia, Armenia, and ſome part of Perſia, forcing the Saracens to ſue for Peace, and become his Tributaries. Againſt whom Leontius on the one ſide, and Abſimarus on the other, ſeverally taking Arms; were declared Emperours. Juſtinian, taken by Leontius, hath his Noſe cut off, and his perſon commited to Cuſtody: bnt making an Eſcape, by means of Trebellin King of the Bulgarians, recovered his Imperial Dignity; and being too violent in the purſuit of his Revenge, was finally murthered at the Alter by the command of

713 24. Philippus Bardanes, Admiral of his Navy, elected Emperour by the Souldiers, a great enemy of Images, which he cauſed to be caſt out of the Church, thereby incurring the Diſpleaſure of 715 25. Anaſtaſius II. called alſo Artemius, his principal Secretary, who thruſt himſelf into the Empire; forced to relinquiſh it by that Army which he had raiſed againſt the Saracens: in which Tumult the City of Conſtantinople was ſacked and ſpoiled.

717 26. Theodoſius III. made Emperour in this Tumult by the Souldiers, hearing of the Approch of Leo, Commander of the Eaſtern Armies, reſigned the Empire, and took Orders to preſerve his Life.

718 27. Leo Iſaurus, in whoſe time Caliph Zuleiman beſieged Conſtantinople the ſpace of three years, and when by Cold and Famine 300000 of the Saracens were deſtroyed, they deſiſted. At this Siege was that Fire invented which we, for the violence of it call Wild-fire; and the Latines, becauſe the Greeks were the Authors of it, Græcus ignis: by which the Saracens Ships were not a little moleſted. He was alſo a great Enemy to Images, and for this cauſe hated by the Pope and Clergy of Rome, who gave him thereupon the Nickname of Iconomachus.

741 28. Conſtantinus IV. Son of Leo, ſurnamed Copronymus, for that when he was baptized he bewrayed the Font, followed his Father's Zeal in removing Images, which created him much Trouble, one Artabardus being choſen Emperour againſt him, but at laſt defeated.

777 29. Leo III. Son of Conſtantine Copronymus, honoured with the Adjunct of Porphyrogenitus, but commonly called Leo the 4. (Leontius the Uſurper (as I conjecture) being reckoned for one;) an Enemy to Images, and fortunate in his Wars againſt the Saracens.

782 30. Conſtantine V. the Son of Leo and Irene, firſt governed the Empire withhis Mother, by whom at laſt ſupplanted, and deprived of Sight, he died of Melancholy.

798 31. Irene, Wife of Leo the 3. firſt Conſort with Conſtantine her Son, and afterwards ſole Empreſs of Conſtantinople: for her better ſupport in which Eſtate ſhe ſided with the Popes of Rome, and called the ſecond Council of Nice for defence of Images. In her time Charles, ſurnamed the Great, was by the Pope and People of Rome created Emperour of the Weſt. For the Popes, knowing their own Greatneſs to grow out of the Ruines of the Temporal Power, committed the Empire of the weſt unto the French Princes: whereby the Greek Emperours became much weakened; and the French, being the Pope's Creatures, were in tract of time brought to their Devotion. In following times, when Frederick Barbaroſſa was by Pope Alexander the 3. pronounced non-Emperour, Emanuel of Conſtantinople ſued for a Re-union of the Empires: but the crafty Pope returned this anſwer, Non licere illi conjungere quæ majores ejus de induſtria disjunxerunt: Let no man preſume to joyn what the God of Rome, the Pope, hath put aſunder.

803 32. Nicephorus, a Patrician, made Emperour by the Souldiers, perſuaded that Irene had made choice of him to be her Succeſſor: ſlain in a pitcht Field againſt the Bulgarians.

812 33. Michael, ſurnamed Curopalates, from his Office, (the Maior of the Palace, as it were) Husband to Procopia, the Daughter of Nicephorus, aſſumed the Empire, which, finding his own Weakneſs, he did ſoon relinquiſh, and betook himſelf unto a Monaſtery.

814 34. Leo V. ſurnamed Armenius, from his Countrey, General of the Horſe to Michael, demoliſhed the Images which his Predeceſſors had ſet up. He was ſlain in the Church during the time of Divine Service.

821 35. Michael II. ſurnamed Balbus, having murthered Leo, aſſumed the Empire; unfortunate in his Government, and died of Madneſs.

830 36. Theophilus, the Son of Michael Balbus, an enemy of Images, like his Father, and as unfortunate as he; loſing many Battels to the Saracens, at laſt he died of Melancholy.

842 37. Michael III. Son of Theophilus, firſt ruling with his Mother Theodora, who took unto her ſelf the ſupreme Command; and after of himſelf ſole Emperour, his Mother being made a Nun.

866 38. Baſilius, ſurnamed Macedo, from the place of his Birth, made Conſort in the Empire by Michael the Son of Theophilus, whom he baſely and treacherouſly murthered; killed caſually by a Stag.

886 39. Leo VI. for his Learning ſurnamed Philoſophus, the ſon of Baſilius, a vigilant and provident Prince: moſt of his time, with variable Succeſs, was ſpent againſt the Bulgarians.

912 40. Conſtantine VI. commonly called the VII. Son of Leo Philoſophus, firſt under his Uncle Alexander, next under Zoe his Mother, and after under Romanus Lacopenus, governed the Empire; by which laſt he was ſo miſerably depreſſed, that he was fain to get his livelihood by Painting. But Lacopenus being depoſed and turned into a Monaſtery by his own Sons, Conſtantine at laſt obtained his Rights, and reſtored Learning unto Greece.

961 41. Romanus, the Son of Conſtantine.

963 42. Nicephorus, ſurnamed Phocas, firſt Governour or Protector of the young Emperour Romanus; after whoſe death, created Emperour by the Army, he recovered Antioch, Cilicia, and the greateſt part of Aſia minor, from the power of the Saracens: ſlain in the night by John Zimiſces, his Wife Theophania being privy to it.

971 43. John Zimiſces, Emperour in the place of Nicephorus Phocas, governed the Empire better then he did obtain it, vanquiſhing the Bulgarians, Roſſes, and others of the barbarous Nations; and left it at his death to the Sons of Romanus.

977 44. Baſilius II. ſurnamed Porphyrogenetus, as many of the Emperours had been before him, in regard that at their Births they were wrapped in Purple, (which the Greeks call Porphyrie) the Imperial Colour: he ſubdued the Bulgarians, and made them Homagers to the Empire.

1027 45. Conſtantine VII. or VIII. Brother of Baſilius, and with him Partner in the Empire: after whoſe death he governed three years by himſelf, but did nothing memorable.

1030 46. Romanus II. for his Prodigality ſurnamed Argyropolus, Husband of Zoe, the Daughter of Conſtantine the 8. drowned in a Bath by the Treaſon of his Wife and her Adulterer.

1035 47. Michael IV. ſurnamed Paphlago, from his Countrey, firſt the Adulterer, and afterwards the Husband, of Zoe; but died very penitent.

1042 48. Michael V. ſurnamed Calaphates, a man of obſcure Birth, adopted by Zoe, whom he depoſed from the Government, and turned into a Monaſtery. Out of which being again taken in a popular Tumult, ſhe put out the Eyes of Calaphates, and, being then 60 years of age, beſtowed both the Empire and her ſelf upon 1043 49. Conſtantine IX. ſurnamed Monomachus, formerly Husband to a Niece of Romanus the 2.

1060 52. Iſaacius, of the noble Family of the Comneni; valiant, of great Courage, and diligent in his Affairs: which having managed for two years, he left it at his death, with conſent of the Senat and people, to 1063 53. Conſtantine X. ſurnamed Ducas, a great Juſticiar and very devout, but exceeding covetous, whereby he became hated of his Subjects, and contemned by his Enemies.

1071 54. Romanus III. ſurnamed Diogenes, married Eudoxia, the Wife of Conſtantinus Ducas, and with her the Empire. Taken priſoner by the Turks, and ſent home again, he found a Faction made againſt him; by which Eudoxia was expelled, himſelf at his return depoſed, and ſo died in Exile.

1075 55. Michael VII. the Son of Conſtantinus Ducas, ſurnamed Parapinatius, by reaſon of the Famine which in his time happened, made Emperour in the aforeſaid Tumult. But being found unable for ſo great an Honour, (the Turks prevailing in all places) he was depoſed again, and put into a Monaſtery.

1081 56. Nicephorus II. ſurnamed Botoniates, of the Houſe of Phocas, ſucceeded in the place of Parapinace; depoſed within three years by the Comneni.

1084 57. Alexius Comnenus, Son of the Emperour Iſaacius Comnenus, obtained the Empire: in whoſe time the Weſtern Chriſtians with great Forces prepared for the Recovery of the Holy Land: of whoſe purpoſes being very jealous, he denied them paſſage through his Countrey; but was in the end forced to find them Victuals and other Neceſſaries.

1113 58. Calo-Joannes, the Son of Alexius, had a good hand againſt the Turks, from whom he took Laodicea and ſome other places of Importance. He alſo vanquiſhed the Scythians or Tartars paſſing over the Iſter, moſt of which he either ſlew in Battel, or ſold as Captives; permitting the remainder to abide on this ſide that River. He alſo conquered the Servians and Bulgarians, tranſporting many of them into Bithynia.

1142 59. Manuel, or Emanuel, the younger Son of Calo-Joannes, an under-hand enemy to the Weſtern Chriſtians, and an open enemy to the Turks; by whom being entrapped in the dangerous Streights of Cilicia, and his Army miſerably cut off, he was on honourable terms permitted to return again.

1180 60. Alexius II. Son of Manuel, depoſed and barbarouſly murthered by Andronicus, the Couſin-

Cousin-german of his Father, with his Wife and Mother.

1183 61. Andronicus Comnenus, confined by Manuel to Oenum in Paphlagonia, by reason of his dangerous and ambitious practices, after his death, pretending to reform the State, came unto Constantinople: first made Protector, afterwards Consort in the Empire with young Alexius: whom having barbarously slain, and got the Empire to himself, he was not long after cruelly torn in pieces in a popular Tumult.

1195 63. Alexius Angelus, deprived his Brother, and excluded his Nephew from the Empire; but it held not long.

64. Alexius Angelus II. Son of Isaac Angelus, who being unjustly thrust out of his Empire by his Uncle Alexius, had recourse to Philip the Western Emperour, whose Daughter Mary he had married; who so prevailed with Pope Innocent the 3. (upon a promise for subjecting the Church of Greece to the See of Rome) that the Army prepared for the Holy Land was employed to restore him. On the approch whereof Alexius the Usurper fled; Alexius the young Emperour is seated in his Father's Throne, and not long after slain by Alexius Ducas. In revenge whereof the Latines assault and win Constantinople, make themselves Masters of the Empire, and divide it amongst themselves: allotting to the Venetians Candia, many good Towns of Peloponnesus, and most of the Islands; to Boniface Marquess of Montferrat the Kingdom of Thessaly; to the others of the Adventurers other liberal Shares; and, finally, to Baldwin Earl of Flanders the main Body of the Empire, with the Title of Emperour. The Seat of the Empire of the Greeks being transferred unto Nice, a City of Bithynia in the Lesser Asia, by Theodorus Lascaris, Son-in-law to Alexius the Usurper, continued there till the regaining of Constantinople by the Greeks again, after it had been 60 years possessed by the Western Christians.

Emperours of the LATINES in CONSTANTINOPLE.

1200 65. Baldwin, Earl of Flanders, first Emperour of the Latines reigning in Constantinople, taken in fight by John King of Bulgaria, coming to aid the Greeks, and sent Prisoner to Ternova, where he was cruelly put to death.

1202 66. Henry, the Brother of Baldwin, repulsed the Bulgarians out of Greece, and died a Conquerour.

1215 67. Peter, Count of Auxerre in France, the Son of Peter, youngest Son to Lewis the Gross of France, and Husband of Yolande the Daughter of Henry, succeeded in the Empire after his decease. He was cunningly entrapped by Theodorus Angelus, a great Prince in Epirus, whom he had besieged in Dyrrhachium: but of an Enemy being persuaded to become his Guest, was there murthered by him.

1220 68. Robert, the Son of Peter, having seen the miserable usage of his beautiful Empress, whom a young Burgundian, formerly contracted to her, had most despitefully mangled, cutting off both her Nose and Ears, died of Heart's grief as he was coming back from Rome, whither his Melancholy had carried him to consult the Pope in his Affairs.

1227 69. Baldwin II. Son of Robert by a former Wife, under the Protection of John de Brenne, the titular King of Hierusalem, succeeded in his Father's Throne: which having held for the space of 33 years, he was forced to leave; the City of Constantinople being regained by the Greeks, and the poor Prince compelled to sue in vain for Succours to the French, Venetians, and other Princes of the West. And though both Philip the Son of this Baldwin, and Charles of Valois, Father of Philip de Valois the French King, in right of Catharine his Wife, Daughter of that Philip, did sometimes please themselves with the Title of Emperours of Constantinople, yet neither of the two had ever any footing or possession there.

The Empire restored unto the GREEKS.

1260 70. Michael VIII. surnamed Palæologus, extracted from the Comnenian Emperours, Emperour of the Greeks in the City of Nice, most fortunately recovered Constantinople; the Town being taken by a party of 50 men secretly put into it by some Countrey-Labourers under the Ruines of a Mine. Present in person at the Council of Lions, at the persuasion of the Pope he admitted the Latine Ceremonies into the Churches of Greece; for which he was greatly hated by his Subjects, and denied the honour of Christian Burial.

1283 71. Andronicus II. vexed with unnatural Wars by his Nephew Andronicus, who rebelled against him.

1328 72. Andronicus III. first Partner with his Grandfather, afterwards sole Emperour.

1341 73. John Palæologus, Son of Andronicus the 3. In whose Minority Cantacuzenus his Protectour usurped the Empire, and held it sometimes from him, and sometimes with him, till the year 1357, and then retired into a Monastery, leaving the Empire unto John, during whose Reign the Turks first planted themselves in Europe.

1384 74. Andronicus IV. the Son of Joannes Palæologus.

1387 75. Emanuel Palæologus, the Son of the said John, and Brother of Andronicus the 4. In whose time Bajazet the sixth King of the Turks did besiege Constantinople; but found such notable Resistence, that he could not force it.

1417 76. John II. Son of Andronicus the 4.

1420 77. John III. Son of Emanuel Palæologus, in person at the Council of Florence for reconciling of the Churches, in hope thereby to get some Aid from the Western Christians; but it would not be.

1444 78. Constantinus Palæologus, the Brother of John the 3. In whose time the famous City of Constantinople was taken by Mahomet the Great 1452, the miserable Emperour, who had in vain gone from door to door to beg or borrow money to pay his Souldiers, (which the Turks found in great abundance when they took the City) being lamentably trod to death in the Throng. Now concerning this Empire of the Greeks, we may observe some fatal Contrarieties in one and the same Name. As first, that Philip the Father of Alexander laid the first Foun-

Foundation of the Macedonian Monarchy, and Philip the Father of Perseus ruined it. Secondly, that Baldwin was the first, and Baldwin the last Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople. Thirdly, that this Town was built by a Constantine, the Son of Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch; and was lost by a Constantine, the Son of a Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch also. And fourthly, the Turks have a Prophecy, that as it was wone by a Mahomet, so shall it be lost by a Mahomet. So Augustus was the first established Emperour of Rome, and Augustulus the last: Darius, the Son of Hystaspes, the Restorer; and Darius, the Son of Arsamis, the Overthrower of the Persian Monarchie. A like note I shall hereafter tell you of Hierusalem. In the mean time I will present you with a fatal Observation of the letter H, as I find it thus versed in Albion's England.

Not superstitiously I speak, but H this letter still Hath been observed ominous to England's Good or Ill.
First Hercules, Hesione and Helen were the cause of War to Troy; Æneas Seed becoming so Outlaws.
Humber the Hun with forein Arms did first the Brutes invade:
Helen to Rome's Imperial Throne the British Crown convey'd.
Hengist and Horsus first did plant the Saxons in this Isle:
Hungar and Hubba first brought Danes, that swayed here long while.
At Harold had the Saxon end, at Hardie-Cnute the Dane.
Henries the first and second did restore the English Reign.
Fourth Henry first for Lancaster did Englands Crown obtain.
Seventh Henry jarring Lancaster and York unites in Peace.
Henry the eight did happily Rome's Irreligion cease.

A strange and ominous Letter, every Mutation in our State being as it were ushered by it.

What were the Revenues of this Empire since the Division of it into the East and West, I could never yet learn. That they were exceeding great may appear by three circumstances. 1. Zonaras reporteth that the Emperour Basilius had in his Treasury 200000 Talents of Gold, besides infinite Heaps of Silver and other Moneys. 2. Lipsius relateth, how Benjamin a Jew in his discourse of Europe saith, that the Custome due to the Emperours out of the Victuals and Merchandize sold at Constantinople only did amount to 20000 Crowns daily. 3. We find that at the Sack of Constantinople there was found an invaluable mass of Gold, Silver, Plate and Jewels, besides that which was hid in the Earth. For so the covetous Citizens chose rather to employ their Wealth, then afford any part of it to the Emperour, who with Tears in his Eyes went from door to door to beg and borrow Money, wherewith he might wage more Souldiers for the defence of the Town.

The Arms of the Empire were Mars, a Cross Sol between four Greek Beta's of the second: the four Beta's signifying (as Bodin saith) Βασιλεὺς, Βασιλέων, Βασιλεῦσι, Βασιλεῦσιν.

It may perchance be expected that we should here make an additional Catalogue of those Turkish Emperours who have reigned in Constantinople since the taking of it; and, being they are possessed of Greece, and do now inhabit it, that we should here also speak of the Turks themselves, their Customs, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But the discourse of those things we intend to reserve for Turcomania, a Province of Asia, from whence they made their first Inundation into Persia, and afterwards into other parts of the World now subject to them, the only Province which retains any thing of their name. And though the Peninsula called anciently Taurica Chersonesus (now part of Tartaria Precopensis) be within the Bounds of Europe also; yet we will defer the description and story of it till we come to the Affairs of the Tartars; and will here conclude our Discourse of Europe, and prepare for Asia.

And so much for GREECE, the last of the Provinces of EUROPE.

Of ASIA.

ASIA is bounded on the West, with the Mediterranean, and Ægean Seas, the Hellespont, Propontis, Thracian Bosphorus, and the Euxine Sea, the Palus Mæotis, the Rivers Tanais and Dwina, a line being drawn from the first of the two said Rivers unto the other, by all which parted from Europe; on the North, it hath the main Scythick Ocean; on the East, the Straights of Anian (if such there be;) the Indian Ocean, and Mare del Zur, by which separated from America; on the South, the Mediterranean, or that part of it which is called the Carpathian Sea, washing the shores of Anatolia; and the main Southern Ocean, passing along the Indian, Persian, and Arabian Coasts: and finally, on the South-west, the Red Sea or Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Africk. Environed on all sides with the Sea, or some Sea-like Rivers, except a narrow Isthmus in the South-west, which joyns it to Africk, and the space of ground (whatsoever it be) betwixt Dwina, and Tanais, on the North-west, which unites it to Europe.

It took this name, as some will have it from Asia, the Daughter of Oceanus and Thetis, the wife of Iapetus, and (by him) Mother to Prometheus: as others say, from Asius the Son of Atis, a King of Lydia, from whence that Country first, afterwards all Anatolia, or Asia minor, and finally, the whole Continent, had the name of Asia. Others again (but more improbably) derive the name from Asius the Philosopher, who gave the Palladium unto the Trojans; in memory whereof that Country first, and after the whole Continent did receive this name: But these Originations being very uncertain, Bochartus (out of his great affection to the Punick or Phœnician Language) will have it called so from Asia, a Phœnician word, signifying Medium, or the middle; because Anatolia, or the Lesser Asia, which gives name (as he conceiveth) to the Greater also, lieth in the middle, as it were, betwixt some parts of Europe and Africa. And so far the Conjecture doth find countenance from some ancient Writers, that Asia is said by Pliny to be inter Africam & Europam, to be betwixt Africa and Europe; by Mela, medium nostris æquoribus excipi, to be embraced in the middle of the two Seas (he meaneth Pontus Euxinus, and the Mediterranean,) and finally, by Eustathius (conceive them all of Anatolia, or the Lesser Asia) μέσην ἀμφοῖν ἔχειν διάθεσιν, to have a middle situation betwixt Europe and Africa. But by what name, and on what grounds soever it be called by the Greeks, and Latines, it is otherwise, and with better reason called in holy Scriptures by the name of Semia; as being that portion of the world, wherein the whole Posterity of Sem had their seats and dwellings, if the observation of Maginus be of any weight.

It is situate East and West, from the 52 to the 169 degree of Longitude; and North and South, from the 82 degree of Latitude, to the very Æquator; some only of the Islands lying on the South of that Circle: so that the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, is but twelve hours only; but in the most Northern parts hereof, for almost four whole months together no night at all. And for a measurement by miles, it stretches in length 5200 and in bredth 4560 miles.

This Country hath heretofore been had in especial honour, 1. For the Creation of man, who had his first making in this part of the world; 2ly. Because in this part of it stood the Garden of Eden, which he had for the first place of his habitation; 3ly. Because here flourished the four first great Monarchies of the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes, and Persians; 4ly. Because it was the Scene of almoſt all the memorable actions, which are recorded by the Pen-men of the Scriptures; 5ly. Becauſe that here our Saviour CHRIST was born, here wrought he moſt divine Miracles, and here accompliſhed the great Work of our Redemption; 6ly. And finally. Becauſe from hence all Nations of the World had their firſt beginning, on the diſperſion which was made by the Sons of Noah, after there vain attempt of Babel.

The chief Mountains of this great Continent, not limited within the bounds of any one Province (for of thoſe we are to ſpeak in their ſeveral places) are 1 Mount Taurus, which having its beginning in Lycia, a Province of Anatolia, paſſeth directly Eaſtwards to the Indian Ocean, and reckoning in its ſeveral windings and turnings, with its ſpurs and branches every way, is ſaid to be 6250 miles long, and 357 miles broad. This Mountain, or rather ridge of hills, divideth the Greater Aſia, as the Æquator doth the World, into North and South: memorable for three difficult paſſages from the one to the other; the firſt out of the reſt of Anatolia into Cilicia, called Pylæ Ciliciæ; the ſecond out of Scythia, or Tartary, into Turcomania, called Caucaſiæ Portæ; and the third out of Scythia into Perſia, called Portæ Caſpiæ. Of which, and of the whole courſe of this Mountain, more at large hereafter. 2 Imaus, which beginning near the ſhores of the Northern Ocean, runneth directly towards the South; dividing the Greater Aſia (as the Meridian doth the World) into Eaſt and Weſt, and croſſing Mount Taurus in right Angles, in or about the Longitude of 140. This on the North of Taurus hath no other name among the Latines, then Imaus only; and by that name divideth Scythia, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum: but by the Tartars is called Altay; by ſome Writers, Belgion. And on the South-ſide of that Mountain is known in Ptolomy by the name of Bitigo, extending from Mount Caucaſus, or ſome other branch of the Taurus, to the Cape of Comari, in the Southern Ocean: ſuppoſed by ſome to be Mount Sephar, mentioned Gen. 10. 30. of which we ſhall ſay more alſo when we come into India.

The eſtate of Chriſtianity in this vaſt Continent is in ill condition, diſcountenanced and oppreſſed, though not quite extinguiſhed. For all the great Princes and Commanders of it being either Mahometans or Pagans, the moſt that can be hoped for of the Chriſtian Faith, is a toleration or connivence; and that not found but with an intermixture of ſuch afflictions as commonly attend diſcountenanced and diſgraced Religions. Yet is not Chriſtianity ſo over-powered either by Mahometaniſm, or Paganiſm, but that in Aſia the Leſſer, Syria, Paleſtine, and Armenia, a great part of the Inhabitants do retain the Goſpel, under their ſeveral Patriarchs and Metropolitans: differing in ſome few points from one another; but in many from the Church of Rome, with which they hold neither correſpondency nor Communion. Nor want there many Chriſtian Churches in the Empire of Perſia, nor in thoſe of Tartary, China, and the Indies, anciently planted in thoſe Countries; beſides the late increaſe thereof in the Eaſtern Iſlands by the diligent preaching of the Jeſuites, and ſome late Factories there ſettled by the Engliſh and Hollanders: of all which I ſhall write in place convenient.

In reference to the Roman Empire, whoſe Dominion did not often extend beyond the River Euphrates, this Continent contained only three Dioceſes, or Juridical Circuits; that is to ſay, the Dioceſe of Pontus, Aſia properly ſo called, and the Oriental: which with the Dioceſes of Thrace and Egypt, were under the Command of the Præfectus Prætorii Orientis; the greateſt Officer of power and juriſdiction, next to the Emperours themſelves, in the Roman Monarchy. And theſe three Dioceſes contained in them to the number of thirty ſeven Provinces, viz. the Provinces of Bithynia. 2 Heleſpontus. 3 Pontus Polemoniacus. 4 Galatia prima. 5 Galatia Salutaris. 6 Honorius. 7 Paphlagonia. 8 Cappadocia prima. 9 Cappadocia ſecunda. 10 Armenia prima, and 11 Armenia ſecunda, contained in the Dioceſe of Pontus, and governed by the Vicarius or Lieutenant thereof. II. The Provinces of Pamphylia. 2 Lycia. 3 Caria. 4 Piſidia. 5 Lycaonia. 6 Lydia. 7 Phrygia Pacatiana. 8 Phrygia Salutaris. 9 Aſia ſpecially ſo called. 10 Helleſpont, and 11 the Iſles of Anatolia, making up the Dioceſe of Aſia: whereof the three laſt were governed by a peculiar Officer, called the Proconſul of Aſia; the others by the ordinary Lieutenant or Vicarius. III. The Provinces of Iſauria. 2 Cilicia prima. 3 Cilicia ſecunda. 4 Cyprus. 5 Phœnices. 6 Phœnices Libani. 7 Syria 8 Syria Salutaris. 9 Paleſtina prima. 10 Paleſtina ſecunda. 11 Paleſtina Salutaris. 12 Euphratenſis. 13 Oſroene. 14 Meſopotamia, and 15 Arabia, conſtituting the Dioceſe of the Orient, under the Comes Orientis. The reſt of Aſia ſubject unto the Parthian or Perſian Kings, beſides thoſe of India (and of many Regions and Countries not then diſcovered) was never conquered by the Romans; and therefore not within the compaſs of this diſtribution.

At this time Aſia ſtands divided amongſt ſix great Monarchs; that is to ſay, the Turk, commanding all thoſe parts and Provinces, which anciently belonged to the Roman Empire. 2ly. The Perſian, ruling in all the Provinces beyond Euphrates, poſſeſſed by the Perſian Kings in the time of Alexander the Great, or the Aſacidæ or Parthians in the times of the Romans. 3ly. The Great Cham of Tartary, commanding over all the North parts of Aſia, anciently known by the name of Scythia. 4ly. The King of China, governing in that large and populous Country. 5ly. The King of Barma, whoſe Dominion comprehends all or the greateſt part of India beyond the River Ganges. And 6ly. The Great Magor, whoſe Empire is extended over all India on this ſide of that River. And ſome there be who in the deſcriptions of this great Country, follow this diviſion. But for our parts, for the better underſtanding of the Greek and the Roman Stories, and the eſtate of the Aſſyrian, Babilonian and Perſian Monarchies, to which the holy Scriptures do ſo much relate; we ſhall conſider it as divided into the Regions of 1 Anatolia, or Aſia Minor. 2 Cyprus. 3 Syria. 4 Paleſtine. 5 Arabia. 6 Chaldea. 7 Aſſyria. 8 Meſopotamia. 9 Turcomania. 10 Media. 11 Perſia. 12 Tartaria. 13 China. 14 India; And 15 The Oriental Iſlands.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from the greater Aſia; on the Weſt, with the Thracian Boſphorus, Propontis, Helleſpont, and the Ægæan Sea, by which parted from Europe; on the North, with Pontus Euxinus, called alſo the Black Sea, and Mare Maggiore; and on the South, by the Rhodian, Lydian, and Pamphylian Seas, ſeveral parts of the Mediterranean. So that it is a demy-Iſland, or Peninſula, environed on all ſides with waters, excepting a ſmall Iſthmus or neck of Land extending from the head of Euphrates to the Euxine Sea, by which joyned to the reſt of Aſia.

It was anciently called Aſia Minor, to difference it from the reſidue of this great Continent; afterwards Anatolia, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς, from the more Eaſtward ſituation of it, in reſpect of Greece; and now Natolia by by the Turks, with little deviation from the former name. But here is to be obſerved, that as this Leſſer Aſia was a part of the greater; and the Dioceſe of Aſia, a part of Aſia the Leſs: ſo was Aſia properly and ſpecially ſo called, but a part only of the Aſian Dioceſe; the Lydian Aſia, a part of Aſia properly ſo called; and the Proconſular Aſia, but a part of that. The limits of Aſia the Leſs, and the ſeveral Provinces contained in the Aſian Dioceſe, have been ſhewn already. And as for that part hereof which had the name of Aſia properly and ſpecially ſo called, it containeth only the two Phrygias, both the Myſias, Æolis, Ionia, Lydia, and Caria, which falling unto the Romans, by the laſt Will and Teſtament of Attalus, the laſt King of Pergamus, were by them made into one Province, and called Aſia, after the name of the whole Continent, this being as it were the earneſt penny, to make ſure the reſt. So witneſſeth Strabo, where he ſaith, Ῥωμαῖοι ἐπαρχίαν ἀπέδειξαν τὴν χωρὰν Ἀσίαν προσαγορεύσαντες, ἐμώνυμον τῇ ἠπείρῳ, Lib. 13. And for the Lydian Aſia, that contained only ſo much of the Roman or proper Aſia, as anciently did belong to Lydia; that is to ſay, Lydia it ſelf, together with Æolis, and Ionia, and ſome parts of the Greater Myſia adjoyning to it. Which as it had originally the name of Aſia, from Aſia a chief City of it near the foot of Mount Tmolus, which both Suidas, and the Great Etymologiſt have taken notice of, before that name became to be communicated to the greater Continent: ſo it retained that name to it ſelf in ſeveral, diſtinct both from the Greater and the Leſſer Aſia; as alſo from the Aſia propria of Ptolemy, and others of the ancient Writers. And of this Aſia only it is, which the Scriptures ſpeak; both in the Book of the Acts, and the Revelation: the ſeven Churches mentioned in the one being found in this Lydian Aſia, and the paſſages in the other concerning Aſia, not to be underſtood of any, but of this alone. For whereas it is ſaid Acts 16. that when they had gone throughout Phrygia, and the Region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt to preach the Word in Aſia; after they were come to Myſia, they aſſayed to go into Bithynia, and came down to Troas: moſt clear it is, that neither Galatia, nor Bithynia, though Regions of the Leſſer Aſia; nor Phrygia, Myſia, or Troas all Regions of the proper Aſia, were any part of that Aſia which the Scripture ſpeaks of. So alſo where it is affirmed, that upon St. Pauls preaching and diſputing for two years in Epheſus, all they which dwelt in Aſia heard the word of the Lord, Acts 19 10. it is not to be meant of any but the Lydian Aſia, whereof Epheſus at that time was the principal City. So alſo Acts 19. 22, 26, 31. and Chap. 20. 18. Finally, for the Proconſular Aſia, which together with Helleſpont and the Iſles, made up a government apart, exempt from the command of the Vicarius, or Lieutenant of the Aſian Dioceſe, it contained only Æolis, and Ionia, with the South part of Lydia, or the Countries lying about Epheſus. So witneſſeth St. Hierom from the Chriſtian Writers, where he affirms, that although all the whole Peninſula have the name of the Leſſer Aſia, Specialiter ubi Epheſus Civitas eſt, Aſia Vocatur; yet more particularly the parts adjoyning unto Epheſus have the name of Aſia. And this appeareth by the diſtribution of the Provinces before laid down, where Lydia is reckoned for a Province of the Aſian Dioceſe, diſtinct from the Proconſular Aſia, which we now inſiſt on.

So haveing cleared our way in regard of the name, proceed we next unto the Region, or place thus named, according to the notion in the largeſt latitude, extending from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates, and from the Euxine Sea to the Mediterranean. By which account it reacheth from the 51 to the 72 degree of Longitude, and from the 36 to the 45 degree of Latitude: the length hereof from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates, being eſtimated at 630 miles; the breadth from Sinus Iſſicus in Cilicia, to the City of Trabezond, at 210. As for the ſituation of it, in reference to the Heavenly Bodies, it lyeth almoſt in the ſame poſition with Italy, extending from the middle Parallel of the fourth Clime, to the middle Parallel of the ſixt: So that the longeſt Summers day in the Southern parts, is about fourteen hours and a half; and one hour longer in thoſe parts which lie moſt towards the North.

The temperature of the air is exceeding ſound, and the ſoil generally exceeding fruitful, abounding in moſt excellent paſtures, which breed a notable race of Horſes, of very good ſervice in the Wars, if backed with Europæan Riders; it being a by-word amongſt the Turks, that the Horſes of Aſia, and the Horſemen of Europe are of greateſt action. It was anciently very plentiful of all fruits, both for uſe and pleaſure, as ſtill it would be, were it cultivated as in former times. Once very populous, and repleniſhed with goodly Cities, now in a manner waſte and deſolate, lamenting the diſtruction of 400 Towns: ſome of them deſtroyed by Earthquakes, (the falling ſickneſs of moſt great Cities in the Eaſt) but moſt by War, and have little now to boaſt of but the commodiouſneſs of the Havens, which are very many; though moſt of them but meanly traded, as in a Country ill manured, and of little Manufactures.

The people anciently, eſpecially thoſe of Greek original, and the Nations bordering on the Euxine, were very warlike and induſtrious: the reſt, eſpecially the Lydians, and thoſe of the greater Phrygia, as idle and effeminate, wholly addicted to their pleaſures. All of them at this time affected with the ſame diſeaſe; inſomuch that the Turks, (unleſs compelled thereunto by extreme neceſſities) never inrol their Children in the number of Janizaries. The greateſt part of them generally profeſs the Chriſtian Faith, but overpowered by Mahometaniſm, which is here moſt prevalent: all followers of the Church of Greece, and ſubject all (except thoſe of Iſauria and Cilicia) to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. And as they are of the Communion of that Church, ſo they retain the Greek Liturgies for Sacred Offices; not ſo well underſtood amongſt them as in former times, when it was more generally ſpoken there than it is at the preſent: now over-topped in moſt places by the Turkiſh and Sclavonian Tongues. And though in former times, by reaſon of the many Greek Colonies planted in this Country, the Conqueſt of it by Alexander the Great, and the ſubjection of it to the Syrian Kings of the Macedon Race, that Language became generally underſtood amongſt them; inſomuch as three of the Greek Dialects, viz. The Dorick, the Ionian, and the Æolick, were ſpoken here: yet did it never ſo prevail, as to become the Vulgar Language of the people, or to extinguiſh any of the Vulgar Tongues. For it is ſaid of Mithridates King of Pontus, that he underſtood two and twenty Languages, without any Interpreter; which were no other than the Languages of ſo many Nations ſubject to himſelf, whoſe Dominion was contained for the moſt part within Aſia Minor.

Principal Mountains of this Country, are Hermion in Pontus, Argæus in Cappadocia, Ida in the Leſſer Phrygia, Olympus in Myſia, Tmolus in Lydia, Amanus in Cilicia, and finally Antetaurus, and Scordiſcus in Armenia Minor: Out of which, for the moſt part, flow the chief Rivers hereof, that is to ſay, 1 Iris, (now Caſilmach.) 2 Thermodon. 3 Halis (now Ottomangruch.) 4 Parthenius (now Dilop.) 5 Sangarius (now Sangry.)

All

All of them falling into the Euxine Sea. 6 Ascanius. 7 Rhyndacus. 8 Æsapus, and 9 Granicus, passing into the Propontis. 10 Simois. 11 Scamander, called also Xanthus, ending their short course in the Hellespont. 12 Caicus. 13 Hermus. 14 Caystrus. And 15 Meander, losing themselves in the Ægean. 16 Calbis. 17 Xanthus, called also Lycus. 18 Limicus. 19 Cataractes, dischanelling into the Mediterranean, and 20 Melas, adding to the waters of the great River Euphrates. Of most which we shall speak more particularly in their several places.

In reference to the State of Rome, it contained the whole Diocese of Pontus, except Armenia the Greater, the Asian Diocese intirely, without any exception; and the peculiar jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia, together with the Provinces of Isauria and Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East. But because the names of many of those Provinces were of new invention, and some of them of as short continuance, we will consider it according as it stood divided anciently, and before the Romans had made any conquests in it, into the Provinces of 1 Bithynia. 2 Pontus. 3 Paphlagonia. 4 Galatia. 5 Cappadocia. 6 Armenia Minor; which (together with Armenia Major) made up, though in other names, the Pontick Diocese. 7 Phrygia Minor. 8 Phrygia Major. 9 Mysia the greater and the lesser. 10 Asia, specially so called, comprehending Æolis and Ionia. 11 Lydia. 12 Caria. 13 Lycia. 14 Lycaonia. 15 Pisidia. 16 Pamphylia. 17 The Province of the Rhodes, all comprehended under the command of the Vicarius and Proconsul of Asia. 18 Isauria. 19 Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East, as before was said.

1 BITHYNIA.

BITHYNIA is bounded on the East with Pontus, and the River Sangarius; on the West, with part of the Euxine, the Thracian Bosphorus, and part of the Propontis; on the North, wholly with the Euxine; and on the South, with Mysia, and Phrygia Minor: Formerly called Bebrycia, afterwards Mygdonia, and at last Bithynia, and that as some say from Bithynius, once a King hereof; more probably from the Thyni, a people of Thrace, who passed over the Bosphorus, and subdued it, called therefore by some Writers Thracia Asiatica. So witnesseth the Poet Claudian, saying.

Thyni Thraces erant, quæ nunc Bithynia fertur.

By Justin the Historian it is called by the name of Metapontus, by reason of its neighbourhood to the Euxine, and the Pontick Regions.

The Country naturally rich, and in those parts hereof which lie next the Bosphorus, opposite to Constantinople, so plentifully enriched with fruitful hills, and pleasant Orchards, when kept by the more curious Christians, that it was thought not to be inferiour to the so much celebrated Tempe: now robbed of all those former beauties by the carelesness of the Turks, who affect neither art, nor sumptuosity, in their retirements and delights.

Chief Rivers hereof are Phillis. 2 Sangarius, now called Sangri, both falling into the Euxine Sea; this last arising from Mount Dindymus, in the furthest parts of Phrygia Major; and making two long reaches in his journey hither. 3 Ascanius, which rising also in Phrygia Major, but more near the borders of this Country, falleth into the Propontis, making the Bay called Sinus Ascanius; Which with a Lake in the same Country, called Lacus Ascanius, doth plainly manifest, that the Bithynians are derived from Askenaz, the Son of Gomer, and grand-son of Japhet.

The Principal Towns hereof are 1 Scutari, over against the Haven of Constantinople, called anciently Chrysopolis, for that there the Persians received their tribute from the other Cities of all these parts of Asia Minor. An ample Town, well garrisoned within, and surrounded round about with most pleasant Orchards, and honoured with the neighbourhood of a Royal Seraglio. Not far off is a Tower, called the Maiden-Tower, serving both for a Fort and Watch-tower; and being furnished for defence with 20 Pieces of Ordnance. 2 Chalcedon, on the same shore also, a Colony of the Megarenses, called blind by the Oracle, for neglecting Byzantium, and choosing the less convenient place for their habitation. And yet did Constantine the Great resolve upon the same place also for his Regal City; but changed his resolutions on a kind of miracle: it being observed, that when his workmen began to draw the Platform, some Eagles conveyed away their Lines to the other side of the Bosphorus, and let them fall directly upon Byzantium. Memorable after that for the fourth General Council there assembled by command of the Emperour Martianus, for repressing the Heresie of Nestorius; in which were 530 Bishops: now so decayed, that it can only shew some few of the ruines of it; Scutari being risen on the fall thereof. 3 Nicomedia, so called from Nicomedes King of Bithynia (the Son of Zipes, and Grandchild to that Bithynian King, who so valiantly defended his own and his Countries liberty against Calantus, one of Great Alexanders Captains) by whom founded: Situate on the top of an hill, environed with a pleasant and delightful plain, honoured with the seat and residence of many of the Roman Emperours, when their affairs called them into the East, before the building of Constantinople; on that occasion made the Throne on which many of Gods Saints received the Crown of Martyrdom, especially in the persecution under Diocletian. In those times wealthy, and of fame, now much decayed; but notwithstanding well inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, for the commodiousness of the fresh springs which are thereabouts. 4 Libussa, betwixt Nicomedia, and the River Ascanius; memorable for the death and sepulture of the famous Annibal, who to prevent his being made prisoner to the Romans, when Prusius King of Bithynia intended unworthily to betray him, here made away himself by poyson. 5 Prusa, founded by another Prusius, whose name it beareth; a large and wealthy City as most in Asia: honoured for a long time with the residence of the Turkish Kings, till the removal of their seat to Adrianople, by Mahomet the first; and still ennobled with the sepulture of the Princes of the Ottoman Race, except the Emperours themselves. By the Turks called Bursa. 6 Nicæ or Nicæa, by the Turks called Neichia, but most commonly Isnichs, situate near the Fens of the River Ascanius, occasioned by the frequent overflowings of that River: by some affirmed to be the Metropolis of Bithynia; but I think Nicomedia hath more right to claim that honour. First named Antigonia, from Antigonus the founder of it; and afterwards Nicæa, by the name of Nica, Wife unto Lysimachus: both of them Captains of the Great Alexander; which last had the happiness to survive the overthrow of the former, and was the longest liver of those Great Commanders. Sufficiently famous both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Story, for the first General Council there holden, by the appointment of Constantine the Great, Anno 314. for settling the peace of the Church, then miserably distracted by the Arian Heresie. The number of Bishops there assembled, no more than 318. yet of such high esteem for Learning and Piety, that that never Council hath been held in so great an honour. Here was also held the Council by the Empress Irene, for establishing the veneration of Images; that passing by the name of the Nicene Council, the Acts thereof might be of greater reputation amongst ignorant men. In which it was decreed by such doubty Arguments, as Let us make man after our own Image, once mainly insisted on by a Legate of the Eastern Churches, that they should be reverenced and adored in as ample and religious manner, as the blessed Trinity it self. This City was also the Imperial City of the Greek Emperours, after the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, and there continued till the expulsion of the Latines, under these Emperours of the GREEKS residing at NICE.

A. Ch.
1200	1	Theodorus Lascaris, Son in-law- to Alexius Angelus the Usurper, upon the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, passed over into Asia and fortifying the City of Nice, made it the head City of this Kingdom, containing Bithynia, both the Phrygias, both the Mysias, Lydia, Æolas, and Ionia.
1223	2	John, sirnamed Ducas, the Husband of Irene, Daughter of Theodore Lascaris, succeeded his Father-in-law in the Empire; to which he added Pontus, most of the Isles of the Ægean, and not a few places of importance in Thrace it self.
1256	3	Theodorus II. the son of Ducas.
1259	4	John II. the son of Theodore the second, an Infant of about six years old, supplanted first, and after cruelly deposed and deprived of sight.
1259	5	Michael Palæologus, descended from the Imperial family of the Comneni, first took upon him as Protector of the Infant-Emperour, and afterwards as his associate in the Empire: in which confirmed by many fortunate successes, as well against the Latines, as some Greek Usurpers in Thessaly and Peloponnesus, especially the taking of Constantinople; he deprived the young Emperour of his sight, made himself sole Emperour, and left it unto his posterity, who held it with a great deal of trouble and continual disquiets, till the year 1452. when conquered by Mahomet the Great, as before was said. But this recovery of Constantinople was the loss of Nice, taken not long after the removal of the Imperial seat, by Sultan Ottoman, Anno 1299. who presently thereupon took on himself the style of King, from which before he had abstained.

As for the fortunes of Bithynia it self, I look upon the Bithynians as a Thracian people, whom both Strabo and Herodotus speak of, as the founders of the name and Nation. Of such a King of theirs as Bithynius I find some mention in my Authors; and possibly it might be he who had the leading of the Thyni, or Bithyni in this expedition, that being the name rather of this Nation, than his proper Family. But for the line of Kings which held out till the flourishing of the Roman greatness, they began to reign here some few generations, before the time of Philip, and Alexander, the Macedonians: by which last, having other imployment, and lying out of the road towards Persia, they were little troubled. Calantus, one of Alexanders Captains, made an expedition into their Country, and was vanquished by them: and afterwards they had to do with one of the Lieutenants of Antigonus, (one of Alexanders greatest Princes) who though he humbled them for the present, yet got he neither title nor possession by it. And thus they held it out till the time of Prusias, so shuffling with the Macedonian and Syrian Kings, that betwixt both they still preserved their own estates. This Prusias, when the Romans became so considerable, as that no danger need be feared from Greece, or Syria, pieced himself with them; and having aided them in their wars against Philip, and Antiochus both, and most unworthily promised to deliver Annibal (who had fled to him for succour) unto their Embassadours, made all sure to this side. His son and successour Nicomedes, being outed of his Kingdom by Mithridates King of Pontus, and restored again unto it by the power of the Romans, held it as their Feudatary, as did Nicomedes his next Successor, sirnamed Philometor: who dying without issue in the time of Augustus, gave his whole Kingdom to the Romans. By them, with the addition of that part of Pontus which lay next unto it, it was made a Province of their Empire, by the name of Pontus and Bithynia, continuing so till the division of that Empire into the Eastern and Western; when falling to the share of the Constantinopolitans, and with them to the power of the Turkish Tyrants, who do still possess it.

2 PONTUS.

PONTUS is bounded on the East, with Colchis, and Armenia; on the West, with Bithynia, and the River Sangarius; on the North, with the Euxine Sea; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, Paphlagonia, Galatia, and Cappadocia. So that it taketh up the whole length of Anatolia, or Asia Minor, from Bithynia to the River Euphrates, which parts it from Armenia Major, but not of answerable breadth; and gives name to the Sea adjoyning, à Ponto regione illi adjacente ita appellari, as Ortelius hath it, called from hence Pontus by the Latines, the adjunct of Euxinus coming on another occasion, which we have spoken of before. A Country of a large extent, and therefore divided by the Romans (when Masters of it) into these four parts, viz. Metapontus, or Pontus specially so called, 2 Pontus Galaticus, 3 Polemoniacus, and 4 Pontus Cappadocius.

1 PONTUS, especially so called, or Metapontus, bordering on Bithynia, and bounded on the East with the River Parthenius, which divided it from Paphlagonia, had for the chief Cities thereof, 1 Claudiopolis, so called in honour of Claudius, the Roman Emperour; as 2 Flaviopolis, in honour of Flavius Vespacianus; and 3 Juliopolis, in honour of the Julian Family; all midland Towns. 4 Diospolis, on the Euxine Sea, so called from a Temple consecrated to Jupiter, of great resort. 5 Heraclea, a Colony of the Phocians, called for distinction sake (there being many of that name) Heraclea Ponti: memorable of late times for being the seat or residence of a branch of the Imperial family of the Comneni; when at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, David and Alexius Comneni fled into these parts: the first fixing here his Royal residence, commanded over this part of Pontus, and Paphlagonia; the other possessing himself of Cappadocia and Galatia, made Trabezond his Regal or Imperial City. But these two Empires, though of the same date, were of different destinies: that of Heraclea and Pontus, being partly conquered by the Greek Emperours residing at Nice, and partly seized on by the Turks in the beginning and first fortunes of the Ottoman family; the other keeping up the Majesty and State of an Empire, till the year 1461. when subdued by Mahomet the Great. 6 Phyllium, at the mouth or influx of the River Phyllis, upon which it is seated. 7 Amastris, the farthest Town of this part towards the East, on the Sea-side also, once of great strength; but taken by Lucullus, together with Heraclea, Synope, Amisus, and other Towns, in the war against Mithridates, the great King of Pontus.

2 East-

2 Eaſtward of Pontus, ſpecially ſo called; or Meta-pontus, as Juſtin the Hiſtorian calls it, lyeth PONTUS GALATICUS, ſo named, becauſe added to Galatia in the time of the Romans. The chief Cities whereof were 1 Synope, pleaſantly ſeated on a long point or Promontory, ſhooting into the main, remarkable in ancient ſtory for the birth and ſepulture of Mithridates, before mentioned; and in the later times for being the chief ſeat of the Iſſendiars, a noble family of the Turks, who had taken it with the reſt of this Tract from the Comneni, and held it till the ſame year in which the Empire of Trabezond was ſubdued by Mahomet. Firſt built by the Mileſians, and continuing in a free eſtate, till taken by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus, and made the Metropolis of that Kingdom. 2 Caſtamona, the head City of the Principality of the Iſſendiars, before mentioned; preferred by them for ſtrength and conveniency of ſituation, before Heraclea, or Synope. 3 Themiſcyra, now called Favagoria, ſeated on a ſpacious plain near unto the Sea, and anciently giving name to the Province adjoyning. 4. Amaſia, the birth-place of Strabo the Geographer, remarkable in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories for the Martyrdom of St. Theodorus, and of late times for being the reſidence of the eldeſt Sons of the Grand Signior, ſent hither as ſoon as circumciſed, never returning back again till the death of their Father. Accompted now amongſt the Cities of Cappadocia, and the chief of that Province: a midland town, as alſo is 5 Cabira, called afterward Dioſpolis, memorable for the great defeat which Lucullus gave there unto Mithridates, more for the trick which Mithridates there put upon Lucullus. For being well acquainted with the covetouſneſs of the Romans, he ſaw no better way to ſave himſelf and the reſt of his forces after the defeat, than to ſcatter his treaſures in the way which he was to take; that by that means his enemies might ſlacken the purſuit to collect the ſpoils, and he preſerve himſel to another day; and ſo accordinly it proved. 6 Comana, to difference it from another of that name, called Comana Pontica; to which other, being of Cappadocia, or Armenia Minor, Mithridates came in ſafety by the trick aforeſaid, and thence eſcaped unto Tigranes the Armenian King, with 2000 horſe.

3 Eaſtward of Pontus Galaticus lies POLEMONIACUS, ſo called by the Romans either from Polemonium a chief town of this tract, or from Polemo the laſt King hereof; after whoſe death this Kingdom came unto the Romans. Places of moſt importance in it. 1 Polemonium on the Sea-ſide, ſpoken of before. 2 Hermanaſſa, a Sea-town alſo. More in the land, 3 Neo-Ceſarea (now Nixaria) the Metropolis of Polemoniacus, when made a Province of it ſelf. 4 Zela, enlarged by Pompey, and called Megalopolis; by Conſtantine laid unto the Province of Helenopontus. 5 Sebaſtia, ſo called in honour of Auguſtus, whom the Greeks called Sebaſtos, a place of great ſtrength, and one of the firſt Towns in the Leſſer Aſia, which held out againſt Tamerlane: in revenge whereof, when he had took it, he cauſed 12000 men, women, and children, to be moſt cruelly buried alive in ſome hollow pits, which he had digged for that purpoſe. Nigh to this City is Mount Stella, where Pompey gave Mithridates his fatal overthrow: where alſo Tamerlane with an Army of 800000 of his Tartars, encountred with Bajazet the Turk, coming to the relief of Sebaſtia, with an Army of 500000 fighting men. The iſſue of which fight was this, that Bajazet having loſt 200000 of his ſouldiers, was himſelf taken priſoner, and carried by the inſolent Conquerour in an iron cage, againſt the bars whereof he beat out his brains. 6 Barbiniſſa. 7 Megaloſſus. 8 Gezalvia, &c. not much obſervable in ſtory.

In this part of Pontus is the riſe and fall of the River Thermodon, on the banks whereof the Amazons, a ſort of warlick women, are ſaid to dwell; ſo called either quaſi ἀμάζας, becauſe they uſed to cut off their right papps, that they might not be an impediment to their ſhooting; or from α and μάζα, fine pane, becauſe they uſed not to eat bread; or from ἅμα ζῆν, becauſe the uſed to live together. They were originally of Scythia, and accompanied their husbands to theſe parts, about the time of the Scythians firſt irruptions into Aſia, in the time of Seſoſtris King of Ægypt. The leaders of this people into Cappadocia were Plinoe and Scolpythus, two young men of a great houſe, whom a contrary faction had baniſhed. They held a great hand over the Themiſcyrii, who inhabited this Region, and the Nations round about them. At laſt they were by treachery all murdered: But their wives now doubly vexed, both with exile and widowhood, and extremity of grief and fear producing its uſual effect, deſperateneſs, they ſet upon the Conquerours under the conduct of Lampedo and Marpeſia; and not only overthrew them, but alſo infinitely inlarged their Dominions, and for ſome time continued in great reputation: the names of whom, or of ſo many of them at leaſt as occur in ſtory, we ſhall here ſubjoyn.

The Amazon Queens.

1 Lampedo, Marpeſia, } Firſt Queens of the Amazons in theſe parts.
2 Ortara.
3 Antiopa, whoſe ſiſters Hippolite and Menalippe, challenged Hercules and Theſeus to ſingle combate, and were at laſt hardly vanquiſhed, to their eternal credits.
4 Penthefilea, who came with a troop of brave Viragos, to the aid of Priamus King of Troy: ſhe invented the Battel-Axe, and was at laſt ſlain by Pyrrhus, ſon to Achilles. Long after her death reigned Thaleſtris, who came to Alexander, being in Hyrcania, and plainly told him that ſhe came to be his bedfellow; which done, ſhe returned: and at laſt by little and little this femal Nation was extinct. They uſed in matters of copulation to go to their neighbouring men thrice in a year; if they brought forth Males, they ſent them to their fathers; if females, they kept them, and trained them up in all diſcipline of war and courage. Of theſe more elſewhere.

4 The moſt Eaſtern part of Pontus, called CAPPADOCIUS, for that it bordered on that Province, and for a time was added to it by the Romans; extended from Polemoniacus to Colchis, and the River Euphrates, the utmoſt boundaries of this Country. Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1 Pharnaeia, built by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus. 2 Ceraſus, by Conſtantine laid unto the Province of Polemoniacus, from whence Cherries were brought firſt to Rome, An V. C. 680. called therefore Ceraſa by the Latines; brought firſt into Italy by Lucullus, at the end of his war with Mithridates, no leſs deſerving for that ſervice to be made a God (as wittily Tertulian ſcoffs it) than Bacchus was for his tranſplanting of the Vine from the Eaſtern Countries. 3 Iſcopolis, on the Euxine Sea, as the others are. And ſo is alſo, 4 Trapezus, now Trabezond, the Imperial City of the Comneni here reigning over Cappadocia, Galatia, and theſe parts of Pontus. An Empire founded firſt by Alexius Comnenus (Nephew of the great Tyrant Andronicus Comnenus by his ſon Emanuel) who at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians, fled into theſe parts, which willingly ſubmitted unto his command, Anno 1200. Here his poſterity flouriſhed in great proſperity, preſerving the Majeſty of the Empire in a better meaſure, than the Conſtantinopolitans themſelves, till the time of David the laſt Emperour; in whoſe reign the City of Trabezond, and therewith all the whole Dominion belonging to it, was taken by Mahomet the Great; the the poor Emperour led prisoner unto Greece, and there cruelly murdered. A famous Empory, and specially for the trade of fish, caught by the people on the shores of the Euxine Sea; here salted, and from hence transported in great quantities to Constantinople, Caffa, and other places. And for the better help herein, it is said that there is a Mountain not far from this City, affording a black stone, which being beaten in a Mortar serves instead of salt, wherewith they season the fish which they send abroad. A City honoured heretofore with the residence of the Lord Deputies, or Lieutenants of the Grecian Emperour, for defence of the out-parts of the Euxine against the Persians; and now the Station of such Gallies as are maintained by the Grand Seigneur, to scoure the coasts of the Black sea, and secure their trade. More in the land stand 5 Zephiriam. 6 Aza. 7 Cocalia. 8 Cordyle, and many others named in Ptolomy, but not else observable.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were called LEUCOSTRI, or White Syrians, governed by a race of Kings descended from the Royal house of Achemenes King of Persia. The first of them called Mithridates, one of the seven Competitors for the Persian Kingdom, on the death of Cambyses. But that honour falling on Darius (of which more hereafter) he seated himself in these remote parts of Asia Minor; the Ancestor of many great and puissant Princes, but none more memorable than one of his own name, Regum Orientis post Alexandrum Magnum Maximus, the most potent King of all the East since the time of Alexander the Great, as my Author hath it. A Prince of great abilities both in war and counsel, and one who longer held it out against the Romans, than Pyrrhus, Annibal, and the great Kings of Macedon, and Syria, had done together. This was that famous Mithridates, who being once a friend and confederate of the Romans, took their part against Aristonicus; who would not consent to the admission of the Romans unto Pergamus, according to the will of Attalus. Afterwards, conceiving an ambitious hope to obtain the Monarchy of Asia, in one night he plotted and effected the death of all the Roman Citizens dispersed in Anatolia, being in number 150000: in like manner, as in after times the English, taught perhaps by this example, murdered all the Danes then resident in England; and the Sicilians massacred all the Freuch, inhabiting Sicilia, as we have formerly declared. He dispossessed Nicomedes, son to Prusias, King of Bithynia; Ariobarzanes, King of Cappadocia; and Philumones, King of Paphlagonia, of their estates; because they persisted faithful to his enemies of Rome. He excited the Grecians to rebel, possessed himself of Athens, and divers places of importance in Greece, Thrace, and Asia; and allured all the Isles, except Rhodes, from their obedience to the Romans. And finally, having disturbed their victories, and much shaken their estate, for the space of 40 years, he was with much ado vanquished by the valour and felicity of L. Sylla, Lucullus, and Pompey the Great; three of the greatest Souldiers that ever the Roman Empire knew. Yet did not the Roman puissance so much pluck down his proud heart, as the rebellion of his son Pharnaces, against him; which he no sooner heard, but he would have poysoned himself: but having formerly so used his body to a kind of poyson allayed, (which from his inventing of it, we now call Mithridate) that the venome could not work upon him, he slew himself. He is said to have been an excellent Scholar, and to have spoken perfectly the Languages of 22 Nations; the Languages of so many Nations which were subject to him. But neither his learning nor his courage could preserve him from those common miseries, which ordinarily attend a falling greatness. And so ended this long and tedious war, exceeding troublesome to the Romans, but withal very beneficial. For under colour of having given aid to Mithridates, they took in Crete, Galatia, Colchis, Iberia, and both Armenia's: Insomuch as it is truly said by L. Flor. Totum penè Orientem & Septentrionem involvit, that in his ruins he involved both the East, and North. But to proceed; after his death the Kingdom continued unto his posterity, but Tributaries to the Romans, till the time of Nero: when Polemo the last King hereof dying without issue, it was cantoned and divided into many parts, and laid unto the Provinces of Bithynia, Galatia, and Cappadocia; only that part of it which was called Polemoniacus, retaining the dignity of a Province, distinct and separate. And so it remained till the reign of Constantine the great, who changing the names, lessening the bounds, and increasing the number of the Provinces, left only the Province of Pontus and Bithynia in the state he found it. And for the rest, he cast it into two new Provinces, that towards the East, retaining the name, but not the bounds of the old Polemoniacus, wherein were the Cities of Trapezus, Neo-Cæsarea, Cerasus, Comana Pontica, Palæmonium, and Petræorum Civitas, called afterwards Justiniana; of which Neo-Cæsarea, was the Metropolis. That towards the East, separated from the Province of Pontus and Bithynia, by the River Parthenius, he caused to be called Helenopontus, by the name of Helena his Mother: and thereunto assigned the Cities of Amasia the Metropolis of it, Ibora, Euchaita, Zela, Andrapus, Ægeum, Climachus, Sinope, Amisus, and Leontopolis. But this division held not long, both being united into one, and called Helenopontus, by Justinian; continuing after that a member of the Roman Empire, till the coming of David and Alexius Comneni from Constantinople; whereof the one reigned in Heraclea, and the other in Trabezond, as before is said. But their estates being overthrown, it remains wholly to the Turks, who do now possess it.

The Arms of the Emperours of Trabezond, the greatest Princes of these parts, till the Turks subdued them, were Or, an Eagle volant Gules.

3 PAPHLAGONIA.

PAPHLAGONIA is bounded on the East, with the River Halys, by which parted form Cappadocia; on the West, by the River Parthenius, which parteth it from the Province of Pontus and Bithynia; on the North, with that part of the Kingdom of Pontus which was named Galaticus; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, and Galatia. So called of Paphlago the son of Phineus, estated in it by his Father, who had newly conquered it.

The Country was but small, and of little power, and consequently the Cities were not very many, and of no great note. The principal of such as were, were 1 Gangra, observable for a Council holden there in the Primitive times, Anno 339. commanly called Synodus Gangrensis. 2 Conica, or Coniata, of so convenient a situation, that it was entrenched and fortified by Mithridates, when he was Master of this Country. 3 Pompeiopolis, raised out of the foundation of some lesser town by Pompey the Great, and by him so named. 4 Germanopolis. 5 Xoana. 6 Andrapa, called afterwards Nova Claudiopolis, to difference it from another City of that name in Pontus.

This Province, though but small in circuit, was heretofore the seat of four different Nations, viz. 1 The Tibareni, of whom it is said that they never waged war on any enemy, but they faithfully certified them before-hand, of the time and place of their fight. 2 The Heptacometæ. 3 The Mosynæci, both which were a people so beastly and shameless, that they used to perform the work of generation in publick; not knowing that Multa sunt honesta facta, factu, quæ sunt turpia visu. And 4 The Heneti, to whom the Venetians, as we have already said, do owe their first original. The Kings which ruled in this Country, derived themselves from Philomenes, who assisted Priamus King of Troy in his defence against the Greeks: in memory of whom, this Region for a while was called Philomenia. Applying themselves unto the times, they were alwaies favourable to the strongest, serving the Persian, and submitting to Alexander as he passed that way; and so maintained their estate without much molestation, till the time of Mithridates King of Pontus: who finding them firm unto the Romans, then growing to great power in the Lesser Asia, deprived Philomenes, then King hereof, and took the Kingdom to himself, fortifying the chief Towns and places of it. Restored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he gave it to them at his death. But the Country being very much wasted, and most of the Cities of it destroyed and desolated in the course of that War, it was not thought worthy a particular care, and therefore laid unto Galatia. Not reckoned a distinct Province in the time of St. Peter, who writing to the Jews, dispersed in Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, Asia, and Bithynia, takes no notice of this Paphlagonia; nor was it otherwise esteemed than as a member of Galatia, in the time of Ptolomy. Afterwards it was joyned to Pontus, by the Emperour Constantine; part of it after that, with some parts of Pontus and Bithynia, being made into a new Province by the Emperour Theodosius, and called Honorius, in honour of his son Honorius; whereof Claudiopolis, a City of Pontus, properly so called, was made the Metropolis. But by Justinian the name of Honorius being abolished, and that of Paphlagonia revived again, the whole Country, as before limited, was governed by an Imperial Officer, whom he called Prætor Justinianus: continuing under the command of the Constantinopolitans, till the taking of that City by the Latines. After which made a Member of the Empire of Trabezond, till the conquest of it by the Turks, by whom called Rom.

4 GALATIA.

GALATIA is bounded on the East, with Cappadocia; on the West, with the River Sangarius, and some part of Pontus specially so called, or Metapontus; on the North, with Paphlagonia, on the South, with Lycaonia. So called from the Galls, who having ranged over Greece, passed into Asia, and brought a great part of it under their command: but being broken by Attalus King of Pergamus, and drove out of Mysia and the lesser Phrygia, were at last confined to this Country. It was also called Gallo-Græcia, from that mixture of Galls and Grecians, who uniting into one body when they came for Asia, were commonly called Gallo-Græci. By Suidas, Græco-Galli, and the Country sutably Græco-Gallia. Which mixture of Grecians notwithstanding, the Galls (being both the greater and prevailing Party) not only preserved their own Language, but in short time made it the common Language of the whole Country. And it continued so till S. Hieroms days, who telleth us in the Preface to his Commentaries on St. Pauls Epistle to this People, that it was Similima Treverensium, a language like to that of the Treveri, or people of Triers. A sure and certain Argument of their first Original.

The Country very plentiful of all manner of fruits, even unto voluptuousnes; and providently provided of the stone called the Amethyst, which is said to preserve from drunkenness the man that weareth it. The name doth signifie as much, derived from [a] privativum, and μέθυστος, ebrius, which cometh from μέθυ, signifying wine.

The people had a custome in their publick funerals, to cast letters fairly written, into that last and fatal fire, wherein the dead body was to be burned; supposing that their friends should read them in the other world. Much given to Sacrifices, in the number and frequency whereof they excelled all Nations: insomuch that Athæneus telleth us of one Ariamnes, a rich Galatian, that he feasted the whole Nation for a year together with the Sacrifices of Bulls, Sheep, Swine, and other Provisions, boyled in great Caldrons made for that purpose, and distributed amongst them in Tents and Booths erected for that entertainment. A brave flash of vain-glorious hospitality.

Rivers of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with their neighbouring Nations, as Halys, Sangarius, and some others. The Towns of most consideration in it were, 1 Ancyra, on the banks of the River Sangarius, the chief City of the Tectosages, a Gallick Nation, and the Metropolis of the whole Country; memorable in Church-story for a Synod here held in the Primitive times, Anno 399. called Synodus Ancyrana, but of most note at the present for the making of Chamlets: now called Angauri. 2 Olenus. 3 Agrinama, Cities of the same people also. 4 Tavium, or Tanium, (for I find both names) the chief City of the Trocmi, or Trogmi, where was a brazen Statue of Jupiter, whose Temple there was a priviledged Sanctuary. 5 Androsia. 6 Phabarena, Cities of that Nation also. 7 Thermæ, a Roman Colony, so called of the hot Baths there; the chief City of the Tolibosti, as Ptolomy, or Tolistobogi, as Strabo nameth them. 8 Talachbachora, belonging also to that people.

Besides the Nations above-named, here dwelt also the Byceni and Proseliminitæ; who had also their peculiar Cities, mentioned by name in Ptolomy, but of little or no observation in the course of story. Of all which Nations, only the Tectosages, were of Gallick Original; who with others of their Country-men under the conduct of Belgius and Brennus, having ransacked Pannonea and Illyricum, fell at last into Macedon; where having tyrannized a while, and laid waste the Country, they were at last vanquished and expulsed by Antigonus Gonatas. After this overthrow, under the conduct of Lammorius, and Lutorius, they ferried over the Hellespont, and subdued almost all Asia Minor on this side the Taurus; employed there by those petty Kings and States against one another: their reputation grown so great, that no Prince thought himself secure without their alliance, or able to make war without their assistance. The very Switzers of that age; as mercenary, but more faithful unto those that hired them. But being over-rigorous in compelling their neighbouring Princes to become their Tributaries, and too severe in the exacting of their Tributes, they inforced Attalus King of Pergamus, by whose favour they had settled about the Hellespont, to become their enemy. Vanquished by him, they were constrained to contain themselves within the bounds of this Province, which from them in the following times was called Galatia, and Gallo-Græcia. Here for a while they kept their ancient courage and estimation, molesting many times their neighbours, and sometimes setting themselves to hire in the wars of others: but in the end they lost both courage and esteem, and were Galls only in name, retaining little in them of their Ancestors valour. For as most plants and trees lose much of their vertue, being transplanted into another soil: so these men lost their native courage, strength, and hardines, being weakened by the Asian pleasures and delicates. And as Tully saith, for a man to be good in other places, is no mastery; but in Asia to lead a temperate life, is indeed praise-worthy: so might one have said to the Galls, that to be couragious and patient of travel amongst the mountains, tains, was no whit to be admired; but to have continued so amidst the delights of Asia, had been indeed meritorious in them. But these men were so far from assailing the Romans in the Capitol, that they lost their own Country to Manlius, a Roman General. A war which Manlius undertook for no other cause, but that they had been aiding to Antiochus against the Romans; nor was there any memorable act performed herein: but that of Chiomena the Kings Wife, who being ravished by one of the Roman Captains, took her advantage whilst he buried himself in telling the money agreed on for her ransom, to cut off his head, which she presented to her husband. But Manlius got little honour by his success, not being welcomed with a triumph, at his coming home, according to the Roman custom; because he undertook the war of his own accord, without Commission from the Senate. And yet the Senate was content to enjoy the fruits of it, keeping the Galatians as their Subjects, and the Kings their Feudataries. This hapned An. V. C. 564. After which time I find Deiotarus, by consent of the Romans to reign here as King: who siding with Pompey in his war against Cæsar, incurred the anger of the Victor; and had died for it, had not Tully pleaded his cause, and obtained his pardon. But he being dead, his Country in the time of Augustus was made a Province of the Empire; Lollius Paulinus being the first President or Governour of it: enlarged afterwards with the addition of Paphlagonia, and some part of Pontus, from whence called Galaticus. Reduced to its first bounds by the Emperour Constantine, and divided into two Provinces by Theodosius, the one called Galatia Prima, the other Salutaris from its medicinal waters. Of both which Ancyra remained the Metropolis. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was partly seized on by the Turks; not totally come into their hands, till the subverting of the Empire of Trabezond, upon which it depended. By the Turks at this day called Chianger.

5 CAPPADOCIA.

CAPPADOCIA is bounded on the East, with Armenia Major, and some part of Armenia Minor; on the West, with Galatia; on the North, with Pontus Polemoniacus, and Cappadocius; and on the South, with Lycaonia, and the rest of Armenia Minor. So called of the River, as Pliny telleth us, which runneth betwixt it, and Galatia.

The Country very plentiful of wine, and most kind of fruits, rich in mines of Silver, Brass, Iron, and Allom; affording also besides a mean sort of Alabaster, good store of Crystal, Jasper, and the Onyx stone: But the greatest wealth hereof is their breed of horses, infinite almost in numbers, and fit for any service they can be put to. And this is universal, in all parts of the Country, but not the other; there being some parts of it mountainous and very barren, especially about the spurs and branches of the Antitaurus, which is a chain of hills thrusting out of the Taurus, and bending themselves unto the North, upon the edges of this Country, and the two Armenias. Here is also in this Country the mountain Argæus, said to be of so great an height, that from one of the summits or tops thereof, a man of perspicuous eyes may discern the Euxine on the one hand, and the Mediterranean on the other.

The People of this Country in the time of the Romans were of ill report, so vicious and lewd of life, so monstrously addicted to all kind of wickedness; that besides the share they had in the old Greek Proverb, of Τεὰ Καππαδοκία, they had some proverbs to themselves, Καππαδόκαι and Καππαδόκιον τέρας, that is to say, a man of Cappadocia, and a Cappadocian Monster, being used proverbially, to signifie a man most extremely wicked. The words so used by Gregory Nazianzen, speaking of Gregory or George, the Arian Patriarch of Alexandria, if either Suidas or Erasmus, two right learned Criticks, understand him rightly. And they made good the Proverb in the times of the Gospel, Gregory that bloudy butcher of Alexandria, Auxentius, Asterius, Eustathius, principal Patrons of the Arians, and that Arch-Heretick Eunomius, being all of this Country. Yet such is the influence of Christianity, where once entertained, that this lewd disposition of the Cappadocians was so corrected and restrained by it, that this Country afforded as many godly Prelates, and couragious Martyrs, as any other whatsoever. Highly commended for it by Nazianzen before remembred, who with Gregory Nyssen, and St. Basil, all learned and religious Bishops, were all Cappadocians. And amongst many Martyrs of great faith and constancy, St. George, a noble Cappadocian, Colonel or Tribune of souldiers under Diocletian, more celebrated in the Churches both East and West, than any other Saint in all the Calendar, the blessed Apostles and Evangelists excepted only, and for that reason made Patron of the Order of the Garter by King Edward the third. Finally, it is reported of these Cappadocians, that they were not only morally wicked, but naturally venemous also; insomuch that if a Serpent did bite any of them, the mans bloud was a poison to the Snake, and killed him.

Principal Rivers of this Country, were 1 Halys, spoken of before, which had here its Fountain and Original; the end of Crœsus Empire both in site and fate, the utmost bound of his dominions on that side: which purposing to pass over in his way to Media, which he intended to invade, he was encountred with, and vanquished by Cyrus the great King of Persia. 2 Iris, which ariseth in this Country also, and palling thorough it, and a part of Pontus, discharnelleth it self, as the other doth, in the Euxine Sea.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Mazaca, beautified and enlarged by the Emperour Tiberius, after the uniting of this Province to the Roman Empire; and in honour of Augustus Cæsar, by him called Cæsarea, the Metropolis of Cappadocia, and the Episcopal See of renounced St. Basil. 2 Nyssa, the See of Gregory, sirnamed Nyssenus, the brother of Basil. 3 Nazianzum, the Episcopal See of another Gregory, sirnamed Nazianzenus; three men, which as for the piety of their conversation they were not equalled in those times: so for their admirable abilities in all kind of learning, nothing more inferiour to the most eminent of the ancient Grecians. 4 Tyana, the Metropolis of Cappadocia secunda, after the subdivision of it by the Emperour Valens. 5 Archelais in the Præfecture of Gardnacreta, so called from Archelaus a Cappadocian King, the founder or repairer of it. 6 Comana, for distinctions sake called Comana Cappadocia, to difference it from another of that name in Pontus; by Ptolomy placed, I know not why, in Armenia Minor, as is also Nyssa before mentioned. Memorable in old times for a Temple consecrated to Bellona, whose Priests and other inferiour Officers of both Sexes, amounted in the time of Strabo to 6000 and upward; for maintenance of whom the Priests received the Revenue of the Region next adjoyning to it; in honour next unto the King, and commonly of the same kindred also. 7 Dio Cæsarea, called formerly Cabira, as we find in Strabo. 8 Faustinopolis, so called in honour of Faustina, wife of the Emperour Antonius. 9 Andraca. 10 Phiara. 11 Salambria. 12 Campæ, spoken of by Ptolomy, with many others as obscure, and not worth the naming. Of more note, though not found in the ancient Writers, is 13 Erzirum, situate on the very confines of the Greater Armenia for that cauſe made the Rendezvouz, or place of meeting for the Turkiſh Souldiers when there is any expedition in hand againſt the Perſian; at which place alſo after the ending of the war for the preſent year, they are disbanded and ſent home to their ſeveral quarters. And 14 Pterium, not named in Ptolomy; but memorable for the great battel fought in ſight thereof, between Cræſus King of Lydia, and Cyrus of Perſia; in which Cræſus having loſt the field, and with it his Kingdom, found the Oracle true (though not in the ſenſe which he expected) that Cræſus paſſing over the River Halys, ſhould overthrow a great eſtate, as indeed he did; but it was his own, and not the Perſians.

That the Cappadocians are derived from Togarma, the Son of Gomer, hath been ſo fully proved already in our General Preface, that we ſhall not trouble our ſelves to repeat it here: Nor ſhall we need to ſay more in confuting of their opinion, who would fetch Capthorim out of Egypt from the reſt of his brethren, to plant him in this Country, than hath there been ſaid. Their fortunes in the former times I find little of: ſubjected by the Perſian, with the reſt of Aſia Minor, after the overthrow of Cræſus, who before had given the Law unto it, as to the Phrygians, Paphlagonians, Bithynians, Myſians, and others of the neighbouring Nations. By Cyrus given together with Atoſſa his Siſter, to Pharnaces a noble Perſian, who had ſaved him from the fury of a ravenous Lion running upon him with full mouth, as he was hunting. A noble loyalty, and no leſs royally rewarded. From him deſcended Ariarathes King hereof in the time of Alexander the Great; continuing ſtedfaſt in his duty to the Crown of Perſia, when almoſt all the reſt of the Kings of Aſia yielded to the Enemy. Nor did Alexander call him to account in his march for Perſia. But after his deceaſe, Perdiccas having the command of the Army, ſet upon him, vanquiſhed him, and moſt cruelly crucified him, together with as many of his kindred as could be found. One of his Sons, who fortunately had eſcaped this ſlaughter, ſpying his time, when the Macedonians were at wars amongſt themſelves, recovered his eſtate again, and paſſed it over to his off-ſpring: continuing in his line, without any ſubjection, till the time of that Ariobarzanes, who by Mithridates was deprived of his dominion, as was told before. Reſtored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he became their Homager, holding, as did his Succeſſors, by their curteſie only: Continuing yet in ſtate of Kings, till the death of Archelaus the laſt King hereof; Who having angred Tiberius for not attending on him when he lived at Rhodes, during the life time of Auguſtus, as did others of the tributary States and Princes, was by him then poſſeſſed of the Empire, cited unto Rome under colour of projecting ſomewhat againſt the State. Where the old Prince, even ſpent with Age, the Gout, and ſome other Diſeaſes, had without queſtion been condemned by the ſervile Senate; but that one of the witneſſes depoſed, that he had ſaid, that if ever he went back into Cappadocia, Tiberius ſhould find, quales ſibi nervi eſſent, what a man he was. Which moved ſuch a laughter in the Senate, the old King being neither able to ſit nor ſtand, that he was diſmiſſed; Tiberius thinking that he could not puniſh him more effectually, than to let him live. A favour which the old King conſtrued to the beſt, and in the way of gratitude bequeathed his Kingdom at his death to the Empire of Rome. Being added to the Roman Empire, it was exceedingly inlarged by the addition of the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Pontus: and ſo it ſtood in the time of Ptolomy, who reckoneth Pontus Galaticus, Cappadocius, and Polemoniacus, as parts and Members of this Province. Divided beſides thoſe into theſe eight Præfectures, that is to ſay, Clanianienſis, Sargaranſene, Gardiocreta, Cilicia, Tyanidis, Lycaonia, Antiochiana, and Cataonia. But Pontus, Lycaonia, and Antiochiana (he means Piſidia as I take it) being made Provinces of themſelves, by the Emperour Conſtantine, it returned unto its natural bounds, and made one Province of the Empire, of which Cæſarea, as is ſaid before, was the Metropolitan; and ſo remained, till the Emperour Valens, a great Patron of the Arian faction, of purpoſe to deſpight St. Baſil, who oppoſed that Hereſie, created another Province out of it, called Cappadocia ſecunda, whereof the Metropolis was Tyana. After this it continued part of the Eaſtern Empire, till the erecting of the new Empire of Trabezond; together with which it fell unto the hands of the Turks, by whom the whole Province, with the addition of Pontus, is now called Amaſia, after the name of that City, which the Beglerbeg of Anatolia honoureth with his reſidence, and is ſaid to yield yearly to the Grand Seigneur 60000 Ducats.

6. ARMENIA MINOR.

ARMENIA MINOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Major; on the South, with Mount Taurus, which ſeparates it from Cilicia; on the Weſt, and North, with a long chain of Hills, called Mons Scordiſcus, by ſome called Mons Amanus, by others Anti-Taurus, according to the change of places; by which divided from Cappadocia. Of the reaſon of the name hereafter.

The Country of the ſame nature with Cappadocia, before deſcribed; in ſome parts overgrown with Mountains, by which, and by the River Euphrates ſo incloſed and fenced, that it is difficult of entrance: in others pleaſant and delightful, well watered with ſweet ſtreams, and ſome fair Rivers iſſuing out of the Mountains, the principal whereof is Melas, ſo called from the blackneſs of the water thereof, which falleth into the Euphrates.

Divided in the time of the Romans into theſe four Regions, that is to ſay, Laviana, Aravena, Melitene, lying on the Euphrates, Mariana more within the land towards Cappadocia; each of which had their ſeveral Cities, whoſe names are to be found in Ptolomy. The principal 1 Melitene, the chief City of the Region ſo called, and the Metropolis of the leſſer Armenia, called afterwards Malaxia, and now Suur; the Territory thereof abounding in Oyl and Wine, not inferiour to the beſt of Greece. The City ſaid by Onuphrius to be a Colony of the Romans, much ſpoken of by Euſebius, and other Writers of Eccleſiaſtical ſtory, for the piety of the Chriſtians there inhabiting in the fiery times of Perſecution. 2 Nicopolis, and 3 Oromandus in the Mountain Countries; the former built by Pompey, in memory of his victory there obtained againſt the forces of Tigranes, King of Syria, and both Armenias. 4 Garnace, a well-fortified Town, mentioned by Tacitus in the twelfth book of his Annals, and by him called Gorneas. 5 Cucuſun, and 6 Arabyſſus, memorable for the exile of St. Chryſoſtome, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, confined unto theſe places by the power and malice of the Empreſs Eudoxia, by whom hated for his Orthodoxie in points of faith; who dying afterwards at Comana of Cappadocia, was there interred.

This Country was once part of Cappadocia, till the Armenians by their incurſions and Colonies poſſeſſed themſelves of it, and gave unto it the name of Armenia Minor: continuing part of their eſtate till the war of Mithridates againſt the Romans; who being diſcomfited by Lucullus, fled with two thouſand Horſe to the Court of Tigranes the Armenian, who had married his daughter. By whom at firſt neglected, and not ſuffered to come into his his presence; but afterwards on the apprehension of the common danger, more esteemed and set by: insomuch that his royal entertainment there, and the refusal of Tigranes to yield him up when required by the Romans, occasioned Lucullus to bring his forces into these parts, subduing all before him to the banks of Euphrates. His Victories being seconded by Pompey, and confirmed by Augustus, this Country was made a Province of the Roman Empire: the greater Armenia, lying on the other side of that River, though conquered also in that war, not being taken into the accompt of the Roman Provinces, till the time of Trajan Augustus, thinking it an high point of wisdom (as no doubt it was) not to extend the Empire beyond those banks. After this it continued Roman, till the declining times of the Eastern Empire; when wasted by the Persians, and subdued by the Turks; by whom called Genech, or as some say Pegia.

And so much of the Provinces of the Pontick Diocese, lying within Anatolia, or Asia Minor; converted to the Christian faith by the two great Apostles of the Jews and Gentiles, as appeareth by S. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, and St. Peter's to the Strangers dispersed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia.

COme we now to the ASIAN Diocese, and first to that part thereof which Ptolomy and others (for the reasons spoken of before) call Asia Propria. Anciently the most rich and flowrishing part of all this Peninsula; and so affirmed to be by Tully, who telleth us that the tributes which the Romans had from other places, hardly sufficed to defray the publick charges for defence thereof, Asia verò tam opima est & fertilis, ut & ubertate agrorum, & varietate fructuum, & magnitudine pastionis, & multitudine earum rerum quæ exportentur, facilè omnibus terris antecellat. But as for Asia (saith he) it is so fertile and so rich, that for the fruitfulness of the fields, variety of fruits, largeness of pasture-grounds, and quantity of commodities which were brought from thence, it very easily excelled all other Countries. The fortunes of the several Provinces we shall see anon. Brought under the command of the Persians, they continued subject to that Crown, for some generations: but at last taken from them by the Grecians, under the prosperous ensigns of victorious Alexander. After whose decease, the Empire being divided among his Captains, Asia fell to the share of Antigonus, whose son Demetrius seized on the Kingdom of Macedonia, and left Asia to Seleucus Nicanor, King of Syria and the East, being also one of Alexanders heirs. The sixth from this Seleucus, was Antiochus called the Great, who waging war with young Ptolomy Philopater, King of Egypt, committed by his father to the protection of the Romans, and otherwise practising against their estate, provoked the Senate of Rome to send Scipio (surnamed from his Asian victories) Asiaticus, against him; who compelled him to forsake Asia, which the Romans presently took into their possessions. But finding it agreeable to the present estate of their Affairs, (the Kingdom of Macedonia standing in their way) to make further use of Eumenes King of Pergamus, and the people of Rhodes, who had been aiding to them in the former war, they gave unto Eumenes the Provinces of Lycaonia, Phrygia, Mysia, Ionia, Lydia; Lycia and Caria to the Rhodians: knowing full well, that they could easily take them back again, when they saw occasion. More hereof in the story of the Kings of Pergamus, on the decease of Attalus the last King thereof; these Provinces returning fully to the power of the Romans.

It contained only after the accompt of Cicero, the Provinces of Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, Lydia, as he reckoneth them up in his Oration for Flaccus: computing the two Phrygias for one Province only, and comprehending Æolis and Ionia, under that of Lydia. But for our more punctual and particular proceeding in it, we will consider it as divided into 1 Phrygia Minor. 2 Phrygia Major. 3 Mysia. 4 Æolis and Ionia, or Asia more especially so called. 5 Lydia, and 6 Caria.

8. PHRYGIA MINOR.

PHRYGIA MINOR, is bounded on the East, with Mysia, interposing betwixt it and the Greater Phrygia; on the West, with the Hellespont; on the North, with the Propontis; on the South, with the Ægean Sea. Called Phrygia from Phryx, a River in the Greater Phrygia; or as some say, from Phryxus, the son of Athamas King of Thebes; who flying from the treacherous snares of his Mother-in-law, did here seat himself. Minor was added to it to distinguish it from the other Phrygia, which being the bigger of the two had the name of Major. It was also called Phrygia Hellespontiaca, from its situation on that Streight: and Troas, from Troas the chief City of it; by which name it occurreth in the book of the Acts. It was called also Epictetus, but the reason of the name I find not, except it came from the Epicteti, a People dwelling on the East parts of Bithynia, and consequently near this place.

Chief Rivers of it, 1 Scamander, on whose Banks stood the renowned City of Troy, honoured by Hesiod with the Title of Divine Scamander: in which the Virgins of this Country a little before they were to be married, used to bathe themselves, and to say these words, Λάβε τὴν μὴν Σκαμανδρε παρθενίην, that is to say, Take O Scamander my Virginity. Which opportunity Cimon an Athenian taking, clapped a Coronet of Reeds upon his head, like a River-god, and so deflowred Callirrhoe a noble Virgin, then betrothed to another; occasioning thereby the leaving off of this foolish custome. It was also called Xanthus by the Poets, Xanthumque bibissent, as in Virgil, and watered a little Region called Lycia, whence Ovid in his first Epistle useth Lyciam hastam, (Sanguine Tlepolemus Lyciam tepefecerat hastam) to signifie a Trojan Spear. But of this more anon in the greater Lycia. 2 Æsopus, parting this little Region from the Lesser Mysia, the boundary of it on the North, as the Promontory called Lectum, is the furthest point of it towards the South. 3 Simois, now called Simoes, falling into the Hellespont, not far from the Promontory called Rhæteum (memorable for the Statue and Sepulchre of Ajax;) but rising out of Mount Ida, an hill of this Region, on which Paris (being by his Father exposed to the fury of wild Beasts) judged the controversie of the golden Ball in favour of Venus; respecting neither the great riches of Juno, nor the divine wisdom of Pallas; but transported with a sensual delight, fatal in the end to the whole Country.

Cities of most observation in it, 1 Dardanum, or Dardania, the Town and Patrimony of Æneas, 2 Assos mentioned Acts 20. 13. by Pliny called Apollonia; who telleth us that the earth about it is of such a nature, that it will consume a dead body in forty days. 3 Trajanopolis, whose name declareth its founder. 4 Lyrnessus, on the Sea-side, opposite to the Isle of Lesbos, destroyed by Achilles and the Greeks in the very first beginnings of the Trojan war, who brought thence amongst other captives the Lady Briseis, reserved by Achilles to himself for his part of the booty, and after taken from him by Agamemnon, which cauled such a deep displeasure in him, that he would not go into the field, till she were restored.

5 Sigæum

5 Sigæum, the Port-town to Troy, near a noted Promontory of the same name. 6 Troy, situate on the River Scamander, the beauty and glory of the East, called Ilium, and Pergamus for the reason to be shewn anon. A famous Town, from the people whereof, all Nations desire to fetch their original. The beauty of it may be (as some write) yet seen in the ruines, which with a kind of Majesty entertain the beholder: the walls of large circuit, consisting of a black hard stone cut four-square; some remnants of the Turrets which stood on the walls, and the fragments of great Marble Tombs and Monuments of curious workmanship. But certainly these are not the ruines of that Ilium, which was destroyed by the Grecians, but 7 Troas, or New-Troy, built some four miles from the situation of the old by Lysimachus, one of Alexanders Captains; who peopled it from the neighbouring Cities, and called it Alexandria, or Troas Alexandri, in honour of Alexander the Great, who begun the work, but lived not to bring it to any perfection. In following times called Troas only, and by that name mentioned, Acts 20. 6. then the Metropolis of this Province, now a ruine only; but every day more ruinous than other by the Turks, who carry dayly the stones and Pillars of it to Constantinople, to adorn the houses of the Bassas. 7 Scamandria, a strong piece, but of latter foundation, cunningly surprised by Ottoman the first King of the Turks, in the time of a funeral. Now concerning old Ilium, the buildings, glories, and fall of it, take this story with you.

The KINGS of TROY.

A. M.

2487 1 Dardanus, son to Corinthus King of Corinth, having killed his brother Jasius, fled into this Country, where he built this City, calling it Dardania; according to that verse of Virgil, Dardanus Iliacæ primus pater urbis, & autor.

Both of Troy Town, and Trojan race,

2518 2 Erichthonius, of whom little memorable. 75.

2593 3 Tros, the son of Erichthonius, who so much beautified and enlarged the City of Dardania, that from thenceforth it was called Troja, and the people Troes. By supporting the unnatural malice of Saturn against his son Jupiter, he lost his own son Ganymedes: who being taken prisoner by Jupiter, who carried the Eagle for his Ensign, is by the Poets said to have been snatched up to Heaven by an Eagle. 60

2653 4 Ilus, the son of Tros, who built the Regal Palace called Ilium; and did withal so enlarge the City, and added so much Ornament and beauty to it, that it is frequently called Ilium, and the People Iliaci. The many Towers and Turrets of it, were of his erection, which being by the Greeks called Πύργοι, and sometimes Πύργαμα, occasioned the whole City to be called Pergamus. 54.

2707 5 Laomedon, who new built Troy, which afterwards Hercules and the Grecians (justly conceiving displeasure against the treacherous King) twice took and defaced; Laomedon himself being slain the latter time. 36.

2743 6 Priamus, who re-edified Troy; but giving leave to his son Paris to ravish Helena, wife to Menelaus King of Sparta, forced the Greeks to renew their ancient quarrel: who, after a ten years siege, forced the Town, having lost of their own men 860000. and killed 666000 of the Trojans, and their Associates, A. M. 2783. so as that of Ovid was most true,

Jam seges est ubi Troja fuit resecandaque falce
Luxuriat Phrygio sanguine pinguis humus.
Corn fit for sithes now grows where Troy once stood,

Concerning the taking of this Town, two things are to be considered. First, whether the Grecians in these ten years lay continually before it; and it seems they did not: but that rather they did beat up and down, wasting the Country, and robbing the Seas for the first nine years; and in the tenth only laid a formal siege. This is the more probable, because that in the tenth year of the war, Priam is recorded by Homer in the third of his Iliads, to have sat on a high Tower, and to have learned of Helen the names and qualities of the Greek Commanders: which he could not be thought ignorant of, if they had so long together lain in eye-reach. Secondly, by what means the Town was taken: and here we find a difference. For some Historans tell us, that Æneas and Antenor, being either weary of the war, or discontented that it was not managed by their sole advice, or otherwise corrupted by the Grecians, betrayed it to the Enemy: but this Virgil could not brook, as prejudicial to his Æneas, whom he intended to make the pattern of a compleat Prince. He therefore telleth of a Wooden-Horse, wherein divers of the Greek Princes lay hidden, which by Sinon, one of the Grecians, was brought to Troy gates; and that the people desirous of that monument of the Enemies flight, made a breach in their walls, the gate not being high enough to receive it. And that this fiction of Virgil might be grounded on History, it is thought by some, that over the Scæan Gate where the Greeks entred, was the portraicture of a large and stately Horse: and by others, that the walls were battered by a wooden Engine, called an Horse, as the Romans in after ages used a like Engine called a Ram. Neither of which is much improbable: but with me perswade not the integrity of Antenor or Æneas, for whose sakes the fable of the wooden Horse was first invented.

The City being thus destroyed, the Trojans who remained in the Country, when Æneas and Antenor had forsaken it, began to think of some other place for their habitation, which having often shifted, they fixed at last by advice of an Oracle, some four miles from the former, giving it the name of Ilium. A poor and sorry Village when Alexander came thither, who in the Temple of Minerva, (the only one they had, and a mean one too) offered up his own shield, and took down another, which he used after in his fights against the Persians, honouring it with gifts, and promising the people to rebuild and inlarge their City. But what he lived not to make good was performed by Lysimachus, who gave it the name of Alexandria, next called the Alexandrian Troas, at last Troas simply. A free City it continued till the war of Mithridates against the Romans; in the course whereof Fimbria a Roman Quæstor having seditiously slain the Consul Valerius Flaccus in Bithynia, and made himself Master of the Army, being refused entrance here as a Thief and a Rebel, besieged the City, and in the space of eleven daies took it. And when he boasted that he had done as much in eleven days as Agamemnon and the Greeks could do in as many years, one of the Ilians tartly answered, That they wanted an Hector to defend them. Afterwards Julius Cæsar, emulous of Alexanders attempts, and descended from Julius of Trojan race, restored them to their liberty, and inlarged their Territories: a Colony, and an University of the Romans of no mean esteem. But time and war, and the barbarity of the Turks, have brought it unto rubbish, as before was said.

In the distributing of the Provinces of the Roman Empire,

Empire, this little Region, with that of Myſia Helleſpontiaca adjoyning to it, made up the Province called by the name of Helleſpontus, ſubject with Æolis, Ionia, and the Aſian Iſles, to the exempt Juriſdiction of the Proconſul of Aſia. Following the fortunes of Conſtantinople till the taking of that City by the Latines, it became then ſubject to the Greek Emperours reſiding at Nice; conquered not long after by the Turks of the Selzucian family. In the diviſion of whoſe Empire on the death of the ſecond Aladine, the whole Province of Helleſpont, with part of the greater Myſia and Æolis, adjoyning to them, and ſome part of Lydea, were ſeized upon by Caraſus, a man of great power amongſt the Turks, who here erected a ſmall Kingdom, called from him Caraſia, or Caraſi-illi; long ſince ſwallowed up by the Ottoman Race, in the time of Orchanes, ſon of Ottaman, and the ſecond King of that houſe.

8. PHRYGIA MAJOR.

PHRYGIA MAJOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with Galatia; on the Weſt, with Myſia, interpoſed betwixt it and the Leſſer Phrygia; on the North, with Metapontus, or Pontus ſpecially ſo called; on the South, with Lydia. Called Phrygia for the reaſons before laid down; the word Major being added for diſtinctions ſake, becauſe the greater of the two.

The People of this Country were anciently more ſuperſtitious than the other Aſians, as appeareth by the rites uſed in the Sacrifices of Cybele, and ſome other Goddeſſes: ſaid to be alſo the Inventors of Augury, and other kinds of Divination. And yet for the moſt part men of after-wits, and all for had I wiſt; whence the Proverb, Serò ſapiunt Phryges, applied to thoſe who wanted forcaſt, and knew better to lament misfortunes than to keep them off; and uſed not to bethink themſelves of what would follow, till it was too late. A people noted for effeminacy and lightneſs of converſation; and for fear they ſhould not of themſelves be wanton enough, their very Muſick was ſo fitted as to diſpoſe them to laſciviouſneſs. Where by the way, I find three ſorts of Muſick ſpoken of amongſt the Ancients: the firſt, that which Ariſtotle calleth ἠθικὴ, becauſe it ſettled and compoſed the affections; and Boetius, the Lydian Muſick, becauſe much uſed by that people, before corrupted by long eaſe and ill example. It conſiſted principally of long notes or Spondees, ſuch as is that ſuppoſed to be which Eliſha called for, 1 Kings 3.15. to invite the ſpirit of propheſie to him; and was played by David before Saul; to drive a way the ill ſpirit from him. And of this ſort was the Church-Muſick of the Primitive times, fitted to calm mens paſſions, and raiſe their devotions, Ut per oblectamenta aurium (as St. Auguſtine hath it) aſſurgat animus ad pietatis affectum, that by the pleaſure of the ears the paſſions might be calmed, and the ſoul inflamed with pious and devout affections. The ſecond ſort is that which Ariſtotle calleth πρακτὴ, or Active, (as the other ἠθικὴ or moral) commending it before the other in the education of youth, becauſe more ſtirring them to action; conſiſting of Dactyles, or one long note, and two ſhort ones, by him and Boetius both called Dorian, as moſt peculiar to that people. The third and laſt by the Philoſopher called ἐνθουσιαστὴν, or raviſhing, becauſe it unhingeth the affections, and ſtirreth men to laſcivious geſtures, and wanton thoughts; conſiſting of ſhort notes or Tribrachies. Boetius terms it Phrygian, as moſt in uſe amongſt this looſe and ungoverned Nation; ſuch as the French Muſick in our age. A ſort of Muſick forbidden to be uſed by Ariſtotle, but upon the Theatre, for contentation of the rude and unpoliſhed people, by reaſon of that influence which it had upon mens behaviours. Mutatâ Muſicâ (ſaith the Orator) mutantur & mores; Curandum itaque ut Muſica quàm graviſſima & ſedatiſſima retineatur, that is to ſay, the change of Muſick maketh an alteration of manners; care therefore is to be taken in the Common-wealth, that the Muſick be compoſed and grave, and ſuch only uſed. But ſee how this fidling humour hath led me out of the way; I return again.

The Country very rich and pleaſant, well watered with the Rivers Sangarius and Marſyas. Of which the former hath its Spring or Fountain in this Country, but his fall in the Euxine; on the banks whereof ſtandeth the City Gordium, and many others of good note. The latter was ſo called from one Marſyas, who ſtriving with Apollo for preheminence in Muſick, was by him flead; which fact (ſay the Poets) was ſo lamented, that from the tears of the mourners grew this River. The chief Towns 1 Gordion, the ſeat of Gordius, who from a Plowman being raiſed and choſen King of this Kingdom, placed the furniture of his Wain and Oxen in the Temple of Apollo, tyed in ſuch a knot, that the Monarchy of the world was promiſed to him that could untie it; which when Alexander had tried and could not undo it, he cut it with his Sword. 2 Midæum, the ſeat of Midas, ſon to this Gordius, who being not a little covetous, intreated of Bacchus, that what ever he touched ſhould be turned into gold; which Petition granted, he was almoſt ſtarved, his very victuals turned into Gold, till he had repealed his wiſh; and afterward for preferring Pan's Pipe before Apollo's Harp, his head was adorned with a comely pair of Aſſes ears. 3 Coloſſe, where dwelt the Coloſſians, to whom St. Paul writ one of his Epiſtles. 4 Peſinus, where the Goddeſs Cybele being worſhipped, was called Dea Peſinuncia. The Romans were once told by an Oracle, that they ſhould be Lords of the world, if they could get this Goddeſs into their poſſeſſion. Hereupon they ſend to the Phrygians to demand it. The Phrygians willing to pleaſe a potent neighbour, eſpecially the Romans, being their Country-men, as deſcended from Æneas and his Trojans, granted their requeſts, and the Goddeſs is ſhipp'd away for Rome. But behold the unluckineſs of fortune: The Ship, Goddeſs and all made a ſtand in Tiber; neither could it be advanced forward by force or Art. It hapned that one of the Veſtal Virgins, named Claudia, being ſuſpected of unchaſtity, reſolved to put her ſelf upon this experiment: and faſtning her girdle to the Ship, prayed to the Goddeſs, that if ſhe were cauſeleſly ſuſpected, the ſhip might be ſuffered to go forward, which was no ſooner heard than granted, Claudia drawing the ſhip up the water to Rome; where I leave the people wondering at the miracle, as well they might. But to return unto the City, it ſtands in the borders of Galatia, and is by ſome made to be the City of Gordius, and the Gordian knot placed in it alſo; but neither rightly. Not far off ſtood the Mountain Dindyme, overlooking the City, in which the Prieſts of Cybele had their uſual reſidence, thence called Dindymene. 5 Apamea, ſituate not far from the banks of Mæander, anciently a moſt flouriſhing Emporie, and the Metropolis of the whole Countty, till Conſtantine divided it into the two Provinces of Salutaris, and Pacatiana: making 6 Symada the Metropolis of the firſt. 7 Hierapolis, and 8 Laodicea, two noted Cities in thoſe times, the principal of the other Province. 9 Juliopolis, and 10 Tiberiopolis, ſo called from the Emperour to whoſe honour dedicated. 11 Dorylæum, &c. Not known unto the ancient Writers, but of more note in modern ſtories, are 1 Sagua, the habitation of Etrogul, Father of Ottoman the firſt King of the Turks. 2 Charà-chiſar; by the Grecians called Melampyrgus; or the Black Tower; 3 Bilexuga, 4 Einegiol; places of consequence and importance, taken by the said Ottoman from the Christians, in the first rise of his fortunes.

As for the Phrygians, they descended (as was shewn before) from Gomer the eldest son of Japhet, and Askenaz, the eldest son of Gomer: of which, Gomer first placed himself in the mountainous Countries of Albania, and afterwards in the more pleasant Plains of the Greater Phrygia, where the City of Cimmeris (the posterity of Gomer being generally called Cimmerians) did preserve his memory. And as for Askenaz, he first took up his dwelling in the Lesser Phryga, and the banks of the Hellespont; where was anciently a City and Territory called Ascania, some Isles adjoyning called Insulæ Ascaniæ, the name of Ascanius also very frequent in Troy it self. An ancient people they were doubtless, esteemed the ancientest of the world by Psamniticus King of Egypt, upon this experiment. Desirous to inform himself to what Nation the priviledge of greatest Antiquity did of right belong, he caused two children to be kept in a fold, where they were suckled by Goats; all mankind being prohibited upon very great penalties to have recourse to them. All the language which the children learned from their speechless nurses, was no more than Bec, which in the Phrygian language signifieth bread; and being of no signification at all in any other which was then known to the Egyptians, gave up the Verdict on their side: But other Nations of the world not yielding to this sentence, by a Writ of Errour, or an Ad melius inquirendum, impannell'd a new Jurie; wherein it was pronounced on the Scythians side Scytharum gens semper antiquissima. Where by the way, Goropius Becanus makes the like use of this experiment, to prove the High Dutch to be the Original or Mother-tongue of the world; because Becker in that language signifieth, as with us, a Baker, or a maker of Bread. In this Country reigned Niobe, who preferring her self before Latina, the mother of Phœbus and Diana, had her children slain before her face by an unseen means, and was her self turned into a stone, as the Poets fable. Here also reigned Tantalus, who being rich, and wanting wisdom to make use of it, is feigned to stand in Hell up to the chin in water; and that too under a tree whose fruit toucheth his lips: yet both the one and the other flie from him, when he offereth at them. Of which thus Ovid,

——— Tibi Tantale nullæ
Deprenduntur aquæ; quæque imminet, effugit arbor.

In English thus,

Thou canst not, Tantalus, those waters taste;
The tree just at thy lips, flies off as fast.

But this race of Kings being worn out by the tyranny of time or war, the Phrygians were made subject to the Kings of Lydia; continuing under their command till the conquest of Lydia by the Persians, with which they fell together to the Crown thereof, not made the stronger by the accession of effeminate Subjects. Gained from them by the Sword of Alexander, they fell unto Antigonus one of his great Captains, and on his overthrow at the battel of Ipsus, to Seleucus the Conquerour, the first King of that race: following the same fortune after that with the rest of Asia, till they came to be possessed by the Romans, and made a Province of that Empire. But Constantine laying to it the Greater Mysia, made two Provinces of it; the one called Salutaris, from some miraculous cures there wrought by the Arch-Angel Michael, as was then generally believed; the other called Pacatiana, from Pacatianus, who in the time of the said Constantine was Præfect for the Prætorium of the East, and divers years before had begun his honours with the Lieutenantship of Britain. In the declining of the Constantinopolitans, it became a prey unto the Turks of the Selzuccian Family; possessed by them till the death of Aladine, the last King of that race: when seized upon, together with the Greater Mysia, and those parts of Lydia which lay next unto it, by Aidin, a great Turkish Prince, and made a peculiar Kingdom, called by his name Aidinia, or Aidinilli; extorted shortly from his heirs by the house of Ottoman.

9. Mysia.

INterposed betwixt the two Phrygias lyeth the Country of MYSIA, bounded on the East, with Phrygia Major; on the West, with Phrygia Minor, and the Ægean Sea; on the North, with parts of Bithynia, Propontis, and the Hellespont; and on the South, with part of Lydia, Æolis, and the Ægean. So called from the Mysians, the Inhabitants of it.

Whether these Mysians were originally a Phrygian Nation, or some interlopers which thrust in afterwards amongst them, I find not determined. Most probable it is, they were natural Phrygians, being as superstitious in the worship of their several Deities, as any Phrygian of them all; and that they had this name given them by the Lydians, from the abundance of Beech-trees which grow amongst them, by them called Mysæ. A people of so base and contemptible quality, that it grew into a common Proverb to call a fellow of no worth, Mysiorum postremus.

The principal Mountain of this Country is that called Olympus, situate in the North-parts hereof bordering towards Bithynia: which as it is called Olympus Mysius, to difference it from Olympus in Greece; so the people of the Greater Mysia, where this Mountain is, are called Olympeni, to difference them from the Mysii or Mæsi of Europe. And as for Rivers, those of most note besides Æsopus, parting it from Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, are, 1 Caicus, on whose banks stands the City of Pergamus, and from thence passeth into the Ægean Sea, at the Bay of Elæa; and 2 the famous River of Granicus, which hath his fountain in Mysia Major, and passing through Mysia Minor, falleth into the Propontis. A River memorable for the Victory which Alexander obtained on the banks hereof, in his first essay against the Persians: by whom upon the first noise of his preparations he was so slighted, that Darius King of Persia, gave command to his Lieutenants residing in Asia Minor, that they should take him alive, whip him with rods, and so convey him to his presence. A notable example of the pride and folly of the Persians. But Alexander soon taught them another lesson. For though the Persians were possessed of the higher banks of the River, with an intent to stop his passage; yet he resolved to charge them in the face of their strength: knowing full well, that if he could beat them on a place of so great advantage, he should not only lessen them in ponit of reputation, but beget an opinion of himself that he was invincible. And so accordingly it proved, the Persians being vanquished by him, and all the Kingdoms and Provinces of this Asia submitting to him on the noise of the Victory (as an enemy not to be resisted upon equal terms) some few Towns excepted. And therefore it was wisely advised by Machiavel, that he who takes upon him to defend a passage, should with his ablest forces oppose the Assailant; because in all Invasions where the Nations invaded have been beaten upon a great advantage of place, as defence of Rivers, Streights, and Mountains, they do not only dishearten their Souldiers from dealing afterwards on even ground with that Enemy, but leave no hope unto their fellows and partakers, of being succoured and defended by such weak Protectors. Which caution if the Persian Commanders had observed either here, or at Pylæ Ciliciæ, Cilicia, ſpoken of hereafter, Alexander had not ſo eaſily ſubverted the Perſian Monarchy. But the fatal period of it was now drawing on, and the men either naturally Cowards, or elſe prodigiouſly beſotted.

It is divided commonly into Myſia Minor, or the Leſſer Myſia, which lying on the Weſt towards Troas and the Helleſpont, is called ſometimes Myſia Helleſpontiaca; and joyned unto Troas by the Emperour Conſtantine, made up that Province which he called the Conſular Helleſpont: and Myſia Major, called from Olympus which was in it, Myſia Olympena, and the Inhabitants Olympeni; which joyned by that Emperour to the Weſtern parts of Phrygia Major, made up that Province which he cauſed to be called Phrygia Salutaris, for the reaſon formerly delivered.

Places of moſt obſervation in the leſſer Myſia, were 1 Abydus, ſtanding on the narroweſt of the Helleſpont, oppoſite unto Seſtos in Thrace; firſt built by the Mileſians with the conſent of Gyges King of Lydia, to whom the Country then belonged; Memorable both in the ancient and modern ſtories. In ancient ſtory for the famous reſolution of the Inhabitants, when beſieged by Philip the father of Perſeus King of Macedon. For being brought by him into ſome diſtreſs, and hopeleſs of good conditions from him, the young men of the Town who had bound themſelves by oath to die rather than fall into his hands, ſet fire thereof, and barbarouſly ſlew themſelves, with as many of the women and children as could be met with. Which news being brought to Philip, moved ſo little compaſſion, that he ſaid he would give the Abydeni three daies leiſure to die; and therefore would not ſuffer any of his ſouldiers to enter the Town, then ſet open to him, either to take the ſpoil thereof, or hinder this bloudy execution, till the three daies end. In Modern ſtory no leſs memorable for the taking of it by the Turks, in the reign of Orchanes the ſon of Ottoman, through the treaſon of the Governours Daughter: who bewitched with the perſon and valour of Abderach-men, a young Turkiſh Gallant, whom ſhe had beheld from the Towers of the Caſtle, threw a Letter to him as he drew near the wall; wherein ſhe manifeſted her affection, and promiſed to make him Maſter of that Fortreſs, if he would perſwade his General to raiſe the ſiege, and come with a ſtrong Party in the dead time of the night to receive it from her, which was done accordingly. The Town continuing ever ſince in the power of the Turks, well fortified, and one of the two Caſtles ſpoken of before, which defend Conſtantinople on that ſide from all force by Sea. 2 Cyzicus, ſeated in the Propontis, in an Iſland of the ſame name alſo, but ſo near the Continent, that it joyned to it by two bridges. The Metropolis of the Conſular Helleſpont, by conſequence an Archbiſhops See in the proſperous times of Chriſtianity; as were all other Cities in the Roman Empire, which were the Mother-Cities or Metropoles of their ſeveral Province. A Town of wonderful ſtrength and beauty, when firſt known to the Romans, called therefore by L. Florus, the Rome of Aſia, who gives this Character alſo of it, Cyzicum nobilis civitas, arce, mœnibus, portu, turribuſque marmoreis Aſiaticæ plagæ litora illuſtrat, that is to ſay, that the noble City of Cyzicum by the excellency of the Walls, Bulwarks, Haven, and Towers of Marble, doth beautifie and illuſtrate the ſhores of Aſia. Honoured amongſt many other goodly and magnificent buildings, with a glorious Temple, the Pillars whereof being 4 Cubits thick, and 50 Cubits high, were each of one intire ſtone only; the whole Fabrick all of poliſhed Marble, every ſtone joyned unto the other with a line of Gold. In vain beſieged by Mithridates in the time of his war, who loſt before it by the Sword, Peſtilence, and Famine, no fewer than 300000 men, and yet could not force it. Afterwards ruined by an Earthquake, the Falling-Sickneſs of the Eaſt, as before is ſaid, it could never be reſtored to its former luſtre: the very ruins of it daily made more ruinous, by tranſporting the Stones and Marbles to Conſtantinople, for the Embelliſhing of that City. 3 Lampſacus on the ſame Propontis, in which the beaſtly god Priapus was worſhipped in as beaſtly a figure: Quem non denudo (as wittily Lactantius ſcoffeth it) ne quid appareat riſu dignum; ſuppoſed to be the ſame with the Syrian or Phœnician Baal, ſo often mentioned in the Scriptures. For this and on ſome other reaſons, Alexander had conceived againſt it ſuch an high diſpleaſure when he was in Aſia, that he reſolved to raze it to the very ground. And ſeeing Anaximenes coming to him as an Embaſſadour from the Town to obtain his favour, commanded him to hold his peace; and ſware as by way of prevention, that he would deny whatſoever he requeſted of him: whereupon Anaximenes intreated him to deſtroy the City, which now for his Oaths ſake he could not do; and ſo this wicked City at that time eſcaped. 4 Parium, ſo called, as ſome ſay, from Parius the ſon of Jaſon, a Colony at firſt of the Myleſians, of the Romans afterwards: Troas and this, the only two Roman Colonies in all the Province. By Homer called Adraſtia; as Lampſacus in the ſame Author, is called Pityuſa. More in the land, are 5 Scepſis. 6 Hiragerme, both mentioned by Ptolomy, but of more antiquity than fame.

Chief Cities in MYSIA MAJOR or OLYMPENA; are 1 Dainta, in the North-parts, not far from Olympus. 2 Apollonia, near a larg Lake ſacred to Apollo, in the ſame parts alſo. 3 Palæ Scepſis, or Scepſis Vetus, on a Bay of the Ægean Sea, joyning upon Troas, or the Leſſer Phrygia. 4 Adramyttium, mentioned Acts 27. where St. Paul took ſhip to go to Rome. 5 Antandrus, on the ſame Sea alſo, now called St. Dimitri; named at firſt Cimmeris from the Gomerites or Cimmerians here inhabiting (which ſheweth that Myſia anciently was a part of Phrygia) afterward Edonis, and at laſt Antandrus, and that either becauſe built or repaired rather by the men of Andros, an Iſland of the Ægean, ſpoken of before, amongſt the Cyclades; or becauſe the Grecians having taken Polydorus the ſon of Priam, from the King of Thrace, received this City for his ranſom or rather in exchange for him as the word doth intimate. 6 Protoſelene, on the ſame coaſt alſo. More in the Land, 7 Præpemiſſus, 8 Trajanopolis, 9 Alydda, of which little memorable. 10 Pergamus, the Regal City of this tract, ſituate in a goodly Plain on the banks of the River Caycus; of a ſmall Town or Fortreſs made a ſtately City by the Kings hereof, and beautified with an excellent Library containing 200000 Volumes; for the writing or tranſcribing whereof, Parchment was here firſt invented, which from hence to this day is called Pergamenum. Here alſo were thoſe coſtly hangings firſt invented, which we now call Tapeſtry; by the Romans called firſt Aulæa, from Aula, ſignifying a Hall; the Hall of Attalus King hereof (by whom invented) being the firſt room furniſhed and adorned herewith. Here was born Galen the famous Phyſitian, living very healthfully to the age of 140 years: his health preſerved to ſo great age, by theſe means eſpecially. 1. Never eating or drinking his fill. 2ly. Never eating any thing that was raw. 3ly. Alwaies carrying about him ſome ſweet Perfumes. Finally, this was one of the ſeven Churches to which St. John writ his Revelation. For though it were originally a City of Myſia, yet being near unto the borders of Lydia, it was reckoned as a City of Lydian Aſia, within the limits whereof thoſe ſeven Churches were all comprehended.

some ages in such wealth and splendor, they came but from a poor and obscure original. The first of them one Philetærus, an Eunuch, belonging to Antigonus, one of the Great Alexanders greatest Captains; and after his death to Lysimachus King of Thrace, by whom trusted with his money and accompts. Fearing the fury of his Master then grown old and tyrannous, he seized on the Castle of Pergamus, and therein on 90000 Talents, which he offered with his service unto Seleucus, the first King of Syria. But both Lysimachus and Seleucus dying shortly after, he kept the money to himself, and reigned in this City as an absolute King; leaving the Kingdom at his death to his brother Eumenes, no better man than a poor Carter, till raised by the fortunes of this Eunuch. Eumenes furnished with money, though of no great territory, was able by the Galls and other Mercenaries, not only to preserve himself against the Syrian Kings, who laid claim to his City, but also to enlarge his bounds as he saw occasion. But the main improvement of this Kingdom hapned in the daies of Eumenes the second, the son of Attalus, the brother and Successor of this Eumenes: who being useful to the Romans in their wars against Philip of Macedon, and Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, was liberally rewarded by them with the Provinces of Lydia, Phrygia, Æolis, Ionia, Troas, and both the Mysias; which they had taken from Antiochus in the end of that war. The rest of the affairs hereof, till it fell in fine unto the Romans, take here in this short Catalogue of

The KINGS of PERGAMUS.

A. M.
3668	1	Philetærus, the first King of Pergamus, of whom before 20.
3688	2	Eumenes, brother, or as some say, the brothers son of Philetærus, vanquished Antiochus, sirnamed Hierax, in a fight near Sardis, and awed Seleucus Callinicus, both Kings of Syria. 22.
3710	3	Attalus, brother of Eumenes; restored Ariathes the Cappadocian to his Kingdom, and discomfited the Galls, compelling them to keep themselves within the Country since named Galatia. A Confederate of the Romans, and by them much courted.
3754	4	Eumenes II. son of Attalus, gratified by the Romans with the spoils of Antiochus. He was an hereditary Enemy to the Kingdom of Macedon, which he laboured the Romans to destroy, as in fine they did; and thereby finding no more use of these Pergamon Kings, began to grow to less liking with them.
3782	5	Attalus II. Brother of Eumenes, to whom the Kingdom was offered by the Romans in the life of his Brother, then less gratious with them; but he most gallantly refused it, to the great indignation of the Roman Senate.
3792	6	Eumenes III. Brother of Attalus the second, and Tutor or Protector to his Nephew Attalus, in whose minority he governed the Estate, as King.
3813	7	Attalus III. son of Attalus the second, succeeded on the death of his Uncle Eumenes, and having held the Kingdom but five years only, deceased without issue, and bequeathed it by his last Will unto the Romans. But before the Romans had possession of so great a Legacy, Aristonicus the base son of Eumenes, made himself Master of Mindus, Colophon, Samos, and many other Towns and Estates hereof. Against whom the Romans making war were aided by the greatest part of the Asian Kings; not seeing their own danger and destruction to draw near unto them, by letting such a potent neighbour come amongst them, to undo them all. But the Romans got little by this war, though they had the better of it. For being now made Masters of the Riches and Sweets of Asia, they took with them their Vices also: growing thereby to great riot, and unparalleld luxury; which overcame the rigour and severity of their former discipline, and made them apt for Faction, and those bloudy quarrels, which proved the ruine of their State. So truly was it said by Justine, Sic Asia facta Romanorum, cum opibus suis vitia quoque sua Romam transmisit. This Kingdom, taking it in the largest extent thereof, being thus subdued and settled as a Roman Province, had the name of Asia, according to the name of the Greater Continent; by Ptolomy, and others, called Asia Propria: continuing under the subjection of the Roman Emperours, till the translating of the Imperial seat unto Constantinople; as after that unto the Emperours of the East, till conquered piece-meal by the Turks of the Selzuccian family. Which being ended in the person of Aladine the second, those parts hereof which lay next Troas, made up the Kingdom of Carasan, or Carasa-Illi; as those which had been laid to the Greater Phrygia, made up the Aidinian: both of them swallowed up long since by the Ottoman Kings, the Accessories running the same fortune as the Principals did.

10. ASIA SPECIALIUS DICTA.

BEsides the Propria Asia spoken of before, containing all the Provinces of the Pergamon Kingdom, there was one part hereof which anciently had the name of Asia, before it was communicated to the greater Continent, or this whole Peninsula. This for distinctions sake the Romans called the PROCONSULAR ASIA; because committed to the government of one of their Pro-consuls (who had his residence in Ephesus, the principal City of this Province) together with the Consular Hellespont, and the Province of the Isles of Asia. This we have spoken of before, as also how the Country lying about Ephesus, had more especially the name of Asia, than any other: so specially, that Erasmus thereupon inferreth, that by Asia in the New Testament, (but more particularly in the Acts) is meant that part of Asia only in which Ephesus standeth.

This beeing agreed on for the name, we shall bound it on the East with Lydia, whereof it was anciently a part; on the West, with the Ægean Sea; on the North, with Mysia; and on the South, with Caria. And having so bounded it, we shall divide it into the two Regions of ÆOLIS, and IONIA: that of Æolis lying on the North, towards Mysia; as Ionia doth upon the South, towards Caria: possessed both of them by Greek Nations, and of them so named.

Principal Towns in ÆOLIS, are 1 Acarnea, over against the Isle of Lesbos, the Royal seat sometimes of the Tyrant Hermias; who being once a Scholar of Aristotles, but unworthy of so good a Master, seized on this City, and here committed so great cruelties, that at last he was taken by the people, sewed in an Oxes hide, and so baited to death. 2 Pitane, on a little River so named, falling into Caicus, not far from the influx or fall thereof into the Ægean; in which Town they had an Art of making Bricks which would swim on the water. 3 Elæa, on the mouth of Caicus, the Port-Town to Pergamus. 4 Myrina, afterwards in honour of Augustus, called Sebastopolis. 5 Cene, by Strabo called Cane, by Mela, Cannæ, not far from a Promontory of the same name. 6 Cuma, the principal and and greateſt of all Æolis, the birth-place of Ephorus a learned man of elder times; and the habitation of Sibylla, ſirnamed Cumana, to difference her from Sibylla Cumæa, ſo named from Cumæ, a City of the Realm of Naples. 7 Phocæa, a Colony of the Athenians, ſo named from the multitudes of Sea-Calves (the Greeks call them Phocæ) which thruſt themſelves a ſhore at the building of it. The people hereof over-burdened by the Perſians, and impatient of ſo great ſervitude as was laid upon them, forſook their Country, binding themſelves by a fearful Oath, never more to return unto it: and after many and long wanderings came at laſt into Gaul, where they founded the famous City of Marſeilles.

The Inhabitants of this little Region are by Joſephus ſaid to be deſcended of Eliſha the ſon of Javan, who therefore calleth them by the name of Eliſæi. And it is poſſible enough that ſo it was, Eliſha being planted in Greece, where he gave name to Elis, one of the Provinces of Peloponneſus; from whence ſome of his race in ſucceeding times might paſs over into Aſia, and poſſeſs thoſe coaſts. For that they were a Greek people, is confeſſed by all; the Æolick Dialect or phraſe of ſpeech, taking name from hence. Not otherwiſe much mentioned in the courſe of ſtory, than as partakers of the ſame fortunes with the reſt of their Aſian neighbours before related, and ſo not neceſſary to be now repeated.

IONIA, as a larger tract, requires a more particular and punctual deſcription. For here the River Lycus falleth into the Mæander, and here Mæander and Cayſtrus, two of the moſt famous Rivers of Aſia Minor, (of which more hereafter) fall into the Ægean. Here is the renowned City of Epheſus, honoured with one of the worlds ſeven wonders, the long abode of St. Paul, and the death and ſepulture of St. John; the Promontory Trogyllum, with a little Iſle adjoyning of the ſame name, mentioned Acts 20. 15.

Principal Cities of this tract, are 1 Myus, on an arm of the Sea, aſſigned by Artaxerxes, together with Lampſacus, and Magneſia, to Themiſtocles; when being baniſhed his own Country, he fled to his greateſt Enemy for entertainment; and there met with more ſafety than Athens would, and more honour than it could afford him; So that he well might ſay (as he often did) Periiſſem niſi periiſſem. And on the other ſide, the King was ſo overjoyed at his coming to him, (as having now upon his ſide the man who had moſt hindered him in the Conqueſt of Greece) that many times in his ſleep he was heard to clap his hands, and ſay, Habeo Themiſtoclem Athenienſem. In after-times, the water drawing further off, the ſoyl brought forth ſuch an innumerable multitude of Fleas, that the Inhabitants were fain to forſake the City, and with their bag and baggage to retire to Miletus: nothing hereof being left but the name and memory in the time of Pauſanias. 2 Erythra, memorable for the habitation of one of the Sibyls from hence called Sibylla Erythræa; of which Propheteſſes we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Africk. 3 Lebedus, of moſt note in the elder times, for thoſe publick Playes which were here annually held in the honour of Bacchus. 4 Clazomene, ſituate on a ſmall Ilet, near unto the ſhore, of much eſteem amongſt the Romans for the wines there growing; and no leſs honoured by the Aſians for a beautiful Temple of Apollo ſeated near unto it. 5 Priene, the birth-place of Bias, one of the ſeven Wiſe-men of Greece. 6 Ipſus, renowned for the great battel betwixt Antigonus and Seleucus, two of Alexanders chief Commanders; the Victory wherein falling to Seleucus, with the death of his Adverſary, eſtated him in all the Conqueſts of his Maſter, except Ægypt only. 7 Teos, the birth-place of Anacreon, that laſcivious and drunken Poet, hence ſirnamed Teius; the Ovid of the Grecians both for wit and wantonneſs: of both which it may well be doubted, whether the ſmoothneſs of the verſe, or the wantonneſs of their expreſſions, be the more predominant. 8 Smyrna, a fair and ancient City, on a Bay thence named the Bay of Smyrna: the greateſt part whereof lay towards the Sea, but the faireſt on the ſide of an hill overlooking the waters. Deſtroyed by the Lydians, it was re-edified by Antigonus and Lyſimachus, two of Alexanders great Commanders; of good accompt in the time of the Romans, and one of the ſeven Aſian Churches, to which St. John inſcribed his Revelation. Much traded and frequented to this very day, eſpecially for Chamlets, Grograins, and ſuch Stuffs; made for the moſt part at Ancyra, the chief Town of Galatia, and here vended to the forein Merchant. For government of the trade whereof, and of other commodities of theſe parts, the Engliſh Merchants have an Officer called the Conſul of Smyrna. In old time there was in it, amongſt others, a goodly Temple dedicated unto Homer, ſaid to be born in this City, and to have writ his Poems in a Cave hard by. 9 Colophon, moſt memorable for the Inhabitants of it, ſo skilled in Horſe-man-ſhip, that the ſide on which they ſerved in war was ſure of Victory; whereupon Colophonem addere, to put a good end to any buſineſs, grew into a Proverb. It was alſo another of thoſe Cities, which ſo ambitiouſly contended for the birth of Homer; of which there were ſeven in all, as the old verſes tell us ſaying,

Septem urbes certant de ſtirpe inſignis Homeri, Smyrna, Rhodus, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athenæ.

Whether Homer purpoſely concealed his Country, that all places might challenge him for theirs, I am not able to ſay: but ſure I am, that Paterculus ſpeaketh it in the commendation of Heſiodus (the next Greek Poet after him in courſe of time) that he had ſpecified his birth-place: Qui ut id vitaret in quod Homerus inciderit, patriam & parentes teſtatus eſt. 10 Epheſus, the Metropolis of the Roman Aſia, and the ſeat of the Primate of the Aſian Dioceſe: memorable in the pureſt times of Chriſtianity, for being the Epiſcopal See of Timothy the Evangeliſt, the firſt Biſhop hereof; 2ly. In that St. Paul directed to the people of it one of his Epiſtles; and 3ly. for the burial of St. John the Apoſtle, who by ſome learned men of the elder times, is ſaid to have gone alive into his Grave, and that he is not dead, but ſleeping; building that thought upon that ſaying which went abroad among the Brethren, that that diſciple ſhould not die, Joh. 21. 23. And no leſs memorable amongſt the Gentiles for that ſumptuous and magnificent Temple here conſecrated to Diana; which for the largeneſs, furniture, and workmanſhip of it, was accompted one of the wonders of the World. The length thereof ſaid to be 425 foot, 220 foot in breadth; ſupported with 127 Pillars of Marble ſeventy foot in height; of which twenty ſeven were moſt curiouſly engraven, and all the reſt of Marble poliſhed. The model of it contrived by one Cteſiphon, and that with ſo much Art and curioſity of Architecture, that it took up two hundred years before it was finiſhed. When finiſhed, it was fired ſeven times, the laſt time by Eroſtratus, only to get himſelf a name: which hapning on the ſame night in which Alexander the Great was born, gave occaſion to that weighty but witty ſcoff, that Diana (ſhe was counted one of the Goddeſſes of Midwifery) could not attend the preſervation of her Temple, being then buſied at the birth of ſo great a Prince.

As for thoſe Iones, or Ionians, they were no doubt the deſcendents of Javan, the fourth ſon of Japhet, as hath been ſhewn before in our general Preface: but whether they came hither out of Græcia, or paſſed from hence into that Country, hath been made a queſtion. The Athenians boasting of themselves to be Aborigenes, men growing as it were out of the Soil it self, without any Ancestors, report that those Ionians were a Colony of their Plantation. But Hecataeus in Strabo doth affirm the contrary, Saying, that the Athenians or Iones of Greece, came from those of Asia; for that Attica was anciently called Ionia, Plutarch in the life of Theseus doth declare expresly. Most probable it is, that Hecataeus was in the right; these parts of Asia lying so directly in the way from the Valley of Shinaar unto Greece, that Javan may very well be thought to leave some of his company here, when he ferried the rest over to the opposite Continent. I know Pausanias, ignorant of their true antiquity, deriveth them from Ion the son of Xuthus, and grandchild of Deucalion: wherein he came so near the truth, though he missed the men, that it was the Grandson of that man who escaped the floud, from whom both the Athenians and those Ionians had their true original. In regard of which relations betwixt the Nations, the Athenians gave aid to those Ionians against the Persians; who on the overthrow given to Crœsus, pretended to the Lordship or Dominion of Asia, and conquered them in the time of Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch. Upon which ground, and the sending of fresh aid to them upon their revolt in the time of Darius, that King first undertook the invasion of Greece: Xerxes and the succeeding Kings pursuing that first quarrel with great animosities. After this yielding to the times they followed the fortune of the strongest, subject successively to the Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Constantinopolitans, and Turks, till the death of Aladine, before mentioned: when both Æolis and Ionia got a new name, and are now called Sarcan, from Saraehan a Turkish Captain, who on the death of that Aladine seised upon this Country, and erected here a petit Kingdom, long since subdued by those of the race of Ottoman.

II. LYDIA.

LYDIA is bounded on the East, with Phrygia Major, and some part of Pisidia, from which separated by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West, with Æolis and Ionia, or Asia specially so called; on the North, with the Greater Mysia; on the South, with Caria. So called from Lud, the son of Sem, by some of whose posterity it was first inhabited. In th full Latitude and extent thereof, as anciently, comprehending Æolis and Ionia, the adjoyning Provinces, it made the Lydian Asia, spoken of before; within the verge whereof all the seven Churches were contained, mentioned by St. John in the Revelation.

The people of this Country are said to have been the first Coyners of Money, the first Hucksters and Pedlers, and the first inventers of Dice, Ball, Chess, and the like games: necessity and hunger thereunto enforcing them, according to that of Persius, Artis Magister, ingeniique largitor venter. For being sorely vext with famine, in the time of Atis, one of the Progenitors of Omphale, they devised these games; and every second day playing at them, beguiled their hungry bellies. Thus for 22 years, they continued playing and eating by turns: but then seeing that themselves were more fruitful in getting and bearing children, than the soil at that time in bringing forth sustenance to maintain them, they sent a Colony into Italy under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, the son of Atis, who planted in that Country, called at first Tyrrhenia, and afterward Tuscany.

This Country was also called Mœonia, and was thought to have been the native soil of Homer, in regard that Colophon and Smyrna, two of the seven contending Cities, and those which seem to have most colour for their claim, were anciently accounted as parts of Lydia, as was said before. Hence Homer hath the name of Mœonides and Mœonius Vates: and in some Authors Carmen Mœonium is used for Homers Poetical abilities, as Carmine Mœonio consurgere, in Ovid. Bacchus is also called sometimes by the name of Mœonius; but for a very different reason, viz. becaus anciently there were no trees in all this Country but the Vine only.

Principal Mountains of this Country are 1 Sipylus, and 2 Tmolus this last of most accompt in regard of the great fruitfulness of it, covered over with Vines, and yielding abundance of the best Saffron. Chief Rivers of it are 1 Hermus, which rising out of Phrygia Major, passeth only by the skirts hereof, and so falleth into a fair Bay of the Ægean, opening towards the Isle of Clazomene. 2 Pactolus, which rising at the foot of Mount Tmolus, falleth not long after into Hermus; famous amongst the Poets for its golden Sands. 3 Cayster, no less notable for the abundance of Swans which swim thereon, whose Fountain is in Phrygia Major also, near the borders hereof; and his fall into the Ægean also over against the Isle of Samos. 4 Mœander, which rising out of a branch of the Taurus, in the furtheſt parts of the said Phrygia, towards Lycaonia, passeth by Magnesia, and endeth his course in the same Sea, near the City of Ephesus. A River famous for its many turnings in and out, 600 at the least, as Prusæns counteth them. Of which in general thus the Poet,

Et lapsas in se, sæpe retorquet aquas.

That is to say,

Mœander wandring in the self same soil,
Whose waters meeting do as oft recoil.

And in another passage thus,

Quique recurvatis ludit Mœander in undis.
Mœander playes his watry pranks,
In his so many winding banks.

The Country by reason of these Rivers was exceeding fruitful, abounding in all sorts both of wealth and pleasures, well cultivated and manured above ground, and underneath inriched with prodigal veins of Gold and Silver, and some precious Gems. Which made the people, after their overthrow by Cyrus, to become more sensual and voluptuous, and less fit for action, than any plot of their new Masters could have brought them to, had not the natural delicacies of the soil it self contributed to the advancement of their design. And yet before, they were sufficiently infamous for their luxury, and excess of riot, when best seen in wars: so that it is a marvel they were able to prevail on the neighbour Nations, and bring them under their command; as in the times of some of Crœsus Predecessors it is said they did. Unless perhaps they did participate of the temper of Mœcenas, the great favourite of Augustus Cæsar, of whom Paterculus hath left this Character: Ubi res vigiliam exigeret, erat sanè insomnis, providens, & agendi sciens; simulac aliquid ex negotio remitti posset, otio ac mollitie penè ultra fœminam fluens: No man more vigilant than he in times of business, nor woman more effeminate in his times of leisure.

Principal Cities of this Country were, 1 Sardis, on both sides of Pactolus, the Seat Royal of Crœsus, and the Kings of Lydia, till the Conquest of Lydia by the Persians. After which time, being taken by the Grecians, it so startled Xerxes, that he commanded one of his Attendants to say aloud every day whilst he was at dinner, That the Grecians had taken Sardis; continuing that Memento till it was recovered. Which course (I note this only by the way) was commonly observed in the Parliaments of France, as long as Callice did remain in the hands hands of the English; and might be profitably revived, till again recovered from the French. Overthrown by a most terrible Earth-quake (to which Disease most of the Asian Cities had been very much subject) it was re-edified again at the cost of Tiberius; continuing long after the Metropolis of this Province, and one of the seven Churches of the Lydian Asia, of which the Holy Spirit took such special notice. The others (besides Pergamus, already mentioned in the Greater Mysia, and Ephesus and Smyrna in the Proper Asia) were 2. Philadelphia, neer or on the banks of the River Caystrus, the second City in accompt next to Sardis it self, and honoured with the dignity of a Metropolitan, as appeareth by the Acts of the Constantinopolitan Council, where Eustathius Bishop hereof doth subscribe himself, Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς Φιλαδελφίων Μητροπόλεως, Bishop of the Metropolis of Philadelphia, in the Province of Lydia. 3 Thyatira, honoured with the same Priviledge also, as appears by the constant Order, observed as well in the Civil as Ecclesiastical Catalogues of the Cities belonging to this Province. The reason whereof (for otherwise it was contrary to the practice both of Church and State, to have in one Province more than one Metropolis) was the respect had to those several Churchs, in regard of their Primitive Antiquity, and the Foundation of them by St. John the Apostle, as it was generally believed. 4. Laodicea, by Ptolomy placed amongst the Cities of this Province, as it stood in his time, and before: but afterwards laid by Constantine to the Greater Phrygia, and made the Metropolis thereof (which honour Hierapolis had before enjoyed) it being well observed by Strabo, that the Romans did not dispose of their Provinces according to Nations, ἀλλὰ καθ' ἕτερον τρόπον διατάξαι τὰς διοικήσεις, ἐν αἷς τὰς πρώτας δικαιοδοσίας, but according to those Districts, or Circuits, in which they kept their Courts of Justice. Next unto these, there were of especial consideration, 5 Magnesia ad Mæandrum, so called because situate on that River, to difference it from 6 Magnesia penes Sipylum montem, another of the same name neer the Hill Sipylus. The first assigned over to Themistocles, together with Myus and Lampsacus, as was said before. The other memorable for the great Battel fought near unto it, betwixt Antiochus and the Romans; the loss whereof falling unto Antiochus, occasioned the loss of all his Asian Provinces on this side of Taurus, and the payment of 15000 Talents for the charge of the War, besides some other hard Conditions then imposed upon him. 7. Alabanda, opposite to Magnesia on the other side of Mæander, the People whereof, immediately on the overthrow of Antiochus, not only sent Embassadours to Rome to congratulate with them, as many other Nations did; but built a Temple to it, and appointed Anniversary Games to be celebrated in the honour of that new-made Goddess. A thing more to be wondered at in the Roman Senate for receiving, than in this poor People for bestowing on their City so divine an honour. 8. Trallis, on the banks of Cayster, to the Inhabitants whereof, Ignatius that Reverend Bishop and Godly Martyr writ the Epistle ad Trallenses.

That the Lydians were derived from Lud the Son of Sem is testified by the general consent of such ancient Writers, as treat of the dispersions of the Sons of Noah; to which opinion the neerness of the Names of Lud, Ludim, and Lydi (or Λύδοι, as the Grecians call them) seems to give good countenance. Nor shall I here dispute it further, as a point unquestioned: the tale of Lydus, I know not what Nobleman, that should name this Country, being taken up amongst the Greeks for want of more certain truths. Once settled here, they grew up suddenly to a Kingdom; amongst the ancient Kings whereof are numbred Manes as the first, Cotis, and Atis, and then Asius (from whom Lydia first, and after, all the Continent, had the name of Asia) as his immediate Successors. After them I find mention of one Cambletes, said by Athenæus to be so great a Gormandizer, that in his sleep he eat his Wife, and finding her hand in his mouth next morning, slew himself for shame: and of another named Andramytes, as infamous for his filthy lusts, as Cambletes for his gluttony. But the Race of these Kings ending in Omphale, the Mistress of Hercules, who made that valiant Champion spin amongst her Damosels, the Heraclidæ or Posterity of Hercules succeeded next; of whom there is no constant and continued Succession till the time of Ardisius, the nineteenth in order of that Line, who began his Reign not long before the building of the City of Rome. Under his Successors the Affairs hereof so exceedingly prospered, especially under Halyates the Father of Cræsus, that Phrygia, Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Mysia, Caria, Æolis, Doris, and Ionia, acknowledged themselves Vassals to this Crown: Conceived both in Wealth and Power to be equal to the Ægyptian, Babylonian, or Median Kingdoms, till the Conquest of Syria and Ægypt by Nebuchadnezzar gave him the preheminence. But being come unto the height, it received a fall in the person of Cræsus, the Successor of him who so much advanced it. The Kings hereof, from the time of the said Ardisius, take in order following.

The KINGS of LYDIA.

A. M.

3190 1 Ardisius. 36.

3240 3 Melos, who overcame the people of Sardis. 12.

3252 4 Candaules, who shewing his Wife naked to Gyges, was by him slain; who marrying his Wife, succeeded him in his Kingdom. The whole Story is this: Candaules had to Wife a Woman of unparallell'd beauty; and supposing the greatness of his happiness not to consist so much in his own fruition, as the notice which others might take of it, intended to shew her in Natures bravery to Gyges the Master of his Herds. Gyges at first disswaded him from an attempt so foolish; but seeing no perswasion could prevail, he condescended. When he had seen the naked Queen, and was ready to depart, Candaules cried to him, Esto fidelis Gyges: Which words the Queen marking, and seeing the back of Gyges as he left the Chamber, the next morning sent for him: When holding a ponyard in her hand, she gave him his choice, either presently to be slain, or else to kill the King, and take her to wife, with the Kingdom of Lydia for her Dower. Of which two evils he made choice of that which he thought the least, and so killed Candaules.

5 Gyges, the first of this new line, added Ionia to his other dominions. A Prince of so great wisdom, for the time he lived in, that all other Kings his neighbours sate (as it were) in the light to him; and he as in the dark to them: occasioning thereby the fiction of a Ring he had, by which made invisible, when and as often as he pleased.

3305 6 Ardis II. the son of Gyges. 37.

3357 8 Halyattes II. of whom before.
3406 9 Crœsus, the last King of Lydia, subdued Doris and Æolis; after which victories, he was overcome by Cyrus, King of Persia: in which battel, a son of Crœsus who had been dumb from his cradle, seeing a Souldier ready to kill his father, suddenly broke out into these words, Rex est, cave ne occidas. After his overthrow, and the Captivity of Crœsus (one of the richest Kings that ever was of old) Lydia was made a Persian Province, A M. 3420.

The Lydians after this rebelled, but being again subdued, Cyrus bereaved them of all their horses of service, dispoyled them of all their armour, and trained them up in all manner of loose and effeminate living; weakning by this means a powerful Nation, which before that time had not only maintained its own liberty, but awed all the Provinces adjoyning. After this they continued Persian till the Conquest of Asia by the Macedonians, in the division of whose spoyls they fell to the portion of Seleucus and the Kings of Syria: following the common fortune of the rest of this Asia, till they came under the power of the Romans. Made by them one of the Provinces of their Empire, it had the Lower Mysia, or Mysia Olympena annexed unto it; by means whereof the limits of each became so confounded, that the Towns and Cities of the one, are many times ascribed to the other. In the falling of the Eastern Empire it was made (as all the rest of Anatolia) a prey to the Turks: that part of it which lyeth next to Æolis, subject to the Carausian Family; as the other parts towards Phrygia Major, were to the Aidinian.

CARIA is bounded on the East, with Lycia; on the North, with Lydia and Ionia; on the West, with the Icarian or Ægean Sea; and on the South, with the Carpathian. So called from Cares, the Son of Phoroneus King of Argos, once the Lord hereof; who is said to have invented the Science of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Augury; though others ascribe it to the Phrygians, and others unto other Nations, all alike uncertain.

In this Country is the Hill called Latmus, the dwelling, or rather retiring place of Endymion, who being much addicted to the study of Astronomy, found out the changes and courses of the Moon, and is therefore by the Poets feigned to have been her Paramour. Others add, that Jupiter hid him in a Cave under this Hill, and cast him into a dead sleep; (which notwithstanding, she descended sometimes to kiss him) whence came the old By-word, of Endymionis somnum dormit. Here is also in this Country the River Salmacis, said to infeeble all such as either drinke of it, or bath in it: from whence the Poets raise the fiction of Salmacis and Hermaphroditus described by Ovid; and the Proverb of Salmacida spolia sine sanguine & sudore, mentioned by Tully in his Book of Offices, and there used for effeminate and wanton exercises.

Places of most note in it, 1 Miletus, not far from the hill Latmus, the birth-place of Thales, one of the seven Wise-men of Greece, from hence called Milesius; and the mother of no fewer than 75 (or as Pliny saith of 80) Colonies, dispersed in several places of Greece and Asia: anciently honoured with the Oracle of Apollo, sirnamed Didymæus, whose Temple being burnt by Xerxes, was again rebuilt by the Milesians, to so vast a greatness, that it remained without roof; compassed about with a Grove, and dwelling houses, and sumptuously set out with costly workmanship. This is that Miletus mentioned Act. 20. to which St. Paul called together the Bishops of Ephesus, and of other the adjoyning Cities, Ab Epheso & reliquis proximis Civitatibus saith St. Irenæus the renowned Bishop of Lions, lib. 3. cap. 14. Anciently it was called Lelegis and Anactoria. 2 Mindus, which being but a small Town, had so great Gates, that Diogenes the Cynick cried out, and said, Ye men of Mindus, take heed that your City run not out at your Gates. 3 Heraclea ad Latmum, so called because situate at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from many others of that name. 4 Borgylia, or Borgylos, as Pliny calleth it, where anciently Diana had another Temple, though not to be compared with that of Ephesus. 5 Milasa, in old times famous for two Temples sacred unto Jupiter; the way to which for 60 furlongs was paved with stone for the easier travelling of Pilgrims, and the better ordering of Processions; the principal of the Citizens serving there as Priests, which office they held unto their death. 7 Primassus, memorable for the Stratagem by which it was taken by Philip of Macedon, the Father of Perseus. Who meaning to force it by Mine, and finding the earth so stony that it would not work, commanded the Pioneers notwithstanding to make a noise under the ground, and caused great Mounts of Rubbish to be raised secretly in the night, at the mouth of the Mine, as if the Work went very well forwards. At last he sent word unto the Townsmen, that two parts of their wall stood only upon wooden props, to which if he gave fire, they should find no mercy; which heard, the Citizens yielded up the Town unto him. So useful in the Art of War is a piece of Wit, that it prevailes sometimes more than Mines or Batteries.

In the South-west of the Province, thrusting it self into the Sea like a spacious Promontory, stands the Country of DORIS, so called of the Dores, a Greek People, who there inhabited. The principal Cities whereof were 1 Cnidus, not far from a foreland or Promontory of the same name, famous of old times for the Marble Image of Venus, called hence Dea Cnidia. 2 Cressa, a noted Haven-Town in the time of Ptolomy. 3 Halicarnassus (now called Nesi) the birth-place of Herodotus, and Dionysius, named hence Halicarnasseus, two famous Historians, and the seat-Royal of Artemisia Queen of the Carians (called from hence sometimes the Queen of Halicarnassus) who in the honour of her Husband Mausolus, built a stately monument, accounted one of the Worlds seven wonders; of which thus Martial, speaking of the Roman Amphitheatre erected by Domitian,

Aere nec vacuo pendentia Mausolæa
Laudibus immodicis Cares ad astra ferant.
That is to say,
Mausolus Tomb filling the empty Air,
Let not the Carians praise beyond compare.

that the Carians were so called from Cares, the son of Phoroneus, King of Argos, hath been said before. But Bochartus will rather have them so called from Car, which in the Phœnician language signifieth a Sheep or a Ram; with numerous flocks whereof they did once abound. And this may seem more probable, in regard that the Ionians next neighbours to Caria, borrowing this word from the Phœnicians, called sheep by the name of Cara, Κάρα Ἴωνες τὰ πρόβατα, saith Hesychius, the old Grammarian. But from whomsoever they had their name, certain it is, they were a very warlick people, Eo armorum pugnaque amantes, (saith Pomponius Mela) ut aliena etiam bella appeterent, who when they had no wars at home, would seek out for action. A little before the time of Xerxes, Mausolus raigned here, whose wife Artemisia (lately mentioned) aided that King in his undertakings against Greece. Afterwards, in the time of Alexander the the Great, we met with Ada Queen hereof, who aided him against the Persians; adopting him for her son and Successor; Subject after her decease to the Macedonians, it followed the same fortune with the rest of these Provinces, till the defeat of Antiochus near Magnesia: in the division of whose spoyls it was given to the Rhodians, incorporated not long after to the State of Rome, and made a Province of the Empire. Wrested from the Eastern Emperours by the Turks of the Selzuccian Family; the greatest part hereof, on the death of Aladine II. was raised unto a petit Kingdom by the name of Mentesia, so called from Mendos (or Mindus) the chief City of it; the residue being laid to the Caramanan Kingdom, both long ago subdued by the Ottoman Family: that of Mentesia by Mahomet surnamed the Great, who dispossessed Elias the last Prince thereof, Anno 1451.

LYCIA is bounded on the East, with Pamphylia; on the West, with Caria; on the North, with parts of Lydia, and Phrygia Major; on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. Environed on three sides with the Mountain Taurus, which part it from the Countries above mentioned, by consequence naturally strong, and not very accessible: the Sea for the space of 20 miles shutting up the fourth. And here is to be observed, that besides this, there was a little Region of the same name, not far from Troy, not much observed by our Geographers either old or new; but mentioned sometimes by the Poets; as in Virgil, Æneid. 4. Qualis ubi hybernam Lyciam, Xanthique fluenta Deserit, &c. which is meant plainly of the Phrygian, or Trojan Lycia; the word hybirna being added because of its Northern situation in respect of this. Of this somewhat hath been said before in Phrygia Minor. In which also that there was a River called Xanthus, appears not only by those words of Virgil which are cited there, but by two passages in Ovidius Epistles unto Paris no less and evident.

The people hereof were sometimes called Xanthi, from Xanthus the chief River hereof, which rising in two Springs from the foot of Mount Cadmus, passeth by a Town called Xanthus also, and falleth into the Sea. But generally they were called Lycii and the Country Lycia, from Lycus the son of Pandion King of Athens; who either conquered them, or did some memorable act amongst them, which deserved that honour.

The principal Mountain of this Country, and indeed of Asia, is the Mountain Taurus, which hath his beginning in this Province, extending Eastward to the great Oriental Ocean: of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said hereafter, when these hills are grown unto the greatest.

One of the branches of it, and the most notable in this Country, is that called Chimæra, vomiting flames of fire like Sicilian Ætna: the bottom whereof was infested with Serpents, the middle parts grazed upon by Goats, and the highest parts made dangerous by the dens of Lions. Hence by the Poets made a Monster, having the head of a Lion, the body of a Goat, and the tail of a Serpent; according unto that of Ovid in his Metamorphosis:

Quoque Chimæra jugo medio in parvibus Hircum,
Pectus & ora Leo; caudam Serpentis habebat.

In English thus,

Chimæra from a Goat her mid-part takes,
From Lions head and breast, her tail from Snakes.

This dangerous Mountain was first planted and made habitable by the care of Bellerophon, a noble Grecian, who is therefore fabled by the Poets to have killed this Monster; employed upon this business by Jobates the King of Lycia, to whom he had been sent by Proetus King of Argos, who was jealous of him, and sent his Letters to require that King to kill him. Whence came the saying, Bellerophontis literas portare; applied to those, who were unawares employed to carry Letters tending to their own destruction: such as those carried by Uriah to Joab the General, by command of David.

This Country was so populous, that anciently there was reckoned threescore Cities in it, of which six and thirty remained in the time of St. Paul; now nothing left of them but the names and ruines. Those of chief note were 1 Myra, the Metropolis of Lycia, when a Roman Province; by consequence an Archbishops See, when Christian. St. Nicolas one of the Bishops hereof in the Primitive times, is said to have been a great Patron of Scholars: his Festival annually holden on the sixth of December, is celebrated in the Church of Rome with several Pastimes; and still in some Schools here in England (as in that of Burford in the County of Oxon, where I had my breeding and my birth) for a feast and a play-day. Of this City there is mention Acts 27. 5. 2 Telmessus, the Inhabitants whereof are famous for South-saying, and accounted the first Interpreters of dreams. 3 Patara, or Patras, (formerly called Sataros) beautified with a fair Haven, and many Temples; one of them dedicated to Apollo, with an Oracle in it, for wealth and credit equal unto that of Delphos. 4 Phaselis, on the Sea-side also, a nest of Pirates in the times of the Roman greatness, by whom then haunted and enriched, as Algier is now: but taken by Servilius, a Roman Captain, at such time as Pompey scoured the Seas. And unto the Pirates of this Town the former ages were indebted for the first invention of those swift Vessels, which the Romans called a Phaselus, by the name of the Town; we may render it a Brigantine. 5 Cragus, with the Mountain of the same name, thrusting out eight points or Promontories near to the Chimæra. 6 Rhodia, or Rhodiopolis, as Pliny calleth it, most probably of the Foundation of the neighbouring Rhodians. 7 Solyma, on the borders hereof towards Pisidia; the people of which were conquered and added unto Lycia by the sword of Bellerophon, whom Jobates, with a mind to kill him, according to the request of Proetus, imployed in that service. 8 Corydalla, near the Mountain called Masigrum, the Massycites of Pliny. 9 Podalea, the chief Town of Mylias; as 10 Œnoanda is of Œnoalia, two little Regions in this Country.

The Lycians were in former times a puissant people, extending their power upon the Seas, as far as Italy. Subjected to the Persian not without great difficulty; the people with such obstinacy defending their liberty, that some of them being besieged by Harpagus, Lieutenant unto Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch, they first burnt their wives, children, servants, and riches, in a common fire; and then made a furious sally upon the Enemy, by whom put all unto the sword. To Alexander in his march this way towards Persia, they submitted without any resistance. After whose death they fell with the rest of these parts into the hand of Seleucus. On the defeat of Antiochus at the battel of Magnesia, it was given to the Rhodians for their assistance of that War; but governed as a Free Estate by a Common-Council of 14 Senators, elected out in their principal Cities: over whom was one chief President, or Prince of the Senate, whom they called by the name of Lyciarchus. In these remained the sole power of imposing taxes, making War and Peace, appointing Justiciaries and inferiour Magistrates, and all things appertaining to the publick Government. A shadow of which power they retained when brought under the Romans; and a shadow only: the Supreme power being no longer in the Senate of Lycia, but in that of Rome. Nor had their Lyciarchus any thing but an empty name, and the vain priviledge of ordering and disposing the publick Games, wherein by his Office he presided. When made a Province of the Empire, it had the same fortune as the others had, till it fell into the power of the Turks: after the death of the second Aladine made a part of the Kingdom of Caramania; of which more anon.

14 LYCAONIA.

LYCAONIA is bounded on the East with Armenia Minor, from which parted by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West, with the Greater Phrygia; on the North, with Cappadocia; and on the South, with Pisidia. So called from the Lycaones a People of Lycia, or from the Lycaonians, Inhabitants of Lycaonia, a Town of Phrygia Major; who enlarging themselves into these parts, gave this name unto it. Either of which I should prefer before their conceit, who derive it from Lycaon King of Arcadia, dispossessed by Jupiter of that Kingdom; or think that Lycaon was a King of this Country, and not of that.

Places of note here, 1 Iconium (now Cogni) the Metropolis hereof when a Roman Province: A place of great strength and consequence; situated advantageously in the Mountains for defence and safety, and therefore chosen for the Seat of the Turkish Kings in Lesser Asia, at such time as they were most distressed by the Western Christians; who under the Command and presence of the Emperour Conrade did in vain besiege it, forced to depart thence with great loss both of men and honour. Afterwards made the Seat-Royal of the Aladine Kings, the former Race being extinguished by the Tartars; and finally of the Kings of the house of Caraman, whose Kingdom called the Kingdom of Caramania, contained all the South part of the Lesser Asia, that is to say, part of the Province of Caria, all Lycia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, Pisidia, and this Lycaonia. 2 Lystra, the birth-place of Timothy the Evangelist; where Paul and Barnabas, having miraculously healed a Cripple, were adored as Gods; and not long after, on the instigation of some Jews which came down from Antioch and Iconium, most despitefully treated; Paul being stoned in to the bargain, though it pleased God to raise him to life again, Acts 14. v. 19, 20. Such was the divine pleasure of Almighty God, that he that did consent to the stoning of St. Stephen the Protomartyr, and took charge of the cloaths of his Executioners, should suffer in the same kind wherein he had trespassed, and feel some smart remembrance of his former Actions. 3 Derbe, honoured by the preaching of the said Apostle. 4 Laranda, so called by Ptolomy, and still preserving its old name, the second place for reputation next unto Iconium. 5 Adopissus. 6 Paralais. 7 Canna. 8 Caratha, with others named by Ptolomy, but not else observable.

Nor indeed were the Lycaonians themselves, from whomsoever they descended, of any great note or observation in the former times: subject to Cappadocia when it was a Kingdom, and reckoned as part of it in the time of Ptolomy, when made a Province of the Empire. Dismembred from it by some of the following Emperours, either to create new Offices and Preferments for some Court-Favourite, or to satisfie the ambition of some Prelates, aspiring to the dignity of a Metropolitan, it was made a Province of it self. Torn from the Empire by the Turks, it was at first a member of the Selzuccian Kingdom, as afterwards of the Caramanian. Which last founded by Caraman a great Prince of the Turks, on the death of Aladine the second, the last King of the Selzuccian Family, was a great eye-sore unto those of the House of Ottoman from the time of Amurath the first, who first warred upon it, to the Reign of Bajazet the second, who in fine subverted it, Anno 1486 as shall be shewn hereafter, when we come to Cilicia, the last of the Provinces of that Kingdom, in the course of this Work.

PISIDIA hath on the East, Armenia Minor; on the West, some parts of Lycia and Phrygia Major; on the North, Lycaonia; on the South, Pamphylia, and some part of Cilicia; from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus. So called from the Pisidæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not amongst my Authors.

The Country small, but furnished with great plenty of all provisions, as appeareth by that passage of Livie, where speaking of the Expedition of Manlius into these parts, he telleth us that he came into the Fields of Sagalassa (one of the Cities hereof) being of a rich soil, and plentiful of all manner of Fruit, Inde ventum est (saith he) in agrum Sagalassarum, uberem fertilemque omni genere frugum: But this to be understood only of the Plains and Champian, the Mountainous parts hereof being (like others of that nature) poor and barren.

Towns of most observation in it, 1 Antioch, the Metropolis hereof, when a Province of the Roman Empire, called for distinction sake Antiochia Pisidiæ; mention of which is made Acts 4. and of the Jews Synagogue therein, honoured by St. Paul's preaching, the sum of whose divine Sermon is there repeated. Built by Seleucus, the first King of Syria of the Macedon Race, and by him so called in honour of his Father Antiochus. 2 Seleucia, the foundation of the same Seleucus, called also, to distinguish it from others of that name, Seleucia Pisidiæ. 3 Lysinnia, on the borders hereof towards Phrygia. 4 Selge, a Colony of the Lacedæmonians. 5 Sagalassa, situate in the most fruitful part of all this Country, as appears by that of Livie before-mentioned. 6 Cremna, which only had the honour of a Roman Colony. 7 Termessus, strongly situate in the Streights of the Mounts, the hilly Country about which hath the name of Milyes. 8 Olbanassa. 9 Plutanessus, of which little memorable.

As for these Pisidæ, they were originally descended of the Solymi, Inhabitants of the Borders of Lycia. A valiant People, and so affirmed to be by Livie, who calleth them longè optimos bello. Nor did he speak it without cause, this small Nation holding out against the Persians, and not conquered by them, when their great neighbours were subdued. Against these, Cyrus the brother of Artaxerxes Mnemon King of Persia did pretend a Quarrel, as if they had trespassed on the borders of his Province. Which though perhaps they had not done, yet this gave him good occasion to levy an Army, pretending revenge on them, but intending to dispossess his Brother of the Persian Monarchy: But Tisaphernes Lieutenant to the King in Asia, seeing greater Preparations than were sufficient to oppose the weak Pisidians, made the King aquainted with his suspicions, who accordingly provided for resistance. The Army of Cyrus consisting of 12000 Grecians, and 100000 Persians: the Kings Forces were no fewer than 900000 fighting men. They met at Cunaxa, not far from Babylon, where Cyrus lost both the Victory and his Life. The Grecians who had made their side good, and stood in honourable terms of Composition, being by Tisaphernes betrayed, lost the best of their Company. The rest under the
